

Author's Note: For those of you who read Harry Potter and the Final Straw, the first three chapters of this story will seem quite familiar. I originally meant Straw to be a Harry Goes to America story, but as I explained part way through Straw, I changed my mind, and that led to the direction that I went with the fic. Now, while I search for a good approach to do a seventh year story, I'm revisiting what I was going to do a year ago, and that's to send Harry abroad. I think I altered enough of the first nine chapters (compressed here into the first three chapters) to make it worth it to re-read them, and then the action gets much different in Chapters Four and beyond. I repeat what you read in the summary, this story is AU from the get-go, and please read and review it (if you review) as such. Well enough from me, enjoy the show.

The ride home from Kings Cross Station had been a silent one, Vernon and Petunia weren't even speaking with each other. The threat of Moody and Arthur Weasley had actually penetrated even Vernon Dursley's stubborn mind and he had quickly come to decide that harassing Harry simply wasn't worth the trouble it would get him into, so he said nothing to Harry on the ride back to Little Whinging. Petunia Dursley was lost in her own thoughts as well, having seen the haunted look on Harry's face, she knew something bad must have happened. So each in their own way (Dudley was not along for the trip) decided to make the best of the situation and not invite more trouble upon themselves by abusing Harry.

Once home, Harry grabbed his trunk and headed inside, though he was slightly taken aback when Vernon, with a blank look on his face, held the front door open so he could get the trunk through. After Hedwig was brought inside, Harry, not paying attention to Vernon's looking around the yard (for freaks, one can surmise), would not leave the house again for over three weeks.

Harry sat in his bedroom at Number 4 Privet Drive and thought, something he had been doing quite a bit of in the two weeks since the Department of Mysteries and the death of Sirius Black. It had occurred to Harry on that drive home how little thought he'd actually given to his future. When he had done his career counseling session with Professor McGonagall he had pretty much plucked the idea of being an Auror out of thin air, thinking it would be a cool job to have, but he hadn't really considered it beforehand. Then there was the Prophecy to consider, Harry wasn't sure that he believed it, though he acknowledged Dumbledore's apparent faith in it. Harry found it difficult to believe anything Trelawney said as gospel, particularly something like this, three years of her teaching had often left him doubting whether she was really a witch or simply a squib with a decent imagination. That said, it explained a lot of Dumbledore's behavior over the years, such as placing Harry with the Dursleys.....though that did not make him feel any better.

Dear (insert name here),

I'm writing to ask that no one send me any letters for a couple of weeks, nor do I want any visitors. I need some time to sort things out about what's been happening, and I need time to grieve for Sirius as well. I know that there are people watching the Dursley house and I have no interest in doing anything remotely foolish, I just need some time to myself. I appreciate your understanding this.

Yours,

Harry

Upon arriving at his "home" Harry had written this form letter to most of his friends, in the somewhat in vain hope of having some time where he didn't have to think about their views on his many issues. Harry didn't actually expect most of them to respect his wishes, and he was right, letters had come full bore starting the next day. Typical of them was Hermione's letter:

Dear Harry,

How are you? I know you must be hurting about Sirius, but you need to find a way to move on and live your life, that's what Sirius would want, and you know that. I hope you're practicing your Occlumency, you don't want anything like that to happen again, be sure to tell Dumbledore if your scar starts hurting again. If something happens please tell me, you know I want to help you.

With love,

Hermione

Not for the first time Harry wondered if Hermione was informing on him to Dumbledore, and for how long. Hermione was one of his best friends, and truth be told she had probably been a better friend to him over the years than Ron had, but her devotion to authority bordered on the frightening. Somehow the old man always seemed to know what he was up to, so Dumbledore either had some good surveillance charms working in Gryffindor tower, or he had someone on the inside. Of course he didn't want to believe that Hermione was going behind his back, and he really had no proof either way.....but the feeling wouldn't go away.

Harry's feelings about Dumbledore had gradually shifted over the weeks as well. Dumbledore had amazingly enough respected Harry's request for quiet, though he knew it wouldn't last (The old man and Neville were the only ones who were doing so, Neville had sent a two line note acknowledging Harry's letter and letting him know he was there for him when Harry needed him). The problem was, the more Harry took stock of his life, both at Privet Drive and at Hogwarts, the more dissatisfied he grew with it. The difficulties at Privet were obvious, a lack of anything resembling affection, and oftentimes a lack of food as well. Harry wondered what kind of threat Dumbledore had over Aunt Petunia to keep taking him back summer after summer, though next summer was supposed to be his last there, since on his 17th birthday he would become of age in the wizarding world and be outside Dumbledore's authority, in the summer anyway. He had a sneaking suspicion though that the old man wouldn't let that get in his way and would find a way to confine him somehow, perhaps at Grimmaud Place. There had been a couple of times over the last two weeks that Harry had seen Aunt Petunia looking particularly pensive.....but he had resisted temptation to doing any probing.

His life at Hogwarts was what really gave Harry pause, once he really thought about it. Harry knew he hadn't made that many friends in his five years there, but after he examined it he was shocked at how few there really were. Really his circle was limited to those who had gone with him to the DOM (Ron, Hermione, Neville, Ginny, and Luna), and though he had friendly relations with Dean and Seamus (his other roommates), he was a bit sad to realize there was no one else. Harry knew that a lot of this was due to being "The Boy Who Lived", people either wound up star-struck like Colin Creevey, or disliked him because of it, not taking any time to get to know him. Harry also acknowledged that some of it was due to Ron and Hermione, not the 2 most popular people in Gryffindor tower. Hermione's bossiness and academic mania grated on most of their housemates (Harry could only wonder what most Ravenclaws and Hufflepuffs thought of her, what the Slytherins thought didn't need much effort on his part), and Ron.....The fact was, Ron wasn't a very bright wizard and tended to be a Gryffindor version of Draco Malfoy, very judgmental about those who did not fit his own ideals. The three of them had been so close for so long, that though others might have liked Harry, they just didn't want to deal with Ron and Hermione on a regular basis.

Each summer since he had been a wizard, Harry had had Hogwarts and his memories of it to hold on to, but the more he thought about it, the less he wanted to return to Hogwarts. Harry knew that he needed to make some plans, plans that couldn't be done alone. He thought on this for another night, and then took his first step toward freedom.....and in a rather unexpected direction too.

Dear Mrs. Longbottom,

I know we've never met before ma'am, but I'm a roommate at Hogwarts of your grandson Neville. First I'd like to say that I'm sorry that Neville got involved in the Department of Mysteries incident that I led, but you should know that he fought very well and I'm proud to call him my friend and ally. I'm writing to you because I need some advice, and I know from Neville about your knowledge and integrity. I need to hire a wizarding solicitor, hopefully one who has some knowledge of muggle law as well, and I was hoping there was one you could recommend to me. I have some issues that I need to take care of and I need that kind of help. I'm asking you and not someone at Hogwarts ma'am, because to be honest I don't want to hire someone under their control or influence, so I can get impartial advice.

I would appreciate any help you could give me, please give my best to Neville

Harry Potter

"Here you go Hedwig, please see if Mrs. Longbottom will reply right away, and if so wait for it, ok girl?"

Hedwig gave a dignified hoot, as if Harry knew how to deliver mail better than she did: 'let the expert handle it' she seemed to say.

Harry wasn't sure if this was the right course of action to take, but he thought that to do what he was thinking of, he would need legal advice, advice that he couldn't trust the Order to give him, he could hear them now, "Oh let us handle that Harry." or "You don't need to worry about those things right now Harry." There was certainly no harm in asking Mrs. Longbottom, as he didn't think she was an Order member, and figured that Neville had likely spoken well of him over the years to her.

For lack of anything else to do in the meantime, Harry started in on his exercises. He was up, after two weeks, to 200 sit-ups a day, as well as 50 push-ups. Certainly not Olympic worthy, but much better than he could do when he started. Harry had been surprised at how out of shape he was, considering how skinny he still looked, even after 10 months of Hogwarts food and more than a couple of chocolate frogs. Plus, it helped kill the time, truth be told, Harry was a bit nervous about going outside the house, given what had happened last summer with the Dementors. He wasn't positive that the Order was watching Privet Drive (not that they would have told him if he'd asked), but he assumed that someone was on guard (hopefully not Dung).

After he finished with his exercises, he wandered downstairs to get a glass of water:

"Hello Aunt Petunia."

His Aunt looked at him and nodded, though not unpleasantly. Relations with her had been better than ever since he got back, though that wasn't saying too much. She and Vernon both looked like they were fighting some kind of inner battle while they ate dinner with Harry, the only extended times they were in his presence. Vernon's battle was reconciling 15 years of verbal abuse and threats, with the certainty of 'freaks' coming into his home and doing things to him. Petunia alternately looked nervous and sad when she was around Harry, as if seeing more and more of Lily in him, and remembering her fate and why he had landed with them in the first place. Harry hadn't seen Dudley more than once or twice since he'd been back, which relieved him somewhat. Dudley had gotten a summer job at a local cinema and was rarely home, and seemed bent on avoiding Harry when he was. Harry had been fairly worried about seeing Dudley again after the Dementor incident last summer, and what he might do to Harry if he still blamed him for it. Dudley's thoughts remained his own however.

In the back of his mind, Harry knew that if he wanted some legal freedom, he would need the cooperation of Vernon and Petunia. He knew that they were his muggle guardians of course, and he was fairly certain that they were in the wizarding world as well. The only alternative to them had been Sirius, who between Azkaban and being in hiding after his escape, had never been in a position to claim guardianship. The question was, how to get this cooperation? He knew that Vernon was the key, since Petunia would follow his lead. He could, of course, bribe them, but he shuddered at the thought of Vernon learning how much money he had in Gringotts, he knew his uncle's aversion to wizards wouldn't extend to money, though the idea of Vernon actually walking into Gringotts to claim it always put a smile on Harry's face.

Physical threats were another possibility, but Harry was loathe to go that route. He wasn't worried about whether he could do it or not, in fact he rather liked the idea of hurting Vernon, in the abstract anyway. For a few years time Harry had been occasionally daydreaming about his own 17th birthday present to himself, which involved a couple of hours fun with his wand and the Dursleys. The problem was, he couldn't rely on the fact that Vernon hadn't thought of this as well, and might decide to do a pre-emptive strike. Vernon Dursley was a blustery sort of man to those who didn't know him well, but Harry knew him very well and knew that hatred might make Vernon do things that both he and Harry would regret.....if Harry was alive to regret them.

One thing was certain, he couldn't dare let Dumbledore learn that he was planning any of this. Harry's distrust of the Order wasn't simply resentment of Dumbledore, and all of the half-truths, lies, and evasions that the Headmaster had been feeding him all of these years. In a perverse way he rather admired the quite Slytherin way that Dumbledore operated (in his 3rd year he had asked McGonagall what House that Dumbledore had been in, she had replied icily that it was none of his business, so he assumed it was Slytherin).....at least he would have admired it if it had happened to someone else. Harry didn't trust Dumbledore at all with his future, given what he had done and not done. Harry still had trouble believing that the blood protection at Privet Drive was the only way to protect him, particularly from a wizard who went without a body for 13 years. Hearing the Prophecy only made his resentment of Dumbledore worse, "It would have been nice to have some warning, or perhaps even a bit of formal training." Harry knew that his only real training had been his haphazard adventures, where he more or less learned how to defend himself on his own, with the exception of Remus and his Patronus. Every time he thought about Dumbledore and his decisions, and then applied basic logic to them.....well it was a good thing he wasn't allowed to use his wand.

Snape, there was another reason to be suspicious of Dumbledore. The old man had to know how much Snape hated Harry's guts, yet he forced them together time and again. Harry hated Snape with equal venom, and he felt that Sirius would be alive if not for the grease ball's need to settle old scores. Harry had never forgiven Snape for interfering during 3rd year, giving Peter Pettigrew time to escape, denying Sirius his chance at freedom, and when he was being candid with himself, he acknowledged that it was a prime reason he hadn't been so eager to learn Occlumency.

As for the rest of the Order, Harry liked them enough as people, for the most part, but like with Hermione he was wary of their blind loyalty to Dumbledore. Harry knew that what he was thinking of doing would not go over at all with Dumbledore, and he would use the Order to stop him.

Remus in particular was another sticky point, Harry knew with Sirius gone that Remus was his last true link to his parents and their life.....but that was the problem, Remus had never been terribly forthcoming about what his parents really were like, nor had Sirius been. It had not gone unnoticed by Harry that he had learned more about his dad from Snape's pensieve than from his dad's best friends. Harry also had come to resent Remus in part for his imprisonment on Privet Drive over the years, at the very least he could have come and checked on him every once in awhile, perhaps putting some fear into the Dursleys to get him some better treatment. But no, Harry had never so much as heard of Remus until he was 13, and that grated on him more and more. There also was the practical aspect of Remus needing Dumbledore much more than the other way 'round, that alone would have put Remus' loyalty into question.

Harry never even considered asking most of the Weasleys for help, he had seen the way Molly Weasley tried to baby her sons and try not to let them make any decisions for themselves, and while he was grateful that she considered him an unofficial 8th child, he felt certain that she would be even worse with him. Mr. Weasley was a kindly man who was much sharper than he was perhaps given credit for (since he had gotten to know Luna, Harry had very privately considered her and Mr. Weasley to be two peas in a pod), but Harry knew who ruled that household. Bill and Charlie were relative unknowns to him, though he liked them both, and Percy didn't even bear thinking about. Fred and George were possibilities, he knew that they genuinely cared about him and would look out for him if he needed it, but he didn't want them crossing their parents and getting any flack. He filed away the idea though, for later. Ginny, ironically, was the Weasley he trusted least (after Percy). Harry knew that her crush had receded somewhat over the last year, but it still made him uncomfortable to consider trusting her. If anything, she was the female equivalent of Colin Creevey, liking him for his fame without really knowing him.

Ron.....Ron was his best mate, but Harry knew that Ron would tell Hermione everything. Harry wasn't sure to this day if those two had become anything more than friends over the past year. It wouldn't surprise him if they had, though he would be disappointed if they'd kept it from him. Harry couldn't understand Ron's apparent romantic feelings for Hermione, she was attractive he supposed, in a no-nonsense way, but entirely too controlling. Harry himself wanted a girlfriend, not a boss. As it was he had been hard pressed over the past year to keep his growing irritation with Hermione to himself. He still liked them both, and knew that they only wanted what was best for him, but given his suspicions of Hermione and what she might tell their teachers, he simply couldn't risk giving anything away to Ron.....and he knew that Ron would be unlikely to forgive him if he kept anything from him.....something Harry had trouble understanding, since he himself had been nothing but loyal to Ron, a fact which the redhead could not reciprocate.

Not that he had anything to give away at this point yet, the plan was still only a vague one in his mind about getting some more freedom. Harry knew what the concept of legal emancipation was, and surmised that without Dumbledore's coercion, the Dursleys might have suggested it themselves this year, when he turned 16. He knew that Petunia knew more about the magical world than she had ever let on to him, and probably to Vernon and Dudley as well, this might have been one of those details.

Luna Lovegood was the one person he actually had corresponded with, he had specifically not included her in his 'leave me alone' letters at the beginning of the summer. They didn't talk about the DOM, but had just taken some time to get to know each other through letters, as in school they were in different years and different Houses (Harry had never had a class with any Ravenclaw in his own year). Harry wasn't quite ready to fill her in on his plans, but he always smiled when he read her letters.....which were more like streams of consciousness than anything structured, but he enjoyed them as a nice diversion from his troubles. Nothing romantic had been discussed though, and Harry had a hard time thinking of her that way.....and she had mentioned that she and Neville were writing to each other as well, though in one of her more lucid passages she assured Harry that she hadn't told anyone they were writing.

When Harry wrote to Neville's grandmother he knew that to a point he was having to trust Neville a bit, but wasn't too worried. Neville had always kind of been the odd one out in their year, with Ron and Harry teaming up, and Seamus and Dean being close. Harry knew that Neville's confidence has risen as a result of their DA work, as well as what happened in the DOM. When Harry analyzed the events in his mind, in muggle video fashion, he was surprised to learn that Neville had put up the best fight after himself. Harry knew that he was responsible for a lot of Neville's new found abilities and felt assured that Neville would be grateful enough not to rat him out.

So who to trust? Harry trusted his friends, and most of the Order to a point.....but there was trust and there was trust, and Harry was beginning to learn the difference, a bit late for comfort perhaps.....but he decided to celebrate the fact that he made it to the party at all, rather than be considered with his tardiness.

Dear Dobby,

I was wondering if you would want to work for me? I don't need a lot of looking after, but I could use certain of your skills in my life right now. I realize that you probably like working at Hogwarts with all those people, and you might not want to move, but I hope you will think about this. As for money, I'll double what you make now at Hogwarts and you can wear whatever you clothes you choose to.

If you would like to talk with me about it, just come visit Privet Drive, but please oh please just pop right into my bedroom, my aunt and uncle would probably have heart attacks if they saw you.

Thank you Dobby,

Harry Potter

This was somewhat risky, having the excitable house elf around him while in the muggle world, but Harry felt that the benefits far outweighed the risk. Harry was by no means confident of the Order being able to protect him if the Death Eaters launched a concerted raid on Privet Drive; after all they had missed two Dementors the previous summer, which is how this whole mess had started. Having watched Dobby in action against Lucious Malfoy after his 2nd year, he felt confident that at least Dobby could hold them off him while waiting for help. Harry knew that if he was forced to use his wand before he was allowed, the result might be similar to last summer, a trial where he was by no means confident of winning, particularly without Dumbledore's willing support. Dobby being around negated that risk thankfully, all he had to do was keep him away from the Dursleys.....though now that he thought about it, Uncle Vernon might not be so volatile with Dobby available to banish him into a wall if he attacked Harry.

Hedwig had just come back with Mrs. Longbottom's answer:

Dear Mr. Potter,

That was quite a nice display of flattery in your letter, a bit too obvious maybe, but I take it in the spirit in which it was offered. First, I would like to thank you for the influence you've had on Neville, I did in fact notice the change in him since last summer, a hint of it even showed during the Winter Holidays. His father Frank (a friend of your parents I should add) was a late bloomer as well and I'm relieved to see that Neville has turned a corner.

As for your request, I found it interesting and quite practical. From what Neville has told me you grew up not even knowing of our world and probably do need some guidance in technical matters. Much of this you should have gotten in your History of Magic class, but if Binns is anything dead like he was alive, I'm sure you sleep through most of his classes.

The solicitor I use is wizard named Peter Tyson, he has an office in Diagon Alley near Quality Quidditch Supplies. He is very well versed in wizarding law; he handles all of my matters, as well as having a working knowledge of muggle law. If your intention is to gain some sort of legal emancipation (Harry's jaw dropped when he saw that she had figured it out so easily) he is the right man for the task. Get control of yourself Mr. Potter, it was very apparent what you wanted a solicitor for, particularly when you wanted someone outside of Dumbledore's sphere of influence, which Mr. Tyson is (like most solicitors he was a Ravenclaw, and is very intelligent and discreet).

I must say I am impressed that you are willing to go through proper channels to obtain your freedom Mr. Potter, and thus I am perfectly willing to keep this matter to myself. I did tell Neville what your letter asked for, but I will not reveal to him what I told you, though he figured out your purpose on his own. Do be careful young man, I am sure that you are aware that you are the most polarizing figure in our little world here; all eyes are forever on you.

I wish you well,

Nora Longbottom

Harry took out his letter to Dobby and asked Hedwig, "You up to another trip girl? To Hogwarts this time?" Hedwig hadn't had much else to do for two weeks and gave a nod. "This goes to Dobby the house elf, he should be in the Hogwarts kitchens somewhere. You don't need to wait for a reply, he should be coming here. You remember who he is?" Hedwig rolled her eyes as she remembered all too well who Dobby was. Harry snickered and sent her on her way.

No sooner had Hedwig gotten out of the window than a large brown owl came through the window with a letter for Harry. Harry paused before opening it, listening for any reaction from downstairs if they had noticed an owl coming in during the daytime. There was no sound however, so Aunt Petunia either hadn't seen it, or chose not to say anything. Petunia's quiet around him had vaguely bothered him the last few days. Harry didn't especially want to be shouted at, but as with most people, anything that deviated from a long standing routine tended to be noticeable. The brown owl went right for Hedwig's water dish and food bowl, so it appeared as if a reply would be waited for.

There were two letters in the bundle, one from Remus Lupin, and one from Albus Dumbledore.

Harry chose to read Remus' first.

Dear Harry,

How are you doing Harry? It's been a couple of weeks since we talked and I'm sure you're still hurting over Sirius, I know I am. You didn't get him killed Harry, Sirius knew what the risks were a long time ago and he accepted that this might happen. You made him very happy by being in his life Harry, you gave him hope at a time when he had none, and for that I know I thank you.

On another subject, Sirius left a will that must be read and gone over. You, Tonks, and I are the beneficiaries, though I don't know yet which of us got what. Sirius was the official Heir of the House of Black, his mother died before she got around to changing her will (she died in an explosion in case no one told you, she was caught in Diagon Alley during an attack while we were all students at Hogwarts, in our 7th year if I recall it correctly). The will can be read anytime we are all able to get together; it is to be done at the Trusts Department at Gringotts. Dumbledore is not happy about the idea of you leaving your relatives right now, so it might have to wait a few weeks, but we will get it done sometime between your birthday and the start of Fall term.

I would like to come visit you soon; I don't want to come unannounced for fear of making things worse with your relatives, who I hope are treating you better. I would imagine our words to them had some effect, though I should tell you that Dumbledore didn't like it that we threatened them and made it clear that we were to harm them only in an emergency. Let me know via Hedwig when I can come see you, talk to you soon.

Moony

With this letter all of Harry's concerns about Remus were validated, the man was just too close to, or afraid of, Dumbledore to be any help to him. Plus the part about the threats, and the Order not willing to act on them enraged Harry; he only prayed that Vernon wouldn't put it to the test. The paragraph about blaming himself over Sirius' death he ignored once he had read it once, Harry didn't blame himself for what happened, he blamed Dumbledore and the Death Eaters themselves. Oh sure he had worn a mental hair-shirt at first, even after the old man had told him the Prophecy, but it had subsided the more he thought about it. Harry knew he had been duped by Voldemort, and was actually a bit proud over how he and the five students who he had more or less trained fought 12 Death Eaters to a draw.

If Snape hadn't done such a half-baked job of 'teaching' him Occlumency, he might not have bitten for the fake.....let alone him actually being told why he needed Occlumency in the first place. Harry could reasonably understand why Dumbledore had been unwilling to teach him, he certainly didn't want Dumbledore's memories available for Voldemort to download either, but the old man should have kept Snape on some kind of leash. Dumbledore's forgiveness for every one of Snape's peculiarities was mystifying to Harry, he wondered if there was some kind of family connection between the two. Surely Dumbledore didn't need a spy that badly did he? Particularly one so unpopular in the wizarding community, many of whom had either suffered through Potions at his hands, or listened to younger relatives' complaints about him.

Harry braced himself for Dumbledore's note, knowing that he wouldn't like what was in it.

Dear Harry,

I hope you are having a relaxing summer holiday so far. I have not had any notes from you about pain in your scar, so if that really is the case then I am very encouraged, Voldemort must be laying low after you and your colleagues routed his forces last month. Still, I do not expect this quiet to last, and I am afraid that we must restart your Occlumency lessons again. I'm sorry to tell you that again you must have them with Professor Snape, since my reasons for not be able to do them with you are still in effect. I have spoken with Professor Snape and he has promised me that he will try to put his issues with you aside so that the lessons will succeed this time. I also must insist upon a more concentrated effort from you to learn Occlumency quickly, as I expect our enemies to be very active in the near future. Professor Snape is currently away at a conference in Canada for Potions scholars, and will be back next week; he will be coming to Privet Drive a week from this coming Friday, July 27th.

We will remove you from your relative sometime in early August, probably to Grimmaud Place, as The Burrow is too well known to hide you out there, though we have it warded to the teeth now to protect the Weasleys. Also, your OWL results are scheduled to be mailed at the start of next week, you should have them either Monday or Tuesday, I'm confident you did well on them.

If you have any questions, do not hesitate to owl me,

Albus Dumbledore

Harry had never hated Dumbledore more than after he read this letter, any hesitation he might have had about his planned course of action disappeared. Harry did not like one bit being a virtual prisoner in this house, especially this house. Far from a gilded jail cell, he felt anything would have been better than this, and now he was stuck here for another three weeks at least, he had been hoping to be sprung for his birthday. He wanted no part of Snape in this house, particularly with no other wizards around to stop his potential excesses. Harry knew that Dumbledore trusted Snape implicitly, but he did not share that trust, and knew that Snape was very capable of harming him if the spirit moved him.

Harming him wasn't the only concern, but taking him.....Harry assumed that Voldemort had some sort of price on his head, and that the Death Eater who delivered him would never need worry about his future within the Dark Side, certainly Barty Crouch Jr. had been counting on that after the Triwizard Tournament. Temptation is an awful thing for a man, especially one with no true ties to the light side, which described Snape quite well. Add that to the fact that no one in the world hated Harry more than Snape did, and Harry was fully aware of this.

Harry was glad that he had nine days to figure out how to get rid of Snape, and he hoped more than ever that he could convince Dobby to come work for him. Having a house-elf for a bodyguard might seem a bit ridiculous, but Harry wondered at the willingness of whatever outside guards the Order had watching him to interfere with Snape, who everyone in the Order knew was Dumbledore's special aide.

The brown owl hooted loudly, Harry looked up and took the hint that he should reply to his letters:

Dear Remus,

Things are fine here, there haven't been any issues with my relatives. The threats worked on Vernon apparently, and I haven't seen Dudley more than twice this whole time. I must tell you that it pissed me off to know that your threats were hollow Remus, I'm disappointed in you that you would be unwilling to stick up for me if it came to it, it explains quite a bit though. I know the Order is watching the house and I fully expect them to interfere if they hear me screaming in pain, Dumbledore or not.

I don't want to talk about Sirius right now Remus, except to tell you that I don't blame myself for his death. This is a war, and I'm all too aware that there are casualties. I miss him, and will always treasure the brief time we had with each other.

I am ready to hear Sirius' will at any point this summer, I know you need to wait for me to get out of jail, so I hope you and Tonks don't need the money too badly and can hold tight. I'm not ready to confide and confess to anyone right now Remus, so it would be best if we hold off any visit by you for the time being. If it makes any difference to you, I'm not ready to open up to anyone in my circle yet, it's not just you. I repeat, don't come inside this house without an invitation from me, unless it's an emergency.

Be good,

Harry

Harry read this over, and realized he was being a bit snotty to Remus, but he still wasn't in a good mood and decided that Remus would have to suffer a bit. Harry needed some more information before he wrote to Dumbledore, so he decided to wait on that for another day. He sent his letter off with the brown owl and went to take a shower.

When he got back, there was a very happy looking house-elf sitting on his bed, deja-vu all over again.....

Author's Note: I'm not very good at Dobby-speak, I'll try to make it a bit different style than Harry's, but bear with me.

In HP canon most adult ages aren't given, so for the sake of my story I'm going to establish the following characters' ages:

Harry and all 6th year students: 16 years old

Luna and all 5th year students: 15 years old

The Marauders, Lily, and Snape: 37 years old

Bill Weasley: 28 years old

Charlie Weasley: 26 years old

Peter Tyson: 27 years old

Molly and Arthur Weasley: 47 years old

Minerva McGonagall: A gentleman never asks

Albus Dumbledore: unknown, likely over 100 years old

Lucious Malfoy and Bellatrix Lestrange: 40 years old

There might be more involved later for the British parts of the story

"Hello Harry Potter!" "Dobby is so happy to see you!"

Indeed Harry had never seen the house-elf so happy, and that was saying something. Harry was relieved to note that Dobby did at least keep his voice down.

"I'm glad you came Dobby, I take it you got my letter?"

"Yes Harry Potter, I got your letter a few minutes ago, I was so happy to get a letter from the most bestest wizard ever."

“Well let’s not go that far Dobby, but I’m glad Hedwig got there ok. She’s flying back now?”

“So what do you think about my offer Dobby? Are you interested in working for me?”

“Of course Harry Potter, all you ever had to do was ask me. You would like me to be your house-elf at Hogwarts Harry Potter?”

“Dobby, please call me Harry, not Harry Potter.....before I say anything else Dobby, I need to know that you will keep my secrets, some of the things I’m about to do will not be very popular.”

Dobby went a color that Harry supposed was pale on a house-elf, which clued Harry into what must be running through the little elf’s mind.

“Oh no Dobby, I won’t be doing anything dark or evil, I promise. I just want some more freedom is all, and there are many, including Dumbledore, who don’t think that it’s a good idea for me to have any.”

Dobby looked relieved at that, “Of course Harry Pot.....of course Harry, a house-elf is bound to keep his master’s secrets.”

“Ok Dobby, first things first, don’t ever call me master.” Harry held up a hand to forestall Dobby’s objections. “Yes I know I technically will be your master, but I’m uncomfortable with being called that, please respect my wishes on that.”

Dobby looked a bit dubious, but nodded all the same.

“So you’re hired then, I’ll pay you 50 galleons a month, with time off to be decided later. You won’t have much to do in all reality, it will be two years before I have a house of my own, so you will just be helping me here, and at school.”

“Dobby is pleased that Harry Potter is thinking about his future, and is proud to be his house-elf. I accept the position.”

“Great Dobby, now here’s the thing…….I….err, I mean we, might not be returning to Hogwarts. In fact we might be leaving Great Britain altogether.”

Here it was, his private plan out in the open for the first time……and confided in first to a house-elf of all things. Harry loved irony as much as the next young man, but this stretched even his limits. Still, he knew that Dobby was safe, even if any advice he gave wouldn’t be worth much.

Dobby was stunned speechless, but he rallied and asked Harry if he was serious.

“I’m very serious Dobby. I’m not entirely sure I can bring it off this quickly, so it might not happen until next year. It is something I’ve been thinking a lot about Dobby, and at the very least I want to put the pieces in place. What I would like from you in the next few weeks is to be a sounding board for me, even if you’re not sure what I’m talking about it will do me good to get my thoughts out in the open.”

It was just then that Harry realized that the Order might have listening charms on the house. His stomach went queasy, but there was nothing he could do now if the cat was out of the bag. He went to the window and looked outside, but saw nothing unusual. He collected his thoughts and turned back to Dobby.

“Well Dobby, what do you say? Are you with me?”

“Harry does not even need to ask, of course Dobby is with you…….but there is one thing Harry, Dobby is not quite sure how to say it.”

“Go on Dobby, you can tell me anything,” Harry said, thinking it had to do with Dumbledore.

“Well Harry, you see.....ummm.....well this is very embarrassing, but Dobby and Winky have become very close.....” he trailed off, blushing furiously.

Harry was exploding with laughter on the inside, but he kept his face to a smile.

“I take it then Dobby that you do not want to be parted from Winky if possible?”

“Yes Harry Potter.....err, sorry...I mean yes Harry.”

“Do you think that she would want to join you here with me?”

“Oh yes, I showed her your letter and already asked her, she would most like to leave Hogwarts to be a proper house-elf again. She would not need paying, just work is enough for her.”

“Well Dobby of course Winky would be welcome to join us, but like I said, there won’t be much work for even one house-elf, let alone two. I cannot have my Aunt and Uncle know that you are here if possible, at least not living here.”

“It is ok Harry, Dobby and Winky will do what is necessary to protect and serve you.”

“Thank you Dobby, I will rely on you for that. Now all we have to do is find a place for you to sleep at night.”

“Oh that is easy Harry, Dobby and Winky can use the clothes closet, we can make ‘changes’ to it so it will not be too small. Harry’s Aunt and Uncle will not notice us being here if Harry does not want them to.”

Harry breathed a sigh of relief, this was going much easier than he’d had any right to expect.

“Ok Dobby, come back tomorrow with Winky, and please make sure that Dumbledore does not know where you are going. Just tell him that you found a wizard family to look after and that you and Winky are going. I'm sure two house-elves won't be missed at such a big place as Hogwarts."

"Ok Harry, we will be seeing you tomorrow."

"Thank you Dobby, I'm glad that you are going to be joining me."

Dobby grinned happily and looked like he was about to leave.

"Oh yeah Dobby, one more thing. I know you can read since you answered my letter, but can you write as well?"

"Oh yes Harry, Dobby can write, Winky can as well."

"Great Dobby, I'll see you tomorrow."

"Goodbye Harry."

Well that went well Harry thought.....except for the possibility of listening charms, Harry wanted to scream when he thought of how Order members might be ratting him out to that old control freak even now. He decided to hold off writing to Peter Tyson (the solicitor) until tomorrow, by then Hedwig should be back and rested, and the listening charm issue settled one way or another.

Meanwhile, at Grimmauld Place

Remus Lupin paced around the living room, re-reading Harry's letter over and over his mind. The letter bothered him on many levels, not the least of which was an easily detectable veneer of hostility toward him. His first instinct was to go to Privet Drive immediately, even though the letter had expressly told him not to. He was stopped however, by the realization that it would only drive Harry further away from him, since so many of the adults in his life seemed not to care about Harry's wishes. Remus had never been sure of how to talk with Harry, every time he looked at Harry he was reminded of James and Lily. Sirius got past that by basically talking to Harry as he would have talked to James, being more Harry's friend than his mentor. Remus couldn't help but think of Harry as his student, and tried for more of an uncle role....a role that he wished Sirius had taken on. Then again,

Remus had had many more years to deal with James and Lily being dead than Sirius had, and it had undoubtedly altered the way he looked at it.....Sirius had been somewhat different after all those years in Azkaban, and had even once (at least to Remus' knowledge) accidentally referred to Harry as 'James'.

Remus was aware of Harry's distaste for his relatives, and had argued with Dumbledore privately until he was blue in the face, but the Headmaster had been adamant that Harry go back there for at least a month, to renew the blood protections. Remus was one of the few Order members who had known about why exactly Harry needed to go back to Privet Drive (Snape and McGonagall were the others Dumbledore had shared this with), and while he accepted Dumbledore's assurance that Harry would be safe, he thought that Dumbledore was just being lazy in not trying to find a more comfortable spot for Harry.

He still had a rough time accepting that Sirius was gone, every morning he expected to come down the stairs and see Sirius at breakfast, only to be shaken slightly at the emptiness. Remus had led a hard life up until now, but all his Marauder friends were dead.....and Remus quite considered Peter Pettigrew to be dead in all but body.....and he was alone. Remus had often thought of leaving Britain to try for a new life elsewhere, but he remained, bent on bringing down Voldemort, to avenge his friends. Remus did not know the exact contents of the Prophecy, but like so many others he could imagine what it said. He knew that Dumbledore had finally told Harry what the Prophecy entailed, but not of Harry's reaction to it.....though he could easily surmise it.

After thinking on it for a bit, Remus decided to leave Harry alone for now, if that's what he wanted. Sometimes teenagers just needed some time to deal with their issues, and while Harry often time looked and was forced to act much older than his years, he was still just a kid, not quite 16 years old. He only hoped that Harry wouldn't try to kill Snape next week when he arrived for his Occlumency lessons, as much as Remus hated Snape (and he had a long, long history with the man), he knew that Harry hated him more.....in point of fact he assumed that Harry probably put Snape on a level with Bellatrix Lestrange and Lucius Malfoy, right below Voldemort.

Dear Mr. Tyson,

Hello, good day to you. My name is Harry Potter and I have need of your services as a solicitor and would like to schedule an appointment so we can discuss some things. Nora Longbottom recommended you to me and spoke very highly of your work. Travel is a bit dodgy for me at the moment, but I will make my way to Diagon Alley to speak with you whenever you can spare the time. Sooner would be better though, as some of the problems I have are somewhat time sensitive.

I look forward to hearing back from you sir,

Harry Potter

Hedwig had come back late the previous afternoon and Harry reluctantly told her of his new house-elf arrangement. She accepted it without much hooting however, and seemed resigned to the loss of her quiet time. Harry assured her that she would have more letters to deliver than she had lately, so she didn't have to spend so much time at Privet Drive. She went off to Peter Tyson's office, with instructions to wait for his reply.

Thus far there had been no sign that the Order knew what he was up to, Harry figured if they hadn't stormed the place by now, they never would. Harry was a bit puzzled at the lack of foresight, perhaps they thought he was no threat to disobey them. He found this rich, he was supposed to kill the most powerful wizard in recent memory (he wasn't too clear on the war over Grindewald, having not paid much attention in History class), yet the rest of the time he had to be a good little boy and do what he was told. Sometimes the dichotomy of his life made him laugh. If only Ron and his latent jealousy realized what Harry would do for a normal wizarding life.

Harry had known for over a year now that it would come down to he and Voldemort in some sort of final combat, though not why this would be. Hearing the Prophecy had explained quite a bit to Harry, such as why Voldemort had targeted his parents of all people (to this day Harry didn't even know what his parents did for a living after Hogwarts, when he had asked Hagrid or Sirius they changed the subject). Harry understood that whether or not he believed the Prophecy, and he wasn't sure yet if he did, Voldemort and Dumbledore believed it (even if Voldemort didn't know the whole thing), and this belief drove many of their actions toward him.

By early afternoon Dobby and Winky had come by, with their few belongings and begun to settle in. Harry had warned Dobby that there wasn't much to do yet, but when they came right before lunch Dobby assured Harry that both he and Winky each had a hobby that they used to divert themselves on their days off. Dobby's hobby was making clothes, Winky's was art, a talent she never knew she had while working for the Crouch's. As Harry had expected, Winky had refused to take money, though she did agree after some persuading that Harry could pay her in art supplies. Actually persuading wasn't the word, Harry had to order her to accept the supplies. Winky had opened her mouth to object.....but realized she couldn't object to an order and still be a proper house-elf. Dobby watched this by-play with no small amount of amusement, and joined in to insist that Winky wear some sort of clothes, or at least clean the ones she. She agreed eventually and everyone was happy with how things had turned out. Harry stressed that his relatives were not to know that the elves were there until Harry was ready, Dobby immediately snapped his fingers at the door and said that the Dursleys wouldn't hear any noise short of a banshee cry from this room anymore.

Hedwig returned around 3 pm with a short note from Peter Tyson:

Mr. Potter,

I was pleasantly surprised to receive your communication, and I would be happy to talk with you. Nora Longbottom sent me a missive yesterday saying that I should expect to hear from you, but even still.....She had nothing but nice things to say about you, which is quite rare you should know. I can promise you that I am not a member of the Order of the Phoenix, though I know of its existence, so my loyalties are not entwined there. I was one year behind Bill Weasley at Hogwarts and succeeded him as Head Boy, we have remained friends over the years and I'm aware of his membership. Attorney-client privilege is the same in the wizarding world as in the muggle world Mr. Potter, so anything you tell me is automatically private.

I know something of your living situation in Surrey (don't be alarmed, most of the wizarding world knows that you live with your muggle relatives during the summer, they simply don't know where), and I realize that Headmaster Dumbledore must have you on a rather short leash, especially with Voldemort back.....yes Mr. Potter, I can write his name without having a heart attack. If you like, I can pop around your house around lunch time, I can bring some sandwiches and we can have our chat. Don't worry, I often wear muggle clothes, so I won't look out of place in your neighborhood and cause any concern. If this is acceptable to you, simply do nothing and we will meet tomorrow, if it isn't, send your owl back to me with an alternative plan.

I look forward to meeting you,

Peter Tyson

Harry couldn't have asked for more than this, and was highly pleased. Things were falling into place for him, he just had to stay lucky a bit longer and he would be free.

9:00 am

Harry woke up from yet another dream-less sleep, feeling very rested. Harry had been wondering why Voldemort wasn't toying with him lately, he figured that his nemesis would be after him full tilt, taunting about the loss of his godfather. Harry pondered about what turned Tom Riddle into what he had become, he remembered the teenage Tom Riddle in the Chamber of Secrets telling him how closely their lives seemed to parallel. Of all the things Riddle had said to him, that rocked him the most, and gave him the most pause. Harry didn't really think he would turn dark, after all, when Voldemort had offered to help he resurrect his parents during first year he hadn't been tempted.....and if that wouldn't do it, nothing would. Harry felt he didn't need any of the supposed benefits of being dark; The idea of power didn't do much for him, he had little desire to make people fear him or do his bidding; Money? He had enough of that, judging by what was in his vault.....his vault!

Uh oh. Harry went over to his desk and whipped out some parchment and wrote a quick letter to Gringotts:

Dear Gringotts manager,

I was wondering if it would be possible to get a balance statement of my account. I may need to make some large type purchases over the next month or so and I would like an idea of how much I have to spend. If possible as well, I would like you to include 1,000 galleons spread over several bank drafts. I'm sorry to put you to any trouble, but I am unable to get to Diagon Alley in the immediate future and must conduct my business this way. I have enclosed my key, as proof that I am who I say I am.

Thank you for your attention,

Harry James Potter

He folded the letter up, the key inside, and taped it shut. Hedwig grabbed it and went on her way, looking happy for the exercise.

Harry literally had no idea what he was worth, money-wise, and decided that if he was going to hire a solicitor that this might be useful information to have at his disposal. Once again Harry was appalled at how little he knew about his own affairs. Harry hadn't even been to his vault in 3 years, since his short time living over The Leaky Cauldron. He had no clue what solicitors cost to hire, but figured the 1,000 galleons would suffice, plus if Gringotts didn't do that sort of thing, there might as well be some benefit to being the "famous Harry Potter" and he assumed that Tyson would think him good for it. Plus, and he knew it might come to this: He might have to disappear for awhile and live like a muggle, and it would be nice to know if he could afford to do so.

Dobby and Winky came out, and apparated away to get breakfast. Harry had enough galleons on hand to feed the three of them for the next few weeks, particularly with two house-elves who didn't seem to eat much. Harry had had a firm talk with Winky the previous night before bed about her butterbeer problem, she promised that she wouldn't drink any as long as Harry said not to. Harry himself liked butterbeer well enough, but he would rather have a Coke than anything.....the things Harry missed most about the muggle world when he was away at the Burrow or Hogwarts were Coke and pizza.

Harry debated on whether to warn Aunt Petunia about his forthcoming visitor, he wasn't sure what to do about that. On the one hand, if he didn't warn her she might slam the door in Mr. Tyson's face and not let him inside.....then again she might do so if he did warn her. Petunia tended to be much quieter and less hostile when Vernon wasn't around, so that was a plus and he could exploit it. Harry knew that a doorbell ringing was coming, because if the Order had any wards on the house they would have anti-apparition ones on it, negating Tyson just popping into his bedroom.....unless of course he was a house-elf like Dobby and Winky, who seemingly could go wherever they wished, wards or not. Harry smiled at this thought, and wondered that a person could do pretty well as a burglar with two house-elves as his accomplices.

One more concern was the Order members outside watching the house, what would they do? Harry had noted Tyson's comment about owning muggle clothes and knew that it would not attract too much attention from the outside if Tyson were dressed in a suit, after all muggle salesmen wore suits and called on houses all the time. The worry was if someone recognized him and reported it, after all if Tyson was a former Head Boy at Hogwarts, then everyone there when he was would have known him. Harry thought about all of the Order member he had met, and only Tonks and Bill Weasley fit this criteria, Bill the more so since he and Tyson were friends. Oh well, there was nothing he could do about this, yet another small risk to take.

The one thing that kept Harry going in all of this planning, was knowing that there really was no downside to trying it....after all, could his imprisonment get worse than this? He didn't think it could, thus there was no more harm that could be done to him. An added benefit was how he was going about it, Harry knew that if he just went off half-cocked and ran away that he would be caught, and likely kept out of things as long as possible. Harry had decided to keep things nice and legal-like just in case he was found out, for the sake of his credibility.....credibility that had already been cashed in with Mrs. Longbottom and Peter Tyson. Harry had always been more results oriented than a thinker and planner, but he was becoming more and more enamored of what happened when one combined the two.

The elves came back, and the three of them shared their breakfast of bagels and cream cheese. Harry told them that there would a visitor at around noon, and asked them to conjure up a couple of chairs (there was only one in the room) for them to sit on. He told them that he would like them to stay for the meeting, as it would directly affect them as well as he, and he wanted them to hear about it firsthand. Dobby looked shocked that Harry would include them, but realized that Harry wanted them there as much to be bodyguards as witnesses. He asked Harry if that was the case, surprising Harry with his insight. Harry allowed that it might come to that, he had never met Tyson and didn't know him from Adam, just from a recommendation from a woman he had never met. It didn't hurt to be careful, Harry told them, it was as much for their safety as his.

Meanwhile, at The Burrow:

Ron Weasley poked around the house, doing his chores, more tired than in any summer in recent memory. Fred and George had opened their joke shop, Weasley's Wizarding Wheezes, the previous week and had hired Ron and Ginny as part-time help. Ron and Ginny each worked every other day for about six hours a pop, and received enough galleons that they weren't going to need to worry about pocket money for the coming school year. The downside was that the twins turned out to be taskmasters at work, making Ron run around like a whirling dervish. There were usually four of them in the shop at any given time: Fred, George, Lee Jordan, and either Ron or Ginny and they were all kept hopping the first week. This was Ron's first real taste of work that didn't involve de-gnoming, cleaning his room, or Hogwarts' detentions, and he wasn't sure if he liked it.

Like Harry, Ron wasn't sure what he wanted to do with his life after Hogwarts. His career counseling session with Professor McGonagall had been much quieter than Harry's, though Ron had enjoyed Harry's recounting of it, he loved the idea of McGonagall screaming at Umbridge and making her back down. During his session, Ron had broached the idea of becoming an Auror, because it looked like it would be interesting work and a chance to be more involved in the war, which Ron privately believed was going to last a long time. However, while McGonagall had been as diplomatic as possible (for her), she had told Ron that his grades did not bode well for achieving the OWL and NEWT scores necessary to qualify for Auror training. Ron was crushed when he learned this, thinking he would be the only one of his mates not to get into the program. Ron knew that Hermione would get the grades to enter whatever profession she choose, and he figured that his famous friend Harry would be greased into the Auror program if its what he wanted.

Ron was, surprisingly enough for a 16 year old, reasonably self-aware, and knew enough of his own limitations to be worried about his future. He knew that he didn't have Hermione's brains or Harry's raw wizard power. In point of fact, Ron thought that he was a meld of the two, with better than average smarts and more power than Hermione had thus far shown. When Ron did his own playback of the DOM, he felt that he had fought pretty well, though not as well as Harry. What was holding him back was his being a bit lazy, something Hermione was constantly hectoring him about. Hectoring though, that was finally starting to penetrate, and he was resolved to do much better in school during his last two years.

Ron had always been devoted to Hermione, even though he had long been one of her constant critics, and he had finally worked up the nerve to tell her how he really felt about her, telling her the week before that he was in love with her.....and although it took her totally by surprise, one look at the expression on his face had told her was deadly serious. She had grabbed him in a fierce embrace and whispered to him that she had always loved him too. They had been a couple now for an entire week, and the smile had never left Ron's mind, though they had not officially told anyone (Ginny knew though, the twins had placed some Listening Charms for her).

Hermione had for so long been the major female presence in Ron's Hogwarts life that every other girl he compared to her just didn't measure up on most levels. He had always figured, pretty accurately, that the field was pretty clear if he wanted to date Hermione, none of his roommates would go for her (Harry was mistaken when he thought that Ron hadn't picked up on his irritation with Hermione) and Ron was aware that Hermione was not terribly popular with the rest of the House, though that did not particularly bother him. The fact was, he felt he was now mature enough to deserve her, and maybe tonight was the right time to bring everything out into the open (Hermione was doing a summer study program at a university in her hometown, but came over most nights to The Burrow on The Knight Bus). There was Harry to consider of course, even though Ron knew Harry didn't want Hermione for himself.....indeed he thought that if they ever became a couple one of them would be dead inside of a week.....Harry might feel shut out, like the two of them didn't need him anymore, which might be why he had requested no letters, maybe he had figured it out or something.

Girl problems aside, Ron still didn't know what he wanted to do with his life. Fred and George, while having no problem giving Ron a part-time job, had made it clear that his future wasn't in WWW unless the business expanded greatly. Ron supposed he could always get a job in his dad's office (the Misuse of Muggle Artifacts Office), but the idea of spending decades fussing over enchanted teapots and flying carpets left him cold. Quidditch wasn't a consideration, unless got much better over the next 2 years.....which was possible of course. Ron decided to leave this train of thought until after he had looked at his OWL scores and seen what his options might be. Meanwhile, if he was going to get better as a Keeper, he had better go do some flying.

Privet Drive, Noon

A tall man in a dark blue Saville Row suit strode up Privet Drive with briefcase in hand. He checked the numbers on the houses as he went past, looking for a particular one, Number 4. Having found it, he walked up to the front door and rang the doorbell.

"Hello there, you are Mrs. Dursley I presume?"

“Yes I am, may I help you?”

“Yes, my name is Peter Tyson and I am a solicitor. I am here to see your nephew Harry Potter.”

This rocked Petunia, she had assumed him to be normal, but he must be one of ‘them’ if he wanted to see Harry. She was about to close the door when Harry rushed up to stop her.

“Hello, you must be Mr. Tyson, I’m Harry Potter. Won’t you come in?” With a subtle movement of his body he made it so that Tyson had room to enter the house, which he did.

“I’m pleased to meet you Mr. Potter, where would you like to have our discussion?”

“Upstairs in my room sir, right this way.”

Petunia looked as if she might object, but Harry and his guest just smiled pleasantly at her and went on their way upstairs, leaving her with a confused expression on her face.

Once in Harry’s room, an appallingly small one Tyson noticed, Harry introduced him to Dobby and Winky and they all sat down.

“So what do I owe the pleasure of this meeting Mr. Potter?”

“Please sir, call me Harry.”

“As long as you call me Peter, I’m not yet a sir, as the muggle queen doesn’t know I exist.”

Both of them smiled at the joke, and some of the tension in the room was lifted.

“Peter, before we talk about that I would like to formally hire you as my solicitor, so that all we talk about today will be kept legally private.”

Oh this was going to be good, Peter thought. This kid certainly plans ahead doesn't he?

"Harry, I accept the position as your solicitor, therefore this entire conversation is between the two of us.....sorry, the four of us (Dobby and Winky smiled shyly at this). We can discuss my fee after we decide what I'm going to be doing for you."

"Terrific. The first thing I would like you to do is do a scan on this house, and find out what wards and spells are in place. I know there must be at least a couple, and I would be interested to know what they are."

"A suspicious one aren't you? Not that I blame you of course. Let's give it a go."

Peter took out his wand and mumbled some incantations that Harry couldn't make out clearly and did some wand motions that looked like a muggle radar screen.

"Interesting, very interesting. There are probably more spells on this house than any muggle house in Britain. There is an anti-apparition ward on the house, which I fully expected to be here, hence my ringing the doorbell. By the way, in case you were wondering, I would not have forced my way inside had she slammed the door in my face.....yes Harry, I could tell that's what she was about to do. I have no interest in letting your minders outside, there are three of them by the way in two different locations, know that you have a wizard visiting you, as they would not likely let that visit go uninterrupted. There is one listening charm focused on the living room, and an anti-portkey charm on the whole house itself. There are no less than four tracking charms on you, as well as one on your trunk and two on your owl's cage. There is also a silencing charm on your door here, and an enlarging charm on the closet, which I assume you know about."

Harry nodded, "Yes, Dobby is the one who did those spells, so that my Aunt and Uncle wouldn't know that the elves are here.....so the listening charm would only pick up things said in the living room? Nothing else in here?"

“Correct, given that the silencing charm in here will totally muffle anything said in here, even at a yell. Good move though, hiring House Elves, keeps you nice and clean.”

“Right, I would prefer to say on the right side of the law, whatever I might think of it.”

“ Well Harry there are no other spells currently on the house....I’m guessing you’re worried about potential listening charms?”

“Yes Peter, I don’t want Dumbledore’s people to know what I’m planning, they would be in here in a minute to try and stop me.”

“ Stop you from doing what Harry, what is it you have in mind to do? I have a good idea, but I’d like to hear it from you.”

“Put simply Peter, I want to gain legal emancipation in both the wizarding world and the muggle world, so that I can begin to make my own decisions, without any interference.”

“Well Harry, that’s what I thought you would say, based on your letter yesterday. I did a bit of research into you and learned more than a little of what we would need to get that freedom. Am I right in assuming that you have not discussed this with your relatives?”

“Yes, the only ones I have mentioned it to are in this room.”

“Ok, easy things first. Emancipating you in the muggle world will be pretty simple, as long as your Aunt and Uncle sign off on it. The wizarding world will be a bit harder, but its still workable, since there is only one more year until you are an adult anyway. Yesterday afternoon after I received your owl, I sent a message to my wife, who happens to work in the Records Department at the Ministry of Magic, requesting that she make a copy of your file on the sly. Would you like to see it?”

Harry looked shocked, “I have a file? For what?”

“Oh we all have files Harry, there aren’t that many wizards in Great Britain and the Ministry likes to keep tabs on us.”

“Sure, I’d be very interested in seeing it.”

Peter opened his briefcase, and after tossing sandwiches to Harry and his elves, took out a folder and handed it to Harry

The rest of the file had newspaper clippings of his various exploits, copies of his year-end grades during his five years at school, and an anonymous report listing his various spell casting strengths.

Harry sat there quietly for a minute, "You know before this I never even knew what my parents did for a living."

"You must be kidding."

Harry shook his head, "No one would tell me Peter, they always changed the subject."

Peter didn't know what to say to this, this kid's entire family history had been denied him. Peter Tyson was no lover of Dumbledore, but he had until this time at least respected him, but this was beyond the pale. Peter knew that only Dumbledore could have imposed that level of silence on his staff and associates.

"Well Harry, if I was unsure before, I'm not now. I'll do what I can to help you get your freedom. I would, however, like to know what you hope to accomplish with it. You do, for all intents and purposes, have only three more months left outside of Hogwarts and the underage magic rules before your 17th birthday. Are you intending to leave Hogwarts early? I know Fred and George Weasley made a big splash by doing it, but they had a clearly defined plan of what to do once they did."

"Peter, if I am able to gain my freedom I would like to explore continuing my education outside of Great Britain and Hogwarts, possibly in America or Canada"

Silence dominated the room as Harry's words sunk in to his audience. Dobby and Winky knew the plan of course, but it still hadn't seemed real until Harry had spoken it to someone else.

"Well Harry.....I must say that I pride myself on rarely being surprised, but I have to admit that you just qualified for the 'rarely'. I had assumed that you simply wanted to do some spell practice.....or to get out of living with your relatives."

"Why did you think I wanted to get out of living here? I thought this place and my life here was supposed to be secret."

"Harry, most of the wizarding world knows that you live with muggles who don't like magic. There have been a few articles in the Daily Prophet, and your schoolmates haven't been terribly close-mouthed about your home life as they know it. Now how many know you live here in Little Whinging? Probably not many, other than Dumbledore and his people. I found out, as I mentioned, through my wife and her records access. What I don't know is why you haven't been attacked here, Voldemort's people aren't the brightest lot in the country, but at least one of them must know how to do some muggle information research to find you mother's relations and where they might be."

"The Ministry knows Peter, Umbridge sent those Dementors after me last summer, and she knew right where to direct them."

"So that's how the Dementors got here, I'd always wondered about that. She admitted this to you?"

"Yes she did, in front of about a dozen witnesses.....though half of them want me dead, so I doubt they would vouch for me. Speaking of which, she hasn't been arrested or anything? I would hope that Remus or Dumbledore would have mentioned it to me."

"Remus, as in Remus Lupin?"

"Right, do you know him?"

"I know of him.....famous Marauder, werewolf, former instructor of yours if I recall correctly." Sees Harry's reaction to the Marauder comment, "Oh yes Harry, the Marauders were famous, even though I didn't get a chance to go to school with any of them I hear many a story about their pranks.....particularly when Snape showed up my 4th year to teach Potions, when that happened a lot of stories were recycled."

In spite of the seriousness of the situation Harry couldn't help but smile. Anytime Snape was held up to ridicule was fine with him.

"As to why the Death Eater's haven't attacked me? I guess it must be because of the blood protection that my aunt gives me, no one is supposed to be able to harm me in the house, magically anyway."

"Hmmmm...interesting, that tells me something...so let me ask you this Harry, how much news have you gotten since you came back here for break?"

"Nothing, I don't get the Daily Prophet anymore since all they do is print lies and half truths about me, and The Quibbler isn't what one could call a News-type paper."

Peter laughed at that one, he remember that there was a Lovegood daughter at Hogwarts now and Harry must know her to have given The Quibbler that kind of access, access he had never in fact granted to a newspaper before.

"Well Harry, your close personal friend Umbridge has not been seen, rumor has it she's either in seclusion somewhere, or in St. Mungo's under a false name. Whatever you kids did to her at the end of the year must have been something. Bill told me about the swamp that the twins used in the hallway, I haven't had such a good laugh in a long time.....and I understand you had something to do with their joke shop?"

"Yes I did, though that's not common knowledge. I gave them my Tri-Wizard winnings."

“That’s what I thought....not about the Tri-Wizard winnings, but most people who know Fred and George are assuming that you are their backer, given that the Weasley family is not a rich one....how could it be, with seven kids....and you are their one rich friend. I don’t think Molly has deduced it yet, or maybe she has and just doesn’t want to admit it, Bill says that she dotes on you. When you come to Diagon Alley next we’ll make a point to stop there. Anyway, back to what I was saying, about news.....Fudge is hanging on so far, he came clean in the press about his inactions and the public seems to be buying it as simply an overworked man’s errors in judgment.”

Harry started laughing when he heard that, then stopped when he thought about it, did he want Fudge still in office? He voiced this concern to Peter.

“I think for the moves you have in mind Harry, that you do want Fudge still as Minister, given that Dumbledore is certainly going to oppose us. I’m going to assume (there’s that word again) that you don’t know much about the wizarding political system, given that you’re not a Ravenclaw, and thus don’t pay any attention in History of Magic.” He smiled when he said this, so Harry didn’t take what was in fact a true statement as an insult.

“Harry, the Minister of Magic is elected by a public vote every five years, the next scheduled election being in April, 1998. This is Fudge’s third term in office, and he has given no indication that he wants to retire. A Minister, or any department head for that matter, can be removed by a $\frac{3}{4}$ vote of the Wizengamot, a body with which you are now familiar after last August I imagine. The Wizengamot is made up of forty witches and wizards, who serve ten year terms. Members generally are re-appointed for life unless they are hit by a major scandal and choose to resign, or of course if they die. So thirty members of the Wizengamot must agree to remove Fudge, and you should know that after the Lestranges were broken out of Azkaban that Fudge did survive a no-confidence vote, only seventeen members voted to kick him out. Most of the rest said that it either wasn’t Fudge’s fault or just wasn’t enough to impeach the head of our government.

“Another factor Harry is that there isn’t really a bona-fide person to replace Fudge, since everyone knows that Dumbledore won’t take on the job, though there isn’t the demand for that that there once was. The usual names mentioned are Amelia Bones, Amos Diggory, and Manuel Zabini, I believe you know, or knew their children?”

“Yes I do, though Susan Bones is Amelia’s niece, not daughter. Blaise Zabini is a 6th year Slytherin, and Cedric...” Harry went quiet at that point, and Peter gave him a minute to collect himself.

“So anyway, none of those three has the widespread support to galvanize an impeachment movement, though I would expect at least two of them to run against Fudge in the next election. The muggles have a saying ‘you have to knock the champ out, its not enough to beat him on points’, that’s the attitude here.”

“What about you, are you interested in someday becoming Minister?”

Peter smiled, he got this question a lot from muggleborns who always saw people in his profession go for Parliament.

“No Harry, I have no interest in what really is a thankless job. I do, however, intend to stand for the Wizengamot when I reach proper age, you must be 35 to be a member, so I have eight years to go. That’s the extent of my desire to participate in government, and even that is because I believe it will help solidify my legal practice.

Harry digested all of this, he found this fascinating and a bit odd, finally an adult wizard was talking to him person-to-person and not evading his questions. Another occurred to him to ask:

“How many wizards are there in Britain Peter?”

“Roughly 20,000 or so Harry, with somewhere around 1 million around the world. That gives the muggles a 6,000 to 1 population advantage on us Harry, you must remember that whenever the Pureblood brigade mocks and insults Muggles, its that ratio that’s in the back of their mind, if not the front. They know that if the muggles ever found out about us and came after us in force, we wouldn’t stand a chance.....our shields don’t stop bullets Harry.”

Harry ruminated on that for a minute, it certainly explained a lot about muggle/wizard relations, and why there had to be the kind of secrecy that there was.

“How much does the muggle government know about us?”

“Not much ,the Prime Minister.....John Major for the time being, is briefed when he takes office, though a charm is placed on him so that he can't talk about us to just anyone. The Royal family knows, some of them over the years have been our kind, though none have ever been King or Queen.”

Harry had heard about the very interesting Windsor family, they were always being talked about in the muggle newspapers, he was amused at the idea of one or more of them being wizards.

“Back to what we were talking about.....though I what you're telling me is very interesting.....why would it be better for me for Fudge to be in power? He's not my biggest fan you know, he's never believed anything I've said, about Voldemort being back, or Sirius being innocent.”

“Hang on a minute, you're telling me that Quibbler stuff was true about Sirius Black? That wasn't one of Joe Lovegood's 'inventions'?”

“It was true, Sirius Black was innocent of my parents' murder, it was their other friend, Peter Pettigrew....yes, another Marauder....that set them up and betrayed them to Voldemort.”

Harry paused for a minute, understanding how incomplete his stories must be to Peter. “Peter, would you like me to tell you what my Hogwarts life has been like? I know you must have heard some of it, but if you have the time perhaps you'd like to hear all of it, the truth this time, rather than rumor. I mean, I don't want to keep you from other appointments.....”

Dang this was a polite kid, how on earth did wind up like this with that woman raising him?

“This is my last appointment for the day Harry, I was going to spend the rest of my afternoon doing paperwork, but its nothing that can't wait. Fire away.”

Harry spent the next two hours telling his story, telling Peter how he found out about being a wizard, to meeting Ron on the train, the search for the Philosopher's Stone, which Peter had actually heard of, he had met Nicholas Flamel before. Harry took Peter, figuratively anyway, down into the Chamber of Secrets with him and told about how most of the school had believed he was the Heir of Slytherin.....something Peter found hilarious in its absurdity, he assured Harry that the Sorting Hat didn't have quite so large a sense of humor to put the Heir of Slytherin into Gryffindor House. People will believe anything, Peter told him. Harry described his Dementor experiences, and how Remus had taught him his Patronus, a spell that Peter admitted that he had never tried to cast...and hoped never to need to. Sirius Black was talked about, and the revelations in the Shrieking Shack about who actually had betrayed his parents. The Tri-Wizard Tournament was more public knowledge, but Barty Crouch Jr. was not, Peter had had no idea that Crouch had been teaching students at Hogwarts for an entire school year right under Dumbledore's nose. Peter knew all about Umbridge and her insanities, though not about the blood quill and the threat of Cruciatus. He described in detail what happened at the Department of Mysteries, and how he had not only watched Sirius fall through the Veil, and that he had used an Unforgivable on Bellatrix Lestrange, his godfather's murderer. Harry reflected on his friends, his enemies (particularly Draco Malfoy and Snape), and how truly lonely was, in spite of being the most famous 16 year old wizard in the world.

Finally, Harry shared the full text of the Prophecy with Peter, something he had not done with Ron or Hermione. He felt that Peter should know the whole truth, if only for his own safety (Peter's safety).

After he was done, Harry looked exhausted, and Peter could tell that this was a story that Harry had never told in its entirety. Dobby and Winky ran over to him when it was over and hugged him tightly, as Harry struggled to keep control of his emotions. Peter too was visibly moved, he wasn't quite sure what to say to Harry at this moment. Here was the oldest 15 year old kid that he had ever met. Peter had known that Harry had been through some hard times over the last few years, but nothing like what he had just heard. Just looking at Harry's face when it was done told him that every word was true.

"Harry, why you don't you go to the loo and splash some water on your face, I need a few minutes to think."

Harry blanched, as he thought that Peter might be leaving, but Peter anticipated this:

"No Harry, I'm not going back on our deal, you've just hit me with quite the recollection and I need to let it sink in. Dobby and Winky can stay and make sure I don't do anything rash," he smiled weakly.

Harry left the room and the room descended back into silence. Hedwig tapped at the window, which Harry had closed earlier, Peter looked at Dobby who nodded, and opened the window. Hedwig flew in with a thick envelope and went to her water bowl.

Harry came back in the room, looking better than he had when he left. He and Peter watched each other for a minute, and Peter pointed out to him that his owl had returned. Harry went over and stroked Hedwig for a minute, thanking her for all the great work she had done for him. Hedwig did the owl version of a cat's purr, and this seemed to give Harry some strength back, as he opened the envelope, it was from Gringott's.

Dear Mr. Potter

We received your note this morning and are happy to comply with your requests, as they are perfectly normal for someone with your background. We have enclosed a total of 5 bank drafts that spread evenly the 1,000 galleons you requested, if you require anymore don't hesitate to send your owl to come get them.

Here is a list of your total assets:

665,308 galleons currently are in your vault at the Diagon Alley branch of Gringotts

30,239 galleons are currently in your vault at the Orion Alley branch of Gringotts in Toronto, Canada

You have no spending limits Mr. Potter, the 1,200 galleons that you have removed over the previous 5 years have not made a dent, nor is the 4,000 galleons a year that Hogwarts removes a burden on you. We remind you that the will of Sirius Black still needs to be read, you are a beneficiary along with Nymphadora Tonks and Remus Lupin, your assets will no doubt increase significantly, as the Black estate is a large one.

If you have any further inquiries or transactions, don't hesitate to send us an owl.

Harry handed over the letter to Peter without a word, Peter read it also without comment, though he was internally relieved that this wouldn't be a pro-bono client. He knew that if this matter went as far as he thought it possible, his career would either make a giant leap or a large drop.....taking on Albus Dumbledore was not to be done lightly.

"Ok Harry.....where do I start.....I'm glad you shared that with me Harry, both your story and your financial statement. The story explains quite a bit, and the money means that you have the resources to walk away, or at the very least to convincingly threaten it. You appear to be bothered most about your lack of say in your life, coupled with the fact that each year you've been at Hogwarts someone has either tried to kill you or suck your soul out." Harry nodded his agreement with both statements

"Harry, who else knows about the Prophecy?"

“Dumbledore, and the four of us. Voldemort knows the first part of it, but not the last. That’s what he was trying to con me into giving him at the Department of Mysteries. His lackeys likely know that there IS a prophecy, but little or nothing about what it contains.”

“You haven’t told any of your friends? Not that I would want to either, but they did wind up risking their lives to protect its secret.”

“I haven’t told them.....well to protect them I guess. Dumbledore said that no one should know, so that Voldemort couldn’t torture the information out of them.”

“Are you sure that Dumbledore hasn’t told anyone else? Such as Snape, or your friend Lupin?”

“He claims that he hasn’t, although I won’t speak for what he might have said since the holidays started.”

“Harry, speak plainly to me now, your gut feeling.....do you believe this Prophecy?”

“I don’t know Peter, I just don’t know. I mean it certainly explains why Voldemort came after me when I was just a baby. I had thought that he just hated my parents, since they were members of the Order (he had described the Order of the Phoenix to Peter during the story, but not most of its members or its location) and were on the light side.....but I just can’t get past the fact that it was Trelawney who was the one who gave it, I just have a hard time believing that anything she says is the gospel.”

“Well I don’t blame you there, Ravenclaws don’t usually take Divination Harry, so I never had the pleasure of her classes (both of them smirked when he said that), or of even meeting her, she never came down from her blessed tower.....though now I’m wondering if Dumbledore keeps her hidden up there, to prevent anyone from using Occlumency to break into that fragile head of hers.”

“True, very true....which makes his Hogwarts’ decisions that much more puzzling. How on earth could he not have suspected something from Quirrel or Crouch/Moody? A known Death Eater not only teaching an important course, but being a head of House? Snape didn’t take over Slytherin until I had left, but I couldn’t believe it when I heard of it. Now Harry, do you honestly believe that your friend Hermione is informing on you?”

“I don’t want to believe it, and I know that if she is doing it she’s thinks she’s protecting me.....but the facts seem to bear it out. Hermione worships authority, I think if Dumbledore or McGonagall said it was for my own good, she’d tell them what I was doing, or what I’m planning. Add to that Ron and Ginny, she spends a lot more time with them than I do, and Hermione can ferret out information from Ron without him probably knowing about it.”

“Its safe to say then, that you have no intention of sharing this with her, your ‘relocation plans’?”

“Absolutely not, I’ll write her a nice long letter when I’m on the plane, if that’s in fact what I wind up doing.”

“But why leave Harry? Why walk away from Great Britain? I’m not saying I blame you, but what’s your reasoning.”

“Peter, I’m tired. I don’t just mean right this minute, but I mean overall. I’m tired. I’m sick of fighting a war where I’m not entirely sure who I’m fighting, I just know I’m not winning. I’m tired of the chore of being the ‘Boy Who Lived’ , either worshipped or hated no matter what I do. People point at my scar like I’m some museum piece, they talk about me in loud tones as if I can’t hear them, or they don’t care if I do. Most of all I’m tired of people being horrible to me for something that I have no control over, I can’t take it anymore, its like pieces of glass in my head, all the time. I’ve had no life Peter, not here at the Dursleys’, not at Hogwarts, not anywhere. I might live to graduate from Hogwarts, I might not.....but why should I bother when my life isn’t mine?”

Harry finally broke down, and his cries of anguish filled the room

Author's Note: That last speech is my nod to The Green Mile (book by Stephen King, screenplay by Frank Darabont), the scene when Michael Clarke Duncan and Tom Hanks are talking is one of my favorite ever movie moments, and this is my homage to it (the pieces of glass line of course, I ripped right from it).

Author's Note: I know that JKR said that the two kids I pair up later in the chapter won't happen, but I like the pairing and I think it makes overall sense (especially after Matt Lewis' performance in the Goblet movie). I'm going to be taking a few liberties with how Occlumency works, in order not to (hopefully anyway) steal from other stories that I've read. Luna is going to be making her debut in this chapter and I just can't get my writing head around her vague talk, so she's going to appear more normal than she does in canon, or in most stories. Let's just say for the sake of argument that the DOM knocked her back on kilter a little bit. Oh, and I have no earthly idea how the British (or American for that matter) procedure for child emancipation works, what I do here will just be a story device, that's all.

Peter and the elves sat in the room quietly, almost afraid to move. After about a minute Harry seemed to stiffen, and looked up, no longer crying.

Peter quietly asked, "Did that help Harry? Letting all of that out?"

"Yes it did, I feel a lot better thank you.....and thank you for listening Peter. Everyone else I talk to about things like that always go 'oh it will be alright Harry' or 'you have to get past it'; or my favorite one 'calm down'.....does anyone ever calm down after being told to like that?"

"I wouldn't think so," Peter laughed and some of the emotion in the room dissipated. Peter leaned back and closed his eyes for a moment, lost in thought.

"Ok Harry, here's the thing.....I'm going to ask a few questions, both for my own information and to get you thinking about what to do next. What we have here is a broad plan, which we need to narrow down. After that I'm going to leave for the night, and come back tomorrow. I want to give you the night to think about some things Harry: whether or not you really want to do this, perhaps this talk was the catharsis you've needed to carry on; how far you're willing to go to defy Dumbledore.....now don't even say it, I know he isn't your boss, but he acts like it and his people are going to enforce it whether you and I like it or not; where you want to go if you get your freedom right now; if you don't get your freedom in the next month, are you willing to live as a muggle for a year and wait these people out, I'm positive I can get you emancipated in the muggle world as long as your Aunt and Uncle agree to it. Speaking of which, that's why I'm coming back tomorrow, we need to talk with them and apprise them of what's going on. I'll speak to your Aunt on my way out and assure her that they will like this discussion, since it involves you leaving and never coming back.....I am right in thinking that you never want to come back here?

Harry nodded, the idea of willing coming back here made his skin crawl. "Ok, what do you want to ask me?"

"First, how good is your Occlumency.....be brutally honest here Harry, this is important, and not for the reason you're thinking."

"My Occlumency needs work Peter, there's no way I can keep Voldemort out if he really wants in."

"That's not who I'm worried about Harry, its Snape and Dumbledore. If they get a hold of you they can break through your mind like a pinata and easily discover all that we've been talking about here. Now you said that Snape is due here a week from today?"

"Yes, Dumbledore only wants him to teach me, he says there's no one else that can do it, and he won't do it himself."

"Well that's one of the few decisions I agree with, given what you've told me about the Order.....no, not the Snape part, I mean about Dumbledore not doing it himself. He wasn't telling you the whole truth when he said that no one else can do it, only a sheltered teenager would believe that there are just three Occlumency experts in the wizarding world (Snape, Dumbledore, and Voldemort), and our Headmaster has done everything in his considerable power to keep you sheltered. There just don't happen to be any other Occlumency experts in the Order or at Hogwarts....which I still have trouble believing, but that's a debate for another time.....Now are you absolutely positive that the Order are outside right now?"

“Dumbledore said things that make me assume it, yeah. Why?”

“Because of the two groupings out there, the Order must be one of them.....now who is the other? The Ministry? Death Eaters? I’m thinking the Ministry, given that the two sides out there have to be aware of the other, and no attacks have been reported from around here.

“Tomorrow before I come here I’m going to go to Flourish and Blotts and buy some books for you, both on Occlumency and Defense. Don’t worry about the cost, I’ll just add it to your bill at the end, I make a nice living and can front the cost of a few books. Then starting next week I’m going to spend an hour a night teaching you Occlumency myself, all wizarding solicitors must demonstrate competence in it before we can get our licenses. This isn’t designed to protect you from Voldemort Harry, its designed to protect your plans from invasive and nosy Headmasters. I have an idea to get Snape out of here, but I’ll have to run it by your Aunt and Uncle, since it technically is their house. That, however, will only delay the inevitable, but it will give us an extra day or two.

“Ok, back to Fudge and how this whole thing got started. Harry, the reason we want Fudge still around for a few weeks is that one can work with Fudge. Contrary to what you may think, he can be reasoned with, and I’m not just talking about with money. I’m aware that Fudge isn’t the chairman of your fan club, but you are offering him two things that he greatly would benefit from: a breach between you and Dumbledore, and you leaving the country for at least two years. The first one alone is likely enough to get him on our side, since he will have to approve our petition to have you emancipated.....though that’s a grey area really, I’ve no doubt that all Ministry workers are instructed that anything dealing with your situation is to be sent to his office. Fudge doesn’t hate you Harry, he just sees you as a threat, even though I can’t see him still wanting to be Minister of Magic in 20 years when you’re eligible for it. He fears you and Dumbledore together, and he’s seen how Dumbledore has made you so loyal to him over the years. I’m half tempted to give your petition to him right away and skip the Ministry bureaucracy.

“Now, on to other matters: I saw in your file about an underage magic violation from four years ago, what’s that about?”

Harry and Dobby looked at each other and smiled, this was the first night that they had met after all. Harry told the story of how he and Dobby had first gotten together and the dropping of the pie. Dobby freely admitted that he did the deed, looking a bit sheepish that he had gotten Harry in trouble.

“Well that’s easily fixable, we’ll do that first thing when we go to the Ministry. Dobby, you’ll come along with us and tell Madam Bones your story, though that might not do it. Harry, you might have to be willing to take some veritaserum to confirm this, but I’ll make sure she doesn’t ask anything too risky or irrelevant.”

Harry and Dobby both nodded, that didn’t seem to bad.

“I’d better be going now Harry, I’ve been here over three hours it seems and your friends outside might scan us any minute and notice that there’re three more magical beings in here than there are supposed to. Do you have any questions for me?”

“One thing that you brought up earlier I’m curious about Peter, you said that our shields can’t stop bullets, can you explain that?”

“Sure Harry.....you see, our spells aren’t solid in their natural form, they are more or less concentrations of air with a lot of energy. That’s why Protego works against most spells, because its made of the same material. Bullets are solid, and they move at a speed our shields don’t recognize or can adapt to. There are advanced shields of course that can deflect solid objects and more powerful spells.....before you ask, no shield invented thus far can deflect Avada Kedavra or Cruciatus, and believe me, they’ve tried to come up with some.....anyway, those solid shields work more in the matter of muggle shields from the Middle Ages, like from the muggle movie Braveheart. None of those would stand up to bullets either.

“Harry, for 3,000 years wizards had the edge over muggles when it came to fighting, even as their population grew and ours barely did. You know that in 1900 there were only 2 billion muggles world-wide?

There were 900,000 wizards at that time, but we've increased only 10 percent and they've tripled. But 450 years ago, the gun was invented, and our advantage has been slipping away ever since."

"Why can't we use guns against Voldemort? Won't that kill him?"

"No Harry, guns won't work for one simple reason.....wizards have always held guns to be unacceptable for any reason whatsoever. Look at how muggles have butchered each other since the gun was invented. In World War II over 40 million people died Harry, and that's just one of their wars.....one of too many if you ask me. The industrial revolution has in some ways been the best thing ever to happen to muggles, but one day they're going to wipe themselves out."

Peter paused for a minute and tried think how he would frame this.

"We wizards seem very quaint at times, we don't use electricity mostly, we don't use automobiles or guns or anything that most muggles consider 'modern'. Muggle born and raised wizards and witches often have a hard time adjusting to wizard life because they don't have all their conveniences. With a few notable exceptions, we have changed very little in the thousand years since Hogwarts was founded and wizard life in Britain truly came together. One might think that wrong, since we're not evolving to meet the changing of the times, but we look at it as why should we mess around with what works?"

"Now you were asking why someone can't just take a .45, walk up behind our buddy Voldemort and pull the trigger.....because it crosses a line that wizards for the last 450 years have agreed not to cross. Even Voldemort himself has never used one, to my knowledge. The only wizard in recorded history to have crossed that line was Grindewald, and he rarely used one himself, and never on wizards. You see, Grindewald loved killing, and when he came to the height of his powers 70 years or so ago, there was relative peace in the wizarding world, so Grindewald insinuated himself in the muggle world. He saw that there was to be another large war coming , and he attached himself to a man that was very powerful and liked killing as much as he did. The muggle's name was Adolph Hitler, and Grindewald was known in the muggle world as Heinrich Himmler. Together they were responsible for the deaths of over 25 million Jews and Russians. Oh Dumbledore stopped him eventually, I love how they called Himmler's death a 'suicide', only because muggles can't explain an Avada Kedavra death.

"What I'm trying to get across Harry, is that even for dark wizards there are rules, and Voldemort may not follow any rule but that one, but he does follow it. Now you or I, or anyone else could kill him with a gun, but we would automatically become pariahs in our world, the most wanted and hated person in the history of wizard culture. You'd be better off using the next bullet on yourself if you were to do that."

"Harry, this is a war between Voldemort and Dumbledore, its not much more than a muggle gang war. Dumbeldore and his Order of the Phoenix on one side, Voldemort and his Death Eaters on the other. Of the 20,000 wizards and witches in Britain, maybe 500 are directly involved one way or the other. 500 Harry, less than 3 percent of our population. Now most of the rest want Dumbledore to win mind you, I know I do, after all he was either our Transfiguration teacher or our Headmaster, he's touched all of our lives with his twinkling eyes and love of muggle candy. But ask yourself this Harry, why aren't more people getting involved? Because the pure-bloods only see this as a battle for the future of muggle borns in our world, that's Voledemort's whole platform.....and regrettably, most wizards don't see that as worth dying over.

Wow, this was unlike any history lesson Harry had ever sat through. "When you get those books tomorrow will you throw a couple of history books in with them? I want to learn more about this."

"Sure thing Harry, heaven knows Binns wouldn't have gotten that across very well. I honestly don't know how Dumbledore can preside over a staff meeting with a straight face: Lousy teachers in Potions, Defense, Divination, and History, it's a wonder that Britain's test scores aren't the worst in wizarding Europe."

"One thing I would like you to consider tonight Harry, I think you should let one of your friends in on what you're planning. Preferably they'd be in the Order or close to it, so that you could get a pulse of what you're up against.....sorry, what WE are up against. I realize you don't know Bill that well, but I think he could help you a lot, as could Fred and George. Those guys know Dumbledore better than I do, and perhaps better than you do. You may think you would be getting them in trouble with Molly if she finds out, but those three more than the others are willing to stand up to her."

Harry smiled at that, too true he thought. He racked his brain to think of any other questions, but couldn't come up with any that couldn't wait a night to ask.

"Thanks Peter, I'll think about that, it might be a wise move. What time should I expect you tomorrow?"

"I'll make it at 2 pm if I can, when I leave I'll make sure with your aunt that they will both be here."

"Oh yeah, how did you know that I had those 'minders', as you called them, out there?"

"I picked up on their magical signature with my scan. They could do the same here if they scanned your house. You said that Dobby and Winky have been here since yesterday and nothing has happened. I think they would notice two house-elves. They really are counting on that blood protection aren't they? The guards outside must be to keep you inside, not keep others out, since they've done a darn poor job in prevention. Have you left the house since you've been back?"

"No I haven't, I just figured that they wouldn't let me."

"Well no point in testing them out now. There is going to be a confrontation soon Harry, between you and Dumbledore, we need to have everything in place that we can before that happens. Figuratively we need to be able to pick the weapons and we sure as anything need to control the battlefield. I'm not exaggerating Harry, you know better than anyone about Dumbledore's obsession with keeping you safe, he's not going to take any of this lying down."

"I understand Peter, I'm ready to do what is necessary, short of killing Dumbledore of course."

"Well it won't come to that Harry, if he really believes you're this superweapon, he won't risk alienating you too much. The hardest part will be convincing him that you're serious and not just indulging in some childish whim, I need some time to think about that, how we're going to handle that."

"Meanwhile Harry, think about the things I asked you to, I'll see you tomorrow at 2 pm."

He reached out his hand and Harry shook it, he then surprised Harry by doing the same with Dobby and Winky. Peter walked downstairs and saw Petunia sitting in the living room.

"Mrs. Dursley, Harry and I have had a talk and I'm going to be representing him in some legal matters. I would like to talk with you and your husband tomorrow afternoon around 2:30 pm, will you both be home?"

"I believe we will, yes. What is this all about? Is the boy in any kind of trouble?"

"No ma'am he isn't, Harry is just interested in taking a bit more control over his affairs in our world. Believe me when I tell you Mrs. Dursley, you and your husband will like this conversation. Harry has told me of your hostility to our kind, and given your treatment by some of our people I don't especially blame you. This is designed to fix that Mrs. Dursley, we just need 30 minutes of your time tomorrow."

"I suppose that will be fine, I'll tell my husband when he gets home. Does Dudley need to be there as well?"

"Not necessarily Mrs. Dursley, but if he is here and you would like him to attend, Harry and I certainly have no objections. I must stress that what happens stays between the five of us, no matter what any white bearded wizard may tell you otherwise."

Petunia smiled faintly at this, finally a freak who had manners.....though in her heart of hearts she acknowledged that Harry was very polite as well, even if she never would admit it to Vernon.

“Ok Mr. Tyson, I can speak for my husband and I on that count.”

“Thank you Mrs. Dursley, I’ll see you tomorrow, have a nice evening.”

Without another word or gesture, Peter left the house and walked down Privet Drive, presumably to a secluded spot where he could apparate back to his office.

Harry returned to his room without looking at his aunt and shut the door. He took some time to digest what had happened that day, and all he had learned about himself. Harry mentally patted himself on the back for asking Mrs. Longbottom for her advice, his meeting with Peter Tyson could not have gotten better. Harry was aware that he had struck a cord with Tyson, but he still knew Tyson was doing what he thought practical. He also sensed some resentment of Dumbledore, perhaps some incident in the past. Maybe they had knocked heads at Hogwarts or something, he didn’t know.....and wasn’t sure if he wanted to ask. All he knew is that he had hired a professional advocate, someone who did this kind of thing for a living and would give him solid advice. This had been a good day.

Grimmaud Place, 6:30 pm

Remus sat at the dining room tables, lost in his own little world as Order of the Phoenix members filed in and sat down for their weekly meeting. Snape was still in Canada, but the rest of the core members were here: Dumbledore, McGonagall, Molly and Arthur, Kingsley Shacklebolt, Tonks, Hestia Jones, and many others, including Bill, Fred, and George Weasley. Molly hadn’t been happy with the twins joining the Order, but after they had not-so-subtly threatened to go Percy on her, she had relented. Remus couldn’t understand her frustration with the twins, surely grades didn’t matter to her that much? Gred and Forge, as they referred to themselves, were adamant that they wouldn’t return to Hogwarts for the last two months of their 7th year, they said they had no interest in NEWT scores or dealing with any more rules than they had to. Their business was up and running quite well, Remus reminded himself to get a care package of WWW items to send to Harry for his birthday....or perhaps Harry would allow him to visit by then. His estrangement from Harry was puzzling to Remus, he had gotten the 'don't write me for awhile' letter Harry had sent out, and was worried about Harry being stuck there all alone with no one to talk with.

Dumbledore stood up, "Well my friends, lets get this meeting underway. Hestia, I believe you and Kingsley had guard duty today?"

"Yes we did, as usual not much happened. To our knowledge Harry has not left the house since he arrived from Kings Cross two weeks ago, his days of gardening appear to be over. Harry has sent his owl on an average of a delivery every other day. Lately the only owl other than Hedwig to appear there has been one that we now know to be Luna Lovegood's."

This raised some eyebrows among the Weasleys, who had been forced to listen to Ron go spare when Harry had asked to be left alone for a time, Harry had not written to anyone else since.

Shacklebolt continued the narrative, "There was one visitor today, we didn't recognize him and he was dressed in a very nice muggle suit. Petunia Dursley let him in the house right away and he stayed for about three hours, no screams or shouting going on, so he couldn't have been one of us. He's the only visitor that we've noticed in the last two weeks, other than several of Dudley Dursley's friends. Nothing unusual has gone on."

"Well good, young Mr. Potter appears to be developing a cautious streak. Who is on duty right now Tonks?"

"Moody and Dung, Moody won't let Dung do guard duty without him there to supervise him, he doesn't trust him after last summer."

Everyone in the room chuckled, Moody had been enraged at Fletcher's screwup last August and had to be talked out of killing the smuggler. Molly Weasley spoke up:

“When are you going to let him out of that awful place Albus? You know its not good for him to be there with those nasty people.”

“Sometime in mid-August Molly. We will remove him from Privet Drive and bring him here. He needs to be there at least a month this time, then we can take him out. Harry is safe where he is now, and he hasn’t written anything to me complaining. Severus is going to be going there next week to begin his Occlumency lessons again, he will observe things and find out if its necessary to remove him sooner.”

This caused consternation among the Weasleys, all of whom knew how much those 2 hated each other. Fred Weasley couldn’t restrain himself and burst out:

“Really Professor, does it have to be Snape? We all know how successful that was the last time you tried it.”

Molly initially looked as if she wanted to smack Fred for his tone of voice, then realized that she agreed with what he was saying. In fact the entire room agreed with Fred, Snape was easily the most unpopular person in the Order, and was only tolerated because Dumbledore insisted on it. They knew that Snape was spying on the Death Eaters, but he had been finding out little, as Voldemort was slow to trust Snape again.

“Professor Snape, Fred, is the best Occlumens we have available to teach Harry. He has assured me that he will strive harder to get his message across, and I believe him.”

Remus couldn’t take this any longer, and spoke up for the first time at an Order meeting since the death of Sirius Black:

“I want the record here to reflect my view that putting the two of them in the same room, with no supervision, is a recipe for disaster. One of two things will happen: either Harry, Snape, or both will be taking a fast trip to St. Mungo’s.....or Harry will be hauled in yet again before the Wizengamot for use of underage magic defending himself from your friend Snape and his neuroses. This is a mistake Albus, and I want you to remember what I just said so that next week you’ll be quiet when I'm telling you 'I told you so' while we're cleaning up another Snape mess."

The room was dead silent as Remus and Dumbledore stared at one another. Pretty much everyone in the room agreed with what Remus had said, but they were not used to Dumbledore being challenged in such a way. Fred, George, and Bill Weasley couldn't (or wouldn't) stop the smiles of satisfaction from their faces.

"Be that as it may Remus, my decision stands. I am confident that both Severus and Harry can work together long enough to see this part through."

Remus didn't respond, much to the disappointment of the Weasley sons (whose collective eye-rolling was remarkably in sync), and the meeting went on for another 30 minutes, discussing more mundane matters. After it was over, Remus pulled Bill and the twins aside.

"Have any of you heard from Harry?"

"No we haven't," George replied, "He's been silent as the grave.....though we'd better not let Ron and Ginny know about Luna, they'll hex him into next week."

"I think she's good for him on the whole, I imagine she doesn't badger him with questions about his feelings and about the war," Bill noted. They all nodded. Fred and George had told the Order that they couldn't believe Luna of all people was handy in a Death Eater attack.....though they could have said the same thing about Neville as well.

"Bill, next time you're on guard duty (Fred and George had declined guard duty shifts because of the opening of their business) approach Harry and try to see what's going on with him. I got a letter from him yesterday and he wasn't too happy with me.....or any of us for that matter. Something about this bothers me guys, last summer was mad beyond belief because we left him alone, now he wants little to do with us."

"Are you worried that he might try something foolish?" Bill asked.

"Not exactly Bill, I just have a funny feeling that there's more going on there than meets the eye. I don't want Dumbledore to know about this, he and Harry are having some difficulties and that's where I think a lot of this is coming from, Harry just doesn't trust us anymore.....if he ever did."

"My next shift is tomorrow afternoon Remus, I'll look in on him then. It will be interesting to see those muggles I've heard so much about."

Fred and George grinned, and said in unison, "Say hi to Dudley for us!" Bill laughed, and added that he would bring some candy along with him this time. That brought a smile to Remus' face for the first time, and they parted, the twins to go back to their store, so they could send Ron home. Bill went off to his girlfriend's place, Remus went upstairs for a nap, the full moon three days earlier had still tired him.

Privet Drive, 2:00 pm

Vernon Dursley sat in his kitchen chair, eating his lunch and wondering what the heck was happening. He had returned home yesterday to his normal house and his normal life, other than his freak nephew. He was astounded when Petunia had told him about Peter Tyson's visit and what was to happen today. His first instinct was to say no, no freak was going to tell him what to do, but one thing stuck in his mind 'you will like this conversation'. That gave Vernon pause, those freaks knew that the only way he would like the conversation was if it meant getting Potter out of here forever.....surely they couldn't mean that? Not that Vernon didn't dearly wish for that, but he knew that Dumbledore wasn't big on respecting his wishes. Vernon wasn't so dumb that he wasn't aware that most of his hate of Harry came from habit, after all the kid was such a quiet little thing, didn't eat much, and from what Petunia said hadn't even left the house since he got back from that place. He had always known deep down that he couldn't stamp the magic out of Harry, and he did (even deeper down) dread what Harry might do to him when he was allowed to use that stick of his.....maybe this would be an out for him there. He sighed and decided to just find out when he found out, the freak was supposed to be here in 30 minutes, he could wait that long.

The doorbell rang. Petunia went to answer it, wondering if it was that wizard here early. It was:

“Hello Mrs. Dursley, lovely to see you again.”

Out in the yard, under an invisibility cloak, Bill Weasley was thunderstruck, was this who he thought it was? He remembered Tonks’ description of yesterday’s visitor, and this matched it, but his eyes must be playing tricks. He hadn’t seen Peter in about a year, though they continued to exchange their monthly owls, catching each other up. Bill had only been permanently living in London for a month now, and he, Peter and his wife were due to have dinner the next night. He reacted as quickly as he could when he saw Peter disappear inside.

The doorbell rang again, 10 seconds after Tyson had walked through the door and was saying hello to Vernon Dursley.

“I know you, you’re one of those Weasleys from the train station.”

“Yes Mrs. Dursley, I’m Bill, may I come in?” He didn’t wait for a reply and walked in.....”Peter, what on earth are you doing here?”

Harry went pale and Peter didn’t look much better, Vernon and Petunia just looked confused. They had never met Bill before and Vernon was still getting used to the idea of Peter looking so normal for a wizard.

“I could ask you the same Bill, its good to see you,” Peter replied, deciding to keep Bill off balance. The 2 approached each other and shook hands warmly. The two shared wary smiles, Bill was slowly realizing what was going on here, while Peter knew exactly what Bill was doing there, he was Harry’s guard dog for the afternoon. He turned to Vernon and Petunia:

“Mr. and Mrs. Dursley I apologize for the confusion, I’m aware I said 2:30 and I’m early, but I wanted to confirm a few things with Harry in private before we talked, so I told him I would be here at 2 pm. If you would be kind enough to give us some time to talk we'll be back down here at the appointed time. I stress again to you both: You will like this conversation. Will your son be joining us?" He hadn't seen Dudley yet and was admittedly curious after hearing Harry describe him.

"Yes he will Mr. Tyson, after what happened last summer we feel he has a right to know what's going on."

"That's fine Mrs. Dursley, I happen to agree with you completely on that. If you will excuse us, Harry, Bill and I will go upstairs and have our meeting. We will be back down soon. Our talk with you won't take too long, so any evening plans you have will not be interrupted."

Petunia and Vernon looked at each other and nodded to Peter, the wizards proceeded up the stairs and into Harry's room.

Peter made sure to let Bill go in before him and made a quick move to grab Bill's wand, and before Bill knew what happened, Peter was holding on to it. Harry closed the door behind them all and Peter reinforced Dobby's silencing charm on the room.

"Ok Peter, what the bloody hell is going on here? You were the guy here yesterday weren't you?"

"Yes I was Bill, I see there must have been an Order meeting yesterday, your colleagues took note of me?"

"Yes they did, though they pegged you for a muggle visitor, they had no idea you were here to see Harry."

Peter looked at Harry and said, "Well Harry, have you thought about what we talked about, letting one of them on the inside? Now is the time to decide."

Harry had thought about it all last night, what to do about telling a friend. Again, he had gone over the list of his friends in his mind, and boiled them down to five that he could dare confide in: Fred, George, Luna, Neville, and Bill.....Bill only because he and Peter were friends

(Charlie is still in Romania at this time) and Harry had liked how cool he was. He looked at the two of them and decided:

“Yes Peter, we can tell him.....as long as we have his word that he won't tell anyone that we don't want him to.”

“Well Bill, is what we tell you going to stay between us? I don't want to have to threaten you, but you can't tell Dumbledore or his minions about this at all. I assure you its nothing heinous or illegal, in fact Harry is bending over backward to keep it legal. Its your choice Bill, we want you on our side.”

Bill wasn't as torn as one might think, Fred and George had been working on him ever since summer ended and he was becoming quite the Harry partisan. He had been appalled while listening to the twins describe how Harry was treated here, and was more than willing to get him out of here if that's what was going on.

“Ok, you've got my word, I'm on your side and I won't tell anyone that you disapprove of.....but I want the twins to be let in on this Harry, you don't know this but they're your biggest advocates in the Order.....plus you're their business partner, they will always stick with you.”

“That's fine Bill, but I want to be the one to tell them, not you, we'll set this up as soon as possible with them, and Luna and Neville too, I want their help as well.”

Bill noted the names Harry mentioned, and couldn't help but notice the absence of some significant ones.

“What about Ron and Hermione? What happened between you three?”

“Its complicated Bill, I'll explain it all to you I promise, but they can't know anything until its done and settled.”

“Fair enough, you've got my curiosity aroused completely, what's going on?”

"I'm leaving Britain Bill, I'm dealing myself out of this war."

"Ok, of all the things you could have told me Harry, that was the one I wasn't expecting. Is this for real?"

"Do you see me smiling Bill? This is no joke."

Bill looked at the faces around him and indeed no one was smiling. He closed his eyes and silently cursed Dumbledore for putting them all in this situation. He had no doubt that the old man had dropped some kind of bomb on Harry at the end of the term that put him in the mind-set, he and the twins had speculated on it but couldn't come up with anything definitive.

"What happened Harry? What changed you? Peter, what do you have to do with this?"

Peter and Harry looked at each other, expecting the other to speak first. Peter nodded at Harry and he began:

"I'm 15 years old Bill, and in the last year I've watched two friends die, one of whom was also my godfather. I've been the most hated person in our world; been possessed by Voldemort; had a blood quill used on me by some psychopath who had official permission to torture me; and oh yeah, I was banned, along with your brothers, from Quidditch for defending your mother from the slandering of a Death Eater in training.....all of this happened in the last 13 months Bill, that is what has changed." Harry's voice had grown more and more hateful as he spoke, chilling Bill with its tone.

"Why would I want to stay in a school, in a society that would allow ANY of that to happen, let alone all of it? I might consider staying in Britain if I didn't have to return to Hogwarts Bill, but I've been incredibly lucky to survive my five years there and I'm not sure I want to press my luck. I didn't ask for any of this fame crap, and I'm no longer willing to suffer under its burdens.....seeing as how I don't see any benefits coming from it."

"Harry, what did Dumbledore lay on you in his office?"

Harry's and Peter's jaws dropped as they stared open mouthed at Bill. How did he know about that? What the heck happened? Harry reacted first, with a rage Bill had never seen before in the brief time he'd known him.

"How on earth did you know about that? What has that $& told the Order!"

"Easy Harry, we don't want any accidental magic to happen, I'd rather not be blown up like your Aunt Marge."

Talk about the wrong thing to say, Peter had to physically restrain Harry from punching Bill for that one. He rolled his eyes at his friend and commented:

"Save the witty repartee for your witch of the moment Bill, let's not provoke things we don't have to provoke ok?"

"I'm sorry Harry, that was poorly timed, forgive me?" Bill hit him with that Weasley grin of his, and Harry couldn't help but smile back and nod his head.

"His language aside, Harry asked very relevant questions Bill, what do you know and how do you know it?"

"First of all guys, Dumbledore hasn't said much of anything to us about regarding you Harry. We've only had the two Order meetings since the Department of Mysteries and pretty much all that gets said about you are reports from the watchers outside; and when he told us that Snape was coming here next week for Occlumency. You should know that no one in my family is especially happy about that Harry, and individually we've told Dumbledore as much. Ron is who told me Harry, he was in the hospital when you got back from Dumbledore's office, but Seamus and Dean noticed that you seemed quite upset. They told Ron the next day when he got back to the dorm. He and Hermione watched you pretty carefully and agreed that you seemed as much angry as you were sad. Sad they could understand, having watched what happened to Sirius.....angry was what they couldn't understand, they didn't think that Sirius' death was something that you would be angry about. Ron told the twins when he got home, and they told me. Fred, George and I have been pooling our information about you lately, we're on your side Harry, and I have no doubt that if Charlie was here he would be as well, I can speak for him."

"I don't know what to say Bill.....I never realized that Ron was so observant."

"Oh c'mon Harry, think about what you just said. Ron is the one person who should know you the best, he's been your best mate for five years. I think you owe him a little better than that, and that doesn't even touch on how you've been ignoring him the last two weeks."

"He ignored me most of last summer Bill.....and before you say it, I know he was doing it on Dumbledore's orders, but he still could have found a way to owl me if he had wanted to."

"Is that what your silence to him is about Harry? Payback?"

"No Bill, its not payback.....well not merely payback. Answer me this: if push came to shove Bill, and Ron had to support me, or support the combined efforts of Hermione, your parents, and Dumbledore, who would he choose?"

Bill considered this for a moment, he had never thought of the problem framed as Harry had framed it.

"I don't know Harry, I never thought about it like that. Is that really how you see it, all of those people, my parents even, lined up against you?"

"Answer my question first Bill, then I'll tell you what I'm thinking, and why."

"Since you put it that way Harry, I don't know who Ron would side with.....that's a lot on the 'other side' that would be swaying him, but I know how much he cares about you."

“That’s the problem Bill, I don’t know who he would side with either, and until I do, I just can’t share my plans with him. Heck, if push came to shove I don’t know whether he would pick me over just Hermione, let alone everyone else. I wouldn’t be a bit shocked if those two are a couple by now and just haven’t told me yet. You and I both know that if I try to leave Britain, legally or illegally, Dumbledore is going to try to stop me, by any means at his disposal. Your mother and father are very closely allied with Dumbledore, your family is a very old, pureblood family, one of the few openly on his side. Your mother, bless her heart and I love her to pieces, would agree that I belong here, no matter what my wishes would be. And your father Bill, he would do what she said, I know how it is in your family.”

Bill chuckled at that, of all the Weasley children he was probably the closest to his father, partly from having come first, partly from the fact that Bill looked at his father and saw his humanity, and how it attracted people. Arthur Weasley was not the most ambitious wizard in their society, but he was one of the most liked and well thought of...but Bill acknowledged the truth in what Harry said:

“You’re right Harry, I guess I’ve never thought about it that way. In your place I would be a little cautious around Ron as well. Why are you putting Hermione so solidly in Dumbledore’s camp? Do you really think she’s against you?”

“It’s not so much that she’s against me Bill, in fact I’m sure she’s not yet, but its that she’s so much for Dumbledore. You’re not around her on a daily basis, she thinks the man walks on water. She’s read Hogwarts a History too many times I suppose. Over the years Ron and I have loosened her up to the point that she’ll break rules.....but none that Dumbledore lays down. Our first year and the ‘no going up on the 3rd floor corridor or you will suffer a most painful death’, she only violated that by accident, and when something had to be done and Dumbledore wasn’t around to tell. That’s the only time she’s come close Bill, and I know that if Dumbledore told her to draw her wand on me, for my own good he’d say of course.....she’d do it.”

He showed Bill and Peter the two letters he’d gotten from Hermione, badgering him for information on what he was feeling and if his scar had hurt. They looked at each other and nodded, it certainly looked like Harry at least had justification for thinking that way, even if Bill didn't want to believe it.

"I see your point Harry, I do. I'd like your acquiescence to at least sound out Ron....only in the vaguest of terms at first, but at least let me try."

Harry sighed, Bill had tugged on his heart strings in a most able way. Harry didn't want to keep Ron out of the loop, and he knew that the consequences for their friendship would be terrible if Ron learned about the plan after the fact. He had to at least try.

"Ok Bill, I'll leave it to your judgment on that.....but I want you to be prepared to use a memory charm if you have to, if it looks like Ron will betray us. Oh, and find out for me if those two are a couple will you."

"Fair enough Harry, I'll do that for you.....now no more delaying, I want to know what Dumbledore told you, what made you so angry with and distrustful of him."

Harry girded himself, and told Bill the Prophecy. Bill listened to it with horrified fascination, putting his head in his hands as he heard the last of it.

"I suppose its way to much to hope that you made that up just to amuse yourself?"

The others smiled, Harry could understand why people responded to Bill, he had a way of making things less tense. He shook his head in the negative, as Bill looked up.

"So this is why it has been so important to protect you all these years? Dumbledore believes you're the final weapon against Voldemort?"

"Yep, in a nutshell that's it. I'm stuck here, under the blood protection of my aunt, so that no Death Eater or Voldemort himself can harm me. The old man has gotten a bit sloppy at school though, given how many times I've almost been killed there. I'm not sure I believe in the Prophecy Bill, but I appear to be the only major player who feels that way.”

“Well it explains a lot, that’s for certain. Is that why you want to leave?”

“I want to leave Bill, because I don’t trust any of the people who’ve been making decisions on my behalf. I also would prefer to go to a school where I’m not famous and the epicenter of everything that happens. In other words, I want to be a normal teenager for a couple of years. If the war is still going on when I’m done with school.....well I might be open to cooperating with the Order, though I will never join it as long as Dumbledore is leading it, and I mean NEVER.”

Bill sighed again, he was getting good at that particular emotion. Between Ron and the twins,

Bill had a pretty good idea of Harry’s adventures and sufferings over the years, and he had witnessed firsthand the aftermath of the Tri-Wizard Tournament. He didn’t really blame the kid for wanting out of something he’d never signed up for in the first place.

“Ok Harry, that doesn’t change what I said before: I’m with you. What’s the plan?”

Harry looked at Peter, who took a shrunken bag out of his pocket and enlarged it.

“Here are those books I promised you Harry, there are 10 total: Five of them are on advanced Defense, including an Auror training manual from three years ago; Two are on history, like you asked for, they detail most of our wars and many of our great wizards and witches; Two are on Occlumency, those I want you to start first; The last one is a career handbook, you need to figure out what to do with your life once school ends. I know you have enough money that you don’t have to work, but you need to fill your days with something. I’m coming here for your Occlumency lesson at 5 pm on Monday, that gives you 50 hours to memorize those books. Looking around here it doesn’t appear as if you have much else to do, and the books aren’t that thick, maybe 400 pages between them. I want you to at least know the principles and theories behind it before we have your first lesson.”

“Ok, next phase: what to do about Snape. How much do you hate Snape Harry?”

“More than anyone in the world not named Voldemort. I hate him even more than Bellatrix LeStrange or my relatives.”

“Well that’s certainly definitive isn’t it. The plan I have in mind is to send our friend Dumbledore a note next week, probably Thursday, saying that Snape isn’t welcome here. We’ll get you and your Aunt and Uncle to sign it, something tells me they won’t be averse to the idea of banning a particular wizard from their home.”

“Dumbledore and Snape won’t care about that Peter, they’ll simply ignore it like they do every other Dursley complaint,” Harry pointed out. Peter grinned broadly:

“That’s the point Harry, Snape will come here in direct violation of the wishes of the owners of the house.....even in our world Harry, that’s against the law.”

Harry and Bill looked at each other with slight confusion, they knew this was going somewhere fun, but couldn’t quite tell where. Peter put them out of their misery.

“As soon as Snape shows up, alone I’m going to assume, we send one of your elves, with a pre-prepared note, straight to the Department of Magical Law Enforcement. The head of that department is one Amelia Bones, who is, if I’m not mistaken Bill, not an Order of the Phoenix member.”

Bill nodded, and Peter went on:

“The note will say, in so many words, that Snape is there against everyone’s wishes but his, and is threatening you with his wand, whilst knowing that you’re not allowed to use yours. I daresay you won’t have to do much to elicit this threat Harry, but goad him if you need to. With any luck he’ll try to curse you right as the Aurors show up to investigate, we can't be having the 'Boy Who Lived' assaulted in his own home, by a Hogwarts Professor no less."

Bill and Harry burst out laughing as Peter sat back looking very satisfied with himself. Harry was the first to catch his breath.

"Oh that is so very, very, very cruel Peter.....I love it. Are you sure you weren't a Slytherin?"

Peter grinned and shook his head in the negative. Bill was next:

"You really think we can pull that off? I mean, you have Snape pegged pretty well, I have no trouble believing that he would do everything you described.....but what if the DMLE doesn't respond as quickly as you think, or respond at all? After all, the Aurors on duty might include Tonks or Kingsley."

"That's why we're going to have a backup plan Bill.....us. Early next week I'm going to file a petition with the Ministry of Magic to have Harry legally emancipated. Ideally I'm going to have the hearing as close to Snape's visit as possible, so that they don't have advance warning and a chance to interfere. Snape being arrested will be a very demonstrative way of showing that Harry isn't safe at Hogwarts, when one of its professors, Dumbledore's pet, has attacked him in front of his muggle family. We might even arrange for The Daily Prophet and The Quibbler to get some photos, taken on the sly of course. Harry will feed his friend Luna's father an exclusive recount of the events, and chaos will ensue, making our young friend here a martyr for the abuses at our beloved alma mater."

Bill was awestruck at how well thought out this plan seemed to be, except for one thing:

"What do you mean 'us'?"

"I mean that if the Aurors don't respond like we want them to, you and I will have to step in. Snape is capable of harming Harry you know, and he would have a good time doing it too. Harry's dueling skills are already minor legend, but Snape is an expert. So we can't allow him to incapacitate Harry and start in with the Occlumency, he'd find out our plans easily enough and run off to his mentor and start blabbing. Plus there's the real possibility that Snape might be working for the other side. Harry told me that he wouldn't put it past Snape to kidnap him and deliver him to Voldemort, such a feat would put him above all other Death Eaters, he'd be set for life if he wished. Dumbledore might be insane enough to allow Snape to be alone with Harry, that doesn't mean we have to let him. I have every confidence that Snape is a good duelist, but I don't see him taking out both you and I at the same time Bill, assuming he can even take Harry."

"So you're saying I can respond to his attacks?" Harry got an immediate dreamy look on his face after saying that.

"Only if we get you emancipated first, and only if Snape attacks first. Without the emancipation Dumbledore can twist things until your house arrest here, which this more or less is, becomes legal and binding.....and without Snape attacking first, well then you could be tried for assault, which would not look good on your applications to other wizarding schools."

"I understand Peter."

"I knew you would, now Harry, on Monday when I get to the office I'm going to send some owls to various schools in America. I want permission from you to ask my wife about this, she has relatives over there that can better tell us about the benefits of the various schools, and hopefully if any of the heads of the schools have any problems with Dumbledore. All I really know is that there are four wizarding equivalents of Hogwarts in the United States, plus another in Canada.....speaking of which, I noticed that you have a vault in Toronto, do you know anything about that?"

"I have no idea Peter, it's the first I've ever heard of it. I know nothing really about my family histories, though I have to assume that it's a Potter vault, not an Evans one. And yes, you can tell your wife about it, I'd figured that you had already."

"No I didn't Harry, I take my professional word very seriously, though I did tell her that I've taken you on as a client of course. She asked me what you were like as person, though not about the case, she knows enough not to. She remembered your mother, from when she taught at Hogwarts, my wife was a Hufflepuff in Bill's year, one ahead of mine. Do you remember Lily Potter, Bill?"

"Yes I do.....in fact I remember when she was pregnant with you Harry. Kids would come up to her and pat her belly (Bill smiled in remembrance), we weren't used to having a teacher at Hogwarts young enough to be pregnant. I was in my first year and I was in awe of her, wife of a famous Quidditch star, teacher at Hogwarts, and only 20 years old, it was amazing to us. I never got a chance to have her as a teacher Harry, I was a 3rd year when she went into hiding and soon thereafter was killed. Runes was my specialty and I would have gotten to know her pretty well.....and you too I guess, had she lived, had none of this mess ever happened." Bill's eyes misted up, as did Harry's. Bill continued:

"Peter, do you remember the night Harry defeated Voldemort? I can still see it, like it just happened. Professor Flitwick made the announcement at the Halloween feast "Voldemort has been defeated! Harry Potter has destroyed the Dark Lord!" The entire hall went into a massive cheer, even most of the Slytherins looked happy. We all hugged each other and threw pumpkin juice up in the air. I found Charlie, he was a first year then, and he was so happy that he was crying.....and Harry, this was a kid who never cried for any reason. Flitwick didn't give us any details of what happened and we didn't care, the celebration went on through the night, the professors just sat there in a daze and didn't bother trying to send us to our beds. The next morning at breakfast we found out the reason for that daze, as Dumbledore explained to us what happened, and why one of our most popular teachers and her husband were never coming back. As loud as the hall had been the night before Harry, that's how silent it was after he told us. Gryffindor House went into mourning, and it lasted all year. We didn't care about Quidditch or House Cups or any of that bother. Our icons were dead and our little brother orphaned, it was a large price to pay to get rid of Voldemort Harry.....I have to wonder if some of the disbelief this past year that he was back stems from that, such a high price paid, and ultimately for nothing, just for a delay."

“Bill, why is it that no one else will talk to me the way you two do? I’ve learned more about my parents and about our world in the last two days than from five years of conversations with Remus, Sirius, Hagrid, Dumbledore and all the rest, even your parents.”

“I don’t know Harry, I wish I did. Maybe it’s just bad luck, maybe the others have been under some kind of instruction from Dumbledore to mushroom you, I don’t know. I know my parents think of you like another son and only want to protect you.....but now that I’ve listened to you, I don’t know if that’s what you’ve needed. I know that Sirius and Remus were/are very dependant on the old man for their survival, it wouldn’t take much to keep them quiet. They could always rationalize by thinking they could tell you when you grew up.”

Peter looked at his watch, it was almost 2:30 pm.

“Ok, we can’t afford to keep your relatives waiting much longer Harry, we need to wrap this up. Bill, when is your next guard shift after today?”

“Monday night, starting at 6 pm I think.”

“Perfect, I’ll still be here and we can finalize our plans. I want you to tell Fred and George to get over here as well, have them close the shop early if need be. Harry, if you want your friends Luna and Neville to be in on this, I suggest you owl them tomorrow and have them take the Knight Bus over here. Bill only bring Ron if you’re positive about him, and I mean dead positive, we don’t want to have to Obliviate him if we don’t have to. Your OWL results should have arrived by then, so we’ll know better what your options are. Make sure that Luna and Neville don’t get here before the shift change to Bill, we don’t know if Dumbledore will allow you visitors or not and I would prefer not to find out if we don’t have to. Everyone clear?”

Bill and Harry looked at each other, nodded, and snapped off identical military salutes, in unison they cried:

“Yes sir!”

Everyone in the room dissolved into laughter as they left the room and headed downstairs. They saw Harry's relatives in the living room and entered it, Peter spoke up:

"Ok Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, let's get started. Is Dudley going to join us?"

Before they could answer Dudley came in from the kitchen, he flinched when he saw Bill's red hair, memories of the Ton Tongue Toffee coming back to him, but he rallied and approached Peter with his hand outstretched. They shook, and he did the same with Bill.

"Good to meet you Dudley, I'm Peter Tyson, Harry's solicitor, this is Bill Weasley, a friend of Harry's. You must be wondering what this is all about, its simple: This is about getting Harry out of here and him never coming back.....ever."

Vernon and Petunia looked at each other very hopefully, they had discussed this possibility the night before, but couldn't believe that it would be that easy. If there was one thing that they had learned in their dealings with the wizarding world: What they wanted didn't matter one bit. Vernon made the first Dursley sally into the conversation:

"Just how are you going to do that? That old man ordered us to keep him here."

"We're going to do this the old-fashioned way Mr. Dursley, we're going to do it legally. We are going to file a petition with your Child Social Services agency, hopefully obtain a positive ruling, then do the same in our world, and then Harry will be free, and I have no doubt that once he's free he will elect to move out, as he has made us aware that you and he aren't the closest."

Vernon had to smile at that one, he looked over at Harry and decided that the kid wasn't as dumb as he'd thought, he'd either planned this out very well, or found someone who could. He still thought it sounded too easy though:

"Is that all? You really think it will go that smoothly? What about that Dumbledore fellow, won't he object?"

"Oh he most certainly will. I feel though, that a combination of legal tactics and not so judicious threats will either bring him in line, or we'll prevail in spite of him."

"This still sounds too good to be true.....what do you want from us?"

"Just to sign your name to a few pieces of paper, and put up with having a few wizards visiting your home for the next week or two."

"How is the boy paying you? We don't give him any allowance to pay for solicitors."

"Harry will work it off by volunteering in my office next summer, I have a lot of little things around there that I could use some help with, he'll pay my bill that way."

Harry admired the smooth way Peter had come up with that, and tried to look as though this wasn't news to him. Vernon wasn't even looking at him, he was lost in thought as he contemplated what he'd heard. Petunia spoke up:

"Won't the boy be in danger if he doesn't come back next summer? That's what Dumbledore has been saying all of these years."

"Well yes, Mrs. Dursley, Harry will be in greater danger.....but he is prepared to accept that as part and parcel of the deal. Let me assure you Harry isn't simply doing this to sever ties with you, he has some issues in our world that make him need to have more legal say than he has. That said, you have made him fully aware of your aversion to anything 'wizardry', and he is willing to respect your wishes by leaving.....going through these proceedings will allow him to. Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, you must have realized by now that whenever Harry becomes of age, be it next year in our world, 1998 in yours.....Dumbledore will keep putting him here for whatever time is needed to renew these blood protections.....in spite of the fact that everyone in this house wishes otherwise." Vernon nodded at the logic of that statement, he'd been dreading that same thing for years, ever since Harry had gone to Hogwarts."

"You're right Mr. Tyson.....but what are you going to do to protect us from Dumbledore if we let Harry do as he wants? He'll blame us somehow for the boy's doings."

"Mr. Dursley you raise an excellent point, and I'll tell you this: he won't do a thing, he can't. If it got out that he had harmed you in any way he'd be finished. Now I'm not going to lie to you Mr. Dursley, this might not work, we might not get Harry emancipated, there are no guarantees in this process. That said, we are going to try, and like I said, all we need from you is a few signatures when the time comes. With any luck, this will all be settled by Harry's birthday on the 31st."

Petunia and Vernon looked at each other again, what did they have to lose? If it failed it simply meant a continuation of the status quo, if it succeeded.....happiness, with no wizards around them forever. Vernon looked at Harry:

"Ok Harry, I know that you and I rarely agree on anything.....but we agree on this. We'll sign what we have to in order to make this happen.....I promise."

Harry stood up and approached Vernon Dursley, the bane of his existence for years. He steeled himself and reached out his hand to Vernon.....with a blank look on his face Vernon shook it. They were in this as a family, hopefully the last thing they did as a family together. Peter and Bill both looked outside to see if it was raining frogs or something, but sadly it wasn't. Peter took a couple of pieces of paper out of his briefcase and handed them to Vernon.

"This is a boilerplate emancipation request that I've had typed up.....yes we use typewriters in our world Mrs. Dursley.....it's not a bad piece of fiction, if I do say so myself, and I'm betting that it will be convincing enough to the civil servant who has to rule on it. You four will need to appear in some sort of hearing, but that will at most take an hour. You just need to pretend for one hour that you get along decently, but that there's been enough friction between you to merit a favorable decision. In broad strokes we'll tell them the truth, that Harry is going away to boarding school, and that he doesn't want to rely on the phones and mail to execute his decisions. I need you both to sign this paper so that we can get the process started. I have some contacts in the Social Services office and we can expedite this and do it this week."

Vernon couldn't sign fast enough, and Petunia followed suit after a slight, but noticeable hesitation. Harry then put his own signature on the document, and at Dudley's curious look, passed it over to him so he could read it. His eyebrows rose a few times as he read Tyson's fiction, but he made no comment out loud. Bill and Peter took their leaves soon after, walking out with Dudley (on his way to work). Harry immediately went upstairs to begin his reading, while Petunia and Vernon just sat there staring at each other.

Privet Drive 4:30 pm

Harry laid on his bed and re-read his Occlumency notes for what seemed like the 20th time. The books that Peter had given him, A Beginner's Guide to Organizing Your Mind, and Advanced Theories of Occlumency, had been very helpful, and Harry had taken over 20 pages of notes in the muggle-style notebook that Aunt Petunia had given him. More than once Harry had had a 'light bulb' moment when reading these books, and not for the first time cursed that numb-wit Snape and his "Clear your mind Potter" crap.

It turns out that Occlumency is not about clearing the mind at all, it involves setting up defenses and barriers, for the twin purpose of: keeping memories tucked away; and more easily forcing intruders from the mind. It was much like a muggle alarm system Harry realized, involving detection, protection, and eviction. All clearing your mind did was allow the intruder to stick around longer, without fear of penalty and give them time to find what they're looking for. Harry wondered if Snape's way of 'teaching' was really how he had learned, he would have to run this by Peter when he arrived, the 'Snape as triple agent' theory that the two had been bouncing around was gaining more and more credence.

The day before, Harry had sent Hedwig on her rounds, with letters to Luna and Neville, asking them to show up today at 6:30 pm:

Dear Luna/Neville,

Hi there, how are things going? I'm having a small get-together at my relatives house tomorrow at 6:30 pm. I have some thing that I'm working on and I would like your input and advice. The best way I can think of to get here is to take The Knight Bus and say you need to go to Number 4 Privet Drive, Little Whinging, Surrey. They've picked me up here once before, so it shouldn't be a bother. I'm also inviting Neville/Luna, so hopefully you'll see them on the bus as well.

I must ask you this though, please keep this invitation to yourself. I know that you likely will have to tell your father/grandmother, but please no one else. I'm not sure if my wizard jailers here will allow me visitors, but I have that part arranged, as long as no one on the outside finds out. The meeting shouldn't last too long, afterward we sit around and catch-up, it will be good to see you again.

If you're in, just do nothing and send Hedwig along to her next stop. If you can't make it, write me a note saying so and give it Hedwig and we'll figure something out for another time.

See you soon,

Harry

PS: Neville, our OWL results should be there by the time you come by, bring yours and we can compare, hopefully we did pretty well.

Hedwig had returned from her Ottery St. Catchpole to Brighton (where Neville lived) to Surrey run in short order, with no notes attached to her, so Harry assumed that everything was a go. His own OWL results hadn't come yet, which was putting on edge a bit. Even if he didn't return to Hogwarts.....if, because he hadn't missed Peter's caution to the Dursleys that this scheme might not work.....he would need good grades to get into whatever school in North America that he wanted to go to.

Harry had also written short letters to Ron and Hermione, telling them in vague terms that he was having a decent summer. He hadn't mentioned a whiff of his plans, and had resisted temptation to throw a false bone at Hermione, to try and smoke her out. He had talked about how there had been no Voldemort visions, that he and the Dursleys were engaged in a form of détente (though not why), and that he had come to grips with what had happened to Sirius.....all of which was true, more or less. Harry rationalized that he wasn't exactly lying to his closest friends, he was just telling them only certain true things. He had seen on a muggle American cop show, how they make you tell 'the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth', but in reality the truth and nothing but the truth, but not the whole truth might sound like a lie, but really wasn't. He knew that Ron and Hermione would not appreciate that kind of hair-splitting, but he decided to kick that can when he came to it.

Tap, Tap, Tap

Harry looked up at the slight noise, there was someone at the door. He went up to open it and saw Dudley there.

"Hey Dudley, no work today?" Dudley's job at the cinema had become a all consuming thing, so much so that Harry wondered if there was a particular girl there that Duds was interested in. He'd been putting in over 50 hours per week there since he'd returned home (muggle schools letting out two weeks before Hogwarts in most years), in addition to all of the free movies that he was watching. Harry himself was itching to see Independence Day, after seeing posters all over King's Cross when he had returned from school.

"No, not today. I usually take one day off a week and its been Mondays, since it's the time when we're the least busy."

Harry looked at Dudley a bit more closely. He had lost quite a bit of weight over the last 2 years, and while no one would call him thin, he could (with baggy clothes) be thought of as simply husky. There was also a calmness to his cousin that he hadn't noticed before. Usually Dudley sneered at him, when he bothered to look at him at all. Now though, Dudley was looking at him with curiosity, as if he too was seeing his cousin for the first time, or in a new light.

“What’s on your mind Dudley?”

“Are you really leaving next week? Forever?” To Harry’s great surprise, his cousin didn’t look gleeful at the prospect, if anything he looked a bit concerned.

“If everything works out as we hope to, yes. I’ll be gone sometime in the middle of next week. We’re doing our court petition at the end of this week like Peter mentioned Saturday.....after that is when the fireworks are going to start.”

“I heard Mom and Dad talking yesterday....they’re worried about you Harry, they think that bad wizard your lot are so worried about are going to get you now, since you won’t be here.”

Harry had never been more flabbergasted in his life, so much so that he couldn’t help the words that came out of his mouth next:

“What do they care? I would have thought that they’d be happy about that.”

Dudley looked at him like he was about to unload on him for saying that, but his face changed and he didn’t.

“I guess I don’t blame you for thinking that Harry, I know none of us have been very nice to you over the years. I mean, no matter what may have gone on between all of us.....none of us want you dead. After all this time would it make a difference if I said I’m sorry? The brutal truth is that while I’m sorry now Harry, I can’t really say I was sorry then.”

“It wouldn’t make a difference in me wanting to leave Dud, but it would be nice to hear if you really mean it.”

“Then I’m sorry Harry.....I never knew you were a wizard until that giant man came and told us, I just knew that Mom hated your mom and dad. I don’t think Dad even met them more than a few times, but he didn’t like them for some reason.....a reason that I found out when you did, like I said. I saw pretty early on that the meaner I was to you, the better things would be for me. Anytime I wanted something new all I had to do was do something to you and I would get it. Maybe deep down I knew that what I was doing was wrong, but it was pretty deep.” Dudley sighed and continued:

“Part of it might also have been that I was afraid that Mom and Dad would turn on me too if I was nice to you, they weren’t going to like you no matter how close you and I were. I’m sure you’re wondering why I’m telling you all of this now. You probably think that it doesn’t mean much now, since you’re leaving, and maybe it doesn’t.....but every time I think about last summer, and I think about it everyday, I remember that you saved my life, or my soul, or whatever those Dementor things take. The irony of the whole thing, and that meeting the other day made me think of this, is that if you’d let them get me....you’d have been out of here forever just like you’re wanting. Mom and Dad never would let you come back, no matter what your school guy said.”

Harry was at a loss for words, the thought behind the words aside, Harry had had no idea that Dudley was this articulate. He knew Smeltings was a good school, some of it must have rubbed off. Harry smiled:

“You’ve been practicing that speech haven’t you?” Dudley laughed:

“A bit yeah, but I meant it. I’m not that good at speeches, I didn’t do so well in my Speech and Communications class at Smeltings, but I did learn a lot in it. Speaking of speaking (they both snickered), you know this is probably the longest conversation we’ve ever had?”

“And it only took 15 years.....well, 14 after we learned to talk.”

The doorbell rang, both of them knew it was Peter coming for Harry’s Occlumency lesson. Dudley made to leave Harry’s room.

“Let’s hope that it doesn’t take another 14 years to have another one.”

“Yeah, I know what you mean Dud.....oh yeah, the Weasley twins will be here later on tonight, I’ll tell them not to do anything to you, but just make sure that you don't eat anything tonight that you're not sure of, Ok?"

To Harry's surprise Dudley burst out laughing, Dudley really had grown up, and gotten a real sense of humor in the bargain, this was nice to see.

"I don't suppose they'd give me some of their stuff, so I could take it to school?"

"I'll ask, but I don't think so, you'd have a hard time explaining the effects of some of their products."

"Yeah, I guess you're right. Worth a try though. See you later Harry, don't blow anyone up."

With that Dudley opened the door to see Peter there, they exchanged greetings and traded places, with Peter sitting down on Harry's bed.

"Getting along with them better? He doesn't quite come across as the monster you made him out to be."

"I think the prospect of me leaving has given all four of us a bit of a pause, Dudley more so than his parents. I think if none of this emancipation stuff had come up Dudley might still have been easier to deal with than in the past. My aunt and uncle.....I don't know about them, I'll just be glad to be away from them."

"Are Luna and Neville coming tonight? Have you gotten your OWL results yet?"

"Yes and no. Luna and Neville are coming tonight as far as I know, and the OWL owl hasn't gotten here yet. I read over the Occlumency books you gave me, I made some notes if you want to look at them." Harry handed over his notebook and watched Peter try to decipher his chicken scratch.

"Well it looks like you're understanding what to do. I think Snape's half baked lessons probably opened your mind more to Voldemort, not less. 'Clear your mind' and nothing else, honestly." Peter shook his head in exasperation. "Ok, are you ready to begin building your barriers and alarms? Today and probably tomorrow I'm only going to be lightly probing your defenses, making you aware that there's an invasion in the first place so you can have everything in place as quickly as possible. Then on Wednesday and Thursday we're going to practice with me doing full out assaults. This doesn't have to be complete Harry, but given that we have only four days to do this, and for only an hour at a pop at that. I would schedule more, but as you discovered with Snape, learning this tends to tire out your mind. I know Voldemort hasn't tried anything so far this summer, but that's not bound to last. It wouldn't do to have you more vulnerable to his tinkering. I have little doubt that if he tried it tonight while you're in bed, he'd find out what's going on here. That's a chance we'll have to take though.....though I don't think he'd rat you out to Dumbledore Harry." They both smiled at that one, knowing that however much hatred Voldemort had for Harry, he hated Dumbledore 10 times as much.

They spent the next hour practicing barriers. Peter put very little force in his Legilimancy, getting Harry accustomed to another presence in his mind before actually moving about in it. Snape had adopted to use the 'throw them in off the deep end and see if they swim' technique, the same technique he used in his potions classes to varying degrees. Peter preferred to dip Harry's head in and let him be wet for awhile before making him do any work.

It was now 6:00 pm and Peter signaled that they were finished.

"That was a good start Harry, I think by Friday you'll be fine.....as long as we can get rid of your favorite professor quickly enough. Bill should be getting here any minute, and the twins too."

Just then, a tapping could be heard on the bedroom window. Winky went over to open it and let the large grey owl inside. The owl had with him (it was a him, don't ask me how) an official looking envelope with the twin crests of the Ministry of Magic and The Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. Harry took the envelope with shaking hands, and the grey owl went on his way. The doorbell rang at the same time, Peter went downstairs to go get Bill.

Harry looked at the envelope with dread, all of the sudden he began to think that he hadn't done very well. Reason after reason invaded his mind about why he had done badly on this test or that. He waited for the others to come up so that he could have some moral support.

The bedroom door opened again and the room was full of Weasleys, well three of them anyway. Bill came first, followed by Fred and George. To Harry's disappointment there was no Ron.

"Hiya there mate," Gred and Forge said in unison, each slapping Harry on the shoulder. They looked around the room they had broken Harry out of 4 years earlier. Fred said:

"It looks better without the bars on the window Harry, that wasn't a nice decorative touch."

Harry pointed to the wall around the window, the scars of the bars were still there as the twins admired their handiwork. Bill saw Harry looking questioningly at him.

"I'm sorry Harry, I didn't get much of a chance to talk with Ron, Hermione was there yesterday and most of today. I can tell you that they're pretty worried about you, they commented on your lovely vague letters that they got yesterday. Hermione, surprise, surprise, was on pins and needles waiting for the owl scores. I told them I was going to talk to you tonight, so they wrote down what they got so that I could show you. I'm supposed to take back a copy of yours as well. Have you looked?"

"No Bill, I'm afraid to. You'll still talk to Ron though, this week? I don't want Friday to happen without him having some advance warning if possible."

"I will Harry, Hermione went home right before I left, her parents picked her up, so she won't be seeing Luna or Neville on the Knight Bus.....they're coming right?"

"I hope so, they haven't told me they're not. Oh Bill, one more thing.....Ron and Hermione....they weren't....how can I say this...?"

Bill knew his answer wouldn't be what Harry wanted to hear, so he figured he should soften it as much as he could.

"Did I catch them snogging at all? Is that what you want to know?"

The whole room started giggling as Harry had a revolted look on his face.

"That's not how I would have put it Bill, but I guess that's what I mean."

Bill and the twins looked at each for a moment, and that's all the answer Harry really needed. Bill felt he should say something though.

"Yes Harry, they are together. They told Mum, Dad, and Ginny last night, apparently it's been going on for a couple of weeks. I asked them if they had bothered to tell you yet, but they pointed out that you had asked them not to write.....which is very convenient I know, but try not to kill them the next time you see them." Fred chimed in:

"Just for the record mate, the three of us didn't know before today. George and I aren't at The Burrow much, and when we are we have better things to do than follow those two around.....but I promise you that we would have said something if we'd known about it." George nodded in agreement, as did Bill. Harry just shrugged, and silently told himself that what he was hoping to do was made a little bit easier. George decided that a change of subject was in order:

"Out with mate, open up the golden envelope, let's see what you got."

Harry closed his eyes and said a silent prayer, then he opened the envelope. He couldn't find his voice, so he handed the letter to one of the twins to read. George started reading aloud:

Griselda Marchbanks

Ministry of Magic

So no Potions, he hadn't even been close to Snape's cutoff. Harry had been waffling about being an Auror, this cinched it, he was going to have to find something else to do with his life after school. Oh well, he'd think about that later, once he looked at the career manual that Peter gave him.

“12 OWL’s Harry, that’s double what we got.....combined!”

Bill looked at George like that was something to brag about, getting only 3 OWL’s apiece.

“Congratulations Harry, and 4th in your class to boot, that’s terrific.”

“How did Hermione react Bill? She didn’t do as well as I thought she would. And just out of curiosity twins, I never found out what your OWLs were in.”

Bill and Fred looked at each other, Fred spoke first:

“We each got an O in Charms, and an E in Potions. Snape couldn’t believe it, but Flitwick was delighted. I heard he was bragging in the staff room that he was the one professor to have actually gotten through to us.”

The room got a laugh out of that one, Harry looked at Bill for his Hermione answer:

“She didn’t take it too well Harry, I didn’t want to mention this before you opened the scores, since I knew from looking at Ron’s and Hermione’s letters that you had gotten the two OO’s and 4th overall in the class. I will tell you there were tears and yelling, and she mentioned more than once about protesting. Ron was a bit quieter, as you’re about to see.”

With that, Bill took two folded pieces of paper out of his pocket and gave them to Harry. Harry opened the first one, which were Hermione’s, and with a nod from Bill began reading aloud:

“Well I know she was hoping for all O’s, but I hear that’s practically impossible. The ‘A’ is a bit of a shocker, and how did she only get an ‘E’ in Defense?”

“Oh Harry my friend, she’s wondering those same things herself. If she knows how to make a howler, I pity poor Griselda Marchbanks. To be honest I was kind of glad she left, it was getting tiring listening to her complain. Better open Ron’s and get it over with.”

“No Harry, she didn’t, she was actually pretty calm about it. Ron has been preparing her for it, or so he told me. He rationalized to her that at least he did better than the twins, even though he didn’t get any O’s. He would get this twitch in his eye whenever Hermione went off on a rant about ‘only 16 OWL’s’, but he somehow managed not to punch her. I wasn’t the only one ready for her to get out of there Harry, and I was only there for 30 minutes with her, imagine poor Ron having to listen to it for the full two hours.....if nothing else it’s proof of how much he loves her I suppose.”

Harry and the twins shuddered, and Harry quickly scribbled down his scores on two pieces of paper, so that Ron could see and copy, and send Pig to Hermione with the other. They heard a squeal of tires outside, and saw the Knight Bus pull up, discharging Neville and Luna. George went downstairs to let them in. He saw Dudley on his way through the living room and absently slapped him on the back as he passed by. Dudley looked a hair nervous at first, but calmed down once he didn't change into anything. Luna and Neville gave polite greetings to the Dursleys, whom neither of them had ever met (but heard much about) and received them in turn, they then proceeded behind George upstairs to Harry's room. They looked at the gathering of players in our little drama, and immediately noted the absence of Ron, Ginny, and Hermione. Neville walked up to Peter:

"Hello Mr. Tyson, how are you? Gran was wondering whether Harry had hired you."

"I'm fine Neville, please call me Peter. Hello Luna, pleasure to meet you again."

"And to you as well Peter. Hello Harry."

"Hi Luna, hello Neville....I'm glad you two could come, have a seat."

Neville and Luna looked around and couldn't see where to sit down. Bill took that hint and waved his wand, magically expanding the room to double its size. Peter conjured up some chairs and everyone sat down, the twins sitting on the bed.

"Luna knows me Harry, because I've done some work for her father in the past. Folks, we're all here because we, in effect, are the people that Harry trusts most. Some of you have noted the absence of people like Ron and Hermione, Hagrid, Dumbledore, Molly and Arthur. Our opponent here isn't Voldemort, its Dumbledore. We're going to get Harry free, and we're going to need the counsel and help of everyone in this room. Here's the plan:

Peter proceeded to lay out the strategy, including what Harry was studying, and the events that were to take place on Friday and hopefully the following Monday (the emancipation hearing). Neville was the only one of the newcomers to speak during this presentation, asking a couple of questions about the Snape plan, otherwise they were silent and contemplative. Fred looked at Bill:

"You said this would be huge, big brother.....and you underestimated it. Peter, you've laid out quite a detailed strategy, full of pitfalls and potential consequences. What do you feel the odds are for success?"

Peter looked at Harry, he had never volunteered odds to Harry, and the lad had never asked him for any. This was the time to be honest though.

"I would say we have about a 50 percent chance of total success. By total success I mean getting Harry out of here, out of Hogwarts, and out of Great Britain.....the latter two of which are pretty entwined, but not completely. I think getting Harry out of here will be pretty easy, probably 90 percent. Dumbledore is a formidable adversary, and he'll use all his pull on Fudge and the Wizengamot to keep Harry at least at Hogwarts. Harry, the important thing to remember, even if this doesn't work, you can always leave next year. Once you turn 17 your life is yours to do with as you please, and you can go to school for 7th year anywhere you like."

"I know Peter, and I'm aware that this might not work. But as long as we give it our best chance, I'm prepared to deal with what happens, either way."

"If it comes to it Harry, can you handle a split decision? Leaving here but staying at Hogwarts?"

Harry hesitated for a minute, he looked at the faces around him, the people he trusted most in the world.

"To be honest Peter, no, I don't think I could handle a split decision if it came to it. I've been thinking about this ever since Friday and I've decided that if I can't leave Britain as a wizard, I'll leave it as a muggle, and go to a muggle boarding school somewhere else." Nobody said anything for a moment, and Peter decided that he had to get control of the situation quickly.

"Well let's hope that we don't have to test that out. Ok, back to this coming Friday, is there any one of you who can't be here? Snape is supposed to arrive at 7 pm, according to our spy, Mr. Bill Weasley."

Everyone nodded their assent that they could be there at the appointed time.

“One more thing troops.” The group smiled as Bill said that. “Bring your wands, even those of you who aren’t allowed to use them.....just in case.”

It was now 7:00 pm, and Peter made to leave:

“Well I must be going, I have my own set of twins,” he grinned at Fred and George, “that need to be tucked in, 5 year old girls, they’re going to be the death of me when they start dating, so I’m appreciating them that much more now.” The room laughed and bade him goodnight. After confirming his Occlumency lesson the next day with Harry, he left.

The six of them sat around for another two hours chatting, talking about their school experiences.

Neville showed off his own OWL results, Harry and the twins had already seen his Herbology award:

Gryffindor Rank: 3rd

Harry and the others were very impressed with Neville's scores, only one less owl than Harry himself. It had helped that Neville hadn't failed any classes, unlike Ron. Harry wondered about Neville being 11th in their year and him 4th, with only one OWL between them, but Bill explained that they took overall scores into consideration, that was where the difference between E's and A's, and P's and T's came into play, even if the pairs were worth the same number of OWL's. Bill allowed that he had received 18 OWL's, which went a long way to making him Head Boy.

By 9:00 pm everyone was getting ready to leave, Bill to go back outside to be on guard duty, Fred and George to make sure Lee and Ginny hadn't burned the shop down, and Neville and Luna to go back home. The 'adults' (I use that term loosely in reference to the twins) had left, and Neville, Harry and Luna sat there for a minute, contemplating. Neville and Luna were sitting next to each other, and while they were not holding hands, it appeared as though their hands were touching.

"So are you two official yet?" He said this with a smile, and Neville and Luna looked at each other nervously.....nervously, Harry had never seen Luna nervous before. Even before the DOM she had looked serene. Neville answered him.

"Well not really, we've been owling at lot since summer started." He tensed up a second, and took Luna's hand, which caused her to blush furiously, but she squeezed it back.

"I'm really happy for you guys, I think you make a great couple." Luna smiled at hearing that.

"Thank you Harry, and for inviting me Harry, it means a lot to me to know that you trust me so much."

"You're welcome Luna, you and Neville have shown me time and time again that I can count on you both.. I hope you know that I'd be there for you too." Luna and Neville both nodded, and she asked what she and Neville had both been thinking since the meeting had started.

"Harry, are you sure about Ronald and Hermione? What will they say Friday when they learn you kept them out of it?"

"They'll be hurt Luna, no doubt about that. I would hope though, that they'd be mature enough to understand that I felt that I had reason to do what I did, even if they don't agree with the reasons themselves. And we still might reach Ron, Bill and the twins are going to see about it."

"What if they aren't mature enough Harry.....I know he's your best friend, but I just don't see Ronald being mature enough to deal with this. And Hermione.....you know I don't like talking badly about anyone Harry, but she's....."

"I know Luna, and in my heart I agree with what you just said. If they don't understand?.....then a nice five year friendship will be over. I believe I've earned some slack from those two, as much as they've been there for me guys, I've been there for them just as much. I doubt Hermione would have any friends at Hogwarts if Ron and I hadn't taken her in, Parvati and Lavender can't stand her, neither really can Dean and Seamus, You don't seem to doesn't mind her Neville, but I you notice didn't stick up for her tonight. And Ron.....Ron, Ron, Ron.....he's been my best friend and he's given me a family. I hope Bill and the twins can get through to him. I would give my life to save Ron's, but I won't risk it just to please him."

"I understand Harry."

"What about those two as a couple, are you upset about that?"

“Not really Neville, if anything I’m happy that they finally did something about it. That they didn’t tell me about it.....well it’s done now, the toothpaste is out of the tube.”

They chatted about inconsequential things for a few minutes, the kind of relaxed talk that friends have.....even if two of them are holding hands. Neville looked at his watch, and discreetly coughed:

“We’d better get going Luna. See you Friday Harry, I’ll tell Gran you’re doing just fine.”

“Thank you Neville.....for everything mate.”

“And you as well Harry,” with that, Neville walked downstairs.

Author’s Note: About the OWL results.....I’ve read a lot of fics with Harry getting an O in Potions, and I just can’t buy it, not with the level of teaching he’s gotten over a five year span. The next chapter the stuff really comes together, the first serious deviations from Straw, and Snape will be in it up to his neck.

Remus paced around the house, just waiting. Remus hadn't had much to do lately, with so many of the known Death Eaters in Azkaban, thanks to Harry and friends. That was what worried Remus, that now Voldemort would be staffed by people that they hadn't pegged. At least with Malfoy, Crabbe, and Goyle and their ilk, they knew who they were dealing with. This quiet was very disconcerting, Remus too had noted the lack of visions that Harry was getting. Remus had to admit that if he was in Voldemort's position he would be reminding Harry about Sirius' death every chance he could, to hopefully drive the boy insane.

As it was, Remus was worried about Harry's mental health anyway. He wasn't convinced by Harry's bland assurances that things were better with the Dursleys, this was the second summer in a row that Harry was forced to go there soon after witnessing a death. Dumbledore amazed Remus sometimes, the man had spent a lifetime around children, but did not seem to understand how to handle them. Remus was not alone among the Order in wondering what Dumbledore was going to do next summer when Harry turned 17. Remus and Tonks both had dropped a few hints about it, but if Dumbledore even knew himself, he wasn't saying. Remus again thought that Voldemort too wasn't handling his end of the war well, not that he was complaining of course. If Remus had been in charge of the dark side he would have forced the final confrontation as soon as possible, before Harry got any better trained.

No, Remus didn't know the Prophecy. That said, both Dumbledore and Harry would have been horrified to know how many Order members had guessed its content, if not its exact words. All the clues pointed to some sort of final showdown between Harry and Voldemort: the hiding of Harry at Privet Drive, the lack of information Harry was given about both current events and his past, Dumbledore keeping Snape so close. What Remus couldn't figure out is why Dumbledore had been so tolerant of the shoddy Defense Against the Dark Arts teaching over the last five years. There had been two good teachers Remus thought, himself (Remus was modest, but even he knew this) and the fake Moody, Barty Crouch Jr.....Death Eater though he was, Harry and his friends swore up and down that they learned loads from him, Harry now knew how to throw off the Imperious Curse, something few wizards could do quickly.....another puzzling happening as far as Remus was concerned, why would a Death Eater have gone to so much trouble to make his enemy better? On the other side of the balance sheet, there were three years when almost nothing was learned, what with Quirrel and his stuttering, Lockhart and his preening, and Umbridge.....Remus couldn't think about Umbridge without wanting to rip something apart, so he stopped that line of thought.

Dumbledore had been hinting to him that he might be getting the Defense job back this year. Once again there was a problem filling the post and Dumbledore seemed quite reluctant to give Snape the job.....if Snape truly wanted the job, Remus had heard the rumors along with everyone else, but Snape had never flat out said it in front of him. Remus wanted the position, he liked being around kids and being able to spend some time with Harry. He felt that if he'd at least gotten another year at Hogwarts that he and Harry would have a much better relationship, and the last wouldn't be so untrusting. Maybe this year would be different, quiet. He knew this was wishful thinking.

Privet Drive

Noon

Dear Harry,

Did you see those OWL scores! An 'A'! What are those examiners thinking! Either that or Hagrid, I knew we should have had a proper teacher all this time. I know if that Professor Grubbly-Plank had been there the entire time I wouldn't have gotten an 'A'. Honestly, teaching us about all those monsters didn't help us one bit! And Defense! I messed up on one spell, one! It wasn't even that big a mistake, so I mispronounced Relashio, did I deserve a grade lowering just for that!

Two Ravenclaws beat me, not one, but two! How can I ever show my face in the library again? I sent my protest off just now with Errol, this is going to get fixed if I have to howler the entire Ministry of Magic. At least we both did better than Malfoy, the git didn't even get the Potions award. Maybe if we had classes with Ravenclaws I would have been challenged more, I just know I'm smarter than Lisa Turpin and Terry Boot. Ugghghhhh.

I hope you're doing well Harry, I'm not sure how much I believe your letter. I'll see you when Dumbledore allows you to leave your relatives, hopefully it will be for your birthday, I know that Ron and I both miss you, please write to us more often. I hope you are doing what the Headmaster says and that you're not arguing with him, he knows best.

Yours,

Hermione

Harry read this letter with a resigned kind of attitude. This was so typical of Hermione, competitive to the end. It was so nice of her to congratulate him on how he did (sarcasm). That girl.....Harry gritted his teeth. Harry agreed with her about Hagrid, in principle, but notwithstanding the man's unwavering faith in Dumbledore, Harry would always have a soft spot for the half-giant who had first told him about how he was a wizard. He would never tell Hagrid that he wasn't that hot a teacher though, even if he wouldn't put it past Hermione to go spare on the guy when she got to school.

The line about not being challenged by anyone in her classes had rankled him quite a bit, after all he had beaten her in three of the seven classes that they shared (Defense, Charms, and Care of Magical Creatures), though she had solid victories in the other four, as well as O's in her other elective classes (Ancient Runes and Arithmancy). Harry knew that Hermione was very smart, but that in wizard life there was book smart, and practical smart. Harry realized that in terms of book smarts Hermione was way ahead of him, but that he was capable of narrowing that gap somewhat if he worked harder, as he certainly planned to. Practical-wise they were about even; Harry better in Charms and Defense, Hermione in Transfiguration and Potions. He figured he could have closed that gap in Transfiguration if he studied harder, though that wouldn't be a factor now that he was leaving.

.....and it hadn't escaped his attention that there was no mention of her relationship with Ron, so much for the 'you told us not to write you' excuse. He knew he wasn't going to bother writing back to her, after all, what was there to write back to? Respond to one of her rants? Harry felt that he'd rather do something productive, like going outside to watch the grass grow.

That was a good idea now that he thought about it, he probably should at least get some fresh air, even if he stayed in the yard. He would do that after he read Ron's letter:

Hey Harry,

Good job on your OWLs mate, Bill showed them to all of us when he stopped by for breakfast this morning. 12 OWL's, that's as many as Percy got you know, and he made Head Boy. Mum and Dad said to send their congrats too. Mine were better than I had feared they would, but not as good as I'd hoped for, I wanted at least one 'O', but I guess it wasn't to be. No Auror training for me it looks like, but I bet they'll still let you in, even if you don't take Potions. No more Snape anyway, that's the one bright spot.

Mum thinks Dumbledore will let you out of there for your birthday, she says we'll have some kind of party at Headquarters. Oh yeah, we're moving there on Thursday, for the rest of the summer. Mum is doing more and more work with the Order, now that there's just Ginny and I at home. Work is going fine, I have more money in my pocket than I ever had before, its hard not to spend it, but I've been good. I know that Hermione has a letter here for you, she wouldn't let me read it but I can guess what it says. Oh well, I'd better floo off to work, Fred and George won't like it I'm late. See you soon Harry, don't let the muggles get you down

Ron

Harry noted the sad tone of the letter, it didn't make him feel too good either after reading it. Ron's shot about his Auror chances hadn't gone unnoticed by Harry, but he dismissed it, he would have been somewhat bitter too if he had gotten those marks. Harry couldn't think of anything that he could write to Ron that wouldn't sound like he was rubbing his marks in Ron's face. Even a 'cheer up, they weren't that bad' likely wouldn't go over too well. Ron's pride was very touchy most of the time, and it had taken quite a blow yesterday. Plus, from what Bill had told him and from the undertone of Ron's own letter, Hermione hadn't helped anything with her whining. Harry knew that this might be the last straw (no pun intended) with Ron, especially after this weekend. The two of them did most of their studying together and his scores had been much better, Ron only beating him in Potions. He felt sorry enough for Ron that he could hardly be mad at him for hiding his thing with Hermione.

He put his likely soon-to-be former friends to the side for the moment, and headed outside. No klaxons went off when he touched the front walk, and no wizards appeared out of no-where, so he assumed he was allowed out. He went to the middle of the lawn and laid down, soaking up the fresh air and the sun.

Privet Drive 5:00 pm

Peter walked up to Number 4 Privet Drive lost in thought. His Occlumency lessons with Harry the last two days had gone very well. It was pretty clear that the kid could learn quickly with a decent teacher. He knew that Harry still wasn't quite ready to face Snape and Dumbledore for any extended period of time, if for no other reason than Harry might well try to curse them the moment he saw them. Harry had always had good control of his emotions, outside of a few notable incidents, but just hearing the word 'Snape' put a look on his face that would boil cheese.

He rang the doorbell, and Petunia let him inside. On Tuesday Peter had realized that he needed a cover story in case Dumbledore or one of the minders approached her about his frequent visits. He and Petunia had kicked around ideas and came up with the plan of telling them that she was taking an exam to get her Real Estate license in a couple of weeks, and he was brother of one of Vernon's co-workers that they hired to tutor her for it. It sounded fairly odd to Peter, but he figured it would pass muster with any wizard. So far so good though, Petunia hadn't seen or heard from a wizard outside of Harry's new circle since King's Cross. She and Vernon had been reasonably friendly toward him in the last week, but it was never far in the back of Peter's mind how they had treated Harry for 15 years. He agreed with the lad that they were being nice merely because the end was near. Another factor was the fear that Harry would do something to him when he reached his majority, Harry had introduced Dobby and Winky to them on Tuesday and made it clear that they would protect him for any attacks. When he had said 'any' he looked straight at Vernon, causing the man to flinch noticeably. Nothing had happened though, Vernon had not thrown one insult his way since he had been back.....there were so many wizards and wizard 'friends' threatening him that he didn't know who to fear most.

The muggle emancipation hearing the day before had gone as well as could be expected. Peter had brought his wand with him just in case he had to do a little helping, but thankfully he was not forced to use it. The civil servant they dealt seemed almost not to care about their story, and after a few cursory questions and checking Harry to make sure he had not been beaten in any way, issued a ruling that conditionally emancipated Harry come his 16th birthday the next week. The condition was only that he not get into any trouble with the police over the next two years, if that happened, then his situation would be revisited. The six of them left the government building with large smiles on their faces, and compliments flew around the car (which Peter had enlarged) all the way home. Peter had never seen Harry more relaxed, he now had the freedom to not return to Privet Drive after this was all over, and not to return to Hogwarts if he was willing to go strictly muggle for a year.

He made his way upstairs into Harry's room, which he had enlarged on Tuesday so that the two of them could pace around in it if need be.

"All right there Harry? How's your reading coming?"

"Pretty well Peter, I'm just reading the books now to get a handle on them. Once I've done that, I'll go through them again and take notes. Since I can't practice the spells for a few more weeks, I might as well learn the theory a bit better."

"Good plan Harry, the theory may be a bit boring, but it will help you put more power into the spell if you understand why. Remember, spell casting seems to be your strength, and you should always hone your strengths. It will help with Transfiguration too, I know you got a good grade, but that's the other main spell casting subject and you can always improve."

They spent the next hour doing Occlumency, Harry getting better and better at forcing Peter out of his mind. It wasn't so much that Harry was getting quicker at it, though he was getting better at that too, but that his force-outs were much more powerful. After the last one of the session, Peter had needed a few minutes to recover, given that he was knocked back about five feet from the chair he was sitting in. Rubbing his elbow where he had nailed it on the edge of the desk, he congratulated Harry.

"Ok, let's stop there, I think you have the hang of it now. I'm confident that you can resist Snape if need be, at least for a minute or two anyway. I have some big news for you, and I wanted to wait until your lesson was over so as not to distract you."

"What is it?"

"I have a meeting set up for us with Minister Fudge, for tomorrow morning at 10 am, the subject of which will be to discuss your emancipation petition, which I hand delivered him about three hours ago."

"How did he react?"

"He wasn't the least bit shocked Harry, which only confirms my opinion that one of the watchers outside must be from him, not that he admitted it when I asked him. Ever since the first day I've put some disguising charms so that I wouldn't be recognized by any Order members, but his person or persons must have pegged me from that first day. Trust me, Fudge can't hold a poker face that well."

"Ok, so he wasn't shocked.....did he seem pleased at all?"

"He looked satisfied, and that's good for us."

"How much is his help going to cost me Peter?"

“Probably nothing, if you convince him that you are North America bound sometime next month. Fudge is not quite so bold as to openly ask for a bribe, so I don’t think you need to bring any money with you. Now the thing to remember is this: Whatever happens, don’t lose your temper with him. The man is obtuse sometimes to be sure, so we just have to roll with those punches and let the situation unfold in a very calm way. I can tell you that he no longer believes that you made up the Voldemort revival, but please resist temptation to rub his nose in it. I repeat, this is not a time to settle scores Harry. If you really are taking on Dumbledore, we can’t have Fudge as an enemy too.”

“I understand Peter.....can I taunt him if he turns us down?” He smiled saying that, which relieved the other man greatly.

“No Harry, no gloating.....unless you want to make total peace with Dumbledore.....which of course means total surrender to the old man.....”

“Ok, ok, I get it. I’ll be nice to Fudge if that’s what you’re telling me.”

“That’s what I’m telling you. Now I’ve already talked with your aunt, she’s going to drive you into London tomorrow so that you can keep the appointment, I’m willing to bet that they don’t have muggle transportation with which to follow you directly, they’ll have to rely on their tracking charms, your not leaving this place yet this month has probably made them somewhat complacent. We’re going to meet at the Leaky Cauldron and floo over to the Ministry from there. Right before we floo, I’ll remove the tracking charms that are on you right now. Dumbledore should get an alert when his charm(s) is/are taken off, but he won’t know where you’re going until its too late.”

“Am I really coming back here afterward? What if Dumbledore comes with Snape?”

“Then you run out the backdoor and use the emergency portkey I’m going to give you after our Fudge appointment, it will take you straight to my office, and I have a plan from there. Now the letter, did you write it?”

Harry nodded and brought it out:

Dear Professors Dumbledore and Snape,

This is to inform you that Professor Snape is not under any circumstances welcome in our home. We would prefer no wizards at all but we know that given your callous disregard for our wishes in the past that that is unlikely. However, you will respect our wishes on this. We're not concerned with what supposed lessons that Harry must take, you have him 10 months out of the year at that school, plenty of time to teach him whatever you think is so important.

Signed,

Vernon Dursley

Petunia Dursley

Dudley Dursley

PS: I should tell you Professor Dumbledore that I agree with this, do not send that man to our home.

Harry Potter

"Nice Harry, your uncle's handwriting?"

"Yeah, I wrote out the text and we had him copy it, then we all signed it. I think he had a good time with it."

Both of them smiled, indeed Vernon Dursley had been itching to write a letter like that for five years. Now he was doing so with Harry's consent and active participation. It was a world gone mad.

"Okiedokie Harry, lets go ahead and send it."

Harry walked over and gave the note to Hedwig, "You remember how to get to Headquarters girl? Make sure this goes right to Dumbledore, and no one else. Don't wait for a reply, just come right back here, Ok?"

Hedwig hooted twice and took off out of the window.

“Harry, its not too late to back out of this scheme. You have until Snape gets here to change your mind.”

“I won’t change my mind Peter, I’m in this all the way. Snape deserves payback for what he’s done to me all of these years. I’ll never forgive him for goading Sirius, I won’t back out.”

“Fair enough Harry, I just wanted you to know that you have choices, you’re not locked in. I can safely speak for the rest of us when I say that we’re in too. Easy for me to say of course, since I have no ties to Dumbledore as the rest of you do. Whatever happens should be interesting.”

8:30 am

Little Whinging

Harry and Petunia left the house very nervously and got into the car, though no one stopped them or even tried to interfere. This was the first time Harry had left the property and the protections of the Blood Charms, and he was fairly surprised that nothing happened, maybe his watchers were being fooled. He was not wearing his glasses, as part of a last second inspiration to try to throw his watchers off the trail. They drove off in the direction of London, saying almost nothing to each other as they made the trip.....perhaps waiting for the ride back, if all went according to plan. They arrived at The Leaky Cauldron, and Petunia agreed to wait in the bookstore across the street until Harry was done.

“Good luck Harry.”

“Thanks Aunt Petunia.” This was almost a hugging moment, but the détente between the two of them hadn’t quite reached that level. He walked into the pub as casually as he could, where Peter was waiting for him by the front door, it was now 9:45 am. Tom the barkeep was not in sight, and Harry and Peter took a table in the corner, away from the front door.

“Did you notice anyone following you?”

“No, and I was looking behind us all the way over here. No one followed us in a car that I could tell. How quickly can they follow us with the tracking charms?”

“Not quickly enough, we’ll be at the Ministry before they get here, though they will know we were here. We have to hope that they think you went into Diagon Alley to visit the twins or to go to your vault at Gringotts.”

“What about when we get to the Ministry? Someone there will tip off Dumbledore won’t they?”

“Good point, and one that Fudge and I have already planned for. At precisely 10 am the floo here will fire, initiated from Fudge’s office on a direct connect. We’ll hop in there and go right to the man himself, bypassing the corridors and all the prying eyes who might make a beeline to call Dumbledore.”

“I really hope this works.....what about Tom? What will he say?”

“Tom is Fudge’s man through and through Harry, he always has been, it’s the only way he would be allowed to be the keeper of the gateway to muggle London.” Peter then proceeded to eliminate the tracking charms on Harry’s person, and checked himself out again for the same kind of charms, finding nothing.

They sat there for a few minutes and contemplated things, and at the appointed time the floo fired up. The two walked over and in turn entered the floo, since it was a direct connect, no address needed to be called out for any hidden listeners, though there did not appear to be any other customers.

10 am

Harry tumbled out of the floo and was caught by Tyson, who had gone first. They brushed themselves off and Harry looked around at Fudge's very impressive office, which was very large and quite well decorated.....as befitting the head of a government, even Harry could admit that. The man himself was standing up in front of his desk, with a smile on his face.

"Hello Harry, Peter."

"Hello Minister," They both said at the same time. Harry took a deep breath and walked over to the Minister, holding out his right hand to shake. Fudge's smile widened a bit, and he shook Harry's hand, then Peter's as well.

"I can appreciate the ambivalence you must be feeling right now Harry, I was half wondering if you'd come out of the floo cursing me."

"Peter wouldn't let me sir, he said I have to appear calm and cool." Harry smiled when he said that, and Fudge and Peter both had a laugh, though only Peter knew how close to home that joke was.

"Well I'm glad you're here anyway, and under friendly circumstances."

"Will Percy not be joining us sir?"

"No he will not, we can't be having Dumbledore knowing about our little meeting can we?"

Harry's jaw hung wide open at hearing that, and even Peter looked astonished.

"So he was working for Dumbledore the entire time?"

"Of course he was, the whole break was fabricated by Dumbledore, Arthur, and Percy to try and spy on me.....let's just say Percy should check his apartment for listening charms a little bit more often."

"Yet you haven't sacked him, or Arthur."

“Not at all, Percy is useful in his own way, and he tells Dumbledore nothing that I don’t want him to know. All my private business is conducted privately, without him there. As for Arthur.....well loyalty to Dumbledore aside, I have a certain fondness for the man, and he does do an excellent job in his department. Besides, from what Peter told me yesterday at least three of his sons are on your side in this, perhaps his loyalty won’t be as absolute as it has been.” Harry decided to cut to the chase:

“Are you inclined to grant my application Minister?”

“I am Harry, but first I would like to know whether or not you are truly set against returning to Hogwarts.”

“I will not be a student at Hogwarts as long as Voldemort is alive and Dumbledore is Headmaster there.”

“So even if we removed the old man, you wouldn’t stay there?”

“No sir I wouldn’t. He would still be controlling things from behind the scenes.”

“What about your friends, I know you won’t want to leave them. Are you wanting to leave to keep them out of danger?”

“That’s part of it, yes sir.....but I just have the feeling that I’ll be much safer if I’m as far away from Dumbledore as I can get.”

“Why is he so obsessed with you Harry?” Harry and Peter looked at each other for a second. They had discussed this the night before, and had decided that Fudge might need to know about the Prophecy.

“He is under the impression that I’m the final weapon against Voldemort.” He was surprised to see Fudge chuckling.

“Oh come now Harry, I had that part figured out long ago. As soon as you started Hogwarts I’ve known about the old man’s coddling of you, I always thought he was keeping you in reserve for something. He never believed that He Who Must Not Be Named was gone, and even though I disagreed with him, I knew he had something planned for you.”

“You didn’t think his concern for me was just me being ‘The Boy Who Lived?’”

“I’m sure that was some of it, yes, but no one monitors someone as closely as he does you without a better reason than that. I take it a prophecy in the Department of Mysteries talks about this final weapon status?” For crying out loud, Harry thought.....if Fudge of all people could figure this out, why had Dumbledore gone to so much trouble to hide things?

“There is, yes. It’s what Voldemort wanted so badly, only he or I could touch it, so he tricked me into going in there.”

“Yes I know, he was planting visions of Black being tortured.....Dumbledore told me, don’t look so surprised.”

“Yes, that’s why I went to the Department of Mysteries.”

“And how are you coming with your Occlumency?”

“Peter has me almost where I need to be, after only four days of lessons. I don’t know if I can keep Voldemort out yet, but I’m much further along than I would have been otherwise.”

“Good enough. Now there is something I need to know: Do you believe in all this Harry? Do you believe you’re the final weapon against him?”

Harry was silent for a moment as he thought about this. Even Peter, in a week full of long conversations with Harry, had never asked him this.....perhaps on purpose, perhaps not. He had asked about whether Harry believed the Prophecy.....but that wasn’t the same thing necessarily.

“No Minister, I don’t. I don’t believe the source of the Prophecy, I don’t believe that someone like that could predict something like this.”

“Who is the source?”

“Trelawney.” Fudge burst out laughing again, and almost fell out of his chair.

“No, seriously Harry, who is the source?”

Harry’s facial expression didn’t change, and Fudge realized that he wasn’t kidding.

“Well, well, isn’t that interesting. Hmmmmm.....let me ask you another question Harry, one that you must have thought of: If you do go abroad, a lot of people are going to call you a coward, that you’re too afraid of Voldemort to stick around. What would you say to that?”

“They never liked me anyway, most of our public is so fickle they wake up on a different side of the bed every morning. Even if the Prophecy was real, I don’t want to risk my life for them.”

“That’s very cynical of you Harry.....it’s quite accurate of course, but very cynical.”

“The press, Dumbledore.....and yes you Minister, you’ve all trained me quite well.”

Fudge’s smile was reduced a little bit, but he was nodding in agreement.

“Indeed we have. Where will you go from here?” Peter handled this one, since Harry had no concrete idea.

“My wife Jennifer has relations in the United States, and through her efforts and some of my own, I’ve comprised a list of the pros and cons of the various magic schools over there. There are four of them: one in northern California, one in western Oklahoma, one in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, and the last one in western Massachusetts. The one in Michigan seems to be our best bet Harry, the Headmistress is no fan of our friend Dumbledore and will protect you from him.”

“True, but the Headmistress at the Maple Leaf School of Magic is a longtime friend of Dumbledore and I doubt she’d be willing to enroll you there if the old man objects. Admission of foreign students is taken on a case by case basis at most schools, and is not often granted. I doubt there are more than two or three foreign students at Hogwarts at any given time. Great Lakes is the second best academically of the American schools, but the Salem Witches Institute, which does take boys despite the title, is run by another ally of Dumbledore. No, our best bet is in Michigan Harry. What do you think Minister?”

“I agree with Peter, Maple Leaf and Salem are more likely to hand you back over to Dumbledore than to keep you, whereas there is some enmity between Dumbledore and Madam Murray, who runs Great Lakes. Its not going to take the old man long to figure out what you’re up to once he finds out about your emancipation.....yes Harry, I’m going to grant it.”

Harry had rarely felt more relieved in his life, and then something occurred to him:

“Why does he need to know at all? Can’t we keep this quiet until I’m long gone?”

“We can probably hide it for the rest of the day, but not after that. All legal decrees made by the Ministry, which this is, must be filed with the Wizengamot to be considered legal and binding. So we have a choice here: I can have it filed within ten minutes of your leaving here, which would tip Dumbledore off if he reads his mail promptly; or I can hold off until the end of the day, though as a consequence you would not be able to use magic until I have the decree filed.”

“Best to wait Harry, if Dumbledore knows you have wand rights then he’ll either come with Snape tonight or send others who’ll try to force you to do what he wants. He might even send Molly to tug on your emotions, and I know you won’t use your wand on her.” Harry was in agreement with this, but wondered at telling Fudge of the plan for Snape. Fudge anticipated this:

"Just don't use any Unforgivable curses against him and you'll be fine.....though it would be better if he fired first, if you what you truly want is to have him arrested.....oh yes, don't kill him either, that would hard to explain away, no matter what he did to provoke you."

"You're not opposed to what we're doing?"

"Of course not, having Dumbledore's favorite professor arrested would suit me just fine."

"I won't do anything illegal Minister, you have my promise on that."

"Good, now on to another subject, the trials of Lucius Malfoy and his gang. They are to take place the first week in October, and we will need you back to testify."

"Why the long delay?"

"It's the first week we have available for the volume of evidence that will be presented." Fudge looked so smug saying that, that Harry couldn't resist:

"And another three months in Azkaban for them wouldn't be so bad either eh?" Fudge winked at him.

"I don't have total control of the schedule Harry, its what the Wizengamot wants. I'm going to arrange to have the defendants put under the influence of Veritaserum.....and if more than one of them admits to seeing Peter Pettigrew live and in the flesh, I'll immediately write a full pardon for Black." That rocked Harry a little bit, who had been waiting for a chance to bring Sirius up.

"Thank you Minister, that's very good of you. I'm guessing that's why Sirius' will is being allowed?"

"In a manner, we have little jurisdiction over Gringotts matters as you might know, and I'm not willing to bargain the influence we have over something like a will."

“That makes sense.”

“We have our moments. Now Peter, what are your plans for Harry tonight after Snape is dealt with?”

“We’re going to hide you in muggle London Harry, at one of the chain hotels, and under a different name. When I get back to the office this morning I’m going to set up a meeting with Madam Murray from Great Lakes, hopefully to take place as soon as possible.”

“I’ll arrange for as many portkeys as you need Harry, though you might want to take muggle air transport to get over there.”

“Why is that sir?”

“The younger you are, the more dizzying the effect of international port keys, it can cause some ill effects.”

“He’s right Harry, I’ve always had it in the mind for you to leave here via Heathrow Airport, or Shannon Airport in Dublin. Even if they find out about it, they can’t risk doing anything in a muggle airport.” Fudge nodded his agreement, and took a piece of paper out of his desk.

“Best that I don’t know any more than what you’ve told me Harry, that way I can be more convincing to our friend.” With that, he signed the paper and pointed his wand at it

Duplico Duplico

There were now three copies of the paper, and Fudge handed Peter and Harry one each. Harry looked at it and saw that it was his emancipation petition, now officially approved by the Minister.

“As soon as this is filed with the Wizengamot, you are legally an adult Harry. I’ll send you an owl right after I do the filing, so don’t use your wand until then.”

“Yes sir, and thank you sir.”

“You’re welcome Harry, I’m sure we’ll talk again after your Snape encounter.”

“I hope we’ll both be smiling when that happens Minister.”

“As do I Harry, as do I.” Peter stood up, and Harry followed suit.

“Minister, if we may use your floo one more time, Harry and I need to do some business at Gringotts.”

“Certainly Peter, good luck tonight.”

“Thank you sir.”

“Oh yeah, Minister, if I may ask a question?”

“Certainly Harry.”

“What happened to Umbridge? Peter says that she hasn’t been seen since the centaur incident.”

“That madwoman is in St. Mungos where she belongs Harry. Her mind was clearly breaking even before the beasts got to her, whatever it is that they did. Rest assured that if she does recover sufficiently she will be brought to trial for what she did to you.”

Harry doubted this very seriously, but he was hardly in a position to call the man a liar (to his face). He was having difficulty reconciling this conversation with his recent history with Fudge, and this cooperation was making him feel dirty, he would have to take another shower the moment he got back to Privet Drive.

Fudge activated the floo (a security measure in this office was that only the Minister could activate the floo system from this end), and after another round of handshakes, Peter and Harry tumbled into Gringotts. Peter took a miniature cloak out of his pocket and enlarged it.

“Here, put this one and pull the hood over your face. Now we need to go to the foreign exchange counter and get you some muggle money. Do you need any galleons for the time being?”

“That depends on your fee, I have a thousand galleons in Gringotts’ drafts, will that be enough?”

“Yes it will, and I knew about them from reading that letter remember. Do you need any for another reason?”

“Do the Americans use the same kind of money? I have about thirty galleons and some sickles and knuts left in my money pouch.”

“Don’t worry about the Americans just yet, there’s plenty of time to prepare there. That should be enough wizard money to get you by for a week, given that you’ll be in muggle London the entire time. Let’s go, its right over here.” They headed over to an area that was far away from the front doors, but near the east floo (there were two of them, and one never knew which floo that you would come out of), a counter that Harry remembered seeing Hermione go to before second year. Harry pulled the hood of his cloak over his head, and it indeed made it very hard to see who he was. Peter led him over to the counter and the goblin appraised them casually, he was used to men skulking in here. Peter addressed him quietly:

“My friend here would like to change some galleons into muggle pounds, and we would like to get him a muggle credit card and driver’s license for him as well.”

“Let me have your key, ‘friend’”

Harry handed it over and the goblin had a very slight reaction when he saw whose it was.....but so slight you had to be looking for it.

“How many muggle pounds will you need young man?” Harry looked at Peter for the answer.

“I think we’ll go with two thousand pounds for now, we may be back at a later time for some more.”

“And the spending limit on the credit card? You can have from two hundred up to five thousand pounds.”

“The maximum please.”

“Very well. The current exchange rate is one galleon for two and a half British pounds. There will be a fifty galleon charge for the driver’s license, add our exchange fee of two percent, and your vault will be charged 4,170 galleons. The muggle credit card of course can only be used in the muggle world, and the five thousand pounds in are non-refundable, you must spend them out there to utilize them. Go into that door over there so we can take your photograph for the license.” He pointed to a doorway off to the right. Harry and Peter went over to it.

“Why do I need a credit card and a driver’s license?”

“You need them for the time you’ll be living as a muggle next week, as well as any time in the future you need to hide.”

“Won’t that give me a paper trail that Dumbledore can follow?”

“Not this time, the hotel room is already reserved for you, under my wife’s name. I have some muggle and squib clients, so I have uses for muggle money and credit.” They entered the room and Harry was directed by a different goblin to stand against the wall. He gave a nervous smile as his picture was taken, and they were then told to have a seat, as the goblin brought out some forms for Harry to fill out. They called for an address.....an address?

“What address do I give? I don’t have a home.”

Harry shrugged, and finished filling out the forms, handing them back to the goblin.

“Where do we go now? Back to the Leaky Cauldron?”

“Not exactly. I have a portkey that will take us to the loo inside the bookstore where your Aunt is waiting. The Leaky Cauldron is liable to be crawling with Dumbledore’s people right now, unless he doesn’t know that you’ve been anywhere that you shouldn’t have.” However, Peter didn’t look hopeful that that would be the case.

After another few minutes of waiting, they left the room and went back to the counter that they started at. The goblin, who did not introduce himself, handed Harry an envelope.

“All the things you requested are in the envelope. I have been instructed by Fortrap, the manager of your account, to ask you when you might be ready to hear the reading of a certain will.”

“Tell him that any time he sets for next week will be fine, he can reach me at my solicitor’s address.”

“Very well, good luck young man.”

“Thank you.” They walked back into the photography room and used the portkey.

Thankfully there was no one in the loo when they got there, and that it was wide enough.

“Sit tight, I’ll go arrange things with your aunt.”

He reappeared a few minutes later.

“I put a disguising charm on her and sent her round back, where the car is parked. You go back there in five minutes and she’ll be ready to go.....and for Merlin’s sake don’t tell her about the money, we’ve come too far for them to flake on us now. We’ll see you tonight, and we’ll be ready.”

"Thanks Peter, I'll see you then."

Harry ran around to the back and climbed into the car.....a car that he now had a license, though not the knowledge of how, to drive. After an hour in the car, Peter's disguising charm dissolved and Petunia was back. Few words were exchanged, only an acknowledgement that everything had gone to Harry's satisfaction. When they pulled into the driveway, Harry stopped her from getting out of the car right away. He leaned over to her, put his hand over his mouth, and muttered quietly:

"Are you three going to be here for this tonight?" She mimicked his actions and replied.

"Yes, this is our home, we won't be driven from it."

"Just keep out of the line of fire." She nodded, and after Harry put on a different pair of glasses (ones that he had gotten on the sly two summers earlier) they got out of the car. It was now just shy of 1 pm.

Flashback to 8:30 am, in the middle of Dursley front lawn.

Hestia Jones, sitting in a lawn chair under a Disillusionment Charm, watched Petunia and Harry drive off. She did a scan of the house to make sure that no one was still inside. She then moved outside the anti-Apparition ward and popped off to tell Dumbledore, who ironically enough was at the Ministry, doing some Wizengamot business.

"Did they have any bags or anything with them? Harry's trunk perhaps?"

"No sir, the only bag being carried was Petunia's handbag. I checked the car last night, and it has about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a tank of petrol in it."

"Enough to make it to London and back at least."

"That's not the direction they were headed sir, the main road to London is northeast, and they made the turn in the opposite direction, toward the new mall in Little Whinging.” Dumbledore thought about this for a minute, but he wasn’t unduly worried.

“They may just be doing some food shopping.”

“There was one curious thing sir.”

“Yes Hestia?”

“Harry wasn’t wearing his glasses. He bumped into the car twice while trying to enter it.” Dumbledore looked rather relieved at hearing that.

“Well that should explain it then, he was going to get a new pair. It should take a couple of hours to get that accomplished. Be back at Privet Drive by 11 am Hestia. I have to be here the rest of the afternoon, I doubt I will be returning to Hogwarts before this evening. I’ll see you at Headquarters.”

“Yes sir.”

Back to present time:

Hestia revealed herself and approached them.

“You were gone quite awhile Harry, I was getting worried.” Harry kept himself as calm as possible, and reminded himself that he had four more hours before he could use his wand.....that said, there was nothing forcing him to respond, so he didn’t, he kept right on walking.

“Harry?”

“Get away from us freak, come no closer or I’ll call the police. I’m sure someone there knows about your filthy kind.” Harry just walked inside like there was no witch outside, followed by Petunia.

“You haven’t done that in awhile, must have felt good.” She gave him a tight lipped smile and disappeared into the kitchen to make some lunch.

At 4:55 pm Harry got the promised owl from Fudge, who wrote him that he filed the decree five minutes after Dumbledore left for the day. Harry was praying that Dumbledore wouldn't be going back to his Hogwarts office, which is where both he and Peter figured the hub for the tracking and listening charms were. As soon he got the owl he went upstairs and removed the tracking charms from his trunk and Hedwig's cage.

"Ok girl, go to the twins' shop and stay there for a few days, I'll either collect you there or they'll tell you where I am. I'm sorry Hedwig, there's no other way." She nipped his finger lightly, and flew out the window. He shrunk her cage and put it in his trunk, along with his clothes and other things (his books were already in there). He put the trunk by the door and went downstairs to watch television.....never letting his wand leave his hand the entire time.

Grimmauld Place, 6:30 pm

The bustle around Headquarters was loud as people moved in and out of the halls. If the portrait of Mrs. Black had still been hanging there she would have been shrieking like crazy. The problem of the portrait had been solved by Bill and his tomb raiding experience, he simply took out the wall around her. As she came off the wall she started screaming with a fervor that would have made a banshee proud, it had taken an all at once Reducto by Bill, Remus, Tonks, and Hestia to put her out of their misery. Kreacher had been sent off to Narcissa Malfoy after a massive memory wipe by Dumbledore, afterwards Kreacher knew his name and that he was to serve the House of Black, but that was about it. Snape strode through the house as if he owned it, looking for Dumbledore, sneering at those he passed by. The irritable Potions Master had returned from Halifax, Canada the day before from his conference. He ignored those who asked how it went and seemed to be in a worse mood than usual.

Remus noted that the house didn't seem quite as full as it could have been. Notably missing were Bill, Fred, George, and Charlie Weasley. Charlie had arrived that morning from Romania after an owl from Bill, ostensibly on a visit to his family, something he did a couple of times per year. He had immediately gone into a huddle with Bill, and then gone with him to work, not to return yet. Fred and George were at their shop presumably, since both Ron and Ginny were here, as well as both Molly and Arthur, and Hermione. Tonks and Kingsley were the only significant absences, they were on guard duty at Harry's house, they had volunteered for tonight, understanding that Snape would be there.

Remus followed Snape into the kitchen, where Dumbledore was talking with Molly Weasley.

"Yes Molly, Harry will be coming here for a visit tonight so he can have some quality time with his friends."

"Oh really, and how am I to get your golden boy back here Albus? Or have you taught the brat how to Apparate?"

Dumbledore answered that by taking out a portkey and giving it to Snape. "Just have him say Headquarters while he has hold of it, and it will take him here. I have another one ready for his return."

"How long am I expected to waste my time there?"

"An hour should suffice Severus, we don't want to overwhelm him the first time. Just review the basics and have him practice. The spell I gave you, Temparo Indulcli, will only disable the blood protection for one hour, then you must be gone from the house."

"Fine, just so you know I believe this is a complete waste of time, that idiot has no aptitude for this."

He made to leave and Remus called out for him to stop.

"Oh Snape, if Harry doesn't come back with you I'm immediately going to apparate over there to find out why.....and if you've had anything to do with it....." Remus trailed off, leaving the threat a bit more than merely implied.

Snape yawned, and left the room. Molly looked after him with a slightly fearful expression, she was aware of what he might do to Harry.

“Molly, Remus, everything will be fine, Harry will be here by 8:00pm and we can enjoy ourselves for a few hours. I’m sure Ron, Ginny, and Hermione are eager to see him.”

Remus and Molly nodded, though he wasn’t so sure about that. Ginny was eager to see Harry of course, though she had only recently been able to say a complete sentence in his presence. Ron and Hermione, Remus knew, were ready with some hard questions about what Harry had been doing, or not doing. Remus knew that Harry rarely appreciated being under the third degree, so he was grateful that no one would be able to use their wands.

Privet Drive 7:00 pm

Snape strode up to the door at Number 4 Privet Drive, and after he used Dumbledore’s spell, didn’t bother to ring the doorbell or knock on the door, he simply grabbed the knob and tried to turn it, only to find it had been locked. He didn’t turn a hair and took out his wand:

Alohomora

The door clicked open and Snape strode inside, seeing no one in the living room he yelled out:

“Potter, get your stupid Gryffindor self in here now!”

Meanwhile Dobby had apparated to the Department of Magical Law Enforcement, his instructions were to find the Auror on duty. After a polite, but hurried question, he was directed to the office of Senior Auror Travis Biller. Dobby introduced himself as Harry Potter’s elf (Biller’s eyes shot right up when he heard that) and gave Biller the note:

Dear Auror,

Please help me, I’m in trouble. There’s a wizard in my house, Severus Snape, he’s yelling at my nephew and threatening him with his wand, my husband and I are muggles and we can’t help him. Please hurry.

Petunia Dursley

Biller reacted immediately, after the fiasco last summer it was standing orders that anything to do with Harry Potter be acted on immediately. Biller ran out of his office:

“Graham, Westbrook front and center, we have a Potter emergency, MOVE!”

Rob Graham and Sarah Westbrook ran into the room and assembled in front of Biller and a very wide-eyed Dobby.

“Ok Dobby, are they still at the address in Surrey?”

“Yes sir Mr. Biller, the same house and everything.”

Biller grabbed a cricket bat that was clearly a Port-key and the other aurors grabbed on. He looked at Dobby, who nodded and popped back to Privet Drive, right at the front door. Biller activated the Port-key and the three Aurors disappeared.

One Minute earlier:

Winky did her task and popped out to the back hedge, there she saw Harry's allies: Peter Tyson, Neville Longbottom, Luna Lovegood, and George, Fred, Bill, and Charlie Weasley. She nodded fearfully, the expression on her face was all they needed and they silently ran up to the kitchen door, which was already ajar, done by Dudley at Harry's request. Fred and George led the way, and they all assembled in the kitchen, joining a clearly frightened Dursley family as they listened to Harry and Snape yell at each other. Fred and George were next to Dudley, and motioned to him that everything would be ok. Dudley looked around at seven very tense wizards, who all had their wands drawn, and decided that if he wasn't safe now he never would be. He looked at his parents and silently communicated that message to them, they nodded and looked less afraid (no they don't have ESP or telepathy, you can do a lot with facial expressions and body language). George stared hard at Dudley for a few seconds and seemed to come to a decision, he conjured a beater bat, and offered it to Dudley. Dudley took the bat without hesitation, this was his home, he wanted to defend it.

Back to the Living Room: One minute ago

Nothing happened after Snape's yell, he repeated it:

"Potter, in here NOW! Or I swear I'll deduct 200 points from Gryffindor the first day of classes."

This got a response out of Harry (not that he cared about points in the grand scheme of things), he walked downstairs, wand in his back pocket, right where Moody said not to put it, but stealth was more important here. He was really going to enjoy this.

"What are you doing here? I thought we told you that you weren't welcome in this house!"

"Do you honestly think that the Headmaster or I care about what you think Potter? So like your dead daddy, thinking that everyone should bow and scrape to your whims."

"Don't you dare talk about my father, he was 10 times the wizard you've ever been, Death Eater."

"Yet somehow I managed to be alive right now and he's rotting in a grave....a grave that you're not even allowed to visit."

It took every ounce of self control for Harry not to pull out his wand and yell out Avada Kedavra, he wasn't sure if it would work, his Cruciatus hadn't been very good, but it would shut Snape up at least. He concentrated on the fact that he needed Snape NOT to shut up, at least until the Aurors got here. He mentally counted the seconds, it must have been at least a minute, they should be here any second now.

"Be that as it may Snivellus, you are not welcome here, so told by the owners of this house. Leave now."

“As if I would stoop so low as to accept orders from muggle trash like your family, they must be scum if the same bloodline bore you!”

“Get Out!”

“The Headmaster has insisted that I waste your time by teaching you Occlumency Potter, if you had learned it last term your hound might still be licking his fleas.”

Snape really knew what buttons to push didn't he?

“I'll never let you teach me anything, if you call your incompetence 'teaching'”

“Sit down Potter and we will begin this.”

“Are you deaf? Get your oily head out of here!”

“If you do not sit down, I'll force you to Potter, it will give me great pleasure.”

Harry was roaring with laughter on the inside, this pensieve memory would be perfect for DMLE use, this couldn't have gone better if he'd written Snape's script for him.

“I'll never again do anything you say, if you think I'm going to let you into my mind you're crazy.”

“Very well, if you insist.” He raised his wand and shouted:

Petrificus Totalus

There was only one problem, Harry had dodged out of the way, and was standing four feet to the left of where he had been before. Snape looked furious, cursing that old fool Dumbledore for putting him through this torture. He decided to up the ante:

Stupefy

Harry ducked this time and did a roll on the floor, the spell making a large black mark on the living room wall. Snape took advantage of Harry being on the ground and fired again, just grazing his leg and sending him to the floor. Snape walked up to Harry, as the lad was quickly rubbing his now numb leg.

“And now I have you Potter, I’m so going to enjoy this.....I’ve been waiting for this moment for years.” He raised his wand:

Re-----

But he raised his wand just a bit too leisurely, Harry had spent a week practicing his quick draw technique, hoping for just such a moment, he let the hate flow through him and give him even faster reflexes:

EXPELLIARMUS!

Snape was just one meter away and was hit dead in the chest.....

WHAM!

Snape flew back three meters and crashed against the wall next to the kitchen door. Harry quickly leapt up and fired again:

PERCUSSIO!

The percussion hex hit Snape just where Harry intended, on his right shoulder.....the same side of his body as his wand arm.....not that he had his wand anymore, it was lying on the floor next to Harry, who hadn’t tried to catch it as it flew toward him. He had just two more spells to use:

Wrappendo!

Magical ropes flew out of his wand and wrapped themselves around Snape, binding him very tightly. Harry picked up the wand at his feet and snapped it in half.....and then walked over to Snape and stuck the pieces carefully up Snape’s nose. He then drew his wand and smiled large:

Rictusempra

Snape was only barely conscious, but started twitching anyway. Harry just stood there panting, and looked to the door, wondering where the Aurors were.....and speak of the devil.

The door burst open, and Travis Biller, Sarah Westbrook, and Rob Graham ran into the house. Biller didn't even look at what was going on before yelling.

"Ministry of Magic, I want everyone to put their wands on the floor.....Immediately!"

Harry put his wand slowly and carefully on the floor, the tip pointed at himself, and held his hands in the air in muggle fashion. Snape was still only semi-conscious on the floor and twitching. Biller looked around and saw Harry standing there, he easily noticed the mark on the wall and the one on the floor. He walked over to Snape and looked him over.....and did his professional best not to smile (it worked, but only barely).

"Harry, my name is Travis Biller, I'm the Senior Auror on duty tonight, we came as soon as we got your message. What happened here Harry? For Merlin's sake put your hands down."

Harry put his hands to his sides and tried to catch his breath. The 40 seconds he was dodging Snape's spells and firing back seemed like 10 minutes. He took a series of deep breaths as the three Aurors all stared at him.

"Snape came into my house, without knocking I might add since the door was locked, to supposedly give me Occlumency lessons. My family sent a note to him yesterday telling him very clearly that he was not welcome here, but he came in anyway. I repeatedly told him to leave, but he refused, and mocked the deaths of my father and godfather in the process. When I refused to sit down for his 'lessons' he started shooting spells at me, one Petrificus Totalus and two Stupefys if I remember correctly. I was busy dodging them so I might be wrong. He grazed me with the last stunner and let his guard down, that's when I responded. I used one disarming charm, one percussion hex, and the tickling charm that's on him right now.....I did that to try and distract him from any wandless magic that he might be capable of. You came in ten seconds after I used the tickling charm." Biller, Graham, and Westbrook just stood there in shock, and were not a little impressed. .

"Harry, I was under the impression that you are over a year away from your majority.....and I don't see any Ministry owls here. How is it that you used magic?"

"I was emancipated this afternoon, I have the document if you would like to see it, signed by the Minister."

"Yes please I would." Harry had the document (he had copied it a couple more times that afternoon) in the other back pocket of his jeans and he gave it to Biller, who quickly read it over, and recognized Fudge's signature.

"This looks legitimate, but we had better check anyway. Sarah, go back to the Ministry and make sure there was no underage magic warning alarms going off for this house. I don't see any of their owls in here, but make sure anyway."

Sarah nodded and walked outside to apparate to the Ministry.

"Don't get the idea that I don't believe you Harry, we just have to make sure." He then turned to Snape, Graham's wand had never left the now fully conscious Potions professor (the tickling charm had not been a powerfully cast one, and had largely worn off). Biller had always hated this man, the 35 year old former Gryffindor had been a target of Snape and his Slytherin cronies while he was at Hogwarts. Like everyone in the Auror Command he knew that Snape was a former Death Eater who had somehow regained Dumbledore's trust, and a job at Hogwarts. Biller had no children, the reason he was on duty tonight, and was glad that he would never have to send any of his progeny to a Hogwarts staffed by Snape. He pointed his wand at him, and was rewarded with a look of fear:

Finite Incantatem

The magical ropes disappeared, and though Snape could barely move his right side, he managed to bring himself up to a sitting position, as well as remove the wand pieces from his nose.

“Ok Snape, what do you have to say for yourself?”

“I am here by order of Headmaster Dumbledore to teach this fool Occlumency, I didn’t want to, but I did as I was instructed.” He even looked a bit smug at that, as if saying that would solve his problems.....he hadn’t fully heard the part about Harry saying he was legal now, and assumed that the Aurors were here to arrest Harry.

“And.....? That’s it? Dumbledore ordered you here, so you illegally entered a locked house that you were previously told you weren’t welcome in and then proceed to fire curses at a defenseless kid who didn’t have his wand out?”

“I am here under Headmaster Dumbledore’s orders. The brat wouldn’t sit down for his lesson so I attempted to force him to, and then he attacked me and snapped my wand, I’m pressing full charges.”

For his own part, Harry just stood there fascinated at this exchange, was this really Snape’s defense? Be arrogant and dismissive and count on the old man to rescue him? Sarah Westbrook entered the open door, she walked up to the group:

“Travis, no instances of underage magic have been reported for this house. The last magic performed here before tonight happened this afternoon, a series of spells by an adult wizard.” Harry raised a hand acknowledging that it was he who had used the spells.

“Thank you Sarah. Well Harry....” Biller took a minute to think....“Where are your relatives? Can they confirm this letter you sent?”

“Yes sir they can. Aunt Petunia, Uncle Vernon! Could you come out here please!” Biller handed back the paper and motioned to Harry that he could pick up his wand.....and Snape's eyes went as wide as dinner plates.

In the kitchen Peter motioned Petunia and Vernon to go to the living room, they were needed to put the final nail into the coffin of Severus Snape. They had listened the sound of spells hitting the floor and walls, but no cries from Harry and no words of triumph from Snape, so they knew Harry was getting out of the way. Fred and George had quickly handed out Extendable Ears, even the Dursleys used them once they were shown how. They heard Harry fire off his spells, and the snap of Snape's wand. They then heard Biller and his group come in the door and the discussion that followed.

Petunia and Vernon walked into the living room and immediately noticed the black marks on the wall and floor (they were so large it was hard to miss them), as well as the injured wizard on the floor. They looked at Harry, who was none the worse for wear, having caught his breath.

"Hello, I'm Vernon Dursley, this is my wife Petunia, Harry's Aunt." They shook hands all around (not Snape of course) and Biller introduced himself and his crew.

"Mr. Dursley, where were you when this was going on?"

"Umm.....well we were hiding Mr. Biller, we knew that that man was coming and we wanted to stay out of the way.....we're not wizards you know, we wouldn't know how to defend ourselves from him. Harry hasn't painted that nice a picture of the man.....as you can see. Harry wanted us to stay out of the fray, and we agreed."

"Harry said that you all sent a letter to Snape, telling him not to come here. Is this true?"

"Yes sir it is, though I think that the letter was addressed to Dumbledore as well as this man. We all signed it, even Dudley and Harry. We didn't want him here and we still don't."

"Was the door locked Mr. Dursley?"

“Yes Mr. Biller it was, we always lock our doors at night.”

“Mrs. Dursley, is there anything you would like to add?”

“No sir, its how my husband and nephew said.....we were listening at the door after you came in, and we know what he told you.”

Biller looked around at the people in the room, it was obvious as to what had happened, he just wanted a minute to consider how to do his next actions. This was going to be huge, the arrest of a Hogwarts professor for attacking Harry Potter. Unbeknownst to him and the others, Winky was hidden behind a window outside taking pictures with Peter’s camera, as she had since Snape had started firing spells.

He took the end piece of Snape’s wand and pointed his own at it:

Priori Incantatem!

The spells Snape used to attack Harry quickly came out, as well as the spell to open the door and the one to disable the Blood Protection.....which was all the Auror needed to see.

“Well it’s clear that the law was broken here, and its just as clear that you fired first Snape.....Mr. and Mrs. Dursley are you pressing a complaint against Snape here?”

“Yes sir we are, we want him prosecuted to the fullest extent of your law,” Vernon answered.

“Harry, what about you? Are you making a complaint at him for attacking you? You’re willing to testify against him at the Wizengamot?”

“Yes Mr. Biller I am, I want him in Azkaban for what he did. I’m not even safe in my own home.”

That was all Biller needed to hear, he turned to a still sneering Snape:

“Severus Snape you are under arrest for unlawful entry into a muggle residence and assault on a person who you believed was unable or not allowed to use magic. If convicted of both these charges you may receive 10 years in prison. Anything you'd like to say?"

"Are you crazy! There is no way that brat is legally an adult! I want him arrested now!"

"Harry Potter is now a legal adult Snape, he has the paperwork, and there are no owls to scold him or other Aurors here to arrest him. Do you have anything relevant you'd like to say?"

"Dumbledore will have me out of your control before the night is over, this is not the last of this."

"Not on my watch Snape. Harry, do you need any of us to stay here with you? Do you feel safe enough now that he's being taken away?" Harry didn't get a chance to answer that question, as the front door was opened by a wizard for the third time in less than fifteen minutes.

Flashback to the minutes previous:

Outside the Dursley home, Nymphadora Tonks and Kingsley Shacklebolt had watched all of this go down with a mounting sense of confusion. They saw Snape enter the house unbidden, and each of them sighed, as this was not the right start to the session. They knew about the letter to Dumbledore and Snape, demanding that Snape not come tonight.....and while both of them fully agreed with Harry (who they felt had put the muggles up to writing it), they knew that Dumbledore would do what he wanted, and that would be to dismiss it. They heard the insults and they crept closer to the house, and then they heard the breaking point: Snape's Petrificus Totalus. They were under orders from the old man not to intervene in the lesson, but this was beyond the pale:

"Ok Tonks, get back to Headquarters and tell Dumbledore what happened, get him over here, I'll make sure Snape doesn't actually harm the kid."

Tonks nodded and ran to the Apparation point, then disappeared, just getting out before a muggle car came into view.

Tonks burst into the front parlor of Grimmauld Place and screamed:

“Dumbledore!”

The entire house came streaming into the parlor, Molly in the lead, she grabbed Tonks:

“What happened, is Harry ok, what did that man do to him?”

Dumbledore came up to Tonks and much more calmly asked her what happened.

“Snape and Harry started yelling at each other as soon as Snape walked into the house.....and then he took out his wand and started firing curses at Harry.” There was a hushed silence as they waited for Dumbledore’s reaction.....well not everybody, Molly lost the tiny amount of composure that she had left (and she rarely had a lot to begin with lately):

“I told you not to send Snape in there, you knew something like this was going to happen eventually! I swear, if anything happens to Harry you will regret it for the rest of your short life!” Ron and Ginny froze immediately, their mother had just threatened to kill Dumbledore.

For reasons passing understanding, Dumbledore ignored Molly, and didn’t even take his wand out.

He closed his eyes and said a quiet prayer, fully expecting that he would soon find a dead body of some sort. Without opening his eyes, or even acknowledging what Molly had said, he spoke:

“Don’t say it Remus, yes you told us so. Let’s just get over there and fix this. Its obvious Harry panicked somehow and Severus took something he said the wrong way. Kids (he looked at Ginny, Ron, and Hermione), you come too, maybe you can talk to Harry better than we can.”

He summoned two brooms (ones for sweeping) from the closet and made them into port-keys. The 10 of them (Dumbledore, Remus, Hermione, four Weasleys, Hestia, Tonks, and Moody) grabbed on to the brooms and vanished at a command from Dumbledore.

Kingsley watched the battle inside unfold with an unreal sense that he was at some Quidditch match. He saw Snape down Harry.....and was amazed at Harry's quick draw response. He let out some laughs as Harry did his thing with Snape's wand.....and then he saw his Auror colleagues appear, and the subsequent conversation, all the while wondering if he should intervene at some point.....but he eventually decided to do nothing until Dumbledore got there, cursing them for taking so long.

They soon appeared outside Privet Drive, and Kingsley threw off his invisibility cloak to go meet them.

"Come with us Kingsley, let us see what has happened here." Dumbledore looked very tired at that moment Remus thought. He was privately ecstatic at the mess Snape had caused, and he was probably going to get himself arrested to boot. Dumbledore would have a hard time covering this up, whatever it was.

They filed up to the door and Dumbledore entered the unlocked door, he found Harry and the Dursleys talking to the Aurors,

End Flashback

Harry saw the robes and white beard and whipped out his wand, screaming out:

"Stay where you are! If you move one meter further into this house I will attack you! And I will fight to kill!"

The Order members and youngsters stood crowded in the doorway as they clearly heard what Harry said, but just as clearly could not believe their ears. Dumbledore saw the look of pure hatred on Harry's face and wisely decided not to move, but Harry hadn't said that he couldn't speak.

"Harry, put your wand down, you are underage and cannot use it." Harry saw the group behind the old man, but not all of the people who it consisted of, and said his next salvo loudly enough for them to hear:

“As of 5 pm today I am a legal adult, signed, sealed, and delivered. Your best friend attacked me and I took him down easier than I could any first year Hufflepuff.....don’t test me old man!” He took out his emancipation form and banished it right at Dumbledore, who took notice that the Aurors weren’t doing anything to stop Harry.....who noticed them as well.

“Mr. Biller, this man has come here to kidnap me, I formally request your protection and your help in removing him from this property, he is not welcome here, as you have heard in detail.” This was news to most of Dumbledore’s group, as he had not shared the existence of the ‘stay away Snape’ note with most of the Order.....all of whom were still processing Harry’s emancipation and the fact that he sounded like murdering Dumbledore was next on his to-do list.

Travis had no clue of what to do here, he had no love for the Headmaster, but the guy was the Head of the Wizengamot.....but laws were laws, and Dumbledore was not above them, and Harry could not have made his request with any less ambiguousness.

“Headmaster, a check of Snape’s former wand indicates that he did attack Harry first, using one Petrificus Totalus and two stunning spells, and I can confirm from his own statements that he was under the impression that Harry could not fire back.” Oh this was just wonderful, thought Dumbledore. He needed a moment to think though, and threw out a delaying question.

“His former wand?” Harry handled that one:

“I snapped it after I almost put him through the wall. You should teach your pets about overconfidence. I told you, I warned you: Don’t send him here! But you did, and look what happened. I’m pressing charges, maybe Snape can teach Potions via owl post from Azkaban.....I thought I told you not to move Dumbledore!” The old man had in fact moved, due largely to Molly and Remus pushing their ways forward. Molly got a look at the scene, and looked set to try to go to Harry (to embrace him, not to attack him), except for one small detail.....Harry hadn't lowered his wand an inch., it was still pointed at the doorway and those in it.

"I have had it with you people trying to run my life! Though it wouldn't be so bad if you hadn't all made such a botch of it! Leave!" Molly's mouth closed, and Remus just stood there looking sad.

"Harry, are you sure you know what you're doing?"

"I am Remus, I'm sorry that you couldn't have been there for me when I really needed you."

That was like a slap in the face to Remus, but he managed to respond in soft tones like before:

"Are you sure the water isn't over your head?"

"No Remus, the water is exactly at my head."

Remus turned and walked back to the door, and once outside the anti-apparition zone, popped away.

Finally Dumbledore couldn't take the silence anymore:

"So what has happened here Harry? Why was it necessary to attack Professor Snape, to have him arrested?"

Harry glared at Dumbledore, but said in a quiet (and very hate filled) tone of voice, "I told you he wasn't welcome here Professor. We (he motioned at his aunt and uncle) even wrote it down for you so there would be no doubt of our wishes. Snape knew about the note, so I know you got it."

"Professor Snape Harry. Yes, we did get your note. However your need to learn Occlumency is more important than your dislike for Professor Snape or your relatives disdain for our kind."

"I'll call him professor when he earns his title. I repeat, I don't want him here, they don't want him here. Period. I told him to leave and he attacked me. Surely even you can't overlook the curse marks you see. He thought I could not fire back, but he still attacked me. You have some kind of ridiculous trust in him, but I don't. Be grateful I didn't kill him.....and if I hadn't sent for the Aurors, I could easily have ended him.....and if they weren't here its not out of the question that I could have gotten the drop on you too, and who knows what might have happened." Dumbledore went visibly white at hearing that, and it took considerable self-control on his part not to draw his wand on his young charge.

"Harry, may I please come in and talk with you." The old man knew that this was beyond salvaging, at least for tonight, so he geared the rest of his performance to the people standing behind him.

"No you may not. I have no interest in hearing anything you have to say, and you've proven that you have just as little interest in listening to me, if past events are any indication. Leave now, I will not say it again."

"All right Harry, if you insist. I hope you will change your mind soon, it appears as though we have much to discuss."

"Says you, we're finished Dumbledore. Oh yeah, Ron? Hermione? I hope you like being a couple, it was so nice of you to tell me about it." Ron and Hermione were in the middle of the crowd behind Dumbledore, and in fact were not holding hands or showing any outward affection, they were still too stunned.....the more so because they wondered how Harry had known about them.

Biller took a deep breath, and turned to Graham and Westbrook.

"Rob, Sarah, please escort the Headmaster and his companions off the property (another deep breath).....if any of them resist, arrest them." Dumbledore and his people took the hint and backed out the door, all of them trying to get a last glimpse of Harry.....and then immediately wishing they hadn't, as his wand was still pointed at them.

The adults in the group all congregated in the Dursley driveway, but Ron, Ginny, and Hermione were still on the stoop. Ginny had motioned the other two to stop, and called out to Harry.

"Harry, what's wrong? Can we please talk with you?" Harry walked to the doorway, with Biller at his side. The hate had left his face, and he was looking very tired, his wand no longer directly pointed at them, but still not pointed downward.

"Not right now Ginny, I'm sorry. I hope you can understand eventually."

"Please let us help you."

"I wish you three hadn't have been caught in the middle of this, if the middle is truly where you are right now." Ron had rarely looked more insulted, while Hermione just looked troubled. Ginny remained their spokesperson:

"You've obviously been planning this for awhile Harry, why couldn't you trust us to tell us about it?"

There was enough anger still burning in Harry that part of him wanted to go into great detail about why he couldn't trust the three of them (as opposed to his crew, still hiding in the kitchen).....however, Harry knew that he was not out of the woods yet tonight, and didn't dare give the old man any insight into what might be coming next.

"That's a conversation for another time Ginny, now its time for you and the lovebirds to go back to Dumbledore's lair, where he can ask you some pointless questions about what I might be up to. If it means anything to you, I'm sorry it had to be like this." He turned and walked back into the house. The three kids, seeing as there was nothing else to be done, walked over to Dumbledore.....who had rather obviously been listening to the exchange. The only two people not grabbing on to the (regular) brooms were Tonks and Kingsley.

"Look Travis, we need to stay here to watch over the place, to make sure no Death Eaters decide to drop by."

“That’s acceptable, as long as you don’t set one toe on the Dursley property Kingsley, you heard what the kid said. However, if you really want to take him on, just walk back into the house, I’ll send word ahead to St. Mungos for you.”

“C’mon Travis, we’re trained Aurors, however much muggle torture experience Snape has had, taking him out is not the same as dealing with one of us.” Travis looked at Tonks with some exasperation.

“Tonks, the thing to remember about Harry Potter, and I say this having met the kid 15 minutes ago: No one in the world knows just what he is capable of magically. You and your little Order have obviously done something to piss him off, and I highly advise you not to provoke him right now. Our government is dealing with enough issues right now without the Boy Who Lived being involved in yet another duel against a government official meaning to do him harm. I am the ranking Auror on site, and I’m officially forbidding the two of you to enter that house or interact with him in any way unless he initiates contact with you first. I want to hear a verbal acknowledgement from both of you.”

An acknowledgement which they both reluctantly gave. Biller was the third ranking person in the DMLE, behind only Amelia Bones and Head Auror Rufus Scrimgeour, and Azkaban was full of Dark Wizards and Witches that he had put there. After Dumbledore’s group was gone, he went back into the House, passing Rob and Sarah, who were escorting Snape out the door. Travis ‘accidentally’ bumped Snape on his injured shoulder, and had a happy moment when the grease ball winced in pain.

“Harry, if you want some free advice, get lost. Dumbledore will probably be back here very soon.”

“Five more minutes Mr. Biller, and I’ll never see this house again. Thank for you everything tonight.”

“You’re welcome Harry, the DMLE will let you know about Snape’s trial, assume it will happen sometime early next week, it won’t be that complicated a trial. If Shacklebolt or Tonks come near you, send your House Elf to come get me again, and I’ll take care of them.” He said goodbye to the Dursleys, and walked back outside. The three Aurors made sure that Kingsley and Tonks were not on the Dursley property, and apparated away with Snape.

Harry ran into the kitchen and saw his friends waiting for him. The four Weasleys were all leaning against the kitchen counter, with Luna, Dudley, and Neville sitting at the table. Peter was coming in the back door, he had been doing a scan outside. Harry's grin could be seen in Bristol, it was that large.

"Did everyone hear the show?" The tension in the room had long been released once they realized that a battle wasn't going to be taking place, so there were some easy smiles. Peter walked over and patted Harry on the back. After politely asking Dudley to go wait with his parents, and throwing a Silencing Charm at the kitchen door:

"That was masterful Harry, you did everything just fine."

"Thank God the Aurors got here when they did, I guess there were some Order people outside, they must have tipped him."

"We were ready, just in case." Bill nodded at Peter's statement, and started to smile.

"I think it was much better that Dumbledore didn't know about us, it will be harder for him to predict things if he thinks it's just you calling the shots instead of a committee advising you."

"Anything that keeps him off balance is fine with me, and it only has to last a week.....but now I've got to get out of here, he'll be back any minute." Peter took a small book out of his pocket.

"This is a portkey that I got from.....well that I got from a reliable source that I do business with a lot. It will take you right to Room 214 of the Sheraton Hotel in London, the room that we have reserved for you. I sent an owl off today to Great Lakes, I should hear back from them sometime tomorrow or Sunday. All I told them is that I had a client who was interested in transferring from Hogwarts, and was under some security concerns.....which doesn't flat out tell them who it is, but narrows the list down considerably." Bill took over:

“Now ideally we would like two of us to go with him and stay there tonight. There is very little chance that the old man can track him there, but we can’t risk otherwise. Fred, George, it can’t be you. Once Dumbledore finds out that he’s not here, and moreover has taken all his things with him, your shop is probably the second place he’ll look, after The Burrow. Unfortunately Dumbledore knows where I live, so that will be a place they might look too, and I don’t dare deny him access, I don’t want to make them too suspicious.” Neville stood up.

“I’ll go, I kind of figured that we might be doing something like this, so Gran knows that I might not be coming home tonight.” Charlie cleared his throat too.

“I’ll be the other, we need the other person to be able to use their wand in a fight, and I’m pretty good with alarm and surveillance charms.” Peter handed Harry the book, and sent Dobby to collect Harry’s things, he would meet them there.

“Winky!” She popped in.

“Yes Peter sir, the pictures are all taken, I got a good look at all the spells being fired. I used five rolls of film sir.”

“Terrific, you come with me, we have a trip to make to the Daily Prophet, they don’t go to press for another two hours. The rest of you, head back home, we’ll meet in Harry’s hotel room tomorrow afternoon.”

Harry went up to all of them and hugged them in thanks, obviously enjoying Luna’s the most (and mildly chastising himself for letting Neville get there first). Soon all had left but Harry, Neville, Charlie, and the Dursleys. Charlie sat the muggles down on the living room sofa, one last thing needed to be done.

“Now I need all three of you to be very still for a moment. I need to remove the memories of a few things from your minds. This will not hurt one bit, and will throw Dumbledore off our trail, ok? I am very good at this kind of thing, so there is no need to worry.”

There were a lot of aspects to this business that all three of them wanted to forget, but they knew that Charlie wasn't going to go that far. Before the redhead could begin though, Harry walked in front of Vernon and Petunia and squatted down to face them.....for the last time.

"I know we've been sort of getting along the last few weeks, but that does not excuse the fact that you physically and verbally abused me for fourteen years, all over something that I had control over whatsoever. Right now you're more afraid of me than of Dumbledore, but that might change, you might be tempted to tell him things, give him insight into what I might be doing. Someday Voldemort might come by here, and want to know a few things.....Just know this Vernon, Petunia: I hate you both, I hate you just as much as I hate Dumbledore, for the childhood that I was never allowed to have. Do I need to remind you to forget about me? Because I will not forget, not for one second." Harry stood up and motioned Neville to go into the kitchen with him, while Charlie did his work.

"Harry, are you ok mate?"

"I'll be fine Neville, leaving this house forever will make a lot of things better."

"Is it forever, or are you coming back to settle with them?"

"No Neville, it's forever.....I won't give them the satisfaction of becoming like them." Charlie came into the kitchen at that point.

"It's done, let's get out of here." They took hold of the book, and at the command, disappeared. Tonks and Kingsley noticed fifteen minutes later that there were no wizards in the house.

Number 12 Grimmauld Place

8 pm

The Order members sat at the kitchen table and waited for Dumbledore to come into the room, he was currently in the living room having a heated argument with Amelia Bones, who had just found out about Snape's arrest from Biller, and was giving Dumbledore all kinds of flack for what had happened. The old man was all but begging her to release Snape to his custody, but she was having none of it. There were no Extendable Ears being used by those in the kitchen, just an open doorway and Dumbledore's own uncharacteristically loud voice.

He soon entered the room, and immediately focused on the three teenagers.

"Kids, I know from your conversation with Harry that you did not know that he was planning anything, but think back to his letters, to the train ride, was there an inkling?" Hermione had been doing nothing but thinking of this for the last 40 minutes.

"No sir, I can't recall anything, and I've been trying. Harry was distant in his letters, but I really just chalked that up to grief over Sirius. I assumed he would come around eventually, especially after seeing how wonderfully he did on his OWL's." Ron and Ginny agreed with this assessment as well. Remus had a hard question to ask, but one that needed to be:

"If Harry had let you in on his plans, would you have told us?" Ron looked very conflicted, but Ginny, then Hermione, found this easy to answer.

"No Remus, I don't think I would have."

"I agree with Ginny. I'm sorry, but I could never betray Harry, not even to you Headmaster. I would have tried to talk him out of it, but that's all. Ron?" Ron looked on the verge of tears, he was cursing himself for not making a bigger effort to stay behind, with or without the two girls.

"He's never really forgiven me for 4th year, that's where this is coming from. I guess I don't blame him really. I know this, whatever you try to do to stop him, I won't help you." Hermione and Ginny were in agreement with this as well. Remus continued to look sad, and ran his hands through his hair.

"I'm sorry Albus, but I'm with the kids on this one. I would not have betrayed him either. You left him alone for too long, both last year and this year, and that has allowed his resentment to fester.....and now its festered into hate."

"I was only trying to do what was best for him, to protect him." Arthur didn't like the idea of jumping on Dumbledore as well, but he felt the need to get his views on the record.

"But you didn't protect him Albus, not really. Harry is alive right now due to a combination of good genes, a ton of luck, and outstanding Quidditch reflexes.....nothing you have given to him or taught him. Right now you need to take a few steps back from Harry and see if the rest of us can fix this."

"There is nothing to fix Arthur, in a few days Harry will calm down and things will be back to normal. We'll figure out a way to keep him protected away from Privet Drive, something that I admit I should have taken more seriously before." Remus couldn't believe that Dumbledore had missed the point by such a wide margin.

"He doesn't want your protection Albus, you either give him too little when he's at school or too much when he's not."

"It's not about what Harry wants or is comfortable with Remus, we need to think about what is best for our society as a whole. And in reality he does not know what he wants. I will admit that we have not handled Harry as well as we probably could have, but nothing has happened that's irreversible." Remus was now on the verge of walking out of this room for good, if that's how far it had gone. There was one last thing to find out though.

"What are the details of the Prophecy Albus, how does it detail Harry's role?" Everyone in the room leaned forward to hear the answer, not that they thought it would be a straight one.

"That is between Harry and myself, you don't need to know the details."

“What a surprise, and yes we do need to know the details. The loyalties of the people in this room are beyond question (these are the same people who comprised Dumbledore’s group at Privet Drive, minus Tonks and Kingsley), and everyone of us risked their lives to safeguard what it contained. Add that to the likelihood that whatever you told Harry about it probably put him on the path he’s traveling now. We need to square things with Harry Albus, and I mean right now.....and we need all the information we can to make that happen. We know he’s the final weapon, it would be helpful to know how.”

“You’re betting all of our lives on that, you realize this don’t you?”

“I’m right Remus, you have to trust me on this.” There was a note of finality to the old man’s voice that the werewolf knew all too well. He threw up his hands (literally) and went quiet. Dumbledore stood up and made to leave.

“I’m going to return to Hogwarts now and see if our tracking charms will give us any clues, though I’m sure Harry removed them. I will see you all tomorrow, good night.” With a sweep of his robes, he left the kitchen. They could hear the floo fire and he was gone. Hestia and Moody said their goodnights as well, leaving the kids with Remus, Molly, and Arthur. Remus went to the living room and looked around. He didn’t find what he was looking for and returned to the kitchen, whispering in Arthur’s ear. They took out their wands and in unison, cried out:

Accio Albus Dumbledore!

But nothing happened, the old man was truly gone from the house.

“Molly, if you would please, go get to the floo and get the twins, if anyone in the Order knew what was going on with Harry before tonight, it’s them.” She left the room.

"You think they helped him? What would they know about the emancipation process?"

"Moral support Hermione, no matter how he seemed tonight, Harry had to trust someone with his plans. The three of you have various marks against you with Harry: Ron's jealousy, Ginny's crush, and your idolization of Dumbledore Hermione. The twins have no such marks, and the shop situation makes them even more loyal to him. Plus, they are the most devious good people I know of, and they would be an asset to him for that fact alone."

"Do you think he just walked into Fudge's office and said 'hey, let me be an adult.'?"

"He could have done exactly that Ron, and I doubt Fudge wasted five seconds thinking about it before signing on the dotted line. He had to have known it would tie Albus into a knot." They mulled this over for a few minutes until Molly returned with Fred and George. Arthur stared hard at his twin sons, the more he thought about it, the more convinced he became that Remus' theory was correct.

"All right you two, what do you know and when did you know it?" Fred and George just stood there, and Fred shrugged.

"Know what Dad?"

"Don't play with us guys, this is important. What is Harry up to? We need to know." The twins looked at each other for a moment, they had known all along that this was coming, and what they were about to say had been okayed by Harry and Bill.

"Maybe you do, but that's not our call to make. Your problem, and we agree that you do have one, is with Harry, and you need to wait until he's ready to talk with you.....if he ever is."

"Is it that far gone, he hates us that much?" George sighed, and Fred started pacing as he answered.

"He doesn't hate you lot Dad, for Merlin's sake, he loves all of you.....he just doesn't trust you as far as he can throw you, and I don't see anything that will change that. The mere fact that you're sitting here in this room right now is proof of that. He sees you as Dumbledore's people, and we can certainly acknowledge that he hates Dumbledore. From his vantage point, the only difference between you and the Death Eaters is that you won't torture him and they will."

"I agree with George folks, you would have to kill Dumbledore in front of Harry to make this right."

"Yet he trusts you two."

"Yes he does, and we've said as much as we can and still keep that trust. We knew what was going down tonight, yes, but we know very little of what's coming next.....just in case Dumbledore decides to do some Legilimancy on us. I'll tell you a couple of things: One, Harry is not going Dark; and two: You can't stop what's coming next, so don't even try." Molly tried next, but was taken aback at how serious both of her sons sounded.

"Fred, George, we're your parents, you need to tell us what is going on."

"I'm sorry Mum, but no we don't need to do that. You love Harry like a son, he knows that.....but you're here in this kitchen, doing Dumbledore's bidding." Hermione had been surprisingly quiet, but had a question.

"Do you know the Prophecy?" They were prepared for this as well.

"No we don't, and we don't want to know. Harry volunteered to tell us, but we wouldn't have it. Some things need to remain a secret." This was the most serious lie the twins had ever told their parents, but their word was their word.

"He's not returning to Hogwarts, is he?" George let out a sigh, and Fred had a faint smile on his face as he answered:

"Put yourself in his position Remus, put yourself in his life.....would you go back there?"

“Now we’ve said all we’re going to say on the subject of Harry to you lot. The best thing you can do for him is to leave him alone and not interfere.”

“I can’t believe you won’t help your own parents.”

“We’re choosing the right path, not the easy one Mum. George and I have watched fate, Voldemort, and Dumbledore mistreat Harry time and time again over the last five years.....it stops now. Goodnight all.” The twins walked to the front door and exited that way. Remus got up and began making some more tea (he preferred doing it the muggle way).

“I think we’ve been put in our place, and I’m not sure that those two aren’t correct.”

“What can we do now? Do we keep helping Dumbledore? Will he let us be neutral in this?” Ginny looked sad and confused, she worshiped the twins and found their new found gravity to be very confusing. Hermione got up to help with the tea.

“I think we should just wait until Snape’s trial, and do nothing until then. By then Harry will have cooled down some, and Professor Dumbledore may be willing to negotiate with him.”

“Will Harry listen to him though?”

“I don’t know Ron.....I don’t know if we really understand Harry anymore. He’s had burdens and pressures that we have never fully grasped, and we know him better than anyone. I think hearing the Prophecy might have made him finally start to crack.” Ginny started to cry at hearing that, and Ron and Hermione weren’t far behind her. This had been an incredibly stressful evening for all six of them, and Molly herded the kids off to bed, While she was upstairs, Remus poured some fire whiskey in his and Arthur’s teacups.

“Do you think he’ll go back to Hogwarts Remus?”

"No I don't Arthur, he'll either go abroad or disappear into the muggle world. I have a good idea of what James and Lily left him, and what Sirius is going to leave him, he can afford to do it if he wants to."

"Will he get this house too? It would be interesting to see if he kicks Albus out of it."

"A nice thought, but it's not going to be that simple. From what Padfoot hinted to me, I'm probably going to get the house.....so I'm the one who will have to make that decision."

"I have to wonder if it's just the twins on his side, he would have needed more help than those two, however devious they are."

"I'm sorry Arthur, but we have to assume that Bill is helping Harry as well, and with Charlie visiting....." he trailed off, the implications being clear to both of them. Both of them, and one can assume Molly as well, had been wondering about Bill ever since his non-appearance at Privet Drive.

"Bill will protect him Remus, better than any of us ever could it seems."

"The look of betrayal on Harry's face when he saw me, I don't know how I can ever face Lily and James when I get to the afterlife. He thinks I chose Dumbledore over him, and I can see how he would."

"What do we do about Dumbledore? Do you think there's anything that will mollify Harry, short of killing the old man like the twins said?"

"No Arthur, I don't think that there is. We just have to let this play out and see what Harry does. Like it or not, we're spectators here."

The main headline of the Daily Prophet said it all:

Hogwarts Professor Attacks Boy Who Lived! Snape Arrested!

Two of the juiciest photos were on the front page, and fifteen more of Winky's masterpieces were inside, as Peter's hand-fed story to Daily Prophet cub reporter (and Harry's former Quidditch teammate) Alicia Spinnet (the scoop given to her at Harry's request), detailed every second of Snape's attack, Harry's defense, and the subsequent arrest. Detailed histories of Snape and Harry were given, as well as over a dozen anecdotes of their incidents, helpfully provided by Seamus Finnegan, Dean Thomas, Parvati Patil, and Lavender Brown, who had been contacted on Peter's advice (the only ones really who would have cooperated, besides Neville).

Every issue was sold within minutes, as Prophet Managing Editor Augustus McRae called in a favor at the Wizarding Wireless Network and had their on-air personality Harry Turtledove talk about the article on the air. The presses ran again, and over five hundred copies were printed and immediately sold.

The response was swift and staggering: Over three hundred Howlers were sent to Dumbledore's office in the first hour, with two hundred more arriving by noon, with a few dozen more spread amongst the Hogwarts teachers (even Binns got a few).....not a one of whom liked Severus Snape in the slightest, nor had they ever (and Flitwick, McGonagall, Vector, Binns, and Sprout had known him since he was 11 years old). The Howlers all detailed disgust in allowing Snape near Harry without supervision, and many helpfully included past incidents involving Snape being horrible to somebody. Hogwarts castle was not a quiet place this day, and trickles of Howlers were still coming over three weeks later.

The newspaper article mentioned Harry's emancipation prominently, and it was heavily implied that Harry had been expecting an attack of some sort, but certainly not from one of his teachers, even one who he had never gotten along with. Peter promised the Prophet an interview with Harry in the coming week, to be shared with The Quibbler.....as long as The Daily Prophet's coverage was satisfactory to Harry, Peter reminded them of the hatchet jobs they had run on Harry in the past, they had some proving to do.....but he assured them that Harry was willing to let bygones be bygones. One last condition was that Peter's name never appear in any article concerning Harry, a condition that was readily granted. He could almost see McRae drooling over the thought of covering a Snape trial with Harry as the prime witness, with Harry talking to the Prophet afterward.

For his own part, Harry had been enjoying some relaxation time. He, Neville, and Charlie had availed themselves of room service at the hotel, and then they had spent a few enjoyable hours watching television and teaching Dobby (and Winky once she got there) how to play poker. Dobby couldn't bluff to save his life, but knew the ins and outs of knowing when to hold them and when to fold them, knowing when to walk away, and when to run.....and he wound up doing the best of the five in the end.

Peter got there around 3 pm, and he had copies of the Daily Prophet for each of them.

"I just stopped by the DMLE, and Snape's trial has been set for Tuesday, at 10 am. I ostensibly was there for business for another client, but the whole place was buzzing about the news, my eavesdropping skills didn't get much of a workout."

"When will I find out officially?"

"Good question. I owled Fudge this morning and asked him to instruct the DMLE to send all notices to you in care of the twins. They had a pointed talk with their parents and Remus last night, so its known that they're in your corner."

"Are they in trouble with them?"

"I'm not entirely sure that they care at this point, but Fred said that no yelling occurred. Charlie, your parents didn't admit to sussing out you and Bill, but they're not stupid, they'll have to be wondering why the two of you weren't anywhere in sight last night."

"I can handle Mum and Dad, don't worry Harry. This isn't Percy redux, they'll understand that."

"I hope so Charlie, I don't want you four sacrificing anything for me. Any word from Great Lakes Peter?"

"That's my other piece of news, I got an owl response from Joanne Murray, the Headmistress there. It turns out she's in Ireland right now doing some traveling, muggle style, so the owl didn't have to go across the Atlantic. She has to go back to Michigan tomorrow, but we've set up a floo appointment where we can talk, at 8 pm this evening."

"Okay, are we going to do this in your office then?"

"WE aren't going to be doing anything quite yet Harry, your name has to be kept out of this, just in case. I'll talk to her and explain the situation, I'm sorry Harry, but if you go there, you'll have to do it blind."

"Fair enough, I can handle that. What should I do in the meantime?"

"Exactly what you've been doing, relaxing and doing nothing. Heck, go for a walk, go out to dinner tonight if you want to, see a movie. Just don't go anywhere near Diagon Alley or the Ministry (Harry's hotel is roughly seven kilometers from Diagon Alley), and use your wand only if you absolutely must. The twins are going to be your backup tonight, and Luna and I will take over tomorrow afternoon."

"That should be interesting, trolling the London nightlife with Fred and George."

"Just don't get anyone pregnant. One last thing, I sent an owl to your Gringott's account manager, requesting that the Black will be read Tuesday morning at 9 am, and I got a return message indicating that the time was fine with him. He will notify Remus and Tonks of the time."

"That's close to the trial time, what if those two try something?"

"The goblins will be all the protection you need, the most powerful anti-apparition wards in Great Britain are in that bank, and make sure that neither of them touch you, we don't want them activating any portkeys. I personally don't think Remus will try to kidnap you, but Tonks is a wild card and we have to be careful."

"It's too bad really, I like her. Now you're not going to be there, right?"

"I will be if you want me to be, I'll be in the courtroom in any case, so my involvement may well be unmasked there."

"Well let's take a chance on that Peter, let's see if we can keep you my secret weapon.....oh yeah, how will I get to Gringott's? Do I dare use The Leaky Cauldron?"

"That won't be necessary. Tomorrow when I come by I'll have a portkey ready for you that will take you to the twins' shop, and you can floo from there."

"You have everything planned out.....I'll always be grateful to your grandmother Neville, she made a very wise choice the day she hired Peter here."

"I'll tell her you said that Harry, you can always count on our family."

"Okay, I'll be off then. Fred and George will be here by six or so, they'll have Lee close the shop down for them. If there's a problem, just have Dobby go get the Aurors." After a round of goodbyes, he popped off to his office. It was a slow day at the shop, so the twins arrived early. Charlie and Neville stuck around though, and the five of them had a fun time dining out and then playing some snooker at a pub that the twins seemed to know rather well. This was Harry's and Neville's first ever night out in London, and the group didn't get back until the wee hours of Sunday morning.

1:00 pm

Peter and Luna appeared via portkey in Harry's hotel room, only to find their five friends still sleeping (George and Fred had somehow managed to set up hammocks in the middle of the room). Peter was contemplating how to wake them up when Luna simply went over to Neville and stuck her wand up his nose.

“AHHH!” Neville’s cry woke the other four up, as Luna smiled benignly at her boyfriend.

“Good afternoon boys, time to rise and shine.” After a few ‘what the heck is going on here’ comments, the guys did get up.

“Get some clothes on you lot, we’ll go out for some lunch after I give you some news.”

“How did the meeting with Murray go?” Peter didn’t answer immediately, but instead fished in his pocket for a moment, pulling out a small envelope.

“The meeting could not have gone better Harry, and afterward she sent me this for you. Read it, and we’ll talk.” Harry opened the plain white envelope, and found a single sheet of paper with the crest of The Great Lakes Magic Institute. It was dated yesterday.

Dear Mr. Potter,

I hope your day finds you well. After my meeting with your representative on Saturday, July 28th, I am pleased to offer you a place in our junior class at Great Lakes, the junior year being our equivalent to your sixth year. Mr. Tyson is sending us copies of your grades and test results, but based on his verbal description, you should be eligible for most, if not all, the of the junior year classes.

We are located in the middle of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, and the nearest international airport to us is located in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. After you book your flight, let us know when it arrives and you will be met by either me or my Deputy Headmaster. Mr. Tyson said that time was a factor, so if you need to do so, we can provide a place to stay for you for the remainder of the summer. Mr. Potter, I will personally guarantee your safety from Albus Dumbledore, you have my word on that.

I look forward to your return owl, and to you attending our school,

Joanne K. Murray

Headmistress

"That must have been some meeting, to elicit this so quickly."

"We talked for about fifteen minutes, it was a surprisingly good connection really, floo connections between England and Ireland aren't the greatest. I filled her in on the pertinent details, and she was fully on board right from the go."

"And you're dead positive that she won't turn me back over to the old man?"

"I am Harry, she will protect you from him. Word will soon get out about you being there, certainly once school starts there. She'll make sure nothing happens. I found out why she and Dumbledore don't get along, and you're going to love it:"

"What?"

"The year before Fred and George here started at Hogwarts, Joanne Murray was the Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher at Hogwarts." A collective:

"WHAT!"

Sounded in the room. Peter let the dumbstruck looks fade from their faces before he continued.

"She was part of an year-long exchange program, two Americans came over here, and Flitwick and McDowell went over there. She and Dumbledore clashed from jump, it continued for the entire school year, and she left Hogwarts with a much greater appreciation of her own school, something she used when she took over as Headmistress four years ago."

"Oh my God."

"I talked to two students who had her for NEWT work, as well as your old friend Oliver Wood, and they all confirm that there was considerable friction between her and the old man. Oliver was in his second year and even he picked up on it. They all raved about her as a teacher though, and Great Lakes' Defense program is rated as the best in North America. They had no trouble attracting one of the top American Aurors to replace Murray after she was promoted."

Harry didn't say anything right away, he went over to his trunk and rooted in it for a quill and some parchment. He quickly scribbled on it, and handed it to Peter:

Dear Madam Murray,

I am very grateful that you have offered me a place in your school, and your protection from Albus Dumbledore. I accept both of them, and will do my level best to make sure you don't regret your offers.

I have a few things to wrap up here in England this week, but I will schedule my plane flight to the United States to take place as soon as possible. I will let you know the details of my travel as soon as I know them myself.

Your soon to be student,

Harry Potter

"It looks good, I'll send it off with one of my owls tomorrow. We'll save your owl for the flight information. Now I'm guessing it's way too much to hope for that you already have a passport?"

"A bit too much, yeah. Until Hogwarts I'd never been out of England, let alone the country."

"We'll do that tomorrow. You can get them the same day if you're willing to wait all day at the right office. I've already cleared my schedule and we'll go over tomorrow morning, first thing. Once we get that taken care of, we'll book your flight to Wisconsin. It will be pretty expensive, but well within the limit of your credit card.....or did you already exceed the limit?" A nice laugh was had out of that.

"I never touched it last night, I used cash for the meal and for the rest. I'd actually like kind of a quiet day today if you guys don't mind."

“That’s what I had in mind. Twins, Charlie, get back home, and make sure that you check yourselves for tracking charms after come into contact with any Order members.” Soon after, the Weasleys left, with Neville and Luna sticking around so that they could spend some time together. It was a quiet night, with everyone resting before the storms to come on Tuesday.

Gringotts Bank

9 am

Monday had been a dry day for Harry, he spent all day at the passport office, but left there in the late afternoon, passport in his pocket. Peter had phoned the airport and booked Harry on a Thursday morning flight out of Heathrow, destination Milwaukee. On a somewhat surprising note, Dumbledore had been very quiet since Friday night, he had spent all day Monday sequestered in his office at Hogwarts, doing who knows what, but not contacting Grimmauld Place at all during the day and night. Harry wondered if he was going to try and get Snape off on a plea bargain or some other kind of technicality, but Fudge had assured Peter on Saturday that while the Ministry was not opposed to a plea bargain, there would not be an approved one without prison time for Snape being attached to it.

Hermione, Ginny, and Ron all tried to send owls to Harry, but each of them was returned to sender, indicating to all of them that Harry was hiding in the muggle world (post owls would not deliver to the muggle world as a rule, Harry’s Hogwarts’ envelopes got through to Privet Drive because the Dursleys were aware of the magical world). They came up with an alternative plan though, one that took Harry’s group by relative surprise.

Ten minutes before, Harry popped into WWW only to find five people waiting for him instead of two. Fred and George were in the middle of an argument with their siblings and Hermione. Harry immediately drew his wand.

“Don’t get any ideas you three.”

“Sorry mate, they got here just a couple of minutes ago.”

“Harry, we just want to talk with you, and I swear we’re not here on anyone’s orders or request.”

“Not good enough Hermione, I’m sorry, I have an appointment in ten minutes.....as I’m sure Remus told you.” Ron took a step forward, undeterred by Harry’s wand pointed at him.

“I swear Harry, we’re not here to set you up in any way, and Remus wouldn’t have it even if we were. We just want to understand what you’re doing, and why. I promise Harry, whatever you tell us, we won’t try to stop you.”

“The problem Ron, is that whatever I tell you, Dumbledore will sift it out of your heads in less than 30 seconds! I want nothing more than to trust you three, really I do.....but I don’t dare. Once everything is done the way I need it to be, I’ll spill it all, but until then, it’s better for me if you’re left in the dark.....oh boy.....twins, did you check them for tracking charms?”

Fred and George swore to themselves and started waving their wands over the three teenagers. Harry did the same and they found multiple tracking and surveillance charms on all three of them.

“Bugger, he could be here any second. Fred, fire the floo!” Fred was standing nearest and threw some powder in it, just as Dumbledore and Moody came through the front door of the shop (which was technically open for business, even though there were no customers).

“Harry, we need to talk.” The boy himself responded by sprinting toward the floo at full speed, even as Dumbledore and Moody both shouted out:

Accio Harry Potter!

They fired directly at him, but the twins stood in the way of the spells and they disappeared. Harry made it to the fireplace, hopped in, and yelled out “Gringotts Bank!” And then he was gone. The three kids hadn’t even gotten the chance to wish him a Happy Birthday. The two men looked darkly at the twins.

“Why did you do that? I know you must have some sympathy for Harry, but that was very foolish what you did.”

“Leave our store Dumbledore, now.....and you had better pray that we don’t report you two to the Ministry for kidnapping.”

“We had no intention of removing him from the premises.”

“Sure, and Fudge is about to be crowned the King of England.” Dumbledore couldn’t believe this, getting flack from these two of all people.

“You two should consider yourselves suspended from The Order, your loyalty is now in question.”

“If we say that’s fine with us, will that get you out of our store any faster?” The two older men left in disgust, and the twins rounded on the others.

“You three had better have good explanations for those charms, or you will be very sorry.” Ginny had finally had enough:

“Who the hell do you people think you are, how many times are we going to have our loyalty questioned? All we are doing is trying to find out what’s going on here, but you and Harry are treating us like traitors!” Fred walked up to her, not intimidated in the least.

“Keep shouting at us Ginny, and you’ll find out what George and I are capable of. Now in case it has escaped your attention little sister, Harry and Dumbledore are having a series of disagreements, and we are fully and completely on Harry’s side in this, and all other matters.”

“He’s right you three, and so was Harry, anything you get told is the same as telling Dumbledore as long as you’re staying at Headquarters. Harry cares about you three very much, but that cannot be a factor right now. Sorry, but for this match, you’re not in the starting lineup. Now Ginny, it’s your day to work here, Lee has a list of things for you to do in the back. Lovebirds.....do whatever you need to do to keep out of our hair for the rest of the day.” Ron and Hermione left, going to parts unknown. Ginny, rather sullenly, went back to help Lee. The twins just hoped there wouldn’t be a battle at the bank or the trial.

Fortrap’s Office, Gringotts Bank

9 am

A somewhat shaken Harry entered his manager’s office, the last to arrive of the beneficiaries.

“Oh nothing sir, Dumbledore and Moody just tried to abduct me, that’s all. You must be Fortrap, pleased to meet you sir.”

“The pleasure is mine Mr. Potter, and I’m relieved to note that your erstwhile Headmaster has failed to take you.....again.” Remus and Tonks, for their parts, didn’t look especially surprised at the news, but neither looked happy. Tonks spoke first:

“I’m sorry for that Harry, Dumbledore was with me when the owl arrived from Fortrap here, I left the note laying on the table, he must have read it. I did not give you up.”

“Nor did I Harry, though I knew the kids were going to try to talk with you, they asked me to help set up a meeting and I thought that you would likely come into Diagon Alley through the twins’ shop. He must have found out somehow and planted some tracking charms on them. Happy Birthday by the way.” He reached out his hand to Harry’s shoulder, only to be confronted with Harry’s quick draw as the lad flinched away.

“So that’s how you took Snape eh? Travis has been doing some bragging on you at Auror Command, that was pretty fast.”

“I don’t have any hidden portkeys on me Harry, I’m here for Sirius, no more, no less.” He proceeded to give his wand to Fortrap, and Tonks took the hint and did likewise. Harry refused to mimic the gesture however, but did put his wand back in his pocket.

“Sorry Tonks, Remus, it’s just so much easier not to trust anyone at the moment. I promise you that I will not fire first either way.” That had to be good enough for the two adults, and they both looked to the goblin, who appeared to have a bemused expression on his face.

“I’m glad that is settled, as much as it can be anyway. Now onto the will: I need Harry Potter, Remus Lupin, and Nymphadora Tonks to swear a written wizard’s oath that you are who you say you are.”

The three did this, presumably to counter anyone who might be using Polyjuice Potion. Nothing untoward happened, so Fortrap brought out one sheet of parchment and began reading:

This is the Last Will and Testament of Sirius Black, heir of the House of Black. I testify on this date of May 31st, 1996 that I am of sound mental and physical health and I am under no undue influence at all as I make these bequests.

Remus, Tonks, Harry.....I know you would rather have me back alive than get what I’m giving you here, but the sad fact remains that I’m gone. I hope I had a good death, and didn’t get run over by some idiot muggle car or something inane like that, but these events can’t be chosen, they choose us. Please don’t mourn me too much, but smile when you think of something funny I did or said, and know that I’m in a better place. I love you all, and remember that you being in my life made it so much better.

To Nymphadora Tonks (oh I love writing your first name Tonks, stop squirming) I leave the sum of one million galleons. Have fun with it girl, quit working for that idiot Fudge if you have a mind to, the world is your oyster.

To Remus Lupin I leave the sum of one million galleons and the deed to Number 12 Grimmauld Place. Let Dumbledore keep using it for the Order if you like Remus, or kick him out, I don't care. Unfortunately Kreacher comes with the house, make sure his end is fitting ok?

To Harry Potter I leave the rest of my money, which as of today is 1.23 million galleons, and the deed to a small island in the south Caribbean Sea. Remember that tropical bird that delivered those letters to you Harry? That's where it came from, I had a good time hiding there, I should have thought of it years earlier. I also bequeath to you every single book in the library of Number 12 Grimmauld Place, you need them more than Remus does, Merlin knows.

One condition though: In order for Remus and Nymphadora access their gifts, they must swear both a written and a verbal wizard's oath to support Harry Potter against anyone he considers to be his enemy, which is including, but not limited to: the idiot who calls himself Lord Voldemort, and Albus Dumbledore, if Harry should find himself at odds with him. If either of them should refuse to honor this condition, their share of the money shall revert to Harry.

Please look out for and care for each other, you are my family and I miss you as much as I hope you miss me. Good luck.

Sirius Black

Harry's face was expressionless as he tried as hard as he could to hold it inside him. He was more than grateful that the will had not been a recording of some sort from Sirius, he knew he would have broken down at that. Remus didn't bother holding it in as tears streamed down his face, but he remained quiet as he gripped the arms of his chair. Tonks was smiling, she was taking Sirius' message to heart and remembering him very fondly. The fact that she was rich hadn't penetrated yet.

“Mr. Lupin, Ms. Tonks, I believe you have an oath to swear to. Mr. Black made it clear in his testimony what he wanted, and you need to decide.”

“I, Remus Lupin, do swear a wizard’s oath to support Harry Potter against anyone he considers to be his enemy, and I mean anyone.”

“I, Nymphadora Tonks, swear my wizard’s oath to support Harry Potter against all those he considers to be his enemy.”

“Good, now if you two will sign these documents, you become eligible for your gifts.” Both of them signed the parchments where indicated.

“Excellent, your gifts will be transferred to your vaults by lunchtime today.”

“Harry, have we sufficiently proven ourselves just now? There’s no way we can break our oaths.”

“I’ll tell you what I told Ron, Ginny, and Hermione: Whatever I tell you, you can’t protect that information from Dumbledore if he really wants it.”

“Are you leaving Hogwarts?”

“I’ll tell you that much, yes I am. The plans are in place and there’s nothing anyone can do to change my mind. I will not set foot in that castle as long as the current leadership is in place.”

“Where are you going? To another magic school? To live as a muggle?”

“Sorry Tonks, that would give away too much. I’m going somewhere where no one attempted to murder a student last year, know that much.”

“I guess we’ll have to be satisfied with that. Once you get where you’re going, please try to find a way to keep in touch Harry.”

"I will Remus, now if you folks will excuse me, I have a Potions teacher to put in prison for a few years."

"We know, we're going too. Go ahead and floo over to the Ministry first, we'll come in a few minutes." Harry nodded, and turned to Forttrap.

"Thank you sir, I appreciate your help."

"You're welcome Mr. Potter, good luck at the trial this morning." Harry shook his hand (and still refused to come into physical contact with Remus or Tonks) and left the office. Tonks and Remus followed him a few moments later. By the time they got to the courtroom it was almost full, half an hour before the trial.

10 am

Fudge strode into the courtroom with as much dignity as his short and pudgy frame would allow him. The Harry/Snape mess had reflected pretty well on him, because of his decision to emancipate Harry, and a tiny bit of his swagger was back. He looked over the crowded room and saw that the Wizengamot was fully assembled. He spied Peter Tyson in the audience, as well as Bill Weasley.....though the two were not sitting together, Bill was sitting with Ron, Hermione, and Ginny, along with his parents. Fudge assumed his place on the dais, and Percy quickly joined him.

"Let's get this started shall we? Bring in the defendant!"

Two Aurors led Snape into the courtroom, and he was placed in the chair. Chains did not wrap around Snape, this not being a capital crime.

"This is the case of the People versus Severus Snape. The defendant is charged with unlawful entry and assault on a minor thought to be unable use magic. I am Cornelius Fudge, Minister of Magic presiding. Amelia Bones will represent the Department of Magical Law Enforcement. The defendant has chosen to represent himself. Severus Snape, how do you plead to these charges?"

Snape rose, and with a significant look at Dumbledore, spoke:

"I plead not guilty to both charges."

"Very well, Madam Bones, please call your first witness."

"The DMLE calls Harry Potter to the stand." Harry walked to the witness chair and took his place there.

"Please state your name and occupation for the record."

"Harry Potter, I'm a student." Snape shared another look at Dumbledore and rose from his chair.

"At this point I would request that Mr. Potter here be administered Veritaserum, as my history with Mr. Potter is well known as a bad one, and everyone here knows it, thanks to the Daily Prophet."

"Mr. Potter, do you have any objections?"

"Yes I do, I do not see this as being warranted under the circumstances. This is not a capital case, and I do not want the defendant to be allowed to ask questions about my private dealings. This is nothing more than a thinly veiled attempt to find out them through supposed legal means."

"What, may I ask....." Snape was interrupted by Fudge.

"No, the defendant may not ask. I agree with Mr. Potter, it would be one thing if the defendant was charged with murder, but he is not. The court rules for Mr. Potter. Madam Bones, please continue."

"Mr. Potter, rather than go through a tedious question and answer phase, I would like to use your pensieve memory of the incident to show the court what happened. Am I right in understanding that you were there for the entire episode?"

"No ma'am, I did not see the defendant enter the house. I heard him enter yes, but my pensieve memory will not include footage of him walking through my aunt and uncle's front door."

"Fair enough, please prepare your memory." Harry did, and used his wand to put the memory in the silver bowl provided. Bones pointed her wand at the bowl, and the memory began projecting so that the entire room could see.

The 'movie' started off with Harry sitting on his bed, he then heard Snape start yelling for him from the living room. It then played out as we have already seen. The three kids watched in horror as Snape tried to subdue Harry, and then Ron let out a loud cheer when Harry put Snape into the wall (earning a light smack on the back of his head from Molly). The whole place started cackling when Harry put Snape's wand up his nose, and Snape went rigid in his seat (he had wondered how it had gotten there) and if possible, went even more pale at all of the laughter. Dumbledore just sat there mentally cursing the ineptness of his subordinates, trying to keep Snape out of Azkaban was going to be much harder than he had imagined it would be.

The memory ended, and everyone took a deep breath. Bones approached Harry again.

"A few questions Mr. Potter. Did you send your house elf to the DMLE before the defendant arrived?"

"Yes and no Madam Bones. Dobby.....that's my house elf.....did not leave Privet Drive until after Snape came inside, but before he started firing spells. I know I would have a lot of egg on my face if the Aurors came and no assault had taken place.....but I was willing to risk that to ensure my safety."

"Who took the pictures that were so prominently featured in the Daily Prophet on Saturday?"

"My other house elf Winky, she was stationed outside, just in case."

"So in effect, you set up the defendant?"

"No ma'am, I prefer to think of it as allowing for what might happen. If Snape had not assaulted me, then Winky's photographs would have been quite boring. If Snape had not assaulted me, I would likely be sitting here as a defendant on the charge of filing a false complaint. However, he did assault me, and I was proven correct on all counts."

"Thank you Mr. Potter, I have no further questions." Snape rose and stared hard at Harry for a few moments. He tensed up, and after briefly glowering at Harry, said:

"I have no questions for Mr. Potter at this time." Gasps could be heard all around the courtroom. Snape and Dumbledore had agreed beforehand that if Veritaserum wouldn't be allowed (and Dumbledore had pressed Fudge hard in private the day before), then Harry should not be antagonized any further. Snape had actually apologized to Dumbledore for what had happened.....though more for being caught than anything he actually did. Bones wasn't surprised at all, as Fudge had filled her in on Dumbledore's Veritaserum pleas, and called her next witness.

"The DMLE calls Senior Auror Travis Biller." Biller rose from his place in the courtroom and sat in the witness chair.

"Please state your name and occupation for the record."

"Travis Biller, Auror."

"You were the investigating Auror in this case were you not?"

"I was, I was the Senior Auror on duty the night of the incident, and responded to the call."

"How did that come about?"

"Harry Potter's house elf came to get me with a note from aunt. It said that the defendant was in the house threatening Mr. Potter with his wand. It informed us that she and her husband were muggles and could not defend Mr. Potter adequately."

"The DMLE has this note and will now enter it into evidence." It was so done. "Please continue Mr. Biller."

"Within one minute my team, which included myself, Robert Graham, and Sarah Westbrook, portkeyed over there. We found Mr. Potter in control of the scene and the defendant bound with magical ropes. We questioned Mr. Potter and the defendant and came to the conclusion that Snape had fired first and Mr. Potter responded in kind, winning the duel, if one wants to call it that."

"Did the defendant admit to the assault and the unlawful entry?"

"He admitted to the assault, and did not deny the unlawful entry, and I asked him to give a statement at the scene. I did a Priori Incantatem of Snape's wand, and it confirmed Mr. Potter's accounting of the spells fired at him before he responded."

"Thank you Mr. Biller. One final question, as part of your duties for this case, I would like you to show us, via pensieve, your interview with Petunia and Vernon Dursley."

"Yes ma'am. This morning I interviewed the aunt and uncle of Mr. Potter to confirm the unlawful entry. They willingly accepted Veritaserum and I had a brief session with them." A pensieve was put in front of him, and Travis put his wand to his head and withdrew the memory

It showed the two muggles, being rather polite for them, detailing their parts in last Friday's drama. They gave away nothing that would harm Harry, in no small part because Charlie had gotten rid of a few incriminating details. The memory lasted fifteen minutes, and concluded Bones' questioning of her subordinate.

"Mr. Snape, do you have any questions for the witness?"

"I do. Mr. Biller, did I note state to you that I was ordered to enter the Dursley house by Headmaster Dumbledore?"

"Yes you did." Bones knew that one was coming, and was ready:

“Objection, Albus Dumbledore, however much authority he has in our world, has absolutely none in the muggle world. He was not aware of Mr. Potter’s emancipation at the time, so as far as he was concerned, it was a muggle house with an underage wizard living there. Add that to the note that you heard the defendant acknowledge in front of Mr. Potter, and this line of defense had no legal basis.”

“The objection is sustained, but your point is made Mr. Snape.”

“I have no further questions.”

“The DMLE has no other witnesses. We acknowledge the bad history between Mr. Potter and Mr. Snape, and between Mr. Potter’s father and Mr. Snape, but we agree that it has no basis here in this trial. We ask the court to consider only this incident.”

“Thank you Madam Bones. Mr. Snape, do you have any witnesses or a statement to make?”

“I have no witnesses and a very brief statement. I was operating under orders from Headmaster Dumbledore when I entered the Dursley house, I was also acting under the assumption that Mr. Potter was a minor child with Dumbledore as his wizard guardian. It turns out I was in error, and I apologize for that. The lessons I was there to impart to Mr. Potter were very important, and when he refused them, I admit that I became angry, and I decided that he was going to sit for his lessons come hell or high water. I admit that what I should have done is go back to Hogwarts and retrieve the Headmaster, in an effort to solve the situation diplomatically.” Fudge looked him over, Snape had never sounded so humble in the years that Fudge had known him.

“Are you changing your plea at this time?”

“Yes I am, I plead guilty to both counts and I throw myself on the mercy of the Wizengamot.” This was not a snap judgment on his part. He and Dumbledore had also agreed that if Harry’s memory played like they thought it might, then this was the best play.

“Very well Mr. Snape. The Wizengamot will now retire to their chambers to render its decision.” The members left, and the courtroom started buzzing. Harry was sitting by himself in the front row, and he turned to his erstwhile friends and gave them a smile. He made no effort to talk with them however, and pulled out a book from his pocket (shrunk) and started reading.

The Wizengamot was gone for one hour, and they returned with mostly blank expressions on their faces. Dumbledore nodded to Fudge that everything had been decided, and the Minister called for everyone’s attention.

“Professor Dumbledore, has the Wizengamot reached a verdict?”

“We have, Minister Fudge. Given Professor Snape’s admission of guilt on both charges, we do find him guilty. We have taken into account his long record of service at Hogwarts, and his service in the last war, and have decided that it would not be in the best interests of the magical community to incarcerate him in Azkaban.” He turned to Snape and looked at him with a hint of sadness.

“Severus Snape, you are to be sentenced to three years of house arrest, sentence to be served at your home in Snape Manor, Oxfordshire. You will be allowed no floo access and the house will be barred against all visitors who do not have pre-approval from the Ministry of Magic. Multiple tracking charms will be placed on you to ensure that you do not leave. If you are found to have left your home or interfered with the charms placed upon you in any way, you will be re-sentenced by this body to a term in Azkaban of no less than 20 years. Your employment at Hogwarts is of course terminated, but you may have full access to potions equipment and ingredients necessary to do private work in your field. Mr. Snape, do you understand this sentence as I have described it to you?”

“I do.”

“Then it will be carried out immediately. In my capacity as Hogwarts Headmaster, I will personally make sure that the contents of your school office are delivered to you post haste.”

“Thank you Headmaster.”

“This court is now adjourned.” The room was abuzz again and Harry took advantage of it to slip out the door as quietly as he could. He flooed to The Leaky Cauldron and took a taxi from there to the House of Commons, where he got lost for awhile before returning to his hotel.

The next night, he would have a going away party with all of his people, a kind of belated birthday party of sorts as well. He passed thanks around like candy, and he promised multiple times to keep in touch, saying that he would buy another owl once in America if he had to. He knew deep in his heart that he cared about all of them very much, and for others as well.....but he never had second thoughts about his decision.

Thursday, August 2, 1996

Peter picked Harry up three hours before his flight left, but instead of going to the airport, they took a portkey to Peter's office (which Harry had not yet seen).

“Harry, I have an idea of how you can have some access to Britain on short notice, rather than rely on long-distance owls or sketchy international floo connections.”

“What does it involve?”

“Just an outlay of some galleons, that's all.....and a quick trip to Knockturn Alley.”

“Eh?”

“Did the twins ever tell you about a store in Knockturn Alley called Trunkenstein?”

“Yeah, they mentioned something about it the other night, why?”

“You remember Moody's seven compartment trunk? The one with all those doors?”

"I do, that's where we found the fake one hiding the real one."

"Well it was made by a guy named Anthony Hook, and he has perfected a better one since then, It amounts to a normal three level trunk, with an additional four levels acting as an apartment. Now the juicy part is, it comes with a private floo that can be utilized between similar trunks, as long as the proper code word is used.....and distance between trunks is not a limiting factor."

"So we would need two of them I take it."

"Yes we would. I talked with Anthony Hook this morning, and he'll sell us two of them for 4,000 galleons. This means you can cross the Atlantic with one blast of floo powder."

"Why would I want to?"

"Just in case Harry, it's always best to have options. We can station the other trunk in the twins' shop, or even with Neville at Hogwarts."

"I won't set foot in Hogwarts, I don't dare.....ok, let's get the trunks. But bring him here instead, we've come too far for me to risk walking about in public." Peter nodded, and walked over to the floo.

The purchase was completed in thirty minutes, Fred arrived to take possession of the British based trunk, Anthony Hook walked all of them through the security procedures, and Dobby retrieved the promised galleons from Gringotts. Harry took his already shrunk normal trunk out of his pocket and placed it in the new one. He and Peter took yet another portkey back to the hotel, where Jennifer Tyson (whose name was on the register for the room) was in the process of checking him out. The three of them took a taxi to Heathrow Airport, where Harry made his check-in with time to spare. They sat in the waiting area, idly chatting until they called Harry's flight.

"Remember one thing Harry, keep your wand out of sight on the airplane. I don't care if someone attacks you or tries to drag you off with a portkey, the secret of our world is more important than a temporary loss of freedom for you."

"I understand Peter, I won't do anything rash."

"I know you won't Harry. Now when you go through customs in the US, just tell them that it's a good luck charm that you carry with you."

"I will Peter, thank you for everything. I'm glad we could keep it our little secret."

"So am I, it was like a muggle spy novel at times wasn't it? You look after yourself now, don't become too American on us."

"I won't Peter. It was lovely to meet you Jennifer, you take good care of this guy."

"I will Harry, be careful." They all hugged goodbye, and Harry, with only a backpack over his shoulder (loaded only with non-magical items, except for his wand), walked on to the plane, for the journey that would alter him forever.

Author's Notes: Harry's flight is ripped right from a travel website, and is scheduled for the same day, time, and destination (the real one just takes place 10 years later), so the info there is totally realistic. On another matter, this is not a crossover story, but I am using a short-lived TV series and popular role-playing game's definitions for one of the groups here, but only very loosely (you'll see what I mean pretty early on). Milwaukee is featured in this chapter a little bit, and aside from a few streets, where our characters go is totally fictional (I've never been there). A big part of this chapter is a long conversation between Harry and another student, as Harry gets to know things in his new school. It gives a little insight into 'my' Harry as well, showing his perspective on some things.....so be warned that there isn't much action in this chapter, it's going to be much more relaxed and thoughtful. That's the goal anyway, I hope you like it.

American Airlines Flight 87

Harry sat back in first class seat and contemplated what was about to happen. For someone who had flown hundreds of times on a thin stick at over 200 KM per hour with no parachute, this whole airplane business was starting to make him nervous. He calmed himself though, by doing some Occlumency exercises, which to your random muggle looks more or less like meditation. He made a mental note to just drink Sprite on this flight though, he didn't need the added jumpiness of caffeine. He pulled out one of his paperbacks, Noble House by James Clavell, a nice, fat book that would help him while away the 13 hour plane flight (including his layover)

The doors closed, the engines came on, and Harry noted with some relief that he was going to have the row to himself for the next 10 hours (he had to change planes in Chicago). He tensed up as they took off, but started to relax once they were in the air. He looked around the first class cabin (Peter assured him that the extra expense was worth it for the comfort, particularly on such a long flight) and saw no other teenagers that he might strike up a conversation with. He went back to his book, barely looking up, except for when the flight attendant came by with the drink cart, and seven hours into the flight, dinner.

He was over halfway done with his novel when the Captain came on the intercom with the information that their descent into Chicago's O'Hare Airport was about to begin. Harry tensed up again, but everything went fine as they landed and taxied up to the gate. He was a little wobbly as he walked out the plane door, but soon found his land legs. He easily got through customs (no mention was made of the wand in his backpack, and his multi-compartment trunk did not set off any alarms either), his tourist visa was cleared with no comment other than 'welcome to The United States'. He then wandered over to the food court for some pizza, after a trip to the foreign exchange counter to trade his pounds in for dollars. After a two hour layover, he took his seat on his new plane. He was a little more used to the process by now, and the flight took less than half an hour to get him to Milwaukee.

After he de-planed, Harry looked around for his contact, and saw a woman approaching him with a smile on her face. She was about 5'7", very slim, with darkish blonde hair. Harry took out the photo he had had Peter obtain for him through the Daily Prophet, it matched. He relaxed considerably, and walked toward her.

"Hello Harry, I'm Joanne Murray." She reached out her hand and they shook hands. They were right in the middle of the airport and Harry wasn't worried about portkeys in front of all of these people.

"A pleasure to meet you ma'am."

"Mr. Tyson had nice things to say about you Harry, particularly about the chicken salad sandwiches that you had with him during your first meeting." He grinned at hearing that.

"Something tells me an imposter wouldn't have known about that little detail."

"He told me to mention it, as proof that I'm not an older man sipping Polyjuice, or a metamorph who reports to him."

“On Tuesday the metamorph in question swore an oath to support me against that certain older man. It was either that or give up a million galleon inheritance.” Murray had a nice laugh.

“I’m sure she didn’t take long to think about it. C’mon, let’s collect your trunk and we can be on our way.” They walked toward the baggage area to get the trunk.

“So how was your first plane ride?”

“It was fine except for the take-offs and the landings. I think you can find my fingerprints in the armrests.”

“That’s always the hardest part, I know I didn’t much care for them, even as a child.”

“So you’re muggleborn I take it?”

“Of a sort, my mother’s brother was a muggleborn wizard. One night when he and my parents had too much wine, I found out there was a magical world out there that no one knew about. I got my letter two years later, but I had badgered him into telling me all about it beforehand.”

“Are there a lot of muggleborns at Great Lakes?”

“They comprise just shy of a majority there, about 45 percent. The rest is split up between mixed bloods and purebloods. Our school is a little bit larger than Hogwarts, last year we had 332 students. We don’t know about this year yet, there will likely be some muggleborns who don’t answer their letters.”

“Is there a lot of rivalry between the muggleborns and the purebloods?”

“No there isn’t really, outside of a few on each side. We are much more closely tied to the muggle world than you are in Britain. The purebloods over here are more concerned with profiting from the muggles than in shunning them.” They reached the baggage area, and quickly got hold of Harry's new trunk. They started toward the main front doors of the airport.

"How are we getting to school?"

"I have one of the school cars, it has portkey capability. We'll head toward a parking garage, and once we get to a dark enough corner of it, we'll take the easy way there." The car was parked pretty close to the doors, and they put the trunk in the back.

"Ma'am, before we leave.....me being here isn't going to cause you any problems is it? I mean I know you said yes to me coming, but I don't want to be a burden."

"You won't be Harry, trust me. It would be one thing if you were a runaway with any parents or the like chasing after you, but you're a legal adult who chose to do this out of many other options. I've never met your Minister Fudge personally, but since he did sign off on your early adulthood, there's nothing Dumbledore can legally do."

"I'm sure he can do a lot of things illegally."

"He will end up very unhappy if he tries, don't worry." She started the car and they moved off. Harry brought up a subject that he knew she must have thought about.

"What about Voldemort? What if he comes here?"

"I doubt he will come all the way over here to try and harm you, to invade a school whose defenses he knows nothing about. No, I think he'll be satisfied that you're not over there to bother him. It was not a factor in whether I took you in or not."

The subject was quickly changed, and Murray asked about a few of the teachers she had worked with during her year at Hogwarts. She and Jeffrey Hill, the longtime Professor of Muggle Studies, were still in occasional communication.....and so she knew more about Harry than most Americans would, even though Harry had never spoken to Hill.

After about 25 minutes, they got to a parking garage across from the sports arena in downtown. They got to the top level and Murray pressed a button the dashboard:

WHOOSH!

It lasted about 15 seconds, and was the closest Harry had ever come to riding on a rollercoaster.

"That was wild, can we do it again?" Another laugh, Murray seemed to have a good sense of humor. Harry has seen her laugh more in the last 30 minutes than he'd seen McGonagall laugh in five years. She noticed his look and asked him what was going on, so he told her.

"Yes, I noticed Minerva has a certain reserve." They appeared to be underground, but he could see a ramp that seemed to lead to the outside. Murray headed toward a flight of stairs on the east side, they passed four other cars on the way over there.

"My office is on the third floor, we can continue our talk there. We've missed dinner, so I'll send for some and we can eat there. How're you feeling? Are you tired? I know it's after 1 am in Britain right now, you've had a long day." Harry was a little tired, but it honestly hadn't occurred to him that it had been that long a day. He was still wired some from the excitement of the move, and the relief that he had made good his escape from Dumbledore. He still made a point of levitating his trunk though, rather than dragging it.

"I'm fine ma'am, I can last another few hours. The travel book I read yesterday recommended trying to push through to eliminate the jet lag."

"Easier said than done, or so I've found, but you're young.....boundless energy." It was Harry's turn to laugh.

"Like you said, easier said than done ma'am." They hiked up the flights of stairs and were soon walking down the corridor of what looked to be a wing of offices. Murray stopped in front of one and waved her hand in front of it, which opened the door. They walked in and Harry found himself in a room that was equal parts muggle and wizard. It had multiple bookcases along the walls, as well as what looked like every Dark Detector that Harry had ever seen, and a few that he hadn't. She motioned him to take a seat, all the chairs in the room seemed to be designed for maximum comfort. Harry sunk in his seat and immediately regretted his previous statement that he could stay awake another few hours.

"Raffles!" An elderly house elf popped in, he was wearing what looked to be a miniature tuxedo.

"Yes ma'am?"

"Raffles, this is Harry Potter, a new student. Harry, Raffles is the major-domo of our house elf staff."

"Pleased to meet you Raffles."

"Likewise sir."

"Raffles ask Professor Heyman to join us, and have dinner for three sent up."

"Yes ma'am." He made a half bow, and left.

"Oh yeah, I don't know if Peter told you, but I have two house-elves working for me on a paid basis. What would their status be here? Would I be allowed to have them here?" This was the first look of surprise he had seen on Murray's face.

"All of our staff elves are here on a paid basis, so I'm relieved to hear that you pay yours as well. That's not common practice in Britain from what I remember. You'll be allowed to keep them in your employ here, but I have to wonder what you would need two of them for?"

"Well Dobby, the male.....well I've known him awhile, I'm the one who tricked his master into freeing him." He told her bits and pieces of the Chamber of Secrets story.

"I took him on to protect me until I could do spell work legally. Winky kind of came as part of the deal, they're very attached to each other." A sly smile hit Murray's face as there came a knock on the door.

"Come in David!" A tall, dark haired man in his mid 40's came into the room.

"This must be Harry, welcome to Great Lakes." Harry stood and shook the proffered hand.

"Thank you sir."

"Professor Heyman is the Deputy Headmaster, and does most of our dealings with the government and the other three schools."

"So you don't teach a subject?"

"Not anymore, once I got the promotion last year. I was one of the Charms instructors, but this job keeps me hopping enough that I don't have time to miss it." The food arrived a few seconds later, three plates filled with spaghetti and garlic bread, with three bottles of water as well. They idly chit-chatted for a few minutes as they started eating, and Heyman filled Murray in on what had happened during the time she was gone (not a whole lot really).

"Now Harry, let's talk about your classes for a bit, before we get to what is probably a long series of questions that you must have."

"Yes ma'am."

"I got a copy of your OWL scores and your yearly grades from Mr. Tyson, and they're very good."

"There's a lot of room for improvement though, I know that. A year without any violent drama should do wonders for me."

"One would hope, yes. It will relieve you to know that one of our similarities with Hogwarts is the OWL system, which is pretty much standardized in Europe and North America. Your OWL scores would have put you sixth in your class if you had taken them here, and you still would have been first in Defense, but second in Charms.” Heyman took over the explanation from there.

“We have two kinds of classes for junior and senior year, regular and advanced. Advanced classes are open to those who get O’s in that subject on their OWL exams, the regular courses are open to everyone else. Everyone can take the NEWT test in whatever class they wish, but students in the advanced class will obviously be better prepared.”

“So I can take the advanced classes in Charms, Defense, and Care of Magical Creatures then.”

“Yes and no. The advanced class for Defense would more accurately be described as Basic Combat, and is required for anyone who wants Auror training. Advanced Charms is pretty much what it sounds like, you’ll learn some pretty funky stuff there, and its nice that you can take both Defense and Charms at that level. Creatures though, is not a class offered during the regular school year. We discontinued it in that form ten years ago due to a declining level of interest. We now offer it in the summer program, right now we have fifteen students taking it if I remember correctly, few of whom would probably have taken it during the regular school year.”

“Do a lot of students stay for the summer program?”

“Not that many stay, this summer we have fifty-three students staying here. Some are trying to get ahead in their studies, some trying to catch up and get extra tutoring.....and some are muggleborn students who are afraid, or not allowed, to go home.” Harry could certainly relate to that.

“If Hogwarts had this I would have stayed every summer.”

“We’ve been doing it now for twelve years, and it’s been a huge success. Creatures is the one stand-alone course that we offer in the summer, the rest of the summer program is tutoring. We have two teachers in every subject, and one stays around for the program. When I taught Defense I usually volunteered every year, it’s more relaxed.”

"Now as to your class requirements, you have to take a minimum of five, with a maximum of six. We also require you to participate in at least one school club or sports team. Right now we have 10 clubs going, plus teams for Quidditch and Quodpot. Your Quidditch skills are something that everyone here knows about you, so that will be an easy way for you to meet the requirement. Over the next few weeks you'll get a nice overview of the clubs here, and it will be easy to choose one to your liking, if that's the way you want to go."

"I'm sure I'll join something besides Quidditch, but you bring up something I'm somewhat afraid to ask.....just how well known am I here?" The two Americans looked at each other for a moment as if unsure how to handle this question. Heyman made the first attempt.

"Not as well known as you are over in Britain of course, but at least to American eyes you are the most famous living British wizard.....even more famous than Dumbledore or any your Quidditch heroes over there."

"I agree with David. You will be the cause of a lot of speculation once the students get a look at you.....and none know about you being here right now, at least until breakfast tomorrow. That said, I have no doubt that you will be able to fit in with little trouble. Famous as you are, I can tell from the time we've spent together that you're not some arrogant buffoon who revels in it, and Mr. Tyson told me how uncomfortable the whole thing makes you."

"It's a big reason I'm here right now, I don't want to be famous Harry Potter anymore, I want that noose off from around my neck."

"With that attitude, you won't have any problems here Harry, I assure you."

"That's a relief ma'am, sir, thank you. Now we were talking about classes. What are the differences between Hogwarts and Great Lakes? Are there any classes offered here that aren't there?"

"There are two classes offered at Hogwarts that aren't offered here, for your year anyway. We've already talked about Creatures, and the other one is History of Magic. History is only offered for the first five years, we feel if you haven't gotten it in five years of classes, you never will. You can still take the NEWT test if you like, but there will have to be a lot of private study involved."

"That's too bad about no class for it, Peter turned me on to a few history books and I was starting to get a liking for it. I definitely would have taken it here."

"And it only took Mr. Tyson a few days to hook you on it, after five years with a ghost beat it out of you, amazing." Harry smiled some more, he certainly wasn't going to miss Binns.

"The main alternative class that we offer is a course on Wandless Magic (Harry's eyes bugged out). It's very select, and we take only the best OWL scores from the wand-using courses. Having seen your raw OWL scores: your Transfiguration high E, combined with your Defense and Charms scores, they make you eligible for the class if you wish to take it."

"You'd better believe I want to take it Professor Heyman, I would love to learn more about doing that kind of magic."

"Well that makes three classes for you then, including Charms and Defense. Any ideas on the others?"

"I'll stick with Transfiguration as well, I did some theory reading before I got my wand rights and I think I'll do better.....oh yeah, another question: I was emancipated in Britain last week, is that emancipation legal here too?" Murray answered that one:

"It is legal, I obtained a written opinion from our Ministry to that effect too. You should know that your Snape set-to.....I never liked that man by the way.....your incident with him made our newspaper here, front page coverage too. Like your paper there, it was sympathetic toward you. Just don't rub it in the nose of your classmates here and there'll be no problems. Okay, you have four classes picked, you need at least one more.....and none of this is binding Harry, you can have until next week to think about it if you want."

“That’s okay ma’am, I had to think about this for Hogwarts anyway. I think I’ll do Muggle Studies if I’m allowed to, though I didn’t take it at Hogwarts.”

“I would think not, given that you grew up with them, no need to study them at magic school. Muggle Studies here is a bit different. We lean heavily on their History and Politics, with some culture and business basics. We are much more closely aligned to muggles here, so we all have known a lot about them from birth, even the purebloods. There’s no ‘ooh, those muggles come up with the strangest things’”

“Quite a difference from home. My best mate is a pureblood and he didn’t know a thing about muggles until he got to Hogwarts. He’s not the prejudiced type either, he just never had the opportunity.” Heyman chuckled sadly.

“That’s our blessing and our curse over here Harry. We’re almost too close to them at times I think.....I’m a mixed blood by the way, my father was muggleborn and my mother is a pureblood.”

“I’m the same way, only my mother was the muggleborn.” Heyman nodded as if this was easy to believe, and continued.

“We’re too close to them in that some of us have lost our identity as wizards almost. There are 85,000 wizards and witches in The United States, and hundreds of them live their everyday lives as muggles, and just use their wands for certain conveniences around the house, and for easy travel. In a lot of ways it’s better in Europe, where you have the separation and the distinctiveness.”

“Why have you gotten so close to the muggles here then?”

“Keep your friends close, but keep your enemies closer Harry. We need to keep close tabs on the muggles in order to keep the secret of our existence.....and to make money off them, that is a factor. The other groups do the same thing.”

“What other groups?”

"The Kindred and the Lycans." Seeing Harry's confusion: "The vampires and the werewolves. They're much more organized over here than in Europe, and their clans and packs respectively are our rivals in a lot of ways. You see we don't have an American equivalent of your Voldemort, we just have two incredibly uneasy truces going with the Lycans and Kindred, truces that have lasted for over ten years now admittedly, but we all know they won't last much longer. The only advantage is that both of them hate each other more than they hate us."

"Well they don't really hate us Harry, there's just a lot of mistrust going on. Each of them fear, with some justification, that we'll side with the other.....or if worse comes to worse, we'll side with the muggles if open war ever breaks out. Of the three non-muggles races, we're the ones who can blend in the easiest, since we don't change at a full moon or need to drink blood to survive. Our governments in the past have played both ends against the middle quite successfully, but it has left scars. The muggles officially don't know about any of the three groups, but there are enough rumors and legends to make this chancy at times."

"So you don't have Dark Wizards?"

"Oh we do, they just work with everyone and not against us. Our Wizard Congress has quite a few Dark representatives, and they won't be saddened at all when our truces go by the boards, as they inevitably will someday. We have no choice but to stick together over here Harry, we haven't had a full out wizard war in this country in decades, since before David and I were born."

"One of my friends in Britain is a werewolf, he was bitten as a child and Dumbledore managed to keep the story hidden for a long time. Long enough for him to go to Hogwarts and befriend my mum and dad." This caused raised eyebrows.

"There aren't that many wizard/werewolves over here, and their loyalty is considered by both wizard and werewolf alike to be suspect at best. If he ever comes to visit you, warn us first, there are quite a few anti-Lycan wards around the school that will have to be gotten around."

"I will ma'am, though my friends visiting me here is not something I'm going to encourage. I would just as soon keep my past life separate from my present life for as long as I can get away with it."

"That sounds like a good idea. I have to tell you that I'm very encouraged by your attitude Harry, you seem to have thought this thing through and aren't here on a whim."

"I have thought it through ma'am, I had a few weeks at home with little else to do but think. I want you to know that I'm here to stay, however homesick I'll get or however much culture shock that I'll go through. Besides, as the saying goes, I've burned my ships." He was a bit surprised to see the large smiles on the faces of Murray and Heyman, but figured he would let them explain it if they wanted.

"We're very glad to hear that Harry, and we'll do all we can to help you through it of course. Now do you have any questions for us? Or would you like to wait until you've had a good night's sleep?" Harry stifled a yawn, it was now almost 2 am in Britain and he had gotten up before 7 am there. Add that to his no caffeine pledge (because of the jitters of the plane ride), and the thought of a warm bed was growing on him.

"Just one big one that I can think of: What about the House situation? Is it like Hogwarts at all?" Murray took this one, as she was the more Hogwarts familiar of the two Americans.

"Well like most things here Harry, it's Hogwarts-esque. You see, the first American wizard school was The Salem Witches Institute, it was founded very early on, well before The U.S. became independent. The other three schools are off-shoots of Salem. We came first, then The Tecumseh Magical Academy in Oklahoma, and finally The Pathfinder School in California. Salem itself was heavily modeled on Hogwarts, but like with most schools has evolved over the years, with certain American touches. So we're two iterations removed from Hogwarts, and we have a lot of the same structure without some similar details. Each of the four schools does things slightly differently, and we have a lot of leeway from the government's Education Department."

"Now as to your question: We have four Houses, just as your old school does, and the Houses have students from all seven years. The big difference is the sorting situation. Our Houses aren't noted for their distinctiveness from each other, and they have no personality trait that they represent, like Gryffindor and courage or Slytherin and cunning. We want students to interact on a daily basis with all kinds of personalities, rather than students who are most like themselves. When you're sorted Harry, and no we don't use a battered old hat to do it, the House you'll be placed in will be the one that will benefit the most by the qualities which are most prominent within you."

"So you want all the Houses to be equal?"

"More or less, yes. We want them to be diverse in the types of students that are in it, though actual academic performance will vary. I've always thought Hogwarts was insane for isolating the Slytherins like they do. All it does is push the students sitting on the fence into the Dark camp, because they feel like there's no where else to go."

"Is there a House Cup?"

"There is, though the points are determined somewhat differently. Points are based on class results, combined with Quidditch and Quodpot scores, as well as the standings in the Olympics." Seeing Harry's confused expression, Heyman explained.

"Oh yes, you wouldn't know about that. It's a series of competitions we have in the spring that measure magical power, quick thinking, and magical stamina. It's rather like that Tri-Wizard fiasco you had over there, except that nothing is remotely life-threatening. It's like muggle golf, where you compete against yourself and not the others. There are no duels or battling with magical creatures."

"The big difference in the overall points system is that points are not determined by the individual teachers, but by a series of standards that incorporate the areas I mentioned. In other words, there's no 'Excellent Mr. Smith, 10 points to Shawnee House'. Too much room for teacher bias that way. I never awarded points like that during my year at Hogwarts, and it caused a bit of a stir with our friend."

“One of the Houses is called Shawnee House?”

“Our Houses are named after famous early American wizards, one of them very early. You noticed that we smiled when you said that you’ve burned your ships. That was because one of our Houses is Cortez House, after the explorer. The others are Proctor House, named after Lizzie Proctor, and the only House name we share with Salem; Shawnee House, named after the Indian shaman The Shawnee Prophet; and Jefferson House, from the only wizard ever to be President of the United States. Our House Cup is called the Carver Cup, after George Washington Carver, the first famous African-American wizard. The House names are not indicative of the types of students within them though, like we’ve said. If you get sorted into Cortez House, it doesn’t mean you’re the conquering type, or the political type if you’re put into Jefferson House.” Murray let this sink in for a moment, and seemed to decide that Harry needed break for the remainder of the evening.

“Harry’s there is so much more we could tell you about the school and the American magical world, but there’s plenty of time for that. We have over four weeks left until the Fall term starts, and by then all of your questions should be answered. Tomorrow we’ll arrange a student guide for you, to show you around the school. It will be someone from your year and he or she will be able to fill you in on a lot of things, including some issues that we don’t know or would prefer not to tell you.” Harry and Professor Heyman both shared her smile. Heyman stood up.

“I’ll show you to the guest quarters Harry. Until you’re sorted you’ll stay there, they’re pretty comfortable. If you need anything tonight, just call for Raffles, and he will take care of you.”

“Your House-elves may join you there, we’ll figure out something for them to do later on.” Harry noticed Heyman’s quizzical expression (he hadn’t been there for the Dobby/Winky talk).

“Dobby! Winky!” The two of them popped in, and they noticed the two strangers, but it didn’t take much for them to figure it out.

“Yes Harry?”

“Guys, this is Headmistress Murray, and Deputy Headmaster Heyman. Sir, ma’am, this is Dobby and Winky.” The two Americans nodded pleasantly to Dobby and Winky, who Harry then noticed were wearing matching English National Team football jerseys. He started laughing, and was joined by the other two.

“Do I want to ask you two where you got those jerseys?” Dobby looked a little abashed, but smiled back when he said:

“No Harry, you probably do not.” Harry dissolved into a fit of laughter, as his tiredness temporarily went away.

“That’s what I get for asking the question I guess. Come on you two, Professor Heyman is going to show us where we’ll be living for the next month.” Dobby and Winky both nodded, Winky had not stopped looking around the office since she had popped in.

“Goodnight Harry, I’ll come collect you for breakfast tomorrow morning. I should be there around 8 am.”

“Yes ma’am.....thank you Professor Murray, thanks for taking me in.”

“You’re welcome Harry, have a good rest.” Harry stood up and started to grab his trunk, but Dobby shook his head and he and Winky snapped their fingers, levitating it for him. Heyman led the way out the door, and they made their way to the nearest stairwell. Nothing much was said during the brief journey, as the older man wanted to let Harry assimilate what he had just learned before hitting him with anything new. They went up two flights (to the fifth floor). Heyman waved his hand in front of one of the doors and it opened for him.

“One of our security precautions. All our teachers open their offices that way, and Professor Murray and I can open every door in the school in that manner.” He waved his wand at the door.

“Place your hand flat on the door Harry, that will key you in to the be the only one to be able to open this particular door, except for Professor Murray and myself.” Harry did so, and the door glowed blue for about two seconds before becoming normal again. He turned to look at the room and saw what is basically a large-ish motel room, similar to the one he had stayed in at The Leaky Cauldron (his only motel experience).

“If someone knocks, just say ‘Come in’ and it will unlock automatically. Is there anything else you need?”

“No thank you Professor, I’ll be fine.”

“All right then, goodnight Harry, see you at breakfast.”

“Goodnight Professor Heyman.” Heyman nodded at Dobby and Winky, and took his leave. Harry removed his pj’s and his bathroom things from the top layer of his trunk. After that, he did a quick scan of the room to see if there were any surveillance charms (there weren’t). Dobby and Winky looked around and focused immediately on the clothes closet, where Dobby soon did his thing and made into a nice temporary room for the two of them, on a long-term basis they would live in the trunk.

“Professor Murray (he had a hard time calling anyone ‘Madam’, it just didn’t sound right) said we would figure out what you two can do around here tomorrow. But before that happens, I have a job for the two of you.” As he had expected, the two of them looked at him eagerly.

“First, get rid of those jerseys and wear something more normal, we don’t want you two sticking out around here. Wear them to bed if you feel the need, but we’re going to be enough of a conversation piece as it is. Second, I want you to start to make a map of the school. I haven’t seen the outside yet, and I doubt seriously that it’s a castle, but I want a blueprint of the place. Make a point of knowing all the entrances and exits to the building, and seek out any hidden passageways or tunnels that might be around.”

“Only do this floor tonight, we don’t want the other house elves to catch you and wonder who the heck you are. Be as subtle as you can while doing it, this isn’t something that has to be done this week or anything. Have it done by the time school starts and I’ll be very happy, that’s a month from now.” The two elves were vigorously nodding their heads.

“When you’re done, give me the finished product and I’ll see if Remus can’t make us another Marauder’s Map.” He still hadn’t decided what to do with the Hogwarts Map yet, it was going to be given to one of his friends, but he couldn’t decide which. Oh well, nothing more to do now but wait. He looked at his watch and it read 9:04 pm.....late enough, considering the time change. He did his bathroom business, and after asking Winky to wake him up at 7:30 am, went to bed. This had been a first day of the rest of his life, in more ways than one.

Noon (London time, 6 am Michigan time)

Grimmauld Place

This was the first meeting of the Order in almost a week (they had a brief meeting right before Harry’s takedown of Snape). Dumbledore had wanted one earlier, right after Snape’s trial at the latest, but scheduling had gotten in the way. Tonks, Kingsley, and Hestia were all working nights lately, and Remus and Molly (for reasons easily surmised) had been unwilling to attend meetings at 3 am (they, along with Moody, were the primary Order members who were not employed. Even Hogwarts people had summer duties of some sort). Because of the prime subject of the meeting, Ron, Hermione, and Ginny had been invited. Somewhat to the surprise of Dumbledore, Luna and Neville had declined invitations to do the same, citing family obligations.

“Let us begin. Kids, have you had any communications from Harry since the trial?” The three of them had agreed earlier that Hermione was to be their spokesperson, and that it would be fine to tell Dumbledore what they that they didn't actually know any more than he did.

"No sir, we haven't. Our owls have returned without delivering any messages."

"So he is living in the muggle world then, and you have no idea where that could be?"

"No sir, and before you ask, he's not at my house. None of us have any idea where he is."

"I know he's not at your house Ms. Granger, don't worry. What we need to do is find him, or at the very least communicate with him." Remus had a pleased look on his face as he addressed that issue.

"And the fact that Harry doesn't seem to want that, makes no difference to you Albus?"

"I think at the very least we deserve an explanation from him. We will all be very sorry if the Death Eaters catch up to him before we do."

"They won't catch up to him Albus, none of them know the first thing about tracking someone in the muggle world, and they know much less about his tendencies than we do. He's probably safer now than he ever has been in the summer." The shot hit just where it was supposed to.

"He was protected at Privet Drive, more protected than he would have been anywhere else."

"Funny how he didn't seem to think so.....oh that's right, you never cared what he thought. That doesn't matter much anymore, but still." The rest of the room wasn't used to anyone taking on Dumbledore like this, and they all chalked it up to Remus' new found wealth, and his sense of freedom that emanated from it. A flash of irritation crossed the Headmaster's face, but the last sentence gave him pause.

"What do you mean by 'it doesn't much matter anymore'?"

Bill had told him of Harry's departure the day before, the eldest Weasley son had made a point of avoiding Dumbledore since the going away party on Wednesday night. Remus still knew few details, but decided that it wouldn't hurt to let loose a little information.

"Because it would take all the galleons in Great Britain to bring Harry back to Hogwarts. He's gone Albus, and it could have been prevented very easily if you had cared more about him." This was too much for Dumbledore, and he had rarely looked so angry in front of the Order, who all looked thunderstruck at the idea of Harry not coming back to school (only Remus and Tonks knew besides Bill).

"I have never cared about a student more than I have cared about Harry Potter!" Remus didn't flinch one bit, he had had enough here

"Yes, but you cared so much about saving his life you didn't stop to think about saving his soul! Has there ever been a sixteen year old wizard with the kind of psychological damage that Harry has accumulated? Save Tom Riddle perhaps, and we all know how that turned out!" Dumbledore was seconds away from drawing his wand, and was forestalled by Moody grabbing his wand arm and shaking his head. Dumbledore closed his eyes and calmed himself.

"Mistakes were made, yes. But we're past that now, and we have to deal with what Harry is planning to do. What makes you think he won't come back to Hogwarts?"

"He told me so, right after the will reading. He didn't say where, or even if he's already made arrangements or will wait.....but he's gone Albus. I doubt you'll lay eyes on him before the Malfoy trial in October, if even then." In all of his musing in the last week, it had never occurred to Dumbledore that Harry might not come back to Hogwarts.

"And you don't think that he was just trying to mislead you?"

"He had just inherited over a million galleons, he has the resources to make it happen. Besides which, did you think that getting his emancipation was the first step?" Everyone noted that Remus didn't technically answer the question, but he raised some valid points. Molly decided to enter the debate.

“What did the Minister tell you Albus?”

“Very little, he was surprisingly firm about it actually. He said little other than that he and Harry had had a chat and have put most of their differences behind them. He claims he does not know if Harry is planning anything further.”

“What did Harry promise him in return for his emancipation?”

“I don’t know Molly, it could be that Harry promised the Minister a break with me as his part of the deal.” That sure sounded plausible to everyone, not that it helped explain where Harry might be. Molly then asked Dumbledore the question that they all were wondering:

“What are we going to do if he isn’t coming back?”

“He will come back Molly, he just needs some time to work things out apparently. I doubt he will leave the country, I think he’s just playing tourist for awhile in a mistaken effort to punish me. Perhaps it will be good for him, a taste of the muggle world might be just what he needs to appreciate being magical.” Even for Dumbledore this was reaching, and Bill needed all his self control not to laugh in the old man’s face. Peter had reported to him that Harry had gotten on the plane, and Bill had kept an eye on the muggle news to see if anything strange had happened on the flight (it hadn’t). However, he knew that Harry would spring his surprise on Dumbledore when he wanted to, and probably wanted to get used to his new surroundings before he did so. There was one point that he wanted to address here though:

“Okay, now that we’ve established that Harry will come back when he bloody well feels like it, I would like to talk about Fred and George, and why they aren’t here right now.”

“They interfered with our chance to talk with Harry, they knew I wanted an opportunity to clear the air with him.”

"Yet again you miss the point Albus, the twins tell me that Harry fled as fast as he could.....apparently he didn't want to clear the air."

"Fred and George have a duty to the Order, one that supersedes any friendship or partnership they have with Harry. I was not going to kidnap him, I just wanted to try to talk with him." He couldn't believe that he was being so misunderstood, and yes, he was not used to being questioned like this.

"So what Harry wants doesn't matter?"

"In the grand scheme of things, no it doesn't."

"You mean in the sense of 'The power he knows not'.....or in the sense of 'neither can live while the other survives'?" Dumbledore sucked in his breath as Bill quoted from the Prophecy. There was only way he could have found out.

"I can't believe Harry told you." The rest of the rest of the room looked rather confused, except for Remus and Hermione, who blurted out:

"That's what the Prophecy says!"

"Yes Hermione, that's part of what it says. Harry told me last week, he wanted to see if it sounded as stupid to me as it did to him. Dare we tell them who the so-called prophet was Albus?" Dumbledore held his head in his hands as he couldn't believe that Harry.....well yes he could believe it actually, the lad would want to confide in someone, but Bill? How did he even know Bill that well?

"Last Friday night Bill, where were you?" Bill smiled easily, and said what his parents and siblings had already suspected:

"I was in the Dursley kitchen with Charlie, Fred, and George, waiting to see if you would so stupid as to attack Harry.....I offer you due credit for not giving into temptation. The Aurors being there helped surely." These people didn't need to know about Neville, Luna and Peter now did they?

“You helped him plan Severus’ setup, a setup that we will be long be paying for!”

“Harry needed help Albus, and yes, I gave it to him very willingly. When you’re in trouble and you need to talk to somebody, if you can’t go to your friends, you next try your enemies.....that’s what I was trying to prevent. You think Harry couldn’t go to Voldemort and cut a deal right now? He would probably be made second in command if he jumped ship anytime soon. Think about it Albus, put away your twisted need to control an abused kid for one minute, and think about that.” This wasn’t why Bill really helped of course, but he knew it was plausible enough and sounded rational. Dumbledore rewarded this by sighing and nodding his head, bypassing the insult.

“You may be right Bill, you may be right. It’s clear that Harry has become very paranoid, and I suppose he might think that getting out of our world is better than his alternatives. I never should have let it get this far.” Remus saw the opening and jumped in with both feet.

“You never should have involved Snape in teaching him anything besides Potions. That’s what probably set this whole thing in motion, he was afraid of what that nut might do to him.....and he was proven right, wasn’t he? I’d wager a goodly portion of my new inheritance that if you had gone over there yourself to teach him, or gotten another Occlumency instructor, little or none of this would have happened.”

Dumbledore saw them all agreeing, even Moody seemed to think it made sense. He then made a decision, one that the rest of them had been begging him to make: He told them the story of the Prophecy.....and he told them that it was Trelawney, causing skeptical looks on many faces.

“There you have it, that’s what you adults were guarding for a year. That’s what you kids risked your lives for.” Bill interrupted him:

“And that’s what Harry does not believe in.” Eh?

“I’m sorry, what did you say Bill?”

“Harry doesn’t believe that the Prophecy is true. He thinks you could handle Voldemort but for some reason have pushed it on to him.” Dumbledore wanted to tear his beard out at hearing that.

“And what exactly does he base this disbelief on?”

“Trelawney, and the fact that he doesn’t want to die for a wizard public that alternates between calling him a saint and calling him a devil. Kids are funny that way.”

“And you wonder why I waited so long to tell him about it? This is precisely the kind of thing I was trying to avoid!”

“Then you should have kept him closer and let him calm down in plain sight, rather than in that house with those idiots.” Much as it killed the old man to admit it, Bill had a point there, and he shocked them all by saying so.

“Yes, I have to agree with you there Bill. I should have either kept him at Hogwarts this summer, or put him at The Burrow.” Bill didn’t believe a word of it, but refrained from saying so. Arthur chimed in for the first time:

“Since you seem to have a pulse on what Harry’s doing, what do you suggest we do Bill?”

“This isn’t the answer you want to hear, but I’ll tell you anyway: Nothing, do nothing and let him work his demons out in his own way. The twins and I have done what we can for him, but he needs this time to sort things out, and he’ll never get that done at Hogwarts.”

“At least tell us he’s going to another magical school, and not going back to the muggles.” Bill figured he could throw them this bone:

“Yes, I can tell you that he will start his sixth year at a magical school come September. He made the arrangements before he left the country.” Ron couldn’t believe this:

“He left the country! When was he planning on telling us this?”

“Hedwig might already be on her way here to do just that Ron. After Tuesday’s WWW fiasco, he thought he should make good his escape before telling you three anything.” Ron surprised them all by rounding on Dumbledore.

“Don’t you ever place a charm on me without my permission again! He would trust us if we weren’t around you all the time!” Ginny and Hermione weren’t as loud as Ron in their agreement, but just as resolute.

“I agree Headmaster, don’t ever use me like that again.”

“Same for me Professor Dumbledore, I don’t like the position you put us in. If Fred and George hadn’t stepped in front of your spells, I was prepared to.” Hermione is the one who said this, and Dumbledore knew then that he was defeated. If anyone in the room should appreciate his position (besides Moody, who had always advocated keeping Harry locked up tightly at Hogwarts and out of trouble), it was Hermione. However, she had that ‘don’t mess with me’ look on her face, one that Harry would have been proud to see.

“Okay, I surrender to the will of the group. I will await contact from Harry, rather than initiate it from my end.....you have my word.” This seemed to satisfy most of the Order, including Molly and Arthur.

“And you will have the twins reinstated to the Order, right?”

“Yes, as long as you answer this question Bill: Do you at least know which school Harry is going to be attending, so that he can be contacted if the need truly arises?” Bill had been working on his own Occlumency over the last two weeks, and he was confident he could prevent Dumbledore from rampaging through his mind if need be. The twins had no such aptitude for Occlumency, and with their permission, Bill had Obliviated the knowledge of exactly which school Harry was at. They only knew it was in North America. Charlie was out of the old man’s reach, and Dumbledore didn’t know about the other three.

“Yes I do know where Harry will be going to school this fall, and I will divulge it if I ever feel it necessary.”

“Good enough.....don’t look so skeptical Bill, you have done a good job of convincing me. I realize that Harry must make the next move, I cannot force him to help us. He needs to do it of his own free will. Now kids, if you will retire to the living room, we have a few more things to discuss here this afternoon.” Ron, Hermione, and Ginny left the room somewhat reluctantly, and the Order meeting continued on for another 20 minutes. Soon all of the adults streamed out of the kitchen, Dumbledore hitting the floo first. Ginny held on to Bill’s arm to stop him from leaving, and soon it was just the kids, Molly, Bill, and Remus left in the house.

“Where is he Bill?”

“You know bloody well that I’m not going to answer that Ginny. Harry told me that he would contact you when he was settled, and given that it’s been a day, I doubt he’s settled yet.”

“Is he safe Bill? Just tell us that.”

“Yes Mum, he’s safe. After all, he has Dobby and Winky looking after him.....yes he pays them Hermione. I wouldn’t be surprised if Dobby is the highest paid house elf in the world.” Hermione had to smile at that.

“So there’s really nothing we can do?”

“Just don’t get snotty with him when he does make contact with you, trust me when I tell you that won’t help things with him. Be upfront about why you two didn’t see fit to tell him about your relationship.....and no, your ‘you told us not to write you’ excuse didn’t come close to holding water with him, since you ignored it anyway. Now I have to get back to work, and we’re done talking about Harry for the near future, you lot need to live your own lives and not be obsessed about his.” With that, he hugged Molly and went to floo back to the bank.

Great Lakes Magical Institute, Guest Quarters

8 am (Michigan time)

Knock, knock

“Come in!” Murray entered the room to find Harry sitting on the bed, looking over a map of Michigan that he had purchased in the Chicago airport during his layover.

“Good morning Harry, sleep well?”

“10 hours straight ma’am, I feel pretty good.” Murray sat next to him on the bed and pointed a finger:

“This is where we are, halfway between Shingleton and Seney. On the outside we look like a large factory to other magical people, but there are muggle repelling charms all over the grounds. Even the few who drive by don’t see anything other than a muggle farm, so they don’t get curious. All four schools here in the U.S. are charmed to look like farms actually, it’s the easiest cover. The wards are pretty complicated, but they’ve never been breached by anyone with harmful intent.”

“So you get the stray motorist with a broken down car and that’s it?”

“There was one pregnancy a few years ago, the wife went into labor right in front of the athletic field, but we took care of it.” She stood back up, and Harry followed her out the door.

“The dining hall is on the first floor, the floor you’re staying on is the top floor.”

“So everything is in this building?”

“Pretty much, we use all five floors plus the basement. Floors four and five are the student floors, each House has half of a floor. Classes are on one and two, with the faculty offices and residences on three. We use the basement for club meetings and conferences. You’re in one of our two guest rooms, usually parents stay in them during the school year when visiting their kids. Professor Heyman told me that you didn’t run into any students last night, just a coincidence.”

“That’s good to hear, I’ve decided that your elves should stay in there with you for the rest of the month. Once the school year starts we can do one of two things: You can have them work for you in your dorm and keep paying them yourself; or you can loan them out to the school for your time here, we’ll pay them, and they will do things around the building for us.”

“I don’t know ma’am, I’m inclined to want to keep them in the dorm with me, since you say it’s okay.....but let me talk to them and find out what they would prefer.” Murray looked happy to hear that, and seconds later they came upon the dining hall.

The dining hall was another difference from Hogwarts, instead of four long tables for the students, it held a few dozen smaller tables. The tables held anywhere from four to ten places, and only about four of them were occupied at the moment. There appeared to be no staff table, but Harry figured that maybe that’s because it was summer, Murray had said that only half of them stuck around for the summer program. The students that were there seemed to be staring at Harry, though he thought that it could be chalked up to walking in with the Headmistress and being a stranger and all. Murray sat down at one of the tables furthest from the door, and motioned for Harry to sit down as well. There was a piece of laminated paper in the middle of the place setting, it was the menu for the meal. Murray gave a cursory look at the menu and gave her order to it, and a few seconds later eggs and toast appeared on her plate. Harry was relieved that it seemed to be just like the dinner at the Yule Ball two years back. He ordered pancakes, and seconds later was chowing down.

As he and Murray chit-chatted their way through breakfast, Heyman joining them halfway through the meal, Harry took the opportunity to look around. He saw that none of the students were wearing robes, they wore t-shirts and jeans for the most part. There seemed to be all ages represented, and by 8:20 practically all of the summer students were in the room.

“During the summer it’s like you see, though the hardier students will wear shorts on some days. It generally doesn’t get super hot around here, so you won’t have to worry about that too much. During the school year it’s coats, ties, and slacks for the boys. Do you have any of those with you?”

“No ma’am. I grew out of my old stuff from Hogwarts, and once I knew I wasn’t going back, I had some fun with Incendio.” He said this with such a pleased face that both Murray and Heyman cracked up.

“No matter, we’ll get you down to Milwaukee at least once to get you sorted out, you’ll need to get your books in any case. This might sound like a silly question, but how are you fixed for money? I know your lawyer said that you could easily pay the fees.....”

“Oh I’m fine Professor Heyman, my parents left me well off, and my godfather even more so. I’m not really a spendthrift type, but this is the first chance I’ll have to spend some cash, so I’ll probably treat myself to a few things when I get the chance. Nothing outrageous though, I promise I won’t call undue attention to myself that way.” Heyman looked impressed yet again, Harry didn’t know that he was the more skeptical of the two about Harry coming over. It was his job to monitor international wizard news, Harry’s rather uneven press coverage in Britain had not gone unnoticed by him. The kid was coming off very well though.

Breakfast was now breaking up, as 9 am was the starting time for the first of the Creatures’ classes, as well as the tutoring. Murray motioned for Harry to stay in his seat as she went over to a girl who was getting ready to leave. They spoke for a few seconds, and Murray led her over to Harry’s table.

“Harry, this is Sophie Weir, we’re going to have her show you around today. Sophie is a junior in Cortez House. Sophie, this is our newest student, Harry Potter.” Harry got up and shook hands with her. She was about three inches shorter than he was, with dark hair, and was pretty in a relatively understated way.

“Nice to meet you Sophie.”

“Likewise Harry.”

“Sophie, please give him the complete tour. I’ll let Professor Palmer know what you’re doing and not to expect you this morning. Take your time, use the day if you need to, introduce him to any stray students and teachers you come across.”

“Yes ma’am I will.” Sophie in fact looked rather nervous, and Harry quickly decided to pretend that she was Hermione with an American accent, so he looked pretty calm.

“See you two at lunch.” Murray walked away, leaving the two of them in the now empty dining hall.

“So when did you get in?”

“Last night, Professor Murray picked me up at the airport.”

“Everyone in the room seemed to be wondering who you were, though no one at my table guessed right. Professor Murray and Professor Heyman are pretty approachable, but they usually don’t have students sit with them at meals.” Harry chuckled.

“At least I wasn’t imagining it then. I have an idea that will cut some tension here, if you like.”

“Shoot.”

“Let’s agree upfront that whatever you tell me about the school and the teachers will not be shared by me with any teachers.....or anyone else that you say not to.” Sophie smiled with some relief, and it seemed to relax her a little.

“Agreed Harry, that’s a plan. Now is there anything in particular that you want to see first?”

“Well you know I would like to see what the place looks like from the outside.”

“You portkeyed in I take it?”

“Yeah, it was wild. I’ve done a lot of portkeying the last week or so, but not by car, though your garage is a nice one.”

“Our garage Harry, remember, you go here now. I did the car thing right after my first year, I threw up. That was my first portkey completely, not fun.”

“My first was on the way to the Quidditch World Cup two years ago.....nobody told me how to land. Come to think of it, nobody has told me how to land out of the floo yet either.”

“It’s worse for girls, trust me, the dust gets in our hair something awful. Scourgify isn’t as thorough on hair as it is on other things.” They walked out of the dining hall and through the north hallway, which led to a set of double doors.

“I can imagine. So where’re you from?”

“I’m from Springfield, Illinois. Where in England are you from? You are from England right? That’s what your accent sounds like.”

“Yes, I’m English. I was born in Wales, but I was raised in Surrey, the town I grew up in is about an hour’s drive from London.”

“We all read about the attack on you last week, I doubt any of the students figured on you showing up here though.”

“Apparently Professor Murray and my old Headmaster don’t get along, from the year that she taught at Hogwarts. I was already planning to leave though, the day of the attack.....has it already been a week now? Sheesh, time flies I guess. Anyway, the day of the attack is when my advisor picked this place for me, and he talked with Professor Murray the next night. I was the souvenir she brought back from her trip.” Sophie giggled at that, which comforted Harry that he wasn’t talking too much. They walked outside a few meters and Harry turned to look at the school.....and it was just how Murray had described it, just a five story, very wide building that looked like a factory.

“It is on the inside too, very old world.....at least compared to my muggle primary school anyway. I spent the first month getting lost almost every day.”

“That won’t happen here, trust me. The classrooms are all together, and the dorms are easy to find too.” They had continued to walk around the building, and Harry noted that there didn’t seem to be any other entrances than the one they had used.

“What am I taking you away from? Professor Murray mentioned a Professor Palmer?”

“Transfiguration’s not one of your strengths?”

“I got an E in Transfiguration, and O’s in the other two, so it looks like we’ll have a couple of classes together at least.” Sophie smiled, and Harry was becoming more relaxed around her by the minute. Everyone seemed to smile a lot around here he noticed.

“Did you qualify for Wandless Magic?”

“I did, and I can’t wait. Hang on, if you got an O in a class, you can’t need that much tutoring can you?”

“I needed something to do this summer while I’m here, and I usually do a different one each time. Last summer was History and Charms, and I still might do History next summer, I’ll take the NEWT anyway.”

"You don't want to go home?" She hesitated for a second, and Harry held up his hand.

"I'm sorry if I got too personal, I don't want to force you to share a confidence."

"No, it's okay Harry. You seem like a nice guy, and the whole world knows most of your story, which I'm sure you love. The thing is, I'm not welcome at home, so I've been here every summer." Harry remembered that Murray had mentioned something about students like this.

"You're muggleborn I'm guessing."

"Right, and my parents were fine with it at first. We got the letter, and then Professor Lyman came by a couple of days later to explain everything to us.....he's one of the History teachers by the way, not that you'll have him. They reacted much as anyone would who's been told their little girl is a witch, but they seemed to accept it. I have two older brothers and they're not magical, they thought and think that it's pretty cool, not that they'll admit it in front of mom and dad. I got my books and stuff in Milwaukee and they sent me off to Great Lakes." Harry could easily guess where this was going next, the same thing had happened to a few of his classmates at Hogwarts.

"And then they started thinking about it?"

"I guess that's what happened. I went home for Christmas break and they were a little distant, but there weren't any incidents or anything. We never were big on writing to each other, so I didn't have a hint of what came next until I got home for the summer. They sat me down the night after I got home and explained that they just couldn't handle the idea of me being a witch. They told me that I had to choose between them and magic. If I went back to Great Lakes I wouldn't be allowed to come back home."

"It doesn't take a genius to figure out which you chose."

"No, though I tried to talk them out of it for days. I even had Professor Rydell come and talk with them, he was the Headmaster before Professor Murray, this was just a couple of weeks before he retired. The creepiest thing is how calm they were about it, it was like they weren't mad about the whole thing, but that they're minds were totally made up. They kept repeating the same rehearsed speeches over and over. If I didn't know better I would have sworn that they were under Imperious, but Professor Rydell assured me that they weren't."

"I'm sorry Sophie, that's a hard choice to have to make."

"Professor Rydell told me that I could come back to Great Lakes even if they didn't want me to, and that I would have a home here as long as I was a student. I don't know, I just couldn't get over the fact that they wanted me to deny who I was. I love being a witch, I love the fact that I have this kind of special power inside me. It's like a gift, and I just couldn't give it all away right as I was learning to use it properly. I left that day with Professor Rydell, and I haven't been back since. That was how I took the trip in the portkey car, with my spectacular hurling afterward."

"Have you talked with them at all since?"

"I send them cards on their birthdays and Christmas, but there haven't been any replies. I'm still in touch with my brothers, one is in college and the other just graduated from high school. They tell me that nothing has changed at home, my parents won't even talk about me."

"Are there a lot of students here with that kind of situation?"

"Probably a couple of dozen or so, give or take. You'll meet most of them during the next few days." Harry shook his head disgustedly.

"I give my aunt and uncle credit for one thing now, at least they never pretended to love me. I think what happened to you was worse."

"That doesn't happen at Hogwarts?"

"Not that much no, or at least it doesn't get talked about much.....I'm sorry, that's not meant as criticism, I'm glad you told me (she nods her head to indicated that she doesn't take it as criticism for being overly personal). You see we're not encouraged to get to know students from other Houses, and my situation was considered pretty unique in my House. In my year in Gryffindor there was only one truly muggleborn student, my friend Hermione. Her parents seemed to take it pretty well from what I gather, although I guess Hermione didn't tell them much. Another student, my now former roommate Dean, was in a similar situation to me, growing up muggle but having magical relatives. Though his mum loved him and thought it was pretty cool that he was a wizard. But you can kind of tell by who stays at school during Christmas. Until last year I always stayed, and Hermione and my other best friend Ron stayed with me, so I wouldn't be by myself."

"That was very nice of them, are you going to miss them being all the way over here?"

"They're the only thing I'm going to miss about Hogwarts Sophie, them and Ron's sister Ginny, and my other friends Luna and Neville, although I only really became friends with Ginny and Luna last year.....okay, I'll miss the castle, it is prettier than this place on the outside." The cut from serious to funny left Sophie a little nonplussed, then she started laughing along with Harry.

"Let's go see the athletic field next shall we?"

"You lead I'll follow."

In no particular hurry, they strolled around the building and headed over to a stadium that appeared from a half mile away to be about half the size of the Hogwarts Quidditch field. There were no other students out and about, though it did seem to Harry to be good flying weather.

"I don't suppose you would tell me what the Sorting is like?"

"You really want to know? Half the fun is the surprise of it all."

"I've been through one Sorting like that, but if you really think it would spoil things for me...."

“Oh all right, its kind of like how you choose your wand in a way. What you do is you sit in special chairs that kind of evaluate you, each House has a chair. If you are the right fit for that House, then the chair lets out a hum and it glows right away. If it doesn't do that, you get up and go to the next chair. The chairs are placed at random every year, and I was lucky that my first chair was Cortez, which is where I wound up.”

“But you were scared at first that none of the chairs would glow for you, weren't you?”

“Absolutely, the chairs are connected somehow, and everybody fits in best in one of the Houses. So it's not just like if the first three chairs don't take you, then you get stuck in a House by default. It's like the chairs come to a decision when you're on the first one, only they draw it out for the suspense. I didn't know that at the time though, and since Weir is near the end of the list, I was totally freaking that I would be the only one who didn't get a House.”

“That sounds pretty interesting, I'm glad you told me about it.”

“They stick an old hat on your head, and you have a mental debate with him about what House he'll put you in. Or at least the hat makes it seem like a debate anyway.”

“If it's a hat, how do you know it's a him?”

“Because it speaks with a male voice, a quite sarcastic voice to tell you the truth. Sometimes it takes two seconds, with my friend Neville it took a couple of minutes.”

“How long did it take with you?”

“About a minute, though it seemed longer. I had to talk the Hat out of putting me in Slytherin House, though I think it was toying with me when it threatened to.”

“They’re the Dark House, right? They’re mentioned sometimes when the history books talk about you.” Harry closed his eyes for a second, and almost walked into the fence surrounding the Quidditch/Quodpot field.

“Oh that’s just great, I’m in American books too?”

“Well you’re mentioned a few times, and there’s a lot of gossip in The Chronicle when things go all weird over there.”

“The Chronicle is the wizard newspaper here I take it?”

“It is, and most of us here get it. They have a section devoted to international wizard news, and so we hear of you from time to time.” That brought up something Harry was curious about.

“May I ask another personal question?”

“Sure.”

“Your parents have cut you off, so that presumes that they won’t pay for school. How do you afford it here?”

“Oh I’m on scholarship now, sort of. You see school is free, it’s paid for by the government. From what I’ve heard, I guess they hold the patents to a few useful muggle items.”

“Like what?”

“The only one I’m sure of is the CD, but I’ve heard there are car parts too, and something they use in airplanes. However it works, it replaces a lot of taxes that we would otherwise pay. It’s hard to collect taxes anyway, since our businesses are so intertwined with muggles. The scholarship I have is designed for kids like me whose parents are problems. It pays for my books and supplies, and gives me enough spending money to get by. How did you pay for Hogwarts, your muggle family helped you?”

“Well they gave me a ride to the train station once, does that count?” Sophie looked a bit appalled.

“Then they gave me no help. My aunt and uncle hate two things more than anything in the world: magic, and me. My parents left me an inheritance, they took the school fees out of that, and my aunt and uncle weren’t savvy enough to wonder how I was paying for all of it. I withdrew a little of it to pay for books and other supplies, I haven’t really used it for much else until this past month or so. I had to throw some money around to get my freedom.” He told her the high points of his emancipation experience as they walked into the middle of the field. Most people would hesitate at telling all this to someone they had just met, but Harry’s instincts told him that it would be okay to tell Sophie. If one thinks about it, Harry’s good instincts on wizard friends had been evident from jump. The first two magical kids he’d ever met were Draco Malfoy, who he had immediately sized up as bad news; and Ron, who he had bonded with right away. They sat down in the middle of the field while Harry finished his emancipation story.

“So do you feel any different, being legal?”

“Not really, though it was weird to be able to do magic in the Dursley house.”

“I can imagine, I was only home a few days, but I didn’t do any magic at my parents’ house.”

“You have the same underage laws?”

“Even worse than yours really. Every house in the U.S. with wizards in it is warded to detect Kindred and Lycans, and it’s also warded so that once an underage puts their wand down at the beginning of the summer, you can’t pick it up again unless the Kindred/Lycan wards are tripped, or two months pass, whichever comes first.”

“Wow, and I thought things were looser around here, in regards to kids doing magic and all.”

“They feel that kids are kind of undisciplined, and would be too tempted to show off, especially around muggles.”

“Nobody’s thought of a loophole?”

“Nope, the only one is the obvious one, to never let your wand leave your hand, which of course isn’t too practical.”

“A good reason to stay the summer here, you can use it all you want.”

“It’s a perk, and more kids are taking advantage of it. My first summer here we only had twenty students staying, now it’s almost triple that. Not all of them are muggleborns either.”

“Professor Murray told me that there isn’t much rivalry between the purebloods and the muggleborns, was she right?” After all, a teacher might not notice subtle things.

“For the most part. I think the big difference is money, I can’t think of one pureblood student that isn’t from a rich family. Most of them have enriched themselves at the expense of the muggles over the years, to the point that you have to be a pretty limited wizard not to become rich after you leave school.”

“What do you want to do after you leave here?” Sophie looked pensive while thinking about how to answer that.

“I don’t know Harry, and that bothers me a little bit. Nothing really has presented itself as obvious, I guess I’ve just been hoping for my calling to just leap out at me.”

“Will you go to muggle university after this?”

“I would need another scholarship, which is possible, but I don’t know.”

“That’s the one thing I think the muggles do better than us, they don’t force kids that are 16 years old to decide the course of the rest of their lives. I’m the same as you, I couldn’t tell you right now what I would do. I know I could probably play Quidditch, or work in the joke shop with the twins.....but I don’t know if either of those things are what I’m going to be doing, or even what I want to do.”

“At least you have options, and neither of them sound so bad.”

“Oh you can work at WWW too, I’ll get the twins to open up an American branch.” She made a face at him, but saw that he was smiling, not laughing.

“Funny Harry.”

“Trust me Sophie, those two will make that business a success, and once they do, they’ll need to expand. I have some of their stuff in my trunk, I’ll show it to you later if you want.”

“It’s better than Zonkos?” Zonkos was a worldwide distributor, though the company headquarters was based in Great Britain.

“We think so, but we’re all biased. I’m interested to see what you think of their work.” He verbally described a few of the items, and Sophie surprised him by being most interested in the portable swamp, of which he had brought a few in the trunk. He didn’t really have a plan for using any of the items, but thought that he could get the twins some business from his new schoolmates. They had helped him out a lot this summer, and he wanted to pay them back.

It was a nice day too, Harry noticed. The temperature was around 75 degrees (a bit above average for that time of year in the U.P.), and the sun was out. Harry was laying on his back, soaking in the sun while they talked, Sophie was sitting with her legs crossed as they chatted. Harry felt very much at peace at this moment, and was moved to say so to his guide.

“Yes it is, should I feel bad that I haven’t showed you much? All we’ve been doing is trading stories.”

“Well Professor Murray said we had all day. I don’t want to keep you or anything, if you’re bored.” She shook her head and patted him on the shoulder.

"I'm not bored at all, trust me. This is cool, getting to know someone from a different culture. The fact that you're nice is a good bonus."

"You're nice too, Professor Murray knew what she was doing when she picked you as the tour guide. Do you get a lot of transfers here?"

"Not too many, no. We occasionally get one from one of the other American schools, when their parents move, but that's usually only one or two a year, if that. You're the first foreign student that I can think of, outside of one from Canada that joined our year back in Apprentice year."

"Apprentice year?"

"That's how we do the years. Your first year is the Novice year, then Freshman, Sophomore, Apprentice, Transition, Junior, and Senior. It's hard to remember at first, but you'll get used to it. You and I are Juniors, at least we will be in a few weeks. And while Sophomore usually denotes a second year, with us it's the third for some reason."

"We just did First, Second and so on."

"Probably just an instance of changing things so as not to be too like Hogwarts. I hear they call them First, Second, Third like that at Salem too."

"Do you ever meet the students from the other three schools? Heyman and Murray told me about the Olympics, is that school-wide or do you have it with the others?"

"Just within the school so far since I've been here. They used to do it every four years with the other schools, like with the muggles and their Olympics, but there were always allegations of cheating. The four schools are pretty serious rivals, they all want the most funding, which they think will result in them having the best students."

"I would think that they'd all get equal funding, just split the pie four ways."

“Don’t apply logic to it Harry, you’ll only make yourself crazy. Salem gets the most because they’re the flagship school of sorts, plus they have all the East Coast purebloods, so they get a lot of donations. You see our Quidditch stadium here, theirs is three times this size. The other schools get about the same money from the government, a little over 20 percent each.”

“I noticed that the stadium seems a bit small, though ours isn’t as big as Salem’s. Do you play Quidditch?”

“I’m not on the team, but it’s fun to watch. I don’t play Quodpot either, but like with Quidditch I go to all the games. They’re a big social event, and the place clears out when they happen. I’ll fly every once in awhile when I need stress relief, but I’m not great at it. There are couple of students in each House who play both Quidditch and Quodpot, and you can easily make them out because they tend to look exhausted by the end of Fall term, from all the practicing and the pressure of the games.”

“I haven’t flown in almost 10 months now, it’ll be nice to do it again.”

“Why haven’t you flown?”

“One of the Death Eater wannabes said some nasty things about Mrs. Weasley, so Fred and I attacked him. Umbridge, who was the hag more or less in charge of the school at the time, got us banned, and nailed George too for good measure. We had to sit out the last two games of the season, and she snatched my broom. I only got it back at the end of the school year.” Sophie seemed to react much as Hermione did to this story: not pleased that Harry had attacked a student, but impressed that he had done so to protect a woman’s name. The second reaction ultimately won out though.

“That was nice of you, kind of noble actually.”

“I’m not a total barbarian. Mrs. Weasley was pretty mad about it, but she calmed down after awhile. She’s more like an aunt than I ever had in Little Whinging, not that I’ve ever really known what a mother was. The twins weren’t going to go pro anyway, they had it on the brain to start the joke shop. I still don’t know if Molly knows that I gave them the startup money, I'm sure I would have gotten a Howler by now if she had."

"Yeah, those twins sound pretty wild. My mother would have locked my brothers in the basement if they'd shown signs of acting as your twins did."

"Oh Molly tried, believe me.....though they don't have a basement in their house, just an attic with a ghoul in it.....don't ask. From what I gather, Charlie is kind of wild too, he just doesn't have a twin to multiply his mayhem with. Percy is incredibly buttoned down, he's kind of the odd-ball in a strange way. Ginny is the best parts of Fred and George, with a lot of her mother in her too. Bill is the genius, and Ron is the.....well I think Ron's the one who has never found his true niche there. I think a lot of the time his niche has wound up being 'best mate of the Boy Who Lived', and that's not very healthy for anyone." During his emancipation explanation he had told her the roles of the various Weasleys in the drama.

"You say your family doesn't love you, but listening to you talk about the Weasleys, it sounds like they're your real family."

"In a lot of ways they are, and your next question is going to be 'but how can you leave them Harry?' (Sophie nodded as if she was thinking exactly that). And a valid question it is too, except for the fact that I don't want them caught in the middle of my fight with Dumbledore. I mean I know they will be anyway to a point, but Dumbledore and I would have come to blows at some point this school year, and I don't want them to have to pick sides like that."

"Blows literally or figuratively?"

"Well figuratively we already have, and if Peter and I hadn't done such a good job of keeping my plans hidden, he would have stopped us. Literally? I could only take him out if I completely got the drop on him, and even then I wouldn't like my chances. Same for Voldemort really, I only survived against him by luck. I'm not ready to duel with either of them, and since I want the bad guy dead, and the supposed good guy to leave me alone, I thought it best that I move away for a time."

"Is another reason that you don't want the distraction when you do come to blows with this Dumbledore guy?"

"Pretty much, though I don't see what he can do about all this now. That's one reason I bolted from there as soon as I could, I didn't want to give him any time to think properly. It's pretty funny if you think about it, he lost a game that he had no real idea he was playing in until it was almost the end."

"Very clever." Harry stuck his tongue out at her.

"Well I'm not used to being the clever kind of person Sophie, it's a new feeling that I'm starting to enjoy. Before this I've always been the 'charge in' type, and other people have had to clean up my messes. Not this time though."

"So you won't charge in anymore?"

"Never say never, but I know that I'm 100 times happier sitting in the middle of this pitch right now than I would be if I was locked up at my relatives' house. If I had charged into that I would have been caught, and things would have been worse. I'm starting to learn perspective, and it's about time too."

"I'm glad for you, and for us too. We won't have to deal with the tortured hero type that we read about in The Chronicle."

"Very funny, and no you probably won't."

"Do you figure you'll stay here, after you finish school?"

"Heck if I know, I haven't even been here 24 hours yet. I suppose a lot of it will depend on how things sort out back in Britain." She noticed that he didn't use the word 'home' when talking about Britain. They sat there in a companionable silence for a few minutes, and Sophie started to think that maybe she should continue the verbal tour a bit.

"So what else would you like to know about school?"

“How do the classes work, and why are there two teachers for each subject.”

“The classes are set in blocks, you have each one two times a week for about three hours or so. The teachers alternate years teaching the classes. For example, in Transfiguration the two teachers are Professor Palmer and Professor Washburn. Professor Palmer taught our year during Novice, Sophomore, and Transition Years (first, third, and fifth at Hogwarts), and Professor Washburn taught us during the other two. It’s different during the last two years though, as the more senior teacher handles the advanced classes, and the junior one does the regular. So I’ll have Professor Palmer for the next two years, while you’ll probably have Professor Washburn.”

“Probably?”

“Well the top student in the regular class at the end of junior year is promoted to the Advanced class if that’s what they want. There’ll be a lot of competition for it, since pretty much everyone takes Transfiguration, but you would have a shot.”

“What other classes are you taking?”

“Charms, Defense, Ancient Runes, and Wandless Magic. I only got an E in Runes, so I’ll just be doing Advanced in Charms, Defense and Transfiguration. I guess Wandless is Advanced by definition. What about you?”

“Pretty similar to yours: Charms, Defense will both be Advanced, Transfiguration, Muggle Studies, and Wandless Magic. You’re not taking Potions?”

“No, I’m terrible at it, and some of those smells just make me too sick to my stomach. I think the only reason I got an E on my OWL was because of the written part, I know I did badly on the practical.”

“I got an A on my Potions OWL, and I was grateful to get that high a mark. I never seriously considered taking it here, I don’t care how good the teachers in it are.”

"Oh the teachers are fine, they're pretty careful to make sure that you don't blow up anything."

"Are there any teachers who behave like I've described Snape?"

"Not really, I don't think that Professor Murray would tolerate it if they tried. Her big deal is respect and cooperation, and if you're snotty to a teacher she'll give you detention quicker than your head can spin."

"What about points? Over there they took off points for stuff like that too."

"That sounds pretty dumb, penalizing the whole House for one person's misbehavior."

"I guess they figure that the other students will keep the troublemakers in line." She gave him an ironic smile.

"Did it work on you?"

"Yuck, yuck. And yes it did to a point, there were a lot of stunts that I didn't dare try because I wanted us to win the House Cup. Oh boy, a year with no Voldemort types, no overbearing Headmasters, and no Snape clones.....what am I going to do with myself?"

"My friends and I can throw things at you sometimes if you want." Oh good, a sense of humor.

"As long as I can take you up on my broom and drop you in the nearest Great Lake.....as a show of school spirit of course."

"You and how many of your little boyfriends?" Harry made a point of shifting a few feet further away from her.

"Uh oh, I've picked on trouble I see. Do I need my wand out?"

"Nah, I won't let anyone pick on you during your first day here, even me."

“Thank Merlin for small favors.” Sophie grinned at him, and got to her feet.

“Come on, we’ve lazed around here long enough. I should show you more stuff, but we can go flying later if you want.”

“I’d like that, where are we off to now?”

“We’ll go back inside, I’ll show you some of the classrooms. There’s not much else to see outside but the Care of Magical Creatures area, and they probably won’t want us disturbing class right now. By the time we’re done with that part of the tour, it’ll be time for lunch. I’ll show you our House Lounge before we go flying.” They again took their time on the walk, though Harry was feeling pretty refreshed after his long sleep, he had somehow fought through jet lag. They got to the front door and Sophie led him down the hallway away from the dining hall. They walked into one of the rooms, leaving the door open behind them. Harry looked around at what looked like an ordinary muggle classroom.

“At least it’s not musty, and it all looks very functional.”

“I think they bought all the furniture on sale or something, we are a publicly funded school you know.”

“Is your government nearly as incompetent as ours though, that’s the question.”

“It’s not that bad I guess, Congress is like governments all over really. There’s a scandal every now and then, but they mostly stay out of things. They pretty much just monitor the schools, and deal with the muggles, Lycans, and Kindred.”

“Where is the capitol? Washington D.C.?” Harry didn’t remember much from social studies class when he was 10 years old, but he remembered that that’s where the U.S. government was located.

“No, it’s in Boston, so it can be somewhat closer to Salem.....the school isn’t actually in Salem, it’s about 100 miles to the west, so it can be kind of out of the way. Hard to have a Quidditch/Quodpot field in the middle of a suburb.”

“I would think so, otherwise you could put a school wherever you wanted.”

“Yeah, Tecumseh is in the middle of an Indian reservation, the muggle authorities are never around there. Pathfinder is in the mountains in California, they have to do some memory modifying on some climbers every once in awhile. Where’s Hogwarts?”

“In northern Scotland, I’ve flown over it and there isn’t a town for kilometers other than Hogsmeade.”

“I’ve heard about Hogsmeade, we don’t really have anything like that here. Most of us live in the bigger cities, lot’s of places to put magical buildings and such.”

“Where do we get our school supplies?”

“Flackter Alley in Milwaukee is our source. There’re similar ones in San Francisco, Boston, and Tulsa near the other schools, and one in New York City as well. A bunch of us are going down next week to get our school books and stuff, you’re welcome to come with us if you want.”

“That would be great, but let’s make sure that your friends think I’m all right first.”

“Oh they will, I’m the most suspicious of the bunch, and you and I have hit it off. Most of the people I hang out with are here this summer, so you’ll meet them at lunch.”

“Are they all in Cortez?”

“Reiko and Warrick are, Claudia is in Shawnee. Those three are kind of my crowd this summer. Jonas is in Jefferson, but he’s not here this summer.”

“Another personal.....” She didn’t let him finish.

"No, I'm not dating Warrick or Jonas, and I don't swing the other way." They both started giggling.

"I was NOT going to imply that last part, I promise."

"That's easy to say now that I beat you to it. No, Warrick and Reiko are together, and Jonas and Claudia are too busy denying the inevitable to date each other. I'm perpetually single. What about you? Any broken hearts going to be on the ground back there?"

"Umm.....well....."

"So more than one I take it?"

"I hesitated because I don't know exactly. I'm not good with girls really, one date is all that's on my resume there."

"One? I would have thought they'd be all over you."

"They wanted to be all over the 'Boy Who Lived', and I've spent five years avoiding that guy whenever possible." Sophie had rarely been more impressed by a teenage guy in her life, hearing that statement. Most guys his age would have succumbed to the fame, but he didn't. She only let her approval show in her small smile.

"So back to your 'umm' 'well' beginning."

"For years Ginny had a crush on me, again due to the Boy Who Lived garbage, and while nothing at all ever came of it.....I'm not really sure it ever went away, though she dated a couple of guys last year. She's the only one who would possibly have a broken heart, but it wouldn't be for the right reasons."

"What about this Hermione girl?"

"Oh she and Ron have finally gotten together, after dancing around it for two years. They didn't bother to tell me, but his brothers eventually did."

“And you never had a thing for Hermione yourself.”

“Not really, no, though everyone assumed it would be me and her, and not her with Ron. The Daily Prophet, oh how I loathe them, wrote a lot of stories about the two of us during the Triwizard thing fourth year. They didn’t have a shred of accuracy, but that doesn’t stop our press in Britain. No, Hermione is too bossy for me, she probably rules Ron with a rod of iron. Merlin knows he needs some direction though.”

“So you want to be the boss then?”

“Not especially. Half the time at most, but I would prefer someone I agree with most of the time, and who agrees with me. It wouldn’t have been like that with Hermione.”

“Very enlightened of you, the idea over here is that most Europeans have male dominated marriages.”

“I don’t know about that, but the only wizard marriage I’ve seen up close is Molly and Arthur, and she runs that family in most every way. Besides, if I wanted to be the owner of my girlfriend, I’d have given in to the lure of the ‘Boy Who Lived’, no thanks.”

“You really hate that moniker don’t you?” Harry smiled and rolled his eyes.

“I’m the ‘Boy Who Lived’ because my mother deliberately stepped in front of a killing curse, period. I was 15 months old at the time, and totally oblivious to everything but my next feeding and my next bowel movement. I didn’t find out about any of that until almost 10 years later, and it’s made me uncomfortable ever since. I prefer to ignore it and think of my parents as the ‘Mum and Dad who died to protect their child’. The Boy Who Lived has been a millstone around my neck, and one big reason I’m here is to get rid of it once and for all.....except, as you tell me, in history books.”

“So we can’t taunt you about it?”

“Not if you want to live my dear Sophie. You’ve come all this way not to enjoy the benefits of your last two years here.” He said this in a totally deadpan voice that startled her until he started shaking with silent laughter. She gave him a shove as she started for the door.

“Come on Mr. Comedian, let’s get to lunch.” They left the classroom and ran into one of the teachers leaving the next classroom.

“Hello Professor Palmer.”

“Hi there Sophie, this must be Harry. David Palmer, Transfiguration.” Palmer was a very tall black man, with a deep voice and a friendly smile. He held out his hand to shake, and Harry’s hand disappeared in it.

“Harry Potter sir, pleased to meet you.”

“The pleasure is mine Harry, Professor Murray told us all on Monday that you were coming here, but I have to admit I was skeptical.”

“I had trouble believing it too sir, but here I am. Sophie tells me that I’ll have to work really hard so I can have you as a teacher next fall.”

“I’m sure you’ll do just fine here. If you want to get in on the tutoring, I have a few slots open.”

“That would be great sir, just tell me when and where.” Palmer considered this for a moment.

“Let’s start at 10 am on Monday, you can go right after Sophie. Is there anything in particular you need to work on?” Now it was Harry’s turn to think.

“Well I did a lot of theory reading this summer so far for Transfiguration, for the first tutorial maybe we could go over it to make sure I have a handle on it.”

“That would be fine, the theory is the backbone of any wand work. Bring the book you used to study and we’ll go over it.”

“Great sir, I’m looking forward to it.”

“Same here. Now I have to get to my office for a minute, I’ll see you two in the dining hall.” He strolled off toward the nearest staircase, and his footsteps could be heard going upstairs, presumably to the third floor office wing.

Sophie and Harry went back the way they came, and entered the dining hall. Sophie spotted her friends sitting near the door, and led Harry over to their table.

“Guys, I want you to meet Harry Potter, he’s going to be going here now.” There was a hushed silence as her friends (and the other tables nearby) didn’t seem to know what to make of this news. One student at another table looked at him:

“You’re really Harry Potter?” Harry’s only response was to turn to him and lift the hair up off his scar.

“Well the accent is a dead giveaway.” This was from one of Sophie’s friends, who stood up and introduced herself.

“I’m Claudia Cregg, this is Warrick Forrester and Reiko Aylesworth.” Claudia was at least an inch taller than Harry, with long brown hair. Warrick was a few shades lighter than Professor Palmer, and not much shorter. Reiko looked to have some Japanese in her, and was pretty small and petite. They all stared at Harry with friendly curiosity.

“Good to meet you all, Sophie has been telling me the most horrible things about all of you.” More deadpan, but Sophie was now getting used to this, elbowing him lightly.

“Don’t listen to him much, it’s the English sense of humor. Sit down Harry, before a duel breaks out.” He did as ordered, and soon a tray of sandwiches was in the middle of the table, with pitchers of what smelled like fruit juice to go along with them.

“So you’ve been stuck with Sophie all morning.....yet you’re still here? I don’t get that.”

“She’s already threatened me a couple of time this morning Warrick, I’d better not say anything about the tour.” The other three immediately turned to stare at her.

“Our Sophie? Threatened?” Reiko reached over and felt Sophie’s forehead. Claudia explained.

“Twice Claudia, and I’m hardly legendary.....of course her threats involved you lot helping, so that might explain her boldness.” They nodded as if that made sense. The five of them chatted about what Harry had seen so far, and what else they thought Sophie should show him. Claudia and Reiko each had another tutoring session in the afternoon, while Warrick was playing in a muggle summer soccer league and had practice, but they all made plans to watch a movie in the Cortez House Lounge after dinner. Claudia explained (she seemed to be the leader of the group).

“Electricity is possible around here, but it’s pretty expensive, and not every room has it. Each of the House Lounges do, and some of the teacher offices do too, though some of the faculty don’t like it and won’t use it. The Lounges have it for the computers, though they won’t let us use the internet here, no phone lines here at school. We just use the computers to type our papers, it’s easier to correct things on them than on typewriters.” Harry had never used either a computer or a typewriter, and had only vaguely heard of the internet (mostly when covertly listening to the muggle newscasts between fourth and fifth years).

“It seems like I’m going to have to learn how to type. Is it hard to learn?”

shows you the Lounge she can run through how to use one of the computers.”

“Sure, I was going to do that anyway. In fact we’ll do it right after lunch, I have to show him the best Lounge in the place.” Claudia rolled her eyes.

“This is what I have to put up with all summer Harry, listening to these three go on about Cortez House. Not that Jonas is much help in that regard, even if he were here.”

“Which House won the……what’s it called? The Carver Cup?”

“Jefferson House won it last year, which is why Jonas is little help there. He’s the star Quodpot player for Jefferson, he’s spending most of the summer working out with the junior national team.”

“It’ll be cool to see a Quodpot game, we don’t play it over there.”

“It’s mostly North American based, and the professional league is very popular. Jonas is the fortunate one, he’ll have no trouble getting a job right after school finishes. I’d be surprised if he isn’t the top pick in the draft. Are you going to play Quidditch for your House?”

“I’d like to, if I can make my House team.” He was a bit confused when they all started laughing. Warrick explained why.

“Dude, the best Brit teenage player will easily be able to make a House team here. The best athletes tend to play Quodpot, except for an elite few.” He mock preened, and Harry quickly surmised that he was one of those few.

“Such as yourself perhaps? You’ve got to be a Beater.”

“Right you are young Harry.” Said in a halfway decent imitation of a British accent, with a heavy Monty Python influence to it.

“That’s not half bad actually, you might even convince some foreign tourists with that accent.”

"I'm good with accents, I watched a lot of TV when I was a kid. Anyway, yeah I'm a Beater, I'm too big for the other positions really. I figured very early on that there wouldn't be much competition for the Quidditch spots, so I made the team my first year, and have been playing ever since."

"This is going to sound crass, but are you any good?"

"Well I'm a better soccer player if you want to know the truth, but I've never been in any danger of losing my position on the Quidditch team. I won't be going pro in either sport, let's put it that way." Harry looked at the two girls.

"Do either of you play?" Reiko looked up.

"I finally made the team last year as a Chaser, after Warrick bugged me to train harder. He'd goaded me into trying out two years before that, but I hadn't made it. Claudia and Sophie here are the watchers, they won't even try to play."

"Practices take too much time, it's more fun to just go to the games."

"How often do you practice?"

"Three times a week usually, they're just kidding Harry. There are rules in place to limit the number of practices. Plus, during snowstorms they're always cancelled, so you just do regular workouts in the gym."

"Yeah, I was going to ask about that. How bad does the snow get here?" Sophie shivered involuntarily as Reiko answered.

"Bad, Harry, there will be weeks on end that you won't be going outside for any reason.....unless you're a lunatic, like Warrick."

"Snowball fights are a lost art my dear girlfriend, just because I'm harder than the bunch of you. Harry, you'll come out with us won't you?"

“Sure, I love snowball fights.....though I’m a little worried about the contemptuous looks we’re getting right now Warrick.”

“I get those all the time dude, you’ll get used to it.” At that moment Harry had a mouthful of his tuna salad sandwich, during which he gave a silent thanks that these people seemed so cool. Heyman was just now entering the room, and stopped by their table.

“Hi there guys, how’s the tour going?”

“Good deal, Professor Palmer says that you’ve already set up your first tutoring session.”

“Yes sir, Monday morning.”

“It’s good to see that you’re settling in. Come to my office tomorrow morning at 11 am, we have a few things to talk about.” Warrick seemed to be the funny man here.

“He’s in trouble already?”

“Ah yes, the legendary Forrester wit.....or at least half of it anyway.” The girls exploded with laughter, and Harry was biting his lip so hard he thought there would be blood flowing any second.

“No Harry isn’t in trouble, but there are a couple of things that we need to deal with about his former school. I have a couple of ideas about how to get your old Headmaster in line.”

“As long as they don’t involve me seeing him, I’m game.”

“They don’t, you need not have any direct contact with him as long as you’re here. Enjoy the rest of your day guys, I’ll see you tomorrow morning Harry.”

“Good day sir.” Heyman left for a table in the corner that had a few other faculty at it. Harry looked at them.

“Gee Warrick, he seems to like you a whole lot doesn’t he?”

“Vanish one chair with a teacher in it and you never hear the end of it.” The girls were giggling again, and Sophie explained.

“It was in Charms during Sophomore Year, we were practicing Vanishing Charms. Goomba here was supposed to vanish his own chair, but he ‘tripped’ and ‘accidentally’ vanished Professor Heyman’s.....putting him squarely on the ground. We almost had a riot that day, and no one was happier to see Professor Heyman promoted than our Warrick, so he wouldn’t have to have him this past year for Transition Year Charms.”

“That was a relief yeah.”

“Was it an accident?” Warrick adopted an innocent face.

“Wouldn’t you and a few hundred other students like to know.”

The rest of lunch was spent re-hashing Harry’s Snape fight, although he demurred from doing his quick draw right in the middle of the dining hall. A few other students came up to the table to meet Harry, and his scar got some subtle gapes when a few students were up close. The five of them parted ways a few minutes before 1 pm. Reiko was off to see Professor Palmer, and Claudia to tutor with Professor Lyman (she had explained that History was her passion, and she fully expected to ace the NEWT). Sophie, Warrick, and Harry walked up to the fourth floor, where Cortez and Proctor Houses were.

“How are you getting to practice Warrick?”

“Portkey, it takes me to about a quarter mile away from the field, and I walk the rest of it. See you two later okay?” He walked off to his dorm room to get his gear. Harry and Sophie walked into a large room, about three times the size of the Gryffindor or Slytherin Common Rooms (the only ones at Hogwarts he had been in). He walked back outside and looked at it from there.

“The beauty of magic, this place is huge.” The computers were on the left side of the room, what looked to be forty of them lined up against the wall, with nice looking executive chairs in front of them. On the opposite side of the room were three big screen TV's, all surrounded by couches and armchairs. On the far side of the room from the door was the largest fireplace Harry had ever seen, and made the one in his now former Common Room look like it was a toy made of Legos. In the middle of the room were tables of varying sizes dispersed in a way that reminded Harry of the dining hall. Along the near wall on the door side were various other doors. It was roughly the size of the Great Hall in Hogwarts, not a bad size for an average House population of 80 or so.

"What are these other doors for?"

"Access to each of the dorm rooms. Each dorm room holds four students, and the rooms have their own bathroom. There's a door in each dorm room that leads you here, magically I guess, since there are a couple dozen rooms and only these two doors. The one on the left (of the door, facing the room) is for the girls' rooms, on the right is for the boys."

"Are the rooms halfway decent?"

"They're pretty good I guess, though I don't have much to compare them with. You can see mine when we're done in here."

"I'd be allowed in a girl's room?"

"Oh sure, guys and girls can go in and out of each others' rooms, though technically there are rules against anything....."

"Frisky happening?"

"Pretty much."

"Why 'technically?'"

"Because its pretty hard to get caught if you have cooperative roommates. The professors only check our rooms when there's been a complaint, otherwise they stay on the third floor. Mind you, once there is a complaint the guilty are toast because of Veritaserum."

"I see what you mean about cooperative roommates."

"I take it it's more strict at Hogwarts?"

"Very much so. The stairway to the girls' rooms is charmed so that boys can't go up it. Girls can come up to ours, but none of my roommates has ever tried it. I think it's just kind of assumed that you do your fooling around outside the dorm. Most of it happens at the Astronomy Tower, though I've never been there for that purpose."

"Right, you and your one date didn't go there?"

"She walked out right in the middle of it, so no." He told her about the Cho experience, and why it had been uncomfortable between the two ever since. After he was done, he realized that the only students of any kind who knew as much about his recent history as Sophie were Neville and Luna (since Ron, Hermione, and Ginny didn't know about most of the emancipation drama).

"You know, you've been told enough of my secrets that we have to be friends now." She gave him a bright smile.

"Well we don't have to be, you could Obliviate me."

"Sadly, I haven't mastered that spell yet.....though I would love to learn as I go with that spell, if you don't mind." Sophie's eyes went wide in mock horror.

"Nah, friends it is." She patted him on the shoulder, and he returned the gesture.

"I like your friends by the way."

"Our friends Harry, they seemed to dig you too. We need a sixth member of our circle, and it appears as though you have the job, I'm sure Jonas will go along with it."

"Not playing Quodpot should help."

“Let’s just hope the chair puts you in Cortez, you playing Quidditch with Reiko and Warrick will be cool. Now let’s go look at one of the computers.” She spent 15 minutes taking him through the procedure of turning on the comp and getting into the word processing program. She promised that she would get Reiko to teach him how to type, as she was a whiz at it apparently.

They left the room via the inner door and walked down a somewhat narrow hallway and stopped at a doorway after about thirty feet. Sophie waved her hand in front of it, and they walked in. The room was fairly large, with single beds along each of the four walls. What appeared to be the bathroom door was off in the far left corner. It was decorated very girly of course, lots of pinks and yellows.

“I would hope so. My bed is over there (she points to the one nearest the bathroom door), and Reiko sleeps over there (the one on the far side). Kelly and Miranda, our other two roommates, aren’t here this summer.”

“Do you all get along?”

“I get along with both of them, but Miranda and Reiko have some issues.”

“I’m going to take a small leap and guess it involves the word ‘Warrick’”

“Well not in the way you think. Miranda never liked Warrick, but he spent two years trying to wear her down so that she would like him. Didn’t work, and he once he got the message, he got kind of snotty about it.”

“For the last nine months or so, the Christmas Dance was their first date, though they’ve been friendly for years. I guess words were said by Miranda to Reiko.....I wasn’t there, but things came a hair’s breadth from exploding.”

“So I would imagine that Miranda isn’t too ‘cooperative’ then.”

“Oh no, they have détente on that one, since Miranda has a boyfriend too. You haven’t met him either, he’s not here for the summer.”

“Good, so I won’t need to be in the middle for a few more weeks.”

“Middle? You’re squarely on our side there jethro.”

“Jethro? How on earth do your.....sorry, our.....friends think you’re shy?”

“I have four weeks to crack it though don’t I?”

“Try two years, it won’t get any harder once school starts.”

“Thank heaven for small favors, as soon as I get the others alone I’ll start digging.”

“Feel free. How did you get along with your roommates?”

“Well Ron and I met on the first train up there, and we became friends about as quickly as you and I have. Neville wasn’t part of our crowd until last year, and Dean and Seamus are good guys, but I don’t spend much time with them socially. I mean the five of us talked a lot at night, and I know more about West Ham football than anyone has a right to, Dean being a big fan.”

“Hopefully you’ll draw just as good a group here. How about we do that flying thing now?”

“Grab your broom, let’s go.” She collected her broom, which she explained was a gift from her other four friends for Christmas and her birthday two years earlier. It was a Nike broom, one that Harry had never seen before. They walked up a flight of stairs to get to Harry’s room. Dobby and Winky weren’t in sight as Harry got his Firebolt out of his trunk, but Harry decided that the sooner they got used to Sophie the better for his sanity.

“Dobby! Winky!” They popped in, and were slightly taken aback at seeing a new person. To Harry’s amusement, they were each wearing a brand new Milwaukee Brewers t-shirt.

“You two and your clothing, no Dobby, I don’t want to know. Dobby, Winky, this is my new friend Sophie. Sophie, that’s Dobby, that’s Winky, they’re my……well my staff I guess.” The explanation of the emancipation hadn’t gotten so specific as to include these two.

“Nice to meet you Miss Sophie.” They both chimed at the same time.

“Good to meet you as well. What do you two do for Harry?” Dobby and Winky looked at each other for a second.

“Don’t worry guys, she knows what happened this summer. Winky is my photographer, Dobby threatens my enemies and handles my messages I guess.” The two of them nodded eagerly, and Sophie was instantly taken by them.

“Don’t laugh Sophie, he scared the crap out of Uncle Vernon, something I couldn’t do until last week. Speaking of messages, Dobby, go to Bill and find out if news of my plane ride has gotten out.” Dobby, whose face had gotten ugly as Vernon was mentioned, resumed his nodding.

“Yes Harry, when should I go?” Harry looked at his watch and calculated the time difference.

“Better go right now, it’s late evening over there and we don’t want to interrupt Bill and Fleur with……well we don’t want to interrupt them. If they don’t show up at his place, no big deal, we’ll try again tomorrow.”

“Yes Harry.”

“What shall I do Harry?”

“Whatever you want Winky, continue your exploring if you want to.” He wasn’t quite ready to share about the Map yet.

“Yes Harry.” The two of them popped off

“They’re cute, and for some reason they worship you.”

“It’s a long story, and while money is involved, it’s not the reason they work for me.” He told her of Dobby’s warnings four years earlier, and his help during the Tri-Wizard, as well as Winky’s role that year.

“Your life is like a fascinating book, you know that right?”

“More like a series if you ask me. Harry Potter and the.....oh no one would be that stupid.”

They grabbed their brooms and went off to the athletic field, stopping three times along the way as Harry met Josh Lyman, the History teacher (and the only one who went solo in his subject); Amy Allen, Professor of Ancient Runes; and Riley Poole, the school’s maintenance supervisor. Poole was a young version of Filch as far as Harry was concerned, one of the few true similarities with Hogwarts, though he was polite to the man.

Harry and Sophie flew for about an hour, most of it just casual flying. They had a couple of races, and while the Nike broom was fast, Harry on his Firebolt was faster. They switched brooms and Harry beat her again, but not by as much. Harry did a few dives and loop de loops and had a totally terrific time flying.

After getting back to school, they split up so they could shower. The entire gang collected Harry for dinner, and the promised movie afterward in the Cortez House Lounge. In honor of him they chose Monty Python and the Holy Grail, each House had a rather large collection of videos. They spent the rest of the night eating popcorn and swapping funny stories, with Peeves and the twins making up the bulk of Harry’s time. At midnight they said their goodnights, and since Claudia lived on the fifth floor, she walked up with Harry. As they got to her door, she stopped Harry.

“Careful?” He knew what she meant, but wanted it out loud anyway.

“She likes you Harry, I can tell.” Well she had known Sophie for five years he thought.

“She’s only known me for a day Claudia.....admittedly a day where we spent 14 hours together.” This should be an uh oh moment as he realized this, but strangely he was unaffected.

“My point exactly Harry, and it sounds like she opened up to you, which usually takes quite awhile. And am I right in guessing that you shared some things with her too?”

“Sounds like you’re not guessing, but yes you’re right.”

“Now I know how little drama you must want in your life right now.....” Harry was not angry about this, but took pains to make sure he wasn’t looking like this was amusing to him either.

“No, please don’t go there. I took off to avoid becoming a martyr, not because I wanted an easy life with no remotely hard decisions to make. Look, I’m not going to tell you exactly how I feel about Sophie, since I don’t really know myself. For all intents and purposes the only private time I’ve had today has been in the shower, and I need more time to think than that. I’ll say this to you though: Anytime after lunch I could have begged out of the rest of the day, saying I was jetlagged or something.....but I didn’t, did I?”

“No you didn’t, and you’re not the only one who’s made that connection. Sophie is one of my closest friends, and I can count on one hand the number of times I’ve spent 14 hours with her in one day.”

“Claudia, I wouldn’t have wanted to spend my day any other way.” He walked off toward his room, leaving behind a thoughtful Claudia. It also happened that Claudia’s room was on the corner, and Sophie and Reiko had been about to round the corner, but had stopped when they heard what the two had been talking about. Reiko looked at her now furiously blushing friend, but who also had a pleased smile on her face.

11 am

Office of the Deputy Headmaster, Great Lakes

Harry walked up to Heyman's door, gave a knock, and was bade to enter.

"Good morning Harry, have a good night?"

"I did sir, it was movie night in Cortez House, I had a great time."

"I'm glad to see that you've made some friends already."

"So am I, I'm very grateful to Professor Murray for having Sophie show me around yesterday, they're a great group."

"Yes they are, even Forrester (Harry successfully managed not to smile). Now if I may ask, what communication have you had with Britain since you left?"

"None directly, but I sent Dobby to check with my friend Bill Weasley, to see if they knew I was gone."

"Did they?"

"Not until I was already here. They had a meeting yesterday.....well it was morning here I guess, Bill told them that I had left the country."

"And Bill is a student friend of yours?"

"No, he's my friend Ron's brother. He works at Gringott's Bank, I think he's about 28 years old or so. He was one of my advisors along with my solicitor."

“Okay, so they don’t know where you are at the moment, but that’s going to change very soon.”

“How?”

“One of your new classmates is going to let it slip to a family member, and sooner rather than later The Chronicle will be on our floor, wanting to confirm and talk with you.”

“What can we do about that?”

“We can be proactive Harry, that’s what we can do. We can leak the story ourselves, and control the story, in as much as it can be controlled.” Harry thought about this for a second.

“Are we talking a press announcement? Or just you calling an old friend who works for the paper?”

“That’s up to you really. The key thing to remember is that you’re not in hiding, you simply left an abusive situation back in Britain. That said, if we don’t jump on this now, it might look like you are in hiding, and I don’t think you want that.”

“No I don’t.....well I guess if it’s going to get out anyway, go ahead and prepare a press release. I will not sit down for an interview though, everything will be dealt with through you or Professor Murray.”

“That’s what I had in mind, we’ll dwell heavily on you being attacked by that Snape fellow, and how you’ve had to fight for your life every year you were at Hogwarts. It will play much better here than in Britain of course.”

“Will you intercept the Howlers for me?”

“Absolutely, we do that anyway. We don’t believe in school kids getting Howlers in any case. And based on what I’ve read about you in the Daily Prophet, I’m going to assume that you’ll get a few.”

“More than likely. I have another question for you. Bill’s note said that Dumbledore promised to leave me alone until I make contact with him.....which I won’t anytime soon. Now let’s assume for a minute that Dumbledore is full of it and actually shows up here to want to ‘talk’ with me. What will you and Professor Murray do?”

“We won’t let him interfere with your education here Harry, not for one minute. It will be a long trip to walk away empty-handed from, but he will walk away empty-handed. You don’t have to lay eyes on him if you don’t want to.”

“I don’t, and thank you. Oh yeah, one more thing. You read about the incident this past June where my friends and I fought some Death Eaters?”

“I did.”

“Their trial is the first week in October, and I need to testify apparently. I’m assuming I need to request permission to leave school for that, so I am.”

“Yes you would, and consider it granted. I’ll speak to Professor Murray about it, and when the time comes we’ll notify your teachers.”

“Thank you sir.”

“Now, one last topic, tutorials. Are there any others you would like to do besides Professor Palmer? Aside from Defense, which are filled up, not that you have a crying need for tutoring in that subject mind you.”

“Hmmm.....How about History? Claudia was telling me that she’s going to take the NEWT without the class, and the two history books I’ve read this summer were really interesting.”

“That will be no problem, Professor Lyman will have some slots open. Any others? Charms perhaps?”

“I don’t think so sir, not this summer. I want to get up to speed in Transfiguration and History before I tackle anything else too hard.”

“Sounds like a good idea. Well enjoy the rest of your weekend, we’ll see you on Monday.”

“Yes sir, you too.” With that, Harry got up and left the office. He went back upstairs and found Winky already at work on the blueprint, which so far included only the hallways on the top two floors. She had already been stopped by two house-elves on cleaning rounds, but Raffles had been sent for and her presence had been explained to the Great Lakes elf staff, which numbered over 300.

He looked at his watch, Sophie and her group were due to come get him in a few minutes for lunch. It had been explained to him that few students ate breakfast on the weekends, and most just took the opportunity to sleep in. Harry himself hadn’t gotten to bed until after 1 am, staying awake long enough to read Bill’s message, and compose one to be delivered back by Dobby. Bill had also told him that Hedwig was now on her way to him, and he made a mental note to find out where Hedwig would be staying here.

Knock Knock!

Harry shooed Winky and her blueprint off and waited a few seconds before saying:

“Come in!”

Sophie walked in, by herself it seemed. She hit him with the same nervous smile that she had when they had met the day before. Harry had thought quite a bit about what Claudia had said the night before, and he had done some frank examining of his own emotions as well. He was initially wary of showing any feelings for someone this quickly, and in a new place to boot.....but another part of him said to just seize the moment and be with someone he really liked. That was the no-brainer part too, he knew he had feelings for her. What he had told Claudia the night before was true, he had never really considered trying to cut the night short, indeed he wouldn’t have minded it going on longer.

“Hey Harry.”

“Hey Sophie, sleep well?”

“Not too badly I guess. How’d it go with Professor Heyman?”

“It was fine, though I’ll make up something to scare Warrick with.”
That brought out a laugh, though the nervous smile soon returned.

“What did he want?”

“He wants to do a press release, saying that I’m here and all.”

“That sounds kind of tacky doesn’t it? I wouldn’t think you’d want that.”

“Oh it’s okay, he wants to do it so it doesn’t look like I’m hiding over here. It’s not a half bad idea anyway, I would love to see the look on Dumbledore’s face when he sees it.”

“What did Bill say?”

“They didn’t know I’d left until he told them, and that he and Remus have supposedly talked the old man into not doing any more hunting for me.”

“Supposedly?”

“Dumbledore rarely takes anyone’s advice but his own. Oh well, whatever happens will be interesting. What are we doing today?”

“Lunch first, then I guess we could play a pick-up game of Quidditch if we can find enough people. I don’t think there’re any Quodpot players here this summer.”

“Sounds good, though I would like to see the Owlery sometime today. Bill wrote me that my Hedwig, my owl, is now on the way. She was with the twins in the shop for the last week, and I’m sure she’s pretty traumatized by it.”

“That’s cool, we can go by there on the way back from lunch, it’s in the basement.” Harry raised his eyebrows.

“Speaking of that, when we go to Milwaukee I’ll need some winter gear. Reiko scared me enough about the snow that I’m going to buy the thickest winter coat money can buy.”

“That’s doable, we’re going to want to go the muggle clothing stores ourselves anyway. We’ll find out our slot tomorrow probably.”

“Our slot?”

“Yeah, for the portkeys. They send us out there a few at a time, because they know we’ll be going into muggle Milwaukee. I guess they don’t want fifty-some teenage wizards wandering around getting into trouble.”

“Will we need our wands?”

“Well none of us are of age, except for most of the seventh years. If we get caught using the wands, we’ll be in more trouble than we can shake that stick at.”

“So I guess I’m the bodyguard for the trip eh?”

“Pretty much, if a Kindred comes after us we’ll need you to fight him off.”

“Well I would prefer that that not happen, but I will make sure nothing happens to you, at all.” A soft smile now, one that caused Harry to make an important decision.

“Thanks Harry.”

“And when we’re there, are we to be expected to stay in our group, or can we wander off?”

“We can wander off if we want, why?”

“Because then you and I can wander off together and have lunch, just us.” The look on Sophie’s face was so priceless, he knew he had to buy a pensieve and quick so that he could save it.

“You know, you don’t have to do that for yesterday, you said thanks already.”

“Oh I’ll be doing something else for yesterday.....not that I’ve figured out what yet, but count on something. Come on Sophie, I know you heard what Claudia and I were talking about last night.” Eyes goggling now.

“You knew we were there?”

“No, but I suspected it and you confirmed it. We really need to have a poker night tonight or sometime soon, I think you would bluff about as well as Dobby.”

“Huh?”

“Your nervous smile when you got here, I kind of figured. And when you say ‘we’?”

“Reiko and I, we were coming up to talk to Claudia.....well about you.”

“Because she’s the leader of the group.”

“More or less, yes.”

“So was she right? Do you like me?” It took all of Harry’s considerable bravery to ask this question, one that he had never asked before. More bravery was needed for her answer.

“Yes I do.”

“I like you too, and I would be honored if you would join me for lunch in Milwaukee, just the two of us.”

"I would love that." Harry sighed in relief, and heard some movement in the closet.

"Okay you two, the entertainment is over!" Giggles could be heard in the closet, and Dobby then shut it all the way.

"Nothing like an audience is there?"

"Better than Reiko, Warrick, and Claudia I guess."

"Oh that wouldn't have happened, I don't have that much courage Sophie. I'd have waited until a devious plan to get rid of them occurred to me."

"Yeah, they would have made things difficult."

"If it helps any, I wouldn't ask anyone out in front of Ron or Hermione either."

"It doesn't matter Harry, the important thing is we're going to lunch together."

"That is the key issue isn't it? Well let's go to lunch now with the others, and for the sake of my nerves let's pray that Milwaukee is on Monday." Smiles from both, and they briefly squeezed hands and walked down to lunch.

After lunch Warrick cajoled three other students into playing Quidditch with them, and Harry got his first game in a long, long time.....except that he wound up playing Beater, in a game with no Seekers (not enough people). He found that while he liked the adrenaline rush, he didn't like that he was just a bit small to hit the one bludger that they used during the game. Each time he nailed it used much more of his energy than Warrick was having to, and he was well exhausted at the end of the 90 minute game.

All throughout lunch and the rest of the day, Reiko, Claudia, and Warrick managed to avoid asking any uncomfortable questions about what Sophie and Harry must have talked about, but to them Sophie's calm and constant smile were dead giveaways. There were no outward displays of affection between the two of them, but while they were at dinner, and afterward playing poker, they sat next to each other. Poker was played using Bertie Bott's Every Flavor Beans, and Dobby (who Harry had introduced along with Winky to the other three) cleaned their respective clocks.....though he wasn't too happy when he bit into his first dark bean, expecting it to be licorice.....and getting tar instead.

The assignments for Milwaukee were handed out the next day, and the powers that be (Heyman and Murray) just assumed that Harry was going with his new friends. The five of them, along with six other students, were assigned to Tuesday. Heyman took Harry aside after dinner and told him that the press release would happen on Wednesday, arrangements had already been made with The Chronicle. Hence, Harry was going to Flackter Alley on Tuesday, so that he wouldn't be ambushed by any reporters or any well meaning nutballs who might ask uncomfortable questions.

On Monday Harry had his first tutorials with David Palmer of Transfiguration and Josh Lyman of History, and he hit it off with both. Both were impressed with Harry's frank admissions that he was somewhat wanting in their subjects (E and A OWLs notwithstanding). Lyman in particular was a stark contrast from his Hogwarts counterpart, he had a great sarcastic streak and Harry was not pleased that he wouldn't get to see this in class on a twice weekly basis for two years. Palmer was serious about his subject, but seemed much more relaxed than McGonagall. Harry automatically (and somewhat unwillingly) had taken to comparing his new teachers with his old ones, and he thought Palmer was much more like Sprout. The gang talked all through dinner about what their itinerary would be the next day. They were due to leave by portkey at 9 am, and the return trip was to take place at 6 pm.

Tuesday, August 6, 1996

Flackter Alley, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

They arrived in the middle a designated area in the northwest corner of Flackter Alley, two groups hanging on to baseball bats. The first group was Harry's group, who were under Claudia's leadership, and the second group which was under the direction of Senior Year student Amelia Gardner. The leaders were responsible for the portkeys and for getting their group back at the appointed time. Gardner simply tossed her bat to a nervous looking Freshman to be and told him to carry it for the rest of the day, and heaven help him if he lost it. Harry, figuring that as the new guy he would have to carry the bat, used his wand to shrink it, and put it in his pocket. He looked to Claudia

"Where are we going first?"

"The bank first, Sophie and I have our money from the scholarships, but the rest of you need to.....or do you Harry?"

"I had some money transferred over on Monday from Britain, though I'm still getting used to the idea that we use muggle money here."

"Makes it easier for us to go into the muggle places and spend it. Blending in is the whole idea Harry." He remembered Heyman's lament about American wizards being too close to muggles and losing some of their wizard-ness in the bargain, and he had to agree with some of the sentiment.

"I can see that." The five of them moved off in the direction of the bank, which turned out to be a rather unassuming structure from the outside, but was cavernous on the inside. The goblins ran this bank too, and after he received his new key, Harry felt free to ask the goblin at the counter about this.

"Do goblins run all wizard banks around the world?" Said goblin looked at him with some surprise.

"All but in China, they have never trusted our kind." With his new found interest in history Harry would have liked to ask a few more questions about this, but there was a line behind him. He did have one important question though.

"At Gringott's in Britain my house elf was allowed to make withdrawals for me. Will that be the case here as well?"

“Yes it will Mr. Potter, as long as he has your key and a written note from you authorizing the withdrawal. For deposits you will only need the key.”

“Thank you sir.”

Harry, Reiko, and Warrick took their rides down the depths individually, as their vaults were all in different parts of the underground complex. Harry withdrew ten thousand dollars, having no clue about how much things cost here. He had asked questions of his friends of course, but the exchange rate was somewhat complicated. Add to this that Harry hadn't actually bought his school things personally in three years, and the cost of them then was one of life's details that had just slipped his mind. Once they were all back in the lobby, Claudia set the agenda for the rest of the morning.

“Let's do the easy thing first and get our books, then we can get Reiko and Warrick over to the apothecary to get their Potions stuff.”

They made the walk to Schuler Books to get their books and other materials. All five of them were taking the core classes of Defense, Transfiguration, and Charms, they only differed on the others. Reiko was doing Wandless and Potions, Claudia Arithmancy and Herbology, and Warrick was taking Potions and Ancient Runes. Harry wasn't pleased to find out he would be alone in Muggle Studies, but they assured him that the much talked about Jonas would be in there with him. Harry collected all his book, fourteen in total (including four history books), and was appalled at how much they cost ($490), but really he got off pretty lightly. Warrick's Runes book alone cost over $60, as did Claudia's text for Arithmancy. Harry shrunk all of the bags and put everything into one large bag.....and after playing rock, paper, scissors, Warrick had to carry it.

The apothecary was next, and more money was siphoned off. Warrick and Reiko were not on scholarship, but their well-off parents were traveling during the summer, which is why they had stuck around Great Lakes. Warrick had confessed to Harry that his uncle was a professional athlete in a muggle sport he wouldn't name, and thus kept him well-supplied with spending money. Reiko's parents both taught at Tecumseh in Oklahoma, and she was not allowed to attend there, to avoid the possible appearance of bias.

The first three stops had consumed most of the morning, and Claudia called a break for lunch. After confirming that Harry still had the bat on him, they started throwing around ideas of where to go to eat. Harry and Sophie looked at each other, he cleared his throat.

“Umm.....Sophie and I are going to have to abandon you for lunch.” Knowing looks passed amongst the other three.

“Well, well, we were wondering when you would do something.”

“Wonder no longer Warrick, we’re going to go out into muggle Milwaukee and find a nice restaurant for.....well for our first date.” Reiko put her arm around Sophie.

“The first of many perhaps?”

“We can only hope.”

“I’m happy for you two, I really am.”

“Thanks Claudia, now if only you and Jonas can see the light.....my goodness it only took me a day to figure out who I wanted to take out.” Harry grabbed Sophie’s hand and they walked away to the sound of Claudia loudly protesting that she didn’t know what he was talking about. Sophie remembered something, and turned back to their friends.

“Oh hey, let’s meet at the gateway at 1:30 okay?” It was now 11:30, and they all agreed.

The two of them walked, still holding hands, toward the gateway, which turned out to be nothing more than an arch over the top of a normal looking wooden doorway. They exited in the middle of, ironically enough, West Michigan Street. The gang had explained to Harry that the government preferred its ‘Alleys’ to be in larger cities, and Milwaukee was twice as close to school as Detroit was, despite Detroit being in the same state as the school.

Sophie had been in this part of town on each of her book buying excursions over the years, and she knew of a good little Italian restaurant nearby called Mario's. She and her friends had passed by it each time, but they had never gone in (preferring fast food). It was still a little before the lunch rush, and they got a nice table in the corner.

"This is nice, I've always wanted to come in here."

"I love the smell in these kinds of places. Last week was kind of my tour of restaurants of London, I like them."

"I guess you didn't get much eating out growing up."

"Once a year on the average, when babysitter arrangements failed."

"You won't get much of that at school though, we're not encouraged to go into the nearby towns much. You know, strange teenagers around, people will ask questions."

"I can understand that, but the food at school is really good."

"Better than over there?" Harry had purposefully gotten out of the habit of using the name Hogwarts, and Sophie had soon started to do the same.

"Not better or worse, just different. Most of the dishes are different, so it's hard to compare.....and I tend to compare everything about there with here." The waiter arrived with their drinks, and they gave their orders to him. They kept the tone light throughout the next minutes, throwing out ideas about Claudia and Jonas, Sophie resisting Harry's pleas to go out for the Quidditch team with him, and doing some people watching. Their food came, a nice lasagna for her, stromboli for him, and they dug in.

"Harry, can I ask you something?"

"Does anyone ever say no to that question? You can always ask me anything Sophie."

“Why did you ask me out?” Well he wasn’t expecting that question for sure.

“Because I like you, you’re wonderful and sweet. Why did you say yes?”

“Because I feel so comfortable around you, and because you’re wonderful as well.”

“I’m not sweet?”

“Of course you are, I didn’t want to swell your head.” He stuck his tongue out at her.

“It’s at the normal size right now, I rely on my friends to keep me grounded. My British ones did a great job for five years, now you guys have to take over.”

“We will, don’t worry.”

“My girlfriend will have the hardest job of all though, so get ready.”

“So one date a relationship makes?”

“If you like, I only speak for myself on this, and for what I want.”

“My boyfriend Harry, that has a nice ring to it. I’m sure I’ll get to use it a lot when school starts as we introduce you to everyone.”

“My girlfriend Sophie.....who when word gets out will receive a mass of overseas Howlers. Welcome to my world.” Sophie started giggling.

“That was a yes by the way Harry.”

“Thank goodness, I would have moved to Australia if you had said no.”

“Sure you would have. I’m glad you’re here Harry.”

"Me too, and I know we're not rushing things Sophie. We've spent a ton of time together these past few days, more than most prospective couples do before they figure it out."

"I know.....well except for Jonas and Claudia." Harry grinned.

"I feel as if a great weight has been taken off my shoulders since I got here, it would have taken me much longer to work up the courage even to like you, let alone ask you out, if I was still over there. But now.....I just feel so relaxed, like normal teenage pressures will be nothing compared to what I've already had to go through."

"I wasn't sure how to tell you this, but I noticed that during your first day, it was like the pressure was just dripping off you the whole day, not to return. I have to ask this though: What if that war of yours over there heats way up, and you have to go back?"

"One, its not my war; two, I don't ever HAVE to go back there. Once school is done, then I'll choose where I want to live. A lot of factors will be involved, and the war will be a tiny one. Sophie, Voldemort is just one man, admittedly a very powerful one. There are 20,000 other witches and wizards over there, they can take him if they really want to."

"I'm sure they can, at least they don't have the Lycans and Kindred ready to go after them."

"Every society has it's challenges. Whatever happens Sophie, I'm not going to let anything happen to you. If something does, then I'll be dead on the ground with a large pile of bodies around me."

"That won't happen I'm sure, but it's nice to have someone who cares about me that much. I would be right there fighting with you too you know."

"Here's to never needing a demonstration." He raised his glass of Coke to hers, and they toasted. They left after dessert (they shared a piece of tiramisu), and slowly walked back the way they came. Before they came in eye view of the gateway, Harry took her in his arms and held her for a moment.

“That was a lovely lunch Harry, thank you.”

“I had a wonderful time because of the company, that makes everything else better.” They kissed briefly and tenderly. Harry’s smile seemed permanently applied as he put his arm around Sophie, and they continued their walk.

As they approached the gateway, they ran into the other three just coming out. It looked as though they were exiting a small store, but as with The Leaky Cauldron, muggles seemed not to see it. Harry and Sophie had their arms around each other, and took another long ribbing about their new status, not that it bothered them. There was a large mall that was about a fifteen minute walk away, and they journeyed over there to get some new clothes. Normal wizard robes were not used in Great Lakes, except for special occasions, and Warrick had seen Harry’s and pronounced them adequate for the once or twice this year he’d need them.

The first stop was a men’s store, where Harry and Warrick could get their clothes. Harry had only grown a couple of inches in the last year, while Warrick had shot up three inches (Harry was about 5’6”, while Warrick was 6’2”), so they both needed new everything. The three girls put them through their shopping paces, with Reiko dealing with her boyfriend, and Sophie advising Harry. Claudia advised all of them, and was more or less the tiebreaker.....not that there were many disagreements, the two boys pretty much went along with everything the girls wanted. The whole thing took 45 minutes, and when it was said and done, Harry had two new suits, two more sport jackets, and a variety of shirts, jeans, and other things.

The girls went shopping next, and both of the boys declared that they would rather undergo emergency root canals than watch. Warrick went to the sporting goods store, and Harry visited an optometrist. The exam took quite awhile, and Harry left the muggle mail address for Great Lakes. He ordered two pairs of glasses, and a set of contacts. Warrick came to fetch him, and they went to get the girls. By now it was after 4 pm, and things were going to have to get wrapped up soon if they were to make it back by the appointed time. The five of them spent some time in a video store, picking out some titles for future movie nights (they couldn't exactly run out to Blockbuster on a school night). On the way out, Harry spied an art store, and without saying anything swung in there. The store was full of prints of various paintings, and he knew what he wanted to do.

"Guys!" The other four came into the store, looking curiously at Harry.

"Sophie, last Friday you gave up your entire day so that you could show this strange foreigner around. I promised you I would do something for you for that, and here we are. Choose."

"Thank you was enough Harry, you don't have to do this." He gave her a quick hug, but his mind was not to be changed.

"It's not like I'm buying you a car Sophie, pick something out and hang it on your wall at school."

"Oh okay, thank you." She and Reiko (who would also have to look at it all year) spent 20 minutes looking around before Sophie spotted just the thing, a print of a Manet watercolor of a woman with an umbrella. It looked really great, and everyone agreed that she had to go with it. Harry paid for the print, received a kiss on the cheek for his trouble, and they all made it back to Flackter Alley with 15 minutes to spare. They went to the portkey area and waited for the appointed time, the other group arriving a few minutes later than they did. They popped off back to school, just in time for dinner.

The headline of The Chronicle was very descriptive:

Harry Potter Escapes Hogwarts, chooses Great Lakes as his safe haven

By Alan Berg, Senior Reporter

"We have just learned that Harry Potter, the iconic 16 year old British wizard, has withdrawn from Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry in Scotland and has enrolled at Great Lakes Magical Institute for his final two years of schooling. A statement was released today by Great Lakes Headmistress Joanne Murray announcing Potter's new situation. Potter is not, and will not, be made available for interviews, Murray said, but she stressed a key point that it was Potter who contacted Great Lakes, rather than Great Lakes soliciting Potter."

"The reasons given for the transfer included the attack on Potter by Severus Snape, who was at the time the Professor of Potions at Hogwarts. Snape was found guilty of assault at trial last week, and sentenced to three years of house arrest. Said Murray in the statement 'Due to the unrelenting series of attacks against Harry, both mentally and physically, while at Hogwarts, he felt it would be best for his physical well-being and his sanity that he continue his education elsewhere.'"

"Readers of The Chronicle will remember that right before Snape's attack on Potter, the teenager was given his emancipation by the British Minister of Magic Cornelius Fudge, making him a legal adult. Word from a British source close to the situation indicates that Potter, who has a death warrant on his head by British Dark Wizard Lord Voldemort, expected an attack of some sort, and strongly suggested that it would come from Hogwarts. The source also implies that relations between Potter and Hogwarts Headmaster Albus Dumbledore are now incredibly strained. The source further indicates that Potter holds Dumbledore personally responsible for not only the attack on him by Snape, but for most, if not all, of the various incidents at Hogwarts that have endangered his life over the last five years."

"British Minister Fudge was unavailable for comment, but his office did confirm Potter's emancipation and many of the reasons for it. Hogwarts Headmaster Dumbledore was also unavailable for comment, but our British source tells us that he was unaware of Potter's destination as of press time. It is a well repeated rumor that Headmaster Dumbledore and Headmistress Murray are not on a friendly basis, and this might have contributed to Potter's choice of school."

“We at The Chronicle will keep you our readers up to date as new developments occur. We will endeavor to obtain an interview with Harry Potter, and will apprise you of reaction from Hogwarts School and Great Britain as it happens.”

Everyone in the dining hall was reading the same article at breakfast, including Harry, who had a note attached to his paper saying his copy was on the Publisher. Heyman caught his gaze and raised his eyebrows in question.....Harry responded with a thumbs up, but he was mostly too busy daydreaming about how much this would be killing Dumbledore (figuratively). Harry stood up and raised his glass of juice.

“Well I’ve been outed folks, here’s to the Great Lakes Magical Institute!” Glasses were raised all over the room. The faculty, sitting at two tables in the corner, looked very pleased. Claudia spoke for the table:

“There was no going back the minute I drew my wand in anger on Albus Dumbledore, the rest of this has just been window dressing. I’ve made some great new friends, and the next two years are going to be the best of my life, I know this for sure.” He sat back with a large grin on his face, as Sophie took his hand and squeezed it.

Harry would spend the next week reading multiple history books, both wizard and muggle, as he familiarized himself with his new subjects. He flew every day, and soon got his flying rhythm back. He even played some soccer with Warrick and a few others on the athletic field, though Warrick mocked him for days afterward as the only English kid alive who couldn’t play a decent game of soccer. Harry shot back that it was unfortunate that Warrick kept getting slaughtered at poker by an excitable house elf. The two of them got along so well that they started plotting to somehow rig Harry’s sorting so that he would wind up in Cortez., which according to Warrick, was the weakest House in Defense anyway.

During this time there was no contact from Dumbledore of any kind, and Bill and Remus both told him that Dumbledore wasn’t even bringing him up at Order meetings. Snape had so far abided by the terms of his house arrest, though Dumbledore was mum on that subject as well. Harry was looking forward to the day that he didn't have to think about Dumbledore at all, but had great difficulty accepting that the old man had surrendered. The Howlers started coming in two days after the article in The Chronicle, as The Daily Prophet had jumped on the news of Harry's move. In an owl from Peter, Harry learned that the reaction to it was split about 50/50, with the half on his side saying that Harry had a right to do whatever he wanted, the other half agreeing as long as what Harry wanted was in Great Britain and Hogwarts.

On Friday Harry sent Dobby with a message to the twins, asking them to set up a meeting with Ron, Hermione, Ginny, Neville, and Luna for the next night.....but only to have the first three show up at the shop not knowing what was going on, and at the last minute. It was left unsaid that they should be checked for any surveillance charms, but the twins had surely learned a lesson from the last time.

9 pm (London time, 3 pm Michigan time)

Harry flooed through to the twins' trunk, and climbed out the trapdoor to find himself in what looked like their laboratory. He gingerly made his way through the room, trying desperately not to touch anything for fear it would explode on him. This was only the third time he had been in the shop actually. The first time had been right after he'd gotten his passport and visa (just to see the place, and get some samples), the second the day after when he had to flee from Dumbledore. He left the lab and walked over to the door of the twins' living room, where he saw them:

"Hello guys." He must have been quieter than he thought, because all five of them jerked up in surprise. Luna and Neville smiled at him and walked over to greet him. The other three looked ambiguous though.

"Where are Fred and George?"

“Right behind you mate.” Harry almost jumped out of his skin, he turned to see the must-have-been Disillusioned twins.

“Gee thanks guys, first I somehow survive an international portkey, then you two try to give me heart failure.” Fred’s wink was very subtle, and not seen by his siblings or Hermione.

“All part of the service there partner.” He took Harry aside and whispered: “They’re clean Harry, no charms of any kind on them. I guess all three tried to rip the old man a new one at an Order meeting, so he’s backed off.”

“Thanks mates, I appreciate it.”

“Go easy on them Harry, they really have been caught in the middle, with both you and Dumbledore questioning their loyalty, it hasn’t been easy on them.”

“I will, don’t worry so much guys.” They both cuffed him on the back of the head, and Harry went back into the room. He walked up to Hermione and gave her a hug, and one to Ginny.

“Sorry, no hug for you Ron, I wouldn’t want Hermione to get jealous.” Ron managed a smile at hearing that, and settled for a handshake. Harry could sense the awkwardness emanating from the three of them, so he started off with a softball:

“So Ginny, congratulations on making Prefect, your Mum must have gone through the roof.”

“She did, it was the happiest I’ve seen her since we got back. How have you been?”

“I’m really good actually, I like my new school. How did the old man react to the news?”

“He wasn’t as surprised as you might think, Bill had let him know that you were leaving the country.”

"I know, I told him to tell Dumbledore. I figured if he had a little information he might not try anything."

"It must have worked. Why all the way in Michigan? Why there?"

"Because my Headmistress and Dumbledore aren't too friendly. From what I gather he's pretty chummy with the ones in Toronto and Salem, and Great Lakes is a very good school." Little time as she had had to prepare for this, Hermione had some questions she'd been wanting to ask for weeks now, and took over the pseudo-interrogation from Ginny.

"Was it really that bad for you at Hogwarts Harry? Is there something we should have seen, but didn't?"

"Yes, it was that bad Hermione.....and I don't know if you lot could have seen it, since you were in it. Look at the people in this room now (the twins were outside), we were the only friends we all had, except for Dean and Seamus kind of.....well not kind of for you Ginny of course (she smiled). Ron, Hermione, I think you were tarred with my brush. Other students just assumed you were trouble because the trouble always happened around me. It's like the three of us couldn't dare get mad at each other, because the others wouldn't have anywhere else to turn. You may still see some of the residue from that, but I think you'll make a lot of new friends this year." Ron seemed to perk up a little at hearing that.

"How long ago did you start thinking about leaving?"

"The day I got back to Privet Drive.....last year. I thought about it off and on all year, and decided for sure when Dumbledore put me back with those people again this year. I guess it wasn't prominent enough in my thoughts for Snape to pull it out during our lessons, or maybe he did and wanted me to leave." That was certainly plausible enough, Harry leaving Hogwarts would have put a dance in Snape's step to be sure.

"Is there nothing we can do to get you to change your mind?" Harry started laughing when he heard that, it was so sweet, yet so obtuse at the same time. He reached out and squeezed her hand for a brief moment.

“Hermione, it’s done. The moment I set foot in that school, I was committed, and nothing whatsoever has happened to make me change my mind about it. I’ve made some pretty cool friends so far, with more to come I’m sure as their friends come back for Fall term. I’m happy guys, I’m happier than I’ve ever been in my life. Would you deny me that?”

“And we don’t count? You would abandon us?”

“Ron.....it’s like I told your brother last month: I would risk my life to save yours in a second, but I won’t risk it just to make you happy. The only reason I can possibly think of to stay at Hogwarts is you five, and that just doesn’t outweigh all the bad.” Harry had decided that in telling his story to them, he would use Bill as his substitute for Peter, given that Bill had taken pains to give the Order that impression. Ron looked embarrassed at Harry’s salvo, and flushed a little.

“I guess I don’t blame you for leaving really, but what about You Know Who?”

“What about him?” That response even left Neville and Luna looking a bit taken aback.

“What if he goes on the offensive?”

“Well leaving aside that I don’t much care what he does, what could I do about it even if I did?” This was one of the rare times in life that Ron got to explain what he thought was the obvious.

“We heard the Prophecy, you’re supposed to be the one who stops him.”

“Says Trelawney, and even on the off chance that she’s right, I’m kind of ill-prepared to fight him right now aren’t I? Gee, I wonder whose fault that is? I will not become a martyr for a cause I don’t believe in, for a leader that I don’t believe in.”

“Do you hate Dumbledore that much?”

“Yes Ron, I do. I’ll never forgive him for my childhood, and there’s nothing he can do to make up for it. If I ever catch him alone he will be attacked, though I’ll fall short of handing him over to Voldemort.”

“And doing this will help you recover what’s left of your childhood?”

“I really wish you would get it out of your head that you can talk me out of this Hermione. I don’t know whether it will ultimately work out for me in the States, but so far so good. As to the war.....let’s add it up: you five, the twins, Molly and Arthur, Remus and Tonks, and a couple of other people that shall remain nameless.....those are the people in magical Britain that I care about, and who care about me. The rest of them can be Voldemort’s sport for all I care, let them take care of themselves. You guys I know can take care of yourselves.”

“That’s very cold Harry, it’s not like you.”

“It’s the truth Hermione, no more and no less. I’ve already gotten twenty-seven Howlers in the last week alone. Oh I haven’t heard them of course, the school disposes them in cases like this, but I know what they must have said: ‘You’re a coward Potter.’ ‘You’re running from You Know Who!’ ‘Dumbledore knows best.’ All because I decided I wanted a change, and they in their infinite wisdom think I should follow orders. The hell with them. I want my chance at happiness, I want my chance at having a normal teenage life.....normal for a wizard anyway. I saw my ticket out and I took it. Now I want all of you to look me in the eye right now and tell me that you wouldn’t have done the same!” The vehemence of Harry’s last sentence surprised all but Neville (nothing about Harry surprised him anymore after listening to him threaten the Dursleys). Ginny spoke first.

“Yeah Harry, I guess in your position I might have done the same.....but I would have picked Australia.” Harry managed a smile at hearing that. Ron was next:

“I don’t know what I would have done, but I won’t try to talk you out of it anymore.”

“Same for me Harry, it won’t be the same without you at Hogwarts.”

“No, it’ll be much quieter for all of you, and that’s a good thing.” Now that everyone seemed to have accepted the inevitable, though Neville and Luna were noticeably and suspiciously silent on the topic, Ron had a question to ask.

“Since you’re not really coming back, can I have The Marauders Map?” Hermione looked at him in exasperation:

“Ron!”

“Well he won’t need it, and it’s dead useful and you know it.”

“Good grief Ron.”

“Well he does have a point Hermione, I won’t need it, but I’m not ready to part with it just yet.”

“Why not?”

“I’m going to try to make a similar one for Great Lakes, Remus will be coming by later on with some instructions for me.”

“Are the Marauders going to ride again?”

“Could be, could be. I want to get a better lay of the land there first.” Ginny broke in hesitantly:

“Now technically this doesn’t involve trying to talk you back here, but Mum will want to know that you’re coming back for Christmas at least.” Oh why oh why did she have to bring that up Harry thought.

“That’s four months away Ginny, I don’t know what I’ll be doing yet. A lot of my friends over there stay at school year round, so I might stay there to be with them, they don’t have families to go back to.”

“They’re orphans, like you?”

“Not technically Luna, their families won’t have them back because they’re magical, and the families aren’t.” Ah, they all thought. They could see how Harry would relate to that, and have sympathy for it.

“We can all understand that, but remember The Burrow is always open to you.”

“I know Ginny, and I can promise that I’ll come visit next summer at least. Right now though, I want to keep both of my feet in America. Guys, this will be my last visit to Britain until summer, unless something really horrible happens here.”

“What about the Death Eater trial?”

“Oh yeah, I forgot about that, I’ll be back for that too. Fudge and I talked about it during our meeting.”

Harry was then prevailed upon to share what went on during his Fudge meeting, although he left out the Peter and Percy details. He figured that Dumbledore didn’t need to know that his spy’s cover had been blown. As was his new rule, he told them nothing that he didn’t mind the old man knowing. The twins joined them soon after, and the seven of them swapped stories and remembrances for the next two hours. The twins told a lot of previously unheard stories about their first two years at Hogwarts, and a lot of things about their reputation were cleared up somewhat. Harry told them a few details about his new school, but he changed the subject whenever his new friends were brought up, he didn’t want them to do any comparing.....and he definitely wasn’t going to tell them anything about Sophie, though that wasn’t going to work both ways, she would get a complete report later.

Remus joined them after awhile, and Harry excused himself and the twins so that they could talk Marauders Map.

“You got my note, good. Can it be done?”

“Yes, but you’ll have to do it, unless you want me to sneak in.” Oh no, Harry didn’t want the wards set off at school because of him.

“No, I don’t think that would be wise. What will I have to do?”

“What you have to do is somehow get into every room in the place and cast a certain spell, which will activate that part of your map. How far along is your blueprint?”

“Good question, I would say about 2/3 or so, though I haven’t been in much more than a couple of classroom, common rooms, and the dining hall. Dobby and Winky are handling that. They assure me that the whole thing will be done in a couple of weeks. I’ve made a point of not wandering around on my own, I’m trying to make a good impression on the teachers that are there.”

“Well that’s a smart idea, but those two can’t do the spell work. You’ll have to do that yourself, or draft some help. You need to charm the parchment first, then use the spell I’m going to give you in every room you have on there. Once you get each room done, it will appear on the Map, and you’ll be able to pick up the magical energy of each person within it.....that’s how the names appear on the Map. Remember, even if you don’t get all the rooms right away, a partial Map will still be useful to you.” He handed over a piece of parchment with some instructions on it, and Harry pocketed it.

“Yes it will, thanks Remus. How long did it take you four to make the first one?”

“It took the four of us about three months, and a lot of detentions to get into certain offices. Speaking of which, what are you going to do with the Hogwarts’ version?” Harry checked to see that Ron and company weren’t within earshot.

“I’m giving it to Neville, Ron would run amok with it, and I think he’d do something dumb and get it confiscated.”

“Like you once did.....oh yeah, it was twice wasn’t it?”

“I was young and foolish Remus, but I learn from my mistakes, Ron has trouble with that. Plus, Ron has taken a few too many shots at me over the last couple of hours about what I’m doing, and I’m not going to reward him for it.” Remus looked over at the twins, who seemed to be in agreement with this.

“You could give it to Ginny or Hermione.”

“Nah, Hermione wouldn’t do anything useful with it, and I don’t know about Ginny.....I just feel better about the idea of giving it to Neville. He has a lot of potential in him, and if I can help just a little bit.....”

“Speaking of Ginny, you know Mum’s always hoped that you and she would.....”

“No thanks Fred, but I’m just too close to you and your family to risk it all by trying to date Ginny. I don’t want you lot coming at me with drawn wands if it doesn’t work out.”

“We would never.....okay, yeah we would, you’re right.”

“Besides, despite having known your sister for four years I barely know her. I’m not risking your wrath for a long distance relationship with a girl I hardly know. Anyway, c’mon, they sound like their getting restless back in there.” Harry led the other three back into the room, to be met with curious stares.

“Guys, I need to get going, dinner starts in half an hour and it would look strange if I didn’t show. I’ll send Hedwig over every couple of weeks or so, we can keep in touch that way.” The last thing he wanted them to know about was the trunk. Leaving aside that it might get out to Dumbledore, he didn’t want them pressuring him to visit all the time through it. This whole session had made him quite uncomfortable, and while he still loved them all, the guilt trips being laid were starting bug him. They all said their goodbyes, and he was able to dodge Hermione’s request to see his portkey by showing her an American quarter that he had in his pocket. He quickly walked back to the lab and did his floo business, emerging in his own still unfurnished trunk. He left the Map instructions inside the top layer of the trunk and was just about to leave for dinner when there was a knock on the door.

“Come in!”

It was Sophie, coming to get him for dinner. She was the only one he had told about where he was going (though not yet how he got there).

“How did it go?”

“It was fine I guess, a bit strange really, but fine.”

“Strange? How?”

“I don’t know, I can’t quite put my finger on it. When I figure it out you’ll be the first to know.” She smiled and grabbed his hand.

“Sounds like a plan, c’mon, it’s dinner time.”

“Cool, I’m starving. When it’s over though, let’s the five of us come back in here, I have a plan that I’m going to need your help on.”

“What kind of plan?”

“The sneaky kind, you’ll love it. It involves some mapmaking.”

End chapter

Author Notes: The chapter title means nothing to the story, it's just my favorite line from Goblet (the book). This story is in no way HBP compliant (how could it be, being also a sixth year story), but I am going to feel free to appropriate some characters from it, though not in the way that canon does. It's the same way I've done with taking from Straw, just a few characters and situations from there. All locations will be at Great Lakes unless I specify otherwise. Oh yeah, one last thing. I'm trying some Latin for a couple of spells in this chapter. I'm using a Latin translator I found online, but the conjugation is probably off, any Latin buffs will forgive me I hope.

"Mapmaking?"

"I'll show you when we're all in here, and it should be in here, we don't want any prying eyes." Harry had seen this look on people before.

"Uh oh, I don't have a good feeling about this."

"Oh it's nothing heinous Sophie, I promise you, just some harmless fun."

"If you say so." She looked a little dubious, but squeezed his hand tighter. They walked down to the fourth floor and gathered up the others. After dinner, Harry led them all back up to his room. A room which all of them had seen at some point over the last weeks, but they had never hung out there, preferring the creature comforts of Cortez Lounge to Harry's bare shell of a room. There were three chairs, now occupied by Claudia, Sophie, and Harry, who crowded them around the bed that the other two were sitting on. Harry walked over to his trunk and took out the Map.

"I would like you all to see something. It's called The Marauder's Map." He unrolled it, said that he solemnly swore that he was up to no good, and showed it to them. Remus had assured him that it worked no matter how far from Hogwarts it was, and he was proven right. The other four looked at the Map with some fascination, Claudia had the first reaction.

"Is thing a game or something? I see your buddy Dumbledore on here, moving around.....wait a sec."

"You got it, this is a map of Hogwarts and everybody in it, in real time. Dumbledore never seems to sleep, he's the only one moving, in his office." The other Hogwarts teachers were snug in their beds, and all of them seemed to be there except for the new Potions guy and Remus (who of course had his own house now). Harry started pointing out people, they had heard about all his teachers by now.

"That's McGonagall, there's McDowell, she replaced my mum teaching Runes.....Flitwick is really cool, I'll miss him the most of the teachers. The Map is kind of hard to read when all of the students are there, but I managed to learn." Reiko was the most fascinated by it.

"Where did you get this? Who made it?"

"I got it from the twins a few years ago, they 'found' it in the Caretaker's office."

"That Filch guy you told us about?"

"Right in one Claudia, apparently he didn't know what it was. You need a wand to use it, and he didn't have one. My dad and his three best friends made it, back in their schooldays at Hogwarts. I don't know how it got confiscated, and if he does, Remus isn't telling. Given that there is coverage of the girls' rooms, my mum must have helped too."

"This is so cool, I wish we had one of those for this place." Harry looked at Warrick and smiled.

"Funny you should mention that Warrick. Winky!" She popped in.

"Yes Harry?"

"Let's see the blueprint you've been working on." She went into the closet and retrieved it. Harry spread it out on the bed between Warrick and Reiko. The first three floors were mostly filled in, with the remaining work to be done with the student floors. Winky decided to stick around, in case they had any further instructions for her.

“So you want your own Map for this school?”

“It would be convenient Claudia, a lot of work upfront, but convenient.”

“I take it Remus gave you the instructions on how to do this?”

“He did, just now. I spent the last few hours in London.” The others just assumed it was a portkey and didn’t even ask how he got there.

“Well he is a Lycan, he obviously can’t come here.”

“So I’ve been told, and I also went there to talk about things to my friends. Ron, Hermione, and Ginny didn’t get much of an explanation when I left, and I thought they deserved one face to face.”

“How hard did they try to talk you out of it?”

“Pretty hard, but only Hermione really thought she could actually succeed. The other two were just going through the motions I think. I talked with Remus right before I came back, and he gave me the instructions.”

“And you think we can make this Map?”

“I’m sure as anything not going to try by myself, and I think we can make a nice shell of one.”

“What do you mean?”

“I mean for the time being, we don’t have a good way of getting in the rooms of the other students, so it’ll be hard to put them on the Map. You have to cast a spell in each room in order to do it.”

“For the time being?”

“The twins are working on something, trying to attach spells to solid objects on a time-delay. They got the idea from muggle grenades I think, though I’m not sure I want to know. They think it would be great for pranks, since you wouldn’t have to have your wand out at the scene.” There was some silence as they worked this over in their minds. Reiko was still looking over the Hogwarts Map.

“I’m with you Harry, I think we should have one of these, at least one. This would be fun if we used it right.”

“My girl is right of course, I’m in.” Claudia had a question though.

“How much mayhem are you planning Harry? Are you going to use this to sneak off campus?”

“I have no need to sneak off campus Claudia, neither am I interested in harmful fun, just the harmless kind.”

“Okay, based on that, I’ll do my part in getting it going. Who’ll keep it once it’s done?” Harry had thought of this, he figured it should either be him (since it was his idea), or Claudia (who was the leader of the group), until he thought of a third option.

“I’m thinking that Dobby and Winky can be the custodians of it. When someone wants the Map, they just call out to one of them, and they’ll bring it. Is that good for you Winky?”

“Oh yes Harry, that is fine with Dobby and me.” Claudia saw the same compromise.

“It works for me, and I feel confident in speaking for Jonas. I got an owl from him today by the way, he’s looking forward to meeting you Harry. Sophie, are you with us?”

“Of course, it seems like fun.”

“Good, I was hoping you’d all be with me on this.”

“What’s the plan Harry?”

“Good question Claudia. Look at the blueprint for the basement and floors one through three, what have Dobby and Winky missed?” Reiko picked up the blueprint and peered closely at it.

“It looks good as far as I can tell, there are even a couple of rooms that I didn’t know about. What do you think Warrick?”

“I agree, I didn’t know about that room in the basement corner there. Winky, what’s in there?”

“It’s a meeting room Mr. Warrick, I went in there at night last week. It has a round table and lots of chairs.” Sophie looked at Claudia.

“Is that the staff meeting room then? I always thought that it was on the third floor with the offices.”

“So did I, or maybe the room is for a purpose we don’t know about. What else was in there Winky?”

“Nothing else, except for a television and a video player, like in the Lounges.”

“Well it’s good that you got into it, but it can’t be anything too important.”

“Remus says that we need the blueprint to be complete before we start doing the spells. Winky, how much longer do you think you’ll need?”

“Another week maybe Harry, it takes longer because Dobby cannot draw.” Indeed the blueprint was better than the original Map, and Harry had seen Dobby’s drawing skills (they left much to be desired). Dobby usually just operated as the lookout.

“That’s fine Winky, you’ve done a great job with this. We can start doing the work next weekend. Will Jonas be back by then?”

“No, he’s coming back with the rest of them, two weeks from today.”

“We can wait until then, we’ll come up with a plan that involves all six of us. Start thinking of nicknames for yourselves though, so we can put them on the new Map.” Sophie looked at the Hogwarts Map.

“Which one of them was your dad? Mooney must be Remus.”

“Dad was Prongs, and that will be my name as well. I have James as my middle name, I want this too. Padfoot was my godfather Sirius, and Wormtail was the traitor.” His voice didn’t change as he said that last part, but his face did harden a little bit. That was one sore point that was always going to fester. Reiko had a question for him, as they left the room to go hang out in the Cortez Lounge.

“Tell us more about these spell grenade things.”

“It’s something they’re playing with, but haven’t gotten right yet. What happens is, you take a rubber ball, put the spell on it, and throw it or roll it to the target.”

“That sounds great, what’s the problem?”

“So we would just roll these balls into various dorm rooms, and that’s how we’d get them on the Map?”

“Kind of. I was thinking more along the lines of Dobby and Winky taking them from us, popping into the rooms when no one is in there, dropping the ball (so to speak), and then getting out. That’s the plan so far at least, it’s just a matter of them getting it to work. The twins tell me that it’s a priority for them, but not their top priority. They won’t say much about that one, other than it will be their biggest seller.”

“Aren’t you their partner? You should make them tell you.”

“I’m partner in name only Reiko, I just financed the startup. Plus, I put all my profit back in the shop, though that was my idea not theirs.

Besides, anyone who knows the twins knows that you don't 'tell' them anything. I'll get them over here sometime, you guys will love them." Fred and George were his mental exceptions to his 'no blending of British friends and American friends' policy.

"Are they going to get up some kind of catalog?"

"Yeah, from what they tell me. Otherwise the shop would be pretty boring during the Fall term. Originally they were just going to do it for Hogwarts students, but with my new situation things have expanded. I have a quick post setup with them, so getting things here shouldn't take a long time."

"You must have a stock of portkeys then."

"Something like that." They talked of more mundane things the rest of the night, though the idea of the Map stayed in everyone's minds.

Hogwarts Formal Conference Room

Noon

The meeting of the Hogwarts Board of Governors took place at its regularly scheduled time, with quite a few unexpected guests. The entire Hogwarts faculty was present, including the new hires for Defense (one Remus Lupin), and Potions (a young man named Charles Shepherd). The invitations had been sent to the non-Dumbledore/McGonagall faculty at the last minute, and the recipients were told that their jobs depended on their attendance. Even Trelawney and Firenze were there, the first time either of them had ever been in this room. Fudge was not present, but Percy was there on his behalf. He studiously made a point of not acknowledging Dumbledore, his true loyalties still being a secret.

Board Chairperson Susan Derkins waited for the clock to strike noon, and proceeded to call the meeting to order.

“Let us begin, as we have a number of issues to get through. I see that all the Board members are present, as are the Hogwarts professors. Let us get the small topics out of the way before we deal with the main issue.

The small topics took about 30 minutes to dispense with, and included: dates of the two Hogsmeade visits during Fall Term, a Yule Ball to be held this year, a few new security measures, and the hires of Charles Shepherd and Remus Lupin. Both of them went relatively smoothly, as Shepherd’s family was very pure-blood and respected (his parents owned Witch Weekly), and the Board reluctantly acknowledged that Remus had been very popular with the students, and would get the Defense classes back on track. The Board, in something of a surprise, had gone along with everything that Dumbledore had wanted, from the dates to the hires. The Hogwarts faculty didn’t wonder what they were doing there though (well, maybe Trelawney), they knew their part in the play was coming up now.

“Now Albus, the last order of business is also the most important: Why Harry Potter is no longer a student at Hogwarts, and why the media in both Great Britain and The United States are both blaming you for his leaving.”

Dumbledore had known this was coming, but he was at a loss of what to do about it. He had read the article in The Chronicle very carefully (Harry had very helpfully sent him a copy), and hadn’t found anything that wasn’t true in it.....at least the truth as Harry believed it anyway.

“Harry apparently believes that he is in danger if he remains at Hogwarts, so he took the opportunity to leave.” The ensuing questions came from everybody:

“I was under the impression that you were having him watched?”

“I was, but the watching only kept others out, not him in. I took it for granted that his summer pattern would be the same as in previous years. That was my mistake.”

“You said that he apparently believes that he’s in danger, what has he told you?”

"Harry is not willing to speak with me at the moment, I have not talked with him since the night Professor Snape was arrested."

"Arrested after he attacked Potter, is that not correct?"

"Yes it is, though my belief is that Harry goaded him into doing so."

"You must be joking Dumbledore, you saw that pensieve memory the same as we did. You must be the only one in the room who thinks that Potter was at fault for the assault."

"I did not say it was solely his fault, or even mostly, but he contributed to it."

"And one wonders why Potter left, it is now becoming much more clear to me at least."

"Do you deny any of the reasons for his departure, as stated in the American newspaper?"

"They are all true in a sense, but not in detail. I will certainly admit that he blames me for many of his troubles here, and he has the right on a few of them."

"And you don't agree?"

"Mistakes were made in his upbringing. I never should have allowed him to return to his muggle relatives the last two summers at the very least, and I probably should have removed him much earlier than that. Unfortunately fifteen years ago my options were limited as to where to place him."

"Two summers in a row that he witnessed the death of someone he was close to, right?"

"Yes, that is true, and as I said, I should have handled it differently."

"Are there any other students for which you are acting as an illegal guardian?"

“What I did was not technically illegal, at least not by placing him with his muggle relatives. They had every opportunity to file an official complaint, and Petunia Evans Dursley knew that she could. She accepted her burden of responsibility for Harry.”

“A responsibility to mistreat him his whole life, we’ve all heard the rumors Albus, it turns out that they were under-exaggerated.” Dumbledore couldn’t deny this, and looked for a long moment over at Remus.

“It was pointed out to me by Professor Lupin recently that I was concentrating so hard on saving his life that I didn’t stop to think about his soul.....and I am compelled to agree with that. And to answer your other question, I have no other students watched aside from Ron and Ginny Weasley, and Hermione Granger. Their parents are all fully on board with that, and would be happy to tell you so themselves if you wish.”

This was not going at all the way some Board members thought it would. Dumbledore was agreeing with them much more than they had anticipated, and a lot of prepared diatribes weren’t seeing the light of day because of this. Seeing that the wind had been taken out of their sails, he delivered his closing statement in hopes of ending this before it really began.

“Members of the Board, I do not know what else I can tell you. I acknowledge that Professor Snape was probably the most unpopular teacher in my long tenure at Hogwarts, but he is gone now. I agree that I should never have left him unsupervised with Harry Potter, but that’s over with.....and Harry came out of it much better than Professor Snape did. All of that said, Voldemort is still loose, and he must be our number one priority. Harry’s absence does not change that, not fundamentally anyway. Our new hires will increase the quality of our teaching, and the year should be much more peaceful. As the world now knows, Headmistress Murray and I are not the best of friends, she was always a little too much a believer that ‘America does best’ to suit me.....but she is capable and intelligent. Harry will not suffer under her guidance.”

“Will you be doing anything to bring him back?”

“I am hoping that with our added security measures, and the new faculty, that this year will be peaceful enough here that he will be coming back on his own. Until that time, I am resigned to the fact that Harry will not be with us this school year. I will not beg him to come back, nor do I think he would respond to it any better than my other entreaties.” The teachers, seeing how deftly the old man was handling the Board, began looking at the clock and wondering what they were doing there. The meeting broke up a few minutes later, and Dumbledore motioned for the teachers to stay around. After some murmured congratulations on how he apparently still had ‘it’, Dumbledore started the impromptu faculty meeting.

“Remus, are you still thinking we should place a few teachers on the train?” With Harry’s situation settled, the two of them had by and large patched up their differences, and were getting along much better.

“I am Headmaster, it’s no risk and potentially a great reward. The train might be a prime target for Voldemort if he is ready to begin attacking again.” Flitwick leaned forward in his chair.

“I agree with Remus, there is no harm in making sure. The key question here is whether the Death Eaters consider Hogwarts a target with Harry now gone. It’s entirely possible that they will leave us alone. I would think that they would do everything possible to keep Harry overseas, and harming one of his friends might bring him back with a vengeance.” This gave voice to the private sentiments of more than a few of the faculty: They might all be better off if Harry stayed abroad for the next two years.

“What kind of Auror support can we expect?”

“The Minister has promised us five Aurors on the train, with another five each at Kings Cross and Hogsmeade Stations.” Remus thought that this should be enough, but he still wanted the teachers on board.

“I’ll take one of the spots on the train, we should have one more. That will make seven adult wizards on there, any more would likely frighten the younger students. Harry's friends and other members of the DA will be our auxiliary if the train is hit, I'll speak to Hermione about it." Shepherd, the new Potions guy, lifted his hand slightly to get everyone's attention.

"I'll go as the second person, being the new man and all. It will give the kids a chance to get used to me a little more." The other teachers nodded their agreement, it would leave the three most powerful teachers back at school (Dumbledore, McGonagall, and Flitwick), just in case an end around move was made by their enemies. Soon the room just held the Order members (all four of them). Remus voiced something he'd been thinking about for a few days now.

"Albus, I think I'm going to go visit Harry for a few days before school starts. There are some things I want to talk about with him, and I want him to know that his bridges aren't burnt here." McGonagall didn't look too pleased with this.

"I wouldn't say that his bridges are intact Remus, those were some serious charges laid by him in that article. The reputations of both Professor Dumbledore and Hogwarts have received some damage. I think an apology is in order if he were to come back."

"Says the woman who stood by while he was put in danger the last five years, and did nothing.....well, did nothing other than parrot the Headmaster. You know, I can almost see his hand behind you, like some muggle puppeteer." McGonagall's eyes flashed and her wand was out in an instant, but so was Remus'.

"Be very careful Remus, you yourself are here on sufferance." This, however, did not work on the new Remus.....the rich guy.

"Whatever am I to do, with my million galleons and all." Flitwick very quietly left his seat:

Accio wand! Accio wand!

"Enough of this, both of you. This is just what Voldemort wants and needs, us fighting it out amongst ourselves." Flitwick had always taken Dumbledore's side on things, but treated his friend's musings about Harry's safety with two grains of salt, not one. He partially agreed with Remus though, in that he didn't believe that Minerva ever looked at salt when thinking about Dumbledore.

"Filius is right, both of you are to stand down. Minerva, nothing Harry has said, or not said, is irreparable. Remus, Harry does not need someone to defend his every thought and action when someone is critical of him. Also, you cannot go to Great Lakes anytime you wish, without permission from them. They have anti-werewolf wards all over the school, and I doubt they would be willing to mute them for one person." Remus hadn't known about the wards, Harry had not mentioned them in the two letters he had gotten from him.....letters that indeed did not include an invitation to visit, but still.

"I did not know that. I was aware that there is a werewolf problem in America, but not that it was so bad as that. Minerva, I apologize for drawing my wand on you." Abruptly, he got up from his chair, collected his wand, and left the room, without waiting to see if a return apology was forthcoming (it would not have been).

"Minerva, apologize to him later, if you will."

"If you insist (Dumbledore nodded that he did). I still don't like what Potter did, even if the news was going to come out eventually."

"In broad strokes it was the truth, and I imagine that he didn't want it to seem as if he had fled. Harry has refused all requests to be interviewed, so he isn't rubbing our noses in it. I suppose we should be grateful for that courtesy." McGonagall excused herself to get some lunch, and to find Remus to clear the air.

"Shouldn't someone check up on him though? I thought Remus had a point there."

"No Filius, best to let him be. I think Hogwarts, on the whole, will be safer with him gone. He is too much a lightning rod for our enemies. They have an excellent Defense program there, and it may just be better for him to train without the distractions offered here."

"I must admit that I'm surprised at your position. I half expected a kidnap attempt via portkey." Dumbledore chuckled.

"No Filius, I've learned my lesson. Harry will have no cause to be angry at me anytime soon. When the time comes, he will be ready, and he will come back." Flitwick had seen this look of satisfaction before, and felt he owed it to his friend to play devil's advocate.

"You've been wrong about that boy time and time again over the last few months, why are you so sure you're right this time?"

"I'm right this time because Voldemort won't be able to help himself Filius, he'll lure Harry back here and force the final confrontation. That's why I don't need to beg him to come back, Voldemort will do the work for me." The Headmaster exited the room, leaving his Charms teacher with a thoughtful look on his face.

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

8:00 pm

The inner core of the Death Eaters had gathered to hear their Lord, the first public meeting with him since the Snape incident. Voldemort had not exactly been in hiding, but he thought a personal touch would be better in some of his recruiting. Pettigrew was functioning as his secretary of sorts, and gave out Voldemort's instructions. Those taking part in the meeting included: Pettigrew, Goyle Sr. (who had not been in on the DOM fiasco), Narcissa and Draco Malfoy, Bellatrix Lestrange, Magdalena Edgecombe (mother of Marietta), and Royal Gibbon, another male Death Eater who had not been at the DOM. Not present were the imprisoned Death Eaters, nor Snape, still under house arrest.

Voldemort swept into the room and everyone immediately went quiet. Without preamble, he began things.

"Magdalena, what is your report from the Board meeting?"

“Potter really has fled my Lord, it was not a ruse by Dumbledore.” When the bad man had first heard the news he had started laughing, more at the transparency of it all than anything. The idea that Potter would just pick up stakes was an absurd one, or so he had thought at the time. The newspaper accounts had begun to change his mind somewhat, but he didn’t think that Dumbledore was above planting a few press releases in order to try to confuse him.

“What makes you think so?”

“First, I don’t think he would go to so much trouble in front of the Board, who he knows doesn’t much care for him. Second, Dumbledore would not have taken the abuse he did from them, just for a silly plot. He’s gone Master, and the old fool claims that he won’t be trying to bring him back.”

“And you believe that?”

“I don’t know sir, but I think we would have heard about anything serious.”

“Yes, you’re probably right in that. Draco, when school begins I want you to begin surveillance on the Weasleys and Granger, find out what you can about how serious this is. See if they are still in contact with Potter or not, how often, and with how much friendliness.”

“Yes Master.”

“Do not terrorize them though, or Longbottom. Leave them alone whenever possible.” Draco had rarely looked so taken aback.

“Sir?”

“You heard me, give them no reason to go crying to Potter about what’s going on. That goes for the rest of you as well. No targeting of the Weasleys, any of them.....unless they are wandless and defenseless, then kill them quickly.” Bella was the only one with the courage to speak, though all seemed to want to say something.

“You want Potter to stay in America my Lord?”

“Better there than at Hogwarts, for the time being anyway. Wormtail, reach out to our contacts in America, see what kind of watch we can put on Potter.”

“Yes Master, I will send owls to them today. Do you wish to involve the vampires and the werewolves as well? They are very strong in America.” Voldemort pondered a moment.

“Contact the vampires only, not the werewolves. I am still in negotiations with Fenrir Greyback, I want things concluded with him before I do anything with any werewolf. Send a muggle mail message to Mark Frankel, he’s a vampire clan leader in Chicago, the exact address is in our files. Explain to him the situation, and find out about this school that Potter is attending.”

“Yes, Master, it will be done.”

“Good, the rest of you continue recruiting. We need numbers if we are to raid the Ministry in force, which we will. Our next big attack will be right during Lucius’ trial.”

“A direct attack or indirect my Lord?” He was still working out the details in his own mind, so he didn’t give her a straight answer.

“Both Bella, if we have the numbers. Gibbon, I want you to make up a detachment of soldiers and keep a constant watch on Grimmauld Place. Make notes of who goes in and out, and see if there are any weaknesses.”

“Yes sir. If I may ask this sir, if we have a chance to assault it directly, may we do so?”

“You may, as long as you do not harm any Weasleys, or Lupin for that matter.”

“Yes sir, your orders are perfectly clear.” Voldemort nodded to him that he was dismissed, and Gibbon quickly left the room.

“Goyle, I want you to do some recon work in Flackter Alley in Milwaukee. Get a lay of the land, see if there is any Potter gossip. Do not speak unless you absolutely have to, your accent is strong enough that it is a dead giveaway, and it will get back to Potter (as it happened, Goyle was also from Surrey). Practice speaking American while you’re over there. Stay in a muggle hotel room and watch their television. This may turn into a long-term assignment, so acclimate yourself there.”

“When shall I leave sir?”

“Leave Sunday, Potter will have gotten his school supplies by then, so no risk of him spotting you. I will arrange for portkeys for you to get there.....no, scratch that, take muggle air transport, it will help you with your accent. Narcissa, make sure he has the money he needs to do this.”

“Yes my Lord.”

“Do not go to the school Goyle, not without permission. The rest of you are dismissed, except for Wormtail and Bella.” They filed out of the room, except for his two ‘confidants’.

“Bella, make sure your arrogant nephew understands about Weasley and Granger. Until I decide what is the best course of action for Potter, I don’t want him having a reason to come back here. Plus, I want to see the dynamic at Hogwarts now that he’s gone. See who are now the leaders there now since Potter has left them behind.” Wormtail had an opinion on that.

“It won’t be Weasley and Granger. Weasley is too limited an intellect to be dangerous to us, and Granger insists on showing hers off too much.” If anyone in their camp knew those two, it was Wormtail, and Voldemort took his point.

“That might be one reason he left, when I was visiting his mind, I saw that he was becoming tired of them.”

“Have you tried to access his mind lately Master?”

"I did last week Bella, but the brat has learned Occlumency sufficiently enough to keep me out. That road is now closed to us it seems, but I didn't sense that he had detected my presence."

"Have you decided what to do about Snape yet Master?"

"He's fine where he is now. He knows his true loyalties, and so do we. Peter, did you set up the portkey drop so that he can send us the potions he's working on?"

"I did Master, and the received sign was there."

"Ah the Ministry, not thinking that house elves can do some dirty work for us. Naïve, but I wouldn't have it any other way."

"May I ask Master, what did Greyback want in return for his assistance?" Voldemort smiled at her, and Bella knew this wouldn't be good.

"He wants Gryffindor House." Huh? The looks of confusion on them were very amusing, so he waited a bit before elaborating.

"He wants to have a little conversion ceremony with the members of Gryffindor House, to make them werewolves."

"The entire bloody House? That must be 70 kids!"

"That's right Peter, 70 of the toughest and bravest Hogwarts has to offer, even without Potter there. He wants them as the backbone of his new pack."

"I'm afraid to ask what you told him Master."

"I told him I would think about it, which means no. I'm not handing him that much wizard talent to turn into beasts that he can then attack me with. I'm not an idiot after all." Bella and Peter, neither of whom thought their boss was an idiot anyway, stayed very still. They were rewarded with no curses flying at them.

"How far will you go Master?"

“Not nearly that far, though we will reach an accord of some kind.....before I wipe him and his followers out.”

“That will be a great day, then the only werewolf threat we’ll have will be Lupin.”

“Oh he’s no threat, not as a werewolf anyway. He wants so much to be human again, he’ll deny every werewolf impulse in him until it winds up killing him. In fact, we’ll use Lupin to destroy Greyback and his pack when the time comes.” Peter grasped it before Bella did.

“You’ll use the Order to wipe out the werewolves, and by doing that, the Order will be decimated.”

“I think it’s a fair fight Wormtail, and we simply jump on the winner immediately afterward. With the Order marginalized, we go after The Ministry and the Aurors and end this business once and for all. Once I’m in command of all of wizard Britain, Potter will be easy enough to deal with.”

The tutoring session was near it’s end, and as always, Lyman ended with a story about his favorite subject, the Lycans (he found the Kindred to be somewhat harmless on the whole).

“I’m telling you Harry, the last time the Lycans came after us it was a bloodbath on both sides, only it took our government idiots a year to figure this out. I mean, they were no match for your boy Fudge back in Britain, but they were pretty dense.” Harry had spent one whole tutoring session (he had them twice a week) ranting about Fudge, with the sarcastic History teacher egging him on the whole time. Harry had only met one of his teachers so far, Thomas Ripley for Defense, but he knew he wouldn’t get along with any of them better than he did with Lyman. He encouraged Harry to argue with him, indeed most of their sessions were just one long argument/discussion about a topic picked the time before.

“How do the two sides even know who each other are? That’s what I don’t get.”

“That’s the fun part Harry, we don’t. That’s why the wars take so long, and a lot of ‘innocent’ muggles get caught in the crossfire. Fortunately the Lycans prefer to kill us rather than bite us, they don’t want any hybrids like your friend Remus.”

“Yeah, but he fights being a werewolf.”

“Doesn’t matter Harry, people in power are only interested in what you might do, rather than what you have done.” They were interrupted by a knock on the door.

“Come in!”

It was Murray and Heyman. Harry hadn’t talked much with either of them since the press announcement, but they made a point to check in with him every few days.

“Hello Josh, Harry. How are things?”

“Professor Murray, could I take fifth year History as my sixth subject? Please? I want to see Professor Lyman in front of a class.” Lyman cracked up.

“Nice try Harry, but you should have had your big brainstorm last year. My classes are filled, since everyone has to take them.”

“Not enough bad things had happened to me then.” Murray just shook her head.

“Another convert to the cult of Lyman, I should have known better. Harry we’d like a quick word about your Sorting.”

“Sadly no, though I can guess your House preference. No, we just wanted to know whether you would like to go first or last. You probably don’t want to be mixed in with the Novices, and you’re the only transfer this year. It makes no difference to us, but we thought it might to you.” Harry hadn’t given this much thought, but the easy answer came quite easily.

“I’d like to go first then, if it makes no difference. I’d just as soon get it over with.” His friends had told him of how long the ceremony lasted, and didn’t want to have to wait through all of it before knowing.

“That’s fine. We’ll come get you beforehand, and have you join the first years right before the dinner starts.” Harry’s friends had explained to him that for the first night, the tables were arranged in four groups (like Hogwarts, just not one long table for each House).

“One last thing we should talk about Harry. The Hogwarts Board of Directors met on Monday, and our friend seems to have given up trying to coax you back here, and he said so in public to the Board.”

“You got an owl from Professor Hill?”

“I did, the faculty was there for the meeting, so it’s firsthand information.” She didn’t tell him about the shot Dumbledore had taken at her, though she knew it would amuse him.

“Do you believe it? Knowing Dumbledore like you do?”

“I do Harry, he’s declared himself publicly now, to go back on that would make him look very bad. He can’t afford that. Check your mail for portkeys anyway.”

“I was going to do that regardless, I have a price on my head you know.” Harry’s blasé attitude about that had always amused Murray, and somewhat worried Heyman.

“It’s come to my attention, yes. We’ll see you two at dinner.” The two administrators left, and Harry looked at his tutor.

“The cult of Lyman? Eh?”

“She exaggerates Harry, you Defense types are so easily ruffled.”

“Just because you can’t use your wand…….”

“Hey, I’m not your old ghost you know, I have wand talents thank you very much. Now, we have two sessions left. Don’t worry about the books for next time. We’ll talk about the history of the school on Wednesday, can’t have you knowing less than the Novices now can we?” The next student was at the door (Murray and Heyman had left it ajar), so Lyman shooed Harry out.

Transfiguration Classroom A

10:30 am

Harry looked at the pile of sticks on the floor, and concentrated as hard as he could on focusing his power through his wand.

Commutatus!

The sticks transformed into a small table……a rickety looking one, but a table nonetheless. Professor Palmer sat on the edge of his desk and looked pretty pleased.

“Good work Harry, that’s the best you’ve done with that spell. How tired are you?” It was Harry’s tenth try during this session with Commutatus, which was one of the more complex Transfiguration spells. He had gotten at least the form of a table on the last four tries, but Palmer was right in saying that this one was noticeably the most solid of the four.

“I’m pretty tired yeah, I think I used all of my reserves for that one.”

“It will be easier next time, we’ll work on it on Thursday during your last session. Let’s have your goal to have a sturdier looking table by your fifth try, and I think you can do it.”

“That’ll make me less tired, that’s for sure.”

“That always happens when you first learn a spell Harry. By the time you leave here you’ll be able to take that pile of sticks and make an entire dining room set out of it.” Palmer transformed the table back to sticks (much easier than the reverse) and then:

Commutatus!

What appeared then was a six seat table and six chairs, all with a nice finish as well. Palmer appeared to not even break a sweat doing so.

“That was very impressive, I can’t wait to be able to do that someday.”

“You will Harry, it comes with age and experience. Plus, your magical power is not yet done growing. Two years from now you’ll be twice the wizard you are now.”

“That’ll be cool, I’m glad I’m finally getting a chance to develop it properly.”

“Well you’ve had a good grounding in Transfiguration. This McGonagall woman knew what she was doing when she taught you. You’ll do much better this year without all of those distractions you’ve had.” Harry chuckled.

“You think I’ll be that lucky?”

“I do Harry, yes. Now before you go, I was wondering if you were interested at all in Animagus training?” Harry was a little taken aback, he didn’t think he had improved that much.

“I don’t know Professor, am I ready for that?”

“Not now you aren’t, but next summer you might be. There are some texts I can get you on what’s involved and how much work it will be. I know you’ve said that your father was one, it might be a nice way to honor him if it's something you have a passion to do.....a passion to be an Animagus that is."

Harry didn't really want to be an Animagus, but Palmer's words about honoring his father got to him a little bit. When talking about Marauder names with his friends, they had lightly discussed what it would be like to be an Animagus. None of the others were really interested though, which could be partially explained by that all of them were from cities, except for Reiko (who had been raised at Tecumseh), where there were a lot more hazards for animals than there were in the countryside.

"I'll read any book you give me sir, though if I had to pick right now I would say no to the training." Palmer smiled at him.

"Well it's a good thing that you don't have to decide right now. It's always nice to keep your options open." He transformed the dining set back to sticks.

"Take these back to your room and get some practicing in. We'll do this again on Friday." Harry shrunk them, and picked them up. The shrinking and enlarging charms were Harry's strengths when it came to Transfiguration, and it wasn't just because of all his recent practice with them. Harry had noticed even a month earlier that the charms did not tax him very much, which was encouraging. He left the classroom to go get his broom, he wanted to do some flying before dinner.

On Thursday, Harry would make a perfect six seat table on his fourth try, without quite tiring himself as much as before. Palmer said that he was progressing wonderfully, and Harry found that praise from a teacher did wonders for his performance (only Sprout and Flitwick were free with praise at Hogwarts). He wasn't quite ready to some of the more advanced tricks, but Palmer smiled when Harry told him that he'd be bugging Sophie to learn some of them while she learned them, as he anticipated them doing a lot of studying together.....really, they were, he said after noting Palmer's smirk.

Guest Room B

5:00 pm

Knock Knock!

“Come in!” Sophie poked her head in the door, Harry was on the bed with a thick book open in front of him. She walked over and lifted it up to see what it was, it was entitled “102 Curses to Save Your Life With”

“Some of these are pretty cool actually, in the unlikely event that any Death Eaters come around here, they’ll be very sorry. How was Palmer?”

“It was fine, I’m up to speed now in there. So what’s up? Why did you want me to come here alone?” Harry got up and took her in his arms and gave her a long kiss.

“Uh oh, what did you do? Reiko told me about guys doing something like this.” Harry chuckled, and gave her a loud smooch on the forehead.

“It’s nothing you should be mad about, I’m just going to show you something. Follow me.” He went over to the trunk and opened it up. The way the fingerprint ID worked, anyone who was keyed in could open the trunk from the inside or outside, anyone who wasn’t (and only Harry and the twins were) couldn’t so much as budge it. He got to the fourth layer, and a short ladder appeared.

“Ladies first.” Sophie looked fairly surprised.

“What’s down there?”

“My little haven Sophie.....well, our haven now. Go on in.” She grabbed the ladder and went down. Harry followed her, and they wound up in an unfurnished room with stacks of books on the floor

“This is some trunk Harry. When did you get this?”

“The day before we met, Peter thought it would be a good idea to have a safe house nearby, just in case. And it has another nice little feature.”

“What kind of feature?”

He took her hand and guided her into the seventh room, the one with the floo. He was planning to disguise it eventually, but since only five.....sorry, now it was six people (plus Dobby and Winky) in the world knew about it, he hadn't felt the need.

“Is that a floo? You mean you can floo anywhere you want from here?” She had an incredulous tone of voice, but a smile on her face.

“Not quite, I can only floo to people with these kinds of trunks. Right now the only people that I know who have one are Fred and George.....and I know this because I bought theirs.”

“This is how you went back to London a couple weeks ago?” Harry could sense danger coming, and let go of her hand and pulled her into a soft hug.

“It is, and I'm sorry that I didn't tell you about it then. I wanted to make sure it worked first, and I needed to get some stuff from there in the meantime.” There was a couch in the room, as well as a couple of easy chairs and a coffee table. This was the only room that was furnished so far, the twins had brought the stuff over.

“I guess I can see why you'd want a way back there.”

“I didn't really, but Peter thought it would be good for me to keep my options open. Nobody here knows about this part of the trunk, not even Murray and Heyman. Nobody but the elves, and you and I.....and only the twins, Peter, and the guy who sold it to us back in Britain. I've only been back there that once, and the twins have come here once. Dobby and Winky use the floo to do our messaging, it saves them a lot of energy.”

“What did you mean by our 'haven'?”

"Nobody who isn't keyed into the trunk can enter it, or so much as move it. So don't get the urge to kill me right now, or you won't get out of here." That got a laugh out of her, and she gave him a quick kiss.

"When are you going to tell the others? Or are you?"

"I was going to wait until Jonas got here to tell them, so I could do it all at once. But I wanted to tell you first, much as I like them.....well you're you, and you deserved to hear about it personally and one on one." It wasn't something out of a romance novel, but Harry felt that he was doing okay with that kind of thing all in all, considering that he had no experience with it before. She gave him a tight hug in thanks.

"Thank you for that, it's nice that you thought of it like that.. Now not to be a girlfriend or anything, but you know you need some more furniture in this place right?"

"In fact I do know that. I spent two hours the other night checking this stuff for booby traps, one never knows with the twins."

"They wouldn't do that to you would they?" Harry almost died laughing hearing that.

"Oh they'd do it to me first my dearest Sophie, but it's all in good fun. I didn't find anything anyway. I was kind of counting on you helping me decorate it. Remember, I'd only had it a day when I fell for you."

"A woman's touch huh? I doubt we'll be able to get to Flackter Alley again before October or November."

"I was figuring we could just use catalogs. The twins gave me a bunch of them last week when they brought this stuff over. They'll pick the stuff up and get it over here, along with their own catalog, they're getting a bunch printed up right now."

"It's not bad, I see that there's no bed (this was the only room with furniture, which she had noticed coming in)."

“They wanted to bring one, but I told them not to. I didn’t want you thinking that I just wanted this place for us to.....” A round of furious blushing commenced from both of them. But they were 16 year old kids with hormones, and the thought certainly had occurred to them.

“Another nice thought Harry, where did you learn to be such a gentleman?”

“Hanged if I know, it’s just what I want to do I guess. It’s no trouble or act.....I don’t think I would be a good actor.”

“No you wouldn’t be, but that’s okay. Jonas is kind of an actor, which is why I think Claudia won’t admit that she likes him.”

“How is he an actor?”

“He’s kind of the ‘big man on campus’, because he’s the star Quodpot player. He claims he hates it, and most of the time I think he does.....but he’s likes it that it makes him popular. I think Claudia doesn’t want to be seen as the boytoy of the Quodpot stud.”

“Is that why you never went for him?”

“I don’t know, Jonas and I just never clicked that way.” Sophie had told Harry early on that he was her first boyfriend and kiss.

“Don’t get me wrong, Jonas is a great guy, and I think Claudia is stupid to let all the Quodpot groupies get at him.”

“So it’s more her end than his then?”

“Kind of, you’ll see how complicated it is tomorrow when he gets here.” Warrick had told Harry his theories about Jonas and Claudia, and Sophie’s weren’t too different.

“Enough about those two, let’s have dinner in here tonight, just us.”

“That’d be great.....who’s going to cook?” The very small kitchen was in the sixth compartment, with a refrigerator and two ovens (one of them microwave). It wasn’t used much though, since Harry ate all his meals with his friends. He had warned Dobby and Winky about tonight though, so everything was stocked.

“As long as you don’t mind something pretty simple, I’ll cook. How does spaghetti sound?”

“Sounds great, I can help.....well you can teach me anyway, it’s been a long time since I’ve had to cook anything. Claudia and I go to Reiko’s for Thanksgiving and Christmas, but that’s at another school, and house elves do it all.”

“Spaghetti’s easy, you boil the water and add the noodles after the water gets going. I think all we have is store bought sauce here, but it’s supposed to be good stuff. No wine unfortunately, we’ll have to rough it.”

“That’s okay, I’ll manage somehow.” They had Dobby take a note to Claudia, telling her that they would be bailing on dinner, but not where (the gang would just assume a private picnic on the Quidditch/Quodpot field, where the five of them had eaten a couple of times). Harry and Sophie would somewhat clumsily make the spaghetti and bread, and they would curl up on the couch and feed each other.....which was slow enough to lead to cold pasta, but it was very romantic all the same. After dinner, nothing happened that would turn this tale into NC-17 if it were described, but they had a lot fun.

While they were curled up with each other, Harry could help but think that he was glad he waited to explore things like this. He was glad that he hadn’t taken advantage of being ‘The Boy Who Lived’ and tried to get a Hogwarts girl in his arms like this. You see, Sophie wasn’t that good of an actress either, and Harry knew that she could not have cared less that he was famous. They dozed off for a bit, and were woken up by Winky tugging at their shirts (which were still on of course) and pointing at Harry’s watch. It was almost midnight, and after a rather long goodnight, they went back upstairs.....after first keying Sophie into the trunk. Sophie and Reiko met at their dorm room door, and it was clear that both had been doing roughly the same thing. The two girls, close friends now for five years, didn't share all of the details with each other.....but they knew.

Saturday, August 31, 1996

The students began arriving early in the morning, a few even in time for breakfast. There was no Great Lakes Express to collect all of the students, given the sprawl of the Great Lakes constituency (Harry had often wondered at the waste of Scottish students having to floo all the way to London in order to be on the train back up to a castle relatively near their homes). Instead, students were each sent a school portkey the week before, the only caveat was that it had to be used within 400 miles of school. Muggleborns took either a bus or a plane to Chicago or Detroit, and used their portkeys from there. The other students (purebloods and mixed bloods) flooed to Milwaukee and used the portkeys from Flackter Alley. The house elf staff was marshaled to get the baggage that couldn't be taken the other way. Dobby and Winky had both decided to continue to work with Harry, rather than join the staff, but they volunteered to help with baggage duty.

The Sorting was scheduled for dinnertime, and the halls were filled with students moving back into their rooms. Roommates greeted each other, and the sound of spells being used could be heard all over, as the non-summer students got comfortable using magic again. Harry's guest room was a prime tourist spot, as a lot of returning students wanted to get a look at him. One such student was familiar to Harry, at least through stories. Claudia brought him by just after lunch. Harry's door was already open, as he was talking with a few other students.

"Harry?"

"Hey Claudia, what's up?"

"Harry Potter, this is Jonas Steele." Jonas was a few inches taller than Harry, with blond hair (though he looked nothing like Draco) and a muscular build. It should be said though, that Harry was one of the smallest boys in the Junior class, a lack of food growing up could be considered the culprit. Harry smiled and reached out his hand, and Jonas took it with a similar smile.

"It's good to meet you Jonas, I've heard all about you."

"Same here Harry, Claudia writes that you practically walk on water." Harry turned to his friend and faked drawing his wand.

"I don't know what would possess her to do that."

"Oh she didn't say it, it's just that you snagged our Sophie, and that's the same thing as walking on water in my book." Fortunately sports fans, Sophie wasn't there at the moment, otherwise the blush on her face might explode every blood vessel in there. Harry looked at Claudia again.

"Hey, I told you the first night that Sophie was shy around guys."

"Yes you did, though I did think you were exaggerating, just for the record. How was Quodpot training Jonas? The gang tells me that you're the star here."

"It was a blast really, I got to work out with a lot of the best pro players. I stunk compared to them, but they said I showed a lot of promise."

"This was your first summer doing it right?"

"I've worked out with a couple of pro teams before, you know, a day here and there. Nothing like this though."

"I bet they don't have anything like that for Quidditch here."

"Well they might Harry, I don't know. The Quidditch league here is a pretty small one, the best players usually go to your league back in Britain. You're going to play for your House team right?" The other students had left by now, and Claudia and Jonas took the two chairs.

"That's the idea, assuming they need a Seeker.....though I could play Chaser if it came to it I guess. I don't want to get put into a House with a four year Seeker or something and be expected to go for their job. It wouldn't really get me off on the right foot with my new Housemates." That was a good point really, and both of them acknowledged it.

"Claudia told me about the Map while I was unpacking, sounds interesting."

"It could be useful to us, are you with us on it?" Harry got up and got out the blueprint, spreading it out on the bed to show the two of them. Winky had pronounced it complete the night before, all five floors plus the Creatures paddock and the athletic field.

"Sure, I'm always up for some clandestine fun."

"Oh it'll have to be clandestine all right. I can only imagine the carnage if we get caught."

"We'll be cleaning the bathrooms with our tongues probably. Claudia said that Heyman has been pretty nice to you, but that's only because you haven't broken any rules yet."

"I've done my best to stay straight with him and Professor Murray."

"You and the girls need to be that way for this to work. Warrick and I are just wild enough to attract their attention. Claudia's always been our front woman before. She doesn't exactly have Heyman wrapped around her little finger, but...."

"I am not the front woman you dolt, just because I don't sneak around here like you and Warrick do."

"You do too sneak around here, you're just quieter at it than we are, so you don't get caught." Claudia didn't have much to say to that, so Harry took it as the truth.

"Heyman's that bad?"

"Well he's fine as long as you don't break any rules, but if you do he'll be pretty harsh in his punishments. He was like that as Charms teacher too, so it's not him being Deputy Headmaster that does it. I mean he won't have you flogged or anything, and detentions aren't too harsh, just mind numbing." There was a tap on the door, and more people came in. Leading them were Sophie and Reiko, with two girls behind them. Sophie went up to Jonas and gave him a quick hug hello, and then sat on the bed next to Harry, who as soon as the newcomers entered the room, managed to move the blueprint behind him. Reiko introduced the newcomers:

"Harry, this is Miranda Spencer and Kelly McGarry." Miranda was an inch taller than Reiko (who barely topped five feet), with Latin features. Kelly had red hair and vaguely looked like Ginny, though with more delicate looks. Harry had heard every little detail about the Miranda/Reiko/Warrick drama, and Warrick was noticeably absent, but he did notice that Reiko was the one to introduce them.

"Nice to meet you both, Sophie and Reiko say nothing but nice things about you." He got up to shake their hands, all the while motioning behind his back with his left hand for Sophie to hide the blueprint. Reiko took his place on the bed and shielded Sophie's actions. Kelly gave him the once over, earning a smirk from Jonas.

"Nice to meet you too Harry, your pics in The Chronicle don't do you justice."

"The next one with a camera pointed at me gets the business end of my wand.....but thanks for the compliment.....it was a compliment right?" The two roommates giggled appreciatively and nodded that it indeed was a compliment.

"Anyway Harry, we just stopped by to say hi and to meet you. We need to go get our wayward boyfriends and get our stuff unpacked.....though not in that order maybe. See you around." They left the room, closing the door behind them. Claudia looked at Harry.

"The business end of your wand?"

"It seemed like a good thing to say at the time."

“Well at least you got off on the right foot with them, they’re not that bad really.” Claudia could be phlegmatic about them, since she didn’t have to live with them. They reminded Harry very distinctly of Parvati and Lavender actually, never a good sign, but he decided to give them the benefit of the doubt. He certainly wanted them to be ‘cooperative’.

“Where’s Warrick? Is he that afraid of Miranda?”

“Oh he’s helping a couple of his roommates unpack, he’ll be by later. I guess he wanted to talk with two of them to see if they can get you in their room somehow if you get put into Cortez.”

“They want to kick out Clancy?” Joseph Clancy was the fourth person in Warrick’s room, he was the Junior class star in Potions, and was widely suspected to be an informant to the teachers. Warrick reluctantly had admitted to Harry that they had no proof of anything, but Clancy had had no interest at any point in befriending the other three.....and things seemed to happen when he knew what they were doing. Harry had not commented too much on this, as they somewhat mirrored his theories about Hermione.....theories that he had been ashamed to find out were completely unjustified. Clancy was not a summer student though, nor were either of the other two. Reiko’s expression got very angry (as Warrick’s girlfriend, she had had her fair share of run-ins with Clancy).

“They’ve wanted to for years, but no one else would take him. The problem with you is that there are 12 guys in Cortez starting Junior Year, and the rooms only hold four boys each, and you’ve seen these rooms enough to know that they’re still sort of crowded with that many. So they’re going to have to do some juggling to get you in there if you’re picked for Cortez.”

“I wonder if the chairs will take that into consideration.”

“They might, you never know. I would think that it would be a small part of it, but it’s hard to say. The teachers are pretty mum on how the chairs are programmed.”

They spent the next hour hearing stories from Jonas about Quodpot camp, and Harry learned a lot more about the game than he had known before (Warrick and Claudia had explained the rules to him, but no pickup games had been attempted). Warrick joined them eventually, not divulging anything about the talk with Rick and Terry (the other two guys in his room). They kept Harry occupied for a time, all the while randomly teasing him about winding up in Proctor House, without any of them. He didn't like that idea one bit, but knew the odds were against it.

Meanwhile, the Novices, who had been told to be on campus no later than 2 pm, were all gathered in the near classrooms until the appointed time. At 3 pm they were split up into four groups, and taken on a walk outside to tour the campus. The tour was a tradition dating back over 100 years, and was done by the Senior students. The tour was little more than a slow walk over the campus, not so dissimilar to the tour that Sophie gave Harry.....and it's worth noting that Murray had asked Harry if he wanted to do it, but he had politely declined. The symbolism was heavy though, and every Senior student had been given a pep talk by Heyman before they had left in June about their responsibilities toward the Novices. There were no Prefects at Great Lakes, rather the Seniors collectively acted as the leaders in each House. They didn't give or take away points, or hand out detentions, but their job was to use peer pressure to keep the younger students in line. In reality it wasn't much different in practice from Hogwarts, where the Prefects were losing influence with every year (for example Ron and Hermione, though they would be loathe to admit it, had little or no influence with their fellow students when it came to rules).

At 5:30 pm, the Novices and Harry were herded into one of the Charms classrooms, which had been magically enlarged a little bit for the occasion. There were 49 of them in there, and Heyman called for their attention.

"Okay, listen up!" The eyes and ears of all of them snapped to him.

"The Sorting ceremony will start at 6 pm in the dining hall, that's less than half an hour from now. You will go in alphabetical order, except for Harry Potter, who as a transfer student will be Sorted first. The Sorting details are for you to find out for yourselves, but I can tell you that it will take approximately 75-90 minutes for the whole process. So if your name is at the back alphabetically, just be patient. When the Sorting is finished, dinner will begin, and before dessert Headmistress Murray will give her welcoming address. While you're at dinner, the house elves will move your things to your assigned dormitory rooms, and you will be led to them by the Seniors. Are there any questions that don't have to do with the Sorting itself?"

Silence echoed in the room, as Heyman's qualifier had nixed all their questions. The muggleborns of course had been badgering the Seniors while on the tours, all to naught. The purebloods and mixed bloods knew all about the Sorting from their siblings and parents, but had been sworn to secrecy on pain of.....well each family had its special punishment plan. So Harry's detailed knowledge of what was to come was by no means unique.

Muted conversations resumed, but not by everyone. There were a lot of students there who talked to nobody, still trying to take it all in. Nervousness permeated the room, and every student was wondering what House he/she would be in. Because of the nature of the Sorting, and the desire to balance each House, there were no 'legacy students' (families who were always in a specific House, like the Weasleys in Gryffindor). Harry sat by himself, ironically enough this was the one room in the school where he was anonymous, since the 11 year old kids hadn't read too many history books.

While Harry and the youngsters were in the Charms classroom, the rest of the students were moving into the dining hall. The Sorting was always great fun for returning students, as their sense of glee at the nervousness of the Novices could easily be felt. It wasn't malicious glee mind you, but they fully remembered their own experiences and loved the fact that they could watch others go through it too. The Senior class was very nostalgic, since it was to be their last Sorting (except for the very few who came back as teachers). The four hardback, cushion-less chairs were set up directly in front of the staff table. Since every student was guaranteed a House slot, the fourth chair (the order was determined by lot) wasn't truly necessary, but it was there as a symbol (there's that word again). Professor Murray stood up from the temporary staff table at the front.

“Welcome back to all of you, the Sorting will begin in a few moments. Just remember the rules: no heckling or booing of any kind, and limit the cheering to polite applause.....for every student.” Every halfway intelligent student took that to mean Harry too. Murray sat back down, and a few minutes later the doors opened, and Heyman led the Novices and Harry into the room. They were placed in a mass in front of the chairs, between the student tables and the chairs. Murray rose again, and addressed the newcomers.

“Welcome to Great Lakes Magical Institute. You are now to be Sorted into your Houses, a quite simple process no matter what fears you may have had about it (she smiled at them reassuringly). When your name is called, you will sit in the chair on the far left of you. If that House’s chair finds you to be the best fit for that House, it will give you a sign within a couple of seconds. If not, you move on to the next chair and repeat the process. The chairs are, from your left to right: Shawnee House, Proctor House, Jefferson House, and Cortez House (this was no surprise, as this was the way the rows of tables were arranged as well). I will make this clear to you: If the first chair does not accept you, it simply means that you are a better fit for another House, it is not a rejection.” She paused for a moment to let this sink in for the youngsters.

“Now this year, unlike most, we have a transfer student, and he will be Sorted first. His name is Harry Potter, and he is a transfer from Hogwarts in Great Britain.” Even though all the kids knew about Harry, it still created a buzz in the room. Harry was easily identifiable to the onlookers, if only because he was the tallest among those to be Sorted (though not by much over a couple of the kids).

“Harry, if you will.” Murray motioned to him to begin the process. He approached the first chair, dreading what might happen. His heart had sunk when he heard that Cortez was the final chair, but willed his face to be impassive. It wouldn’t do to act disappointed if he didn’t get his preferred selection. His insides churning, he walked up to the first chair, sat down, and.....

Nothing.

No glow or anything like that. He looked over at Murray, and she gave him the nod to get up. The Shawnee students looked rather disappointed, Claudia in particular (she would be forking over five dollars to Jonas or Warrick if Harry went into one of their Houses). Harry got up, legs a bit less leaden, but nerves still jingling. Proctor House, though he had met a few of them over the weeks, was the one House with no one from his circle. He sat down again, and.....

Nothing. Harry was now dearly missing the argument from the Sorting Hat, or anything that could be telling him what was going on. He was now at his second choice, Jefferson House, because at least then he would probably be able to room with Jonas. Everyone from Jefferson and Cortez leaned forward as he eased himself down onto the third chair.....

Nothing. With Heyman staring pointedly at them, the members of Cortez House satisfied themselves with broad smiles and polite applause at the news that Harry Potter was now the 27th member of the Junior Class in Cortez House. Harry just sat there in the Jefferson chair, numb.....yet very pleased on the inside. It took all his Occlumency skills to remain focused enough not to look ecstatic. He sat there long enough for Murray to give him a verbal nudge.

“Harry, if you would take a quick sit in the last chair for us?” A little tittering followed, as Harry abashedly got up and sat down in the Cortez chair.....which immediately glowed, and a fog of green and white, the Cortez colors, rose a few feet above the chair. Harry walked over Sophie’s table and plopped down in the empty chair that she, Warrick, and Reiko had been saving for him. He took her hand under the table with his left and they both squeezed hard, not letting go. His right hand was busy with mock formal handshakes from Reiko and Warrick. The most disappointed students in the room, if Harry had been able to identify them, were the various Quidditch players from the other three Houses. Each of those players, in his or her own mind, had known that the team that got Harry was halfway to the Quidditch championship before the games even started.

Once Harry had sat down, the Sorting continued:

“Stuart Appleby.” Stuart, a small for his age muggleborn kid with black hair, walked up as fast as he could (without running) and quickly hopped on to the Shawnee chair, and when nothing glowed, he practically jumped to the Proctor chair.....and unfortunately for the audience, which found this to be quite amusing, the show ended there as he was chosen for Proctor House (House colors are blue and yellow).

The next few students had no fireworks, as Jefferson (red and grey) and Shawnee (black and gold) both got three students each, and an additional one for Proctor. The next real drama occurred when:

“Shane Guest.”

Shane froze in his spot, and looked as petrified as most people had ever seen a Novice. The whole room was looking at him as stood rigid, not heeding Murray’s gentle motions to come forward. Sweat was dripping off his brow, as he turned to the doors and seemed to be contemplating a run for it. Harry and Warrick looked at each other and jerked their heads at him, as if debating on what to do. After about a minute Warrick had seen enough, got up from the table, and in a few strides was beside the frightened Shane. He knelt at his side and whispered to him:

“It’s ok dude, we all felt the same way when we were your age. I know you’re scared, and it’s ok. You see my friend Harry over there? This was his second Sorting, and he was just as nervous this time as he was his first.....and this is a guy who’s fought for his life. Nobody is going to laugh at you or make fun of you. You can do it Shane, just take one step forward.”

The speech, the words of which could only be heard by the two of them, nevertheless transfixed the room. Shane took a baby step toward the chair, and then another, and another. Warrick stayed where he was and smiled encouragement when the young kid turned to look at him. A few more jerky steps and Shane made it to the Shawnee chair.....and to his everlasting gratitude, it glowed for him. The look of relief on his face was priceless, as was the look of thanks he gave to Warrick. He walked over to the Shawnee side, and took his place at the table with their other Novices (so far). As all the eyes were on him, Murray moved over and whispered to Warrick.

“Thank you for that Warrick, that was very generous of you.”

He nodded politely at her, and rejoined his table. Reiko got up to give him a hug, and everyone in Cortez (who all liked him anyway) murmured their agreement with Murray. The Sorting continued for another hour, as the Novices wound up being split evenly between the four Houses, with Harry being the Joker so to speak in the deck of cards that were the incoming students.

Dinner began at about 7:20, and Harry’s table split a pizza, though Harry was constantly interrupted by Cortez students quietly congratulating him on being in their House. The highlight though was Claudia coming up behind them and cuffing Harry and Warrick on the backs of their heads.

“You two fixed it didn’t you?” Warrick shook his head.

“I would have, but I don’t know where they keep the chairs. Remember, we were last in Carver Cup points last year, we need him more than you do.”

“I didn’t do anything either, it’s not like I could debate with the chairs or anything.” Claudia continued to look at them half with amusement and half with suspicion. She knew that Harry would be happiest in Cortez though. Before dessert, Harry leaned over to Warrick.

“So what do you think my chances are of getting in with you?”

“Rick and Terry went to talk to Heyman a couple of hours ago, asking to replace Clancy with you if you were Sorted with us. We all know what Heyman thinks of me, so I didn’t go, but I guess he indicated that he would think about it. That’s good news though, because if Heyman likes any student in our year best, it’s Clancy. Look at it this way, if you don’t get in with us, you’ll probably get a room to yourself. All the privacy you could ever want.” He gave a jerk of his head over to Sophie. Harry didn’t let his eyes go there, but knew that his trunk would be more than sufficient when it came to privacy. He still hadn’t told the others about the expanded trunk or it's floor yet, but was planning to when he had the twins come over. He had wanted to tell Sophie first in any case.

A few minutes later, Murray rose from her seat and cleared her throat. The voices in the room quieted down rapidly as they anticipated her speech.

"Welcome all of you to the 179th year of Great Lakes Magical Institute!" The room exploded in applause. Murray let it go on for a few seconds and then raised her hands for quiet again.

"We fully expect this year to be the best ever in our school. For you Novice Year students, and some of our others who might have forgotten them, let me introduce the faculty.

"Professor David Heyman is our Deputy Headmaster." Polite applause would greet all the teachers but one.

"For Defense, Professors Thomas Ripley and Richard Greenleaf." The two men stood and each gave half a wave, which would be repeated by the other teachers. Ripley was the teacher for Advanced, and Greenleaf had been Murray's first hire four years earlier when she filled her own teaching slot.

"For Charms, Professors Janel Maloney and Elizabeth Westin." Maloney was just senior to Westin, who had been Heyman's replacements. Both were very young and quite popular amongst the students.

"For Transfiguration, David Palmer and Hoban Washburne." Washburn was Professor Lyman's best friend among the faculty, which Harry saw as pretty promising.

"For Herbology, Kris Murphy and Ryan Chappelle." Murphy taught the advanced class.

"For Muggle Studies, Roberto Mendoza and Toby Ziegler." Ziegler taught the regular class, and thus would be Harry's instructor.

“For Divination, Penelope Dunross and Casey Tcholak.” Divination was a surprisingly popular subject among the younger years (they chose their electives after their second year too), though relatively few took it at the NEWT level.

“For Ancient Runes, Amy Allen and Harmon Murdock.”

“For Arithmancy, Michelle Forbes and Janica Kostelic.”

“For Astronomy, Richard Reilly and Katherine Smith.” Junior and Senior Year Astronomy was considered a soft option, with about 1/3 of the students taking it.

“For Potions, John Ryan and Diego Chavez.” Potions, however, was not a soft option, and was considered the hardest class of the curriculum.

“For Wandless Magic, Ray Kinsella.” There were only two years taking this class, so only one Professor was needed for it. Kinsella moonlit as a consultant for Congress and was considered quite brilliant.

“Our Librarian is Alice Hoffman.” Harry had been to the library once, but just to see it. He was still, slowly, working his way through his books from Grimmauld Place, which Remus had gotten to him right before he left (not that Remus knew he was leaving the next day).

“Our Staff Secretaries are Dolores Landingham and Debbie Fiderer.”

“The Caretaker is Riley Poole.” Despite being rather unpopular, Poole got the same polite applause. Unlike Filch though, he was a full fledged wizard, just a limited one. There was just one name left, and Murray smiled wryly as she spoke it.

“Our History teacher is Josh Lyman.” The students exploded into cheers as Lyman, laughing all the while, stood up and took a bow. The Cult of Lyman indeed. Murray was still chuckling as she continued.

“Thank you Professor Lyman. The Christmas Dance will be held the Saturday before Christmas this year, and there will be a Valentine’s Day soiree as well. I will remind all of you not to wander off campus, for any reason. Visits to Flackter Alley will begin in October, and again in December if things go well the first time. Quidditch and Quodpot team trials will be held next week, all students are welcome to try out. If you need a broom, see Professor Heyman and he will set you up. Your schedules will be given to you at dinner tomorrow night, any questions about them, see Mrs. Landingham or Mrs. Fiderer. Now, Seniors, please escort the Novices to their rooms. The rest of you, just hang out for a few minutes to let them get settled.”

The Seniors got up and started to herd their charges out the door, as the other five years stayed seated and toyed with the remains of their desserts. As the rest of the students were about to file out of the dining hall, Heyman had one last announcement to make:

“Would the Junior Class boys stick around for a few minutes, we have things to discuss.” The thirteen boys hung back, and Warrick gave Harry a significant nod. Heyman had them all gather around the staff table, and got right to the point:

“Well, we have a situation here: Where to put Harry. There are four rooms available for you, but only three are occupied at the moment. Now to state the obvious: four does not divide into thirteen evenly. Clearly we have to redistribute some of you into the fourth room. Harry, am I correct in assuming that you wish to room with Warrick here?”

“Yes sir, you are.”

“Warrick, are you, Rick, and Terry still adamant about your proposal from this afternoon?” Terry and Rick both nodded at Warrick.

“Yes sir, we are.” Heyman turned to Joe Clancy, who was eyeing Harry and Warrick with some distaste.

“Joe, it has been obvious these many years that you and your roommates don’t get along. Until now we haven’t done anything about it, because we don’t want any student to have the luxury of a room to themselves. Harry's arrival changes things however, and due to Warrick's display during the Sorting.....well for once I'm inclined to give him what he wants. Room 6B will consist of Rick Crawford, Terry DiCarlo, Warrick Forrester, and Harry Potter. Joe, you will move over to Room 6D. Any of the rest of you that want a bigger share of a room, you may move in with Joe. If none of you choose to, then he gets the room by himself. You eight do not have to decide now, take until tomorrow night to talk amongst yourselves about it. Only two of you may move of course, and Joe does not have any veto privileges. Are there any questions? No? Good, Harry if you will give Joe a couple of hours to do his re-packing, then you can move in."

"Yes sir."

"Goodnight then boys, we'll see you tomorrow."

Warrick, Rick, and Terry went along with Clancy to their room, to make sure nothing was left behind.....nothing having a rather broad definition here. Harry returned to the guest room and packed his stuff, and had Dobby readjust the closet to it's normal size. Warrick came and got him 15 minutes later, it appeared as though Clancy hadn't unpacked that much. Harry was writing a note for Dobby to deliver to the twins.

"Well he's gone, thank goodness."

"You think any of the others will want to live with him?"

"I doubt it, but you never know. The lure of more space against the knowledge that you have to put up with him for two years. It might be tough call for one or two of them."

"He definitely doesn't like you, that's for sure. He looked at us both like we were scum."

"No, he doesn't like me. That's okay though, because the feeling is returned. It eases my conscience when the people I don't like return the favor. You're just guilty by association."

“What about Rick and Terry? Are they just going along with this to get rid of Clancy?”

“To a point, though I assured them that you’re cool and everything. They didn’t need much convincing really, though I don’t think it would have worked if it had meant five of us in there. Don’t worry, they don’t need to know about the Map.”

“I was about to ask if you’d told them about it. Six is enough people I think. The twins are still working on the spell balls, they’ll have a lot more time with the kids all up at Hogwarts tomorrow.”

“Getting nostalgic for your train ride yet?”

“Kind of I guess. The train leaves in a few hours, it’s going to be strange not to be on it.”

“Any regrets?” Harry pondered that, and then remembered a line from Chariots of Fire (the gang had watched it a few nights earlier).

“A few probably.....no doubts though.” Warrick smiled, he remembered it too.

“Glad to hear it. Let’s get your stuff up there. Wait a second, what are we going to tell Rick and Terry about Dobby and Winky? Where are they going to sleep?” In the hubbub of the night, that detail had slipped Harry’s mind. He was going to have to tell Warrick about the trunk now.

“That’s taken care of, they’re going to live in my trunk.” His friend was taken aback.

“They can enlarge one of your compartments that much?”

“The trunk is magically enhanced, the last four compartments are room sized. They’ve set up in one of them.”

“Room sized? So that’s where you and Sophie were the other night.”

"I didn't say anything, after all, a closed mouth catches no flies." That was a phrase Harry had read in Noble House, his airplane book. He had taken to quoting it when talking about the Map, and Warrick had gotten in the habit of saying it as well.

"I was going to tell you guys about the trunk tomorrow, when we could get Jonas in on it."

"And you wanted to test out Jonas, didn't you?"

"I wanted to make sure, yeah. Not everyone clicks you know. He seems like a good guy though, I could have handled Jefferson with him in there."

"So if he hadn't checked out, would you have told us about the trunk?"

"I would have told you, Reiko, and Claudia, sure. It's all good though, but let's try to hold off on letting Terry and Rick know about it, as long as we can anyway." Warrick had told him that Terry and Rick were good guys, but none of the three were best friends with each other.

"Agreed, we'll figure something out tomorrow to tell the others about it. Anyway, you ready to go?" He tried to pick up the trunk, only to have his shoulder almost pulled out of its socket.

"Oh yeah, that's one of the security features of it, you can only move it if you're keyed in. Let's set you up in it." He proceeded to put Warrick's fingerprint in there, and his friend was almost able to pick it up with two fingers.

"Nifty, you Brits think of everything."

"I'm sure they do stuff like that here too, you just haven't had to find out." He finished writing his note, and Dobby popped into deliver it.

"When you get back, you and Winky should get set up in the trunk. We haven't decided how to spring you on my two new roommates yet." Dobby nodded and went off to the twins' shop to leave the message (it was 3 am in Britain right now, and it was debatable about whether Fred or George would be awake still). They made the trip downstairs, where Heyman was impatiently waiting for them, to key Harry into the door (like he had with the guest room).

The rest of the night was spent tentatively getting to know his two new roommates. Warrick was right about the two of them, they saw Harry more as a way to get rid of Clancy than anything, but they seemed friendly enough. Harry and Warrick joined the girls in the Cortez Lounge, and eventually hit the hay around midnight.

Sunday, September 1, 1996

Harry slept in, with the help of a Silencing Charm that eliminated the noise from his roommates. He spent most of the afternoon dreading the news from Britain, hoping that there wouldn't be a Voldemort attack on the train. There was no word though, and around dinner time he relaxed, figuring that he would have heard something. He did write letters to his British friends, describing his Sorting, and finally talking about his friends. It took a couple of hours of work to do it, since he wanted to write personalized letters to all of them (he suspected that some of them might compare their letters, and he didn't want it to be another form letter like at the beginning of the summer).

He sent the letters off with Dobby, as Reiko (who didn't have her own owl) had borrowed Hedwig to write to her parents in Oklahoma. As much as any owl could look relieved, Hedwig had not exactly acted unhappy when she was told that her trans-Atlantic trips would be few and far between. The weather alone would prevent them a couple of months from now.

Dobby returned a couple of hours later with a stack of short notes from Ron, Ginny, and Neville, with longer letters from Luna and Hermione. Luna's was one of her stream of consciousness deals, but was very amusing. He passed it over to Sophie while he read the others. He could hear her laughing as she re-read passages out loud to Reiko. Hermione's was the longest, and delivered the most news:

Dear Harry,

I was glad to get your letter, and to read that you're doing so well. We all miss you very much Harry. I must admit I was surprised to see Dobby, and in an American football jersey as well. What is a Green Bay Packer anyway? Dobby seemed not to know.

Anyway, the train ride was uneventful for the most part. Malfoy made his usual appearance, but he didn't say much, Luna started asking him what brand of hair dye he used to get it so blond, and Ron and Neville were laughing so hard Malfoy didn't have much chance to get a word in. Professor Lupin came by and Malfoy and his idiots left us alone.

I'm not going to let Ron read this, so I want to apologize again for his behavior the night you came here to visit. He just feels blindsided by the whole thing, and now with you gone, he has no real good friend in his dorm room. Two nights ago he confronted Neville about what he knew about your plans, and they had quite the argument about it. I don't know why Ron waited until then to do it, but I guess he finally just put things together in his mind. Neville didn't admit to anything, but it makes sense that you would tell him, since he wasn't part of Headquarters this summer. They still talked to each other on the train ride, but I'm worried about Ron being in there with Neville, Dean, and Seamus without you. I love him, but he is pretty combative at times. I don't know how he's going to handle things without you at his side.

Dumbledore didn't mention your absence during his opening address, but a lot of people were talking about it during dinner. It's like they didn't believe the Daily Prophet and thought it was just a ruse to keep you protected. Malfoy was pretty quiet about that I must say, I expected him to be in full taunting regalia, but he wasn't. He barely looked at us the whole meal. Both Professors Lupin and Shepherd got a wild round of applause, especially Shepherd, no speeches though. I think Dumbledore learned his lesson from last year. I hope you and he can work things out eventually, maybe he can earn himself another chance with you.

Classes start tomorrow, and I know I'll miss you then, since we would have been in a lot of them together. I want to apologize for my comment in that letter about having no competition, that must have rankled, and I don't blame you for being mad about that. I guess I took you for granted when it came to academics, but your OWL scores proved me wrong. The new Potions Professor was on the train and I got a chance to talk with him for a minute. He seems very nice, and even though he was Slytherin like Snape, he says that he couldn't care less which student is pureblood and which is muggleborn. Its encouraging, especially since he's going to be Head of House for Slytherin. Maybe he can keep Malfoy in line, I don't know.

I'm glad that you told us about your friends, they all seem very nice.....very American. Is there much culture shock for you? I wouldn't think so, wizards are wizards I would think. You get to work on computers though, that must be different. I'm glad your friend taught you how to type.

I'm not sure how much news of here that you get over there, no one is sure how much contact you have with the twins. You should be proud of them by the way, they've constantly stood up for you with their parents and with Dumbledore. Anyway, Voldemort has been quiet, nothing much has happened. They had Aurors on the train as well as Professors Lupin and Shepherd, but nothing happened. I haven't seen Professor Lupin looked so relieved in a long time. He's predicting a quiet year at school.

Okay, Dobby's back, and it looks like he has replies from the others, so I'd better wrap this up. I hope you enjoy your classes, I really envy you getting to learn Wandless Magic, maybe you can show me some things next summer when you come to visit. Take care Harry.

Love,

Hermione

It was a nice letter, and imparted more information than the ones from Ron, Ginny, and Neville combined. He noted that neither Ron nor Neville mentioned their argument, This would bear watching, Harry had a bad feeling that he would have to be a peacekeeper from a few thousand miles away. His sympathies in this were mostly with Neville, but he acknowledged the strain that Ron must be under. He carefully folded the letters and put them in the trunk, and then went back to the Lounge.

At dinner, the schedules were released, and Harry's looked thus:

Monday:

Regular Transfiguration

9:00 am-Noon

Tuesday:

Muggle Studies

9:00 am-Noon

Advanced Defense

2:00-4:00 pm

Wednesday:

Wandless Magic:

9:00-11:00 am

Advanced Charms

2:00-4:00 pm

Thursday:

Advanced Defense

2:00-4:00 pm

Friday:

Wandless Magic

9:00-11:00 am

Advanced Charms

2:00-4:00 pm

So Harry's light day was on Monday of all days, with only three hours of class to attend. He quickly swapped schedules with the others and they compared. He had three classes with Sophie: Charms, Defense, and Wandless, just like they thought. Reiko was also in those three classes, and Claudia joined them for Defense, and Jonas for Charms. Warrick had gotten straight E's on his OWL's, so while his class rank was pretty good, he didn't make any Advanced classes. Jonas was Advanced in Potions, and would be with Harry in Muggle Studies. It didn't seem like that hard a schedule, but the others warned him that Advanced classes in particular were almost all practical, so he would be tired at the end of those days (and he had Advanced classes every day but Monday).

After dinner, they took advantage of Rick and Terry being in the Lounge, and congregated in 6B.

"Guys, I have something to show you." They did the tour, gave the same 'so that's where you were the other night' comments, and in general were very impressed. Warrick was the only one to flat out ask one question though:

"How much did this thing cost, and where can I get one?" Harry laughed.

"It's expensive mate, I don't know if your uncle gives you that much spending money. I'm not that clear on the exchange rate, but I think the two of them cost me $10,000." Warrick didn't look dissuaded, and they all knew that a letter would be sent to his uncle pretty soon.

"So no one can get into this thing without your okay?"

“So I’ve been told. Warrick tried last night and couldn’t even lift it off the ground. I’ll key you all in when we leave. This is where Dobby and Winky will be staying, and it’s where we can keep the Map.” He went over and grabbed the blueprint, and spread it out over the coffee table. They all checked it over, Jonas of course seeing it for the first time, and no one found any errors on it. Claudia had the best idea of how to get started:

“Tonight’s assignment is that everyone puts their own dorm rooms on the Map. This will let us see an example of things, and make sure that we’re doing it right.” They all agreed, and went back up to 6B (there wasn’t enough furniture yet for them to hang out in the trunk). Once up in the room, Harry took his wand out and prepared himself:

Exostra Zothea a Tabula!

Nothing came out of his wand, but the tip glowed for about two seconds. He took that as a good sign, and went back to the trunk to get the blueprint. He unrolled it on his bed and checked.....yep, Cortez Room 6B was on there, as were six dots with tiny printed names representing the entire gang.

“Hey Jonas, started pacing would you, let’s see if we have movement on here.” They had all been crowding around the Map, but Jonas started walking and his dot moved along with him. The six of them let out a loud cheer, one room down, another hundred or so to go. Harry put the Map (not merely a blueprint anymore) back in the trunk, and keyed Jonas, Claudia, and Reiko into the system. They made the walk to the Lounge, with Claudia trying the spell out on the hallway.....and her wand tip glowed just like Harry’s. The Lounge was posted on the Map soon thereafter, and Claudia and Jonas did their hallways, Lounges, and dorm rooms as well. They all agreed that they would pick their names once the Map was complete, and any ideas they had about those names were kept to themselves.

The next day would be the first day of classes, the first of a long year.....though not long in the way you think.

End Chapter

Author's Note: I know I know, finally a new chapter. Don't worry, you won't have to wait another five months for the next one. I made a numbers screw-up in the last chapter, which I hope you'll forgive me for. I put 12 students in each House in the Sorting, while having Harry's year have twice that number. So let me fix that to have Harry's year with 16 students (two boys rooms before Harry, two girls rooms).....well 17 with Harry. This number is still bigger than the new class, but it's close enough. A reminder that some of my Kindred/Vampire descriptions are being taken from a short-lived TV series. Oh, one review that I've gotten during this interminable wait was solely focused on criticizing chapter six's title (Bladvak).....I mean c'mon now, that's reaching.

Transfiguration Classroom E

9:00 am

Day One of classes had arrived, and Harry and Warrick made the walk to their first class: Regular Transfiguration, Professor Hoban Washburn presiding. Since practically everyone in the Junior Class took Transfiguration in some way, there were two Regular classes, Cortez and Proctor in one, and Shawnee and Jefferson in the other. The classroom was similar in style to the room where Harry had been tutored by Palmer the last few weeks: thirty desks arranged in theater style seating. This particular class used about 22 of those seats, and included Terry and Rick (his other two roommates, though the two pairs did not make a point of sitting together), and Sophie's two roommates, Miranda and Kelly.

Hoban Washburn was 30 years old, with sandy hair and medium everything else. He was in his seventh year as a teacher at Great Lakes, after having been the Transfiguration whiz kid of his class at The Pathfinder School in California.....though that's all he was talented in really. Transfiguration was his only NEWT O score, and he only got one E to boot (Charms). He had an bemused air about him, and his one-liner rate was pretty good, if not Lyman's equal.

The first class was little more than review for the first two hours, as he had students demonstrating various techniques. Harry at first was called upon to change a matchstick into a football, but caused much laughter when he allowed that he didn't know what a football looked like exactly. Washburn lightly tapped the side of his head.

"Sorry Harry, forgot about that for a second. Don't worry, you're not losing your accent that quickly. Try turning it into a cricket bat instead." Harry's accent, in point of fact, was not noticeably lighter. That could be chalked up to all the British movies he was watching (plus Dobby and Winky) counteracting all of the American accents he was now listening to on a daily basis. He changed the matchstick into the cricket bat with little trouble.

Despite Palmer's assurances that McGonagall had prepared him well, Harry had still been nervous about his first class not being one of his strengths. He made it through the class okay though, after also being called on to change a glass into a plastic bowl. Not everyone passed through so easily though, and a large part of the class was Washburn doing some on the spot tutoring. He ended the class 15 minutes early with 50 pages of reading and a two page paper for homework.

"So what'd you think of Wash compared to Palmer?" Harry raised an eyebrow at 'Wash', but replied.

"I thought he was pretty cool, kind of laid back. Not as serious as Palmer. What about you? You've had them both."

"I prefer Wash on a personal level, but I think Palmer teaches more good stuff. Wash's goal is for everyone to pass the class, while Palmer wants the most E's and O's he can get." The two of them decided to bypass putting their stuff away, and headed right for the dining hall, where they met up with Jonas and the girls.

After lunch Harry decided to take advantage of his free afternoon and get his homework done. He did the required reading, and managed to only need 90 minutes to get his paper done. Reiko had given him two typing lessons in the weeks before, and he felt he didn't botch it too badly, having the computer side of the room almost to himself.. He sat a particular computer that Warrick said that he had loaded a few games on, and played for about an hour before students started streaming in from their afternoon classes. Feeling pleased to be caught up on his first day, he spent his evening reading up on some of his favorite curse texts, preparing for Advanced Defense the next day. He and Sophie spent their studying time in the trunk, not wanting the noise distraction of the Lounge (though Silencing Charms surrounded the three televisions).

Muggle Studies Classroom B

9:00 am

“Welcome to Junior Year Muggle Studies. For those of you who may have forgotten, I’m Professor Ziegler.” Ziegler was of medium height, in his early fifties, and almost bald but for a ring of brown fringe. He had kind of a sad, hound dog type air about him, but Jonas swore that he was brilliant. Indeed he was the oldest of the junior teachers in their subjects. He’d been a Great Lakes teacher for 25 years, but was still junior to the 73 year old Roberto Mendoza (44 years at Great Lakes, most of anyone save Staff Secretary Dolores Landingham).

“What we’re going to accomplish this year is a comprehensive study of the muggle federal government in this country. This will build on your last two years when we covered local and state governments. You will have two term papers this year, dealing with topics that we’ll discuss later on this month. Like the last time you had me (for these kids it was two years ago), you do not need to take notes in this class, a handout will be sent to your rooms tomorrow with an exact transcript of what I say. I want you to concentrate on the words, rather than with the hassle of trying to scribble them all down. The only grades in this class will be for the term papers, class participation, and the year end exam in June. These three will be weighted equally, so if you’re weak in one area, you can make it up with the others. Are there any questions?” Seeing none, he started his lecture.

Ziegler proceeded to talk non-stop for the next three hours, minus one ten minute bathroom break, about how the President of the United States (muggle) was elected, giving countless examples of past elections and candidates. Harry had only vaguely even heard of a few of the names Ziegler mentioned (yes, he knew who Clinton was, but not much beyond him), but listened with rapt attention. There was no pause for questions, but Ziegler assured them that they would have a discussion next time, based on his lecture and the assigned reading. That was how the class was to be apparently, a lecture one week and a discussion the next. Of the 51 people in the Junior Class, only eight were in this class, which promised for a lot of discussion time for each kid, and Harry was looking forward to that. His time with Lyman had regrettably come to an end for awhile, but he had enjoyed the give and take, and had hopes that this might be similar. The class ended right on the stroke of noon, and Ziegler assigned 100 pages of reading out of the main textbook. Ziegler held Harry back for a moment.

“If you like Harry, I can have my lecture notes from the last two years delivered to you, covering the local and state governments. You won’t be tested on any of it until the NEWT of course, but it will be useful I think.”

“Thank you sir, I know I have a lot to catch up on in this subject. I have to admit that I don’t know much about muggle government in Britain either.”

“We can do something about that next summer, it’s my turn to stay for the summer program. Professor Lyman said that you seem to pick this stuff up pretty well, so I’m not worried. Anyway, go eat. We’ll talk next time.” Harry left for lunch, Jonas had waited for him just outside the classroom.

Lunch consisted of speculation about what Advanced Defense would be like. Rumors had floated down from upperclassmen over the years, but the prevailing word had always been ‘you have to see it for yourself.’ Warrick and Jonas had Regular Defense during much of the same time period (Regular classes being one three hour session rather than two sessions of two hours each), and they wished their friends well.....and hoped they wouldn't be sent to the Med Station at any point.

Defense Training Room A

There were ten of them in the class, the crème de la crème of the Junior Year in Defense (this is not an abbreviation by the way, the whole title is Defense, you'll find out why soon enough). The only Cortez students were Harry, Sophie, and Reiko. Ironically, the highest rated House in Junior Year Defense was Jefferson, but they only qualified two students for Advanced, the rest of the House getting E's or A's (no one failed, the only House to claim that feat). They did, however, boast the number one student in Defense for the year, a young man named Drew Baylor. Harry had briefly spoken to him a couple of times, as he was Jonas' roommate, though Jonas and Drew weren't close. He was considered a bit of a loner, which was strange given his connections (his mother was a member of the Wizard Congress, his father an Auror). During their brief meetings Harry didn't sense any hostility from Drew, but no real sense of 'hey, I'd love to get to know the famous Harry Potter' either.

The classroom was unlike anything Harry had ever seen. It was not even a classroom in a sense, but a training room, magically mocked up to look like a regular urban street. Like Murray had told him, Advanced Defense was subtitled Basic Combat, and combat in America was more of the urban kind of fight, what with Wizards v. Kindred v. Lycans and all their various permutations not going for mass warfare on open battlefields.

Professor Ripley was standing at the room's entrance, handed them strips of cloth, and told them to stay around the doorway. The 44 year old Ripley was about 6' tall and very slim, with short brown hair and glasses that were almost the same style as Harry's. Despite his unassuming appearance, he had been a top Auror for 15 years before joining the Great Lakes staff. He and Harry had had a couple of brief talks, and at his request, Harry had told him about the DOM fight and who had done what. Ripley was surprisingly not critical of the British Auror Command, and had good things to say about Head Auror Rufus Scrimgeour, whom Harry had heard much about, but never met (he reckoned he might meet him at the Malfoy trial next month). Once all ten were there, Ripley began the class.

“Welcome to Advanced Defense. You are here because you are the nine students who got O’s on your Defense OWL exam, plus Harry here, who had the highest OWL score in Europe.....and it looks like he didn’t know that, so at least one of you will have learned something today. For the first part of the lesson we’re going to have some review, but likely not a review similar to your other classes. Duels have so far not been a prime part of your Defense education here, in no small part because it’s been over 40 years since the last wizard war here in America. Times are changing though, Dark Wizards are on the rise in China, Australia, and obviously in Great Britain. Taking that into consideration, part of your course curriculum has been changed. Normally you would spent the entire year training to fight off Kindred and Lycans, and you will still do a lot of that. But you will also learn to fight other wizards, ones who would stop at nothing to do you harm.”

“What we’re going to do today is a mass duel, the ten of you against each other.....though not yet against me. It’s every boy and every girl for themselves, with one simple goal: Present me with nine wands other than your own. That’s when the exercise ends. Now there are couple of small little rules: No teamwork, no physical assaults, no curses that would put anyone in danger of the Med Station.....and the last one, my favorite: You can only use Stupefy twice. Hence, creativity is your foremost ally. Any violations of these rules and you are disqualified and will serve a detention. The winner gets extra credit on their first term paper. I’m going to blindfold you and spread you out, you have that long to strategize. You’ve all seen the others perform at the Olympics, so you know what you’re all capable of.....outside of Harry, who knows nothing of your strengths and weaknesses, but is the only person here, aside from yours truly, who has actually fought for his life. You’ll all be placed in plain sight of each other this first time.....yes, you may assume that there will be many more times. Now go ahead and put your blindfolds on, and take out your wands.”

The students did so, with some trepidation. Once on, Ripley used Mobilicorpus to move them around to various spots on the street. None of them were placed in defilades or blind spots, each of the ten were in sight of the others. Harry spent every second coming up with his plan, and especially when to use his two allowed stunners.

“ All right, everyone is in place.....Accio blindfolds!” Ten blindfolds flew off as Harry quickly moved three steps to his right, which was fortunate as a hex of some sort hit the wall where he had been standing. He collided with a body to his right and he snapped off:

Impedimentia!

Right at Claudia, slowing her down to very slow motion. Her wand was almost ready to fire at him too, Harry saved by his wand arm being right next to her, while her wand (Claudia was also a right hander) had to go across her body. Impedimentia reduces one's speed by a factor of ten, so she was pretty much history. He rolled across Claudia's body (not for that reason you perverts, good grief) to avoid another hex coming across the street, his left hand grabbing her wand in the process. The hex turned out to be a Petrificus Totalus that hit Claudia on the left arm, enough to freeze her. He used his wand to throw up a strong shield and surveyed the street. Two other students were down in addition to Claudia, though neither of them were Reiko or Sophie. Harry found himself situated in the middle of the street, opposite the entrance and Ripley. There was nobody to his right, and Claudia was acting as a blocker on the left, so the only foes who could hit him were across the street. His shield soon drew attention though, and while he was looking around, multiple students started taking aim at it and began to try to batter it down.

‘No teamwork my arse’ Harry thought. He used Claudia's wand to loose a few minor jinxes across the street, none of which hit anything but the walls, causing them to crumble. He saw the rubble shower Reiko, and it gave him an idea. He pointed Claudia's wand behind him and put what remaining power he could into a series of the same curse (yet still keep his shield solid).

Reducto! Reducto! Reducto! Reducto! Reducto!

Large chunks of the walls around him fell down to the ground, and Harry moved them around him to act as a wall. This had the effect of allowing him to temporarily remove the shield as he hid behind the rock wall and caught his breath. He looked around again, and saw that Drew had taken down another student (his second), though he had not yet summoned the wand.....which Harry promptly did himself:

Accio Wand!

Harry was now in possession of three wands, while Drew and Reiko each had two, three students (including Sophie) having just their own. Two Reductos hit Harry's wall, and Ripley's voice promptly rang out.

"Reducto is not to be used against another student, only against inanimate objects! If any of those spells so much as graze someone you will be disqualified!"

While the others took this in, Harry used it as an opportunity to fire a spread of Petrificus Totaluses at his nearest opponent, hitting Ray Elwood of Proctor House, who had been concentrating on trying to take out Sophie. She had been ready for this though when she saw Harry fire, and quickly scooped up the fallen wand.....which was the only mistake she made during the exercise, as Harry decided that he couldn't play favorites.....and used one of his two allotted Stupefy spells to stun his girlfriend as Elwood's wand made contact with her hand. He used Claudia's wand to summon the wands, giving him five of them.

Four students remained now: Harry, Reiko, Drew, and Amanda Knight (from Proctor House). Harry was the only one on his side of the street, while the others were spread out on the other side (in the order named in the previous sentence). Drew was ignoring Harry for the time being and concentrating on Amanda. He was using some kind of pulse spell that Harry had never seen before and was quickly battering down her shield, as Reiko was trying to circle around to Harry's side of the street. Harry had done tons of spell reading over the last couple of months, but practically all of those spells were useless here, since he wasn't allowed to actually harm anyone.

He quickly hit on an idea, and after throwing a series of tripping jinxes at Reiko to slow her down, put it into action. He jumped into the air and quickly put a feather-light spell on himself and immediately followed it with a wind spell that shot him up like a flash. His wand acted as the rudder and engine, as within a couple of seconds he was on top of the building (one-story, as all the buildings on the fake street were).

Reiko who, being with Warrick, thought she had seen most everything, was nonplussed for a moment as Harry took aim at her:

Petrificus Totalus! Accio Reiko!

Both spells, though fired at long distance, hit her square in the chest.....not a bad feat considering he was many meters away and Reiko wasn't a large target to begin with. She was instantly frozen and within a few seconds was laying next to him on the roof, where he claimed her wands.

While this was going on, Drew had taken out Amanda and only seen the last part of Harry's work. After wondering vaguely how Harry had gotten on the roof, he set about getting him down. Deciding that the rule against Reducto didn't count here, since Harry had put himself in harm's way, he started using it on Harry's building.....all the while moving around in a random pattern so that Harry couldn't get a good bead on him. Drew was quite a powerful wizard for someone his age and his Reducto barrage was doing the job nicely, within two minutes the building was beginning to collapse and Harry was doing a little dancing. Something else was bothering him though.

"Hey Drew!"

Drew stopped his demolition exhibition and looked a bit surprised.

"What?"

“Give me a second to get Reiko down there, she’s frozen and I don’t want her to get hurt.” Drew thought this over for a second and didn’t see the harm in it.

“Fair enough, you have ten seconds.” Harry waved his thanks and quickly unfroze Reiko.

“Oh man Harry, I really wanted to be buried in rubble too.”

“Oh be quiet Reiko, get down there and stay out of the line of fire.” Reiko grabbed the edge and lowered herself down, quickly going toward Ripley once she hit the ground. This actually took 13 seconds if one is to be accurate in the telling of this tale, but Drew waited until Reiko was out of the way before starting up again. Soon the building was about seven feet high and Harry was in desperate need of some options. He wasn’t using a shield or anything of the like, since Drew was only haphazardly aiming spells at him, concentrating mostly on leveling the building. Harry idly wondered just how much endurance Drew had, and formed a plan.....but a contingency had to be done first.

He took a couple of objects out of his pocket and mixed them in with some rubble he gathered up from the roof. After making sure his captured wands were secure, he banished two piles of rubble toward Drew.....though not hitting him with them. They landed on either side and Baylor barely noticed them. His trap set, Harry took the next step:

He put the Feather-Light charm on again and floated to the next building. Since Drew hadn’t really seen it the first time (being occupied with defeating Amanda Knight), this caught him a little by surprise. He loosed a few jinxes at Harry while in mid-flight, but Harry was far enough away (and moving pretty erratically) that they missed. He resumed his building destruction project, putting more and more power into each shot, while keeping Harry occupied with jinxes and hexes as well. Harry had to admire his opponent’s endurance.....but enough was enough. He took out Sophie’s wand and started firing tripping jinxes like crazy, right at Drew.....and then Drew moved to his left, and Harry sprung the trap: He pointed at one of the rubble piles he had thrown down:

Activate!

And up around Drew sprung up a portable swamp, courtesy of the evil genius minds of George and Fred Weasley, and their financial backer: Harry Potter.

To say that Drew was taken off guard was one of life's understatements, and Harry used his last Stupefy, hitting him point blank in the.....well Drew did flinch at the last instant you see, and a stunning spell won't do much temporary damage to the groin area, especially from 20 feet away. He collapsed in the muck, the exercise was almost over. Harry hopped down from the roof and plucked the wands from his last opponent's pocket. With a big grin on his face, he walked over to Professor Ripley and handed over his booty.

"I believe you wanted these sir."

"Well done Harry, well done." Ripley was very amused by the swamp, and after reviving the fallen students, he walked over to inspect it. Harry walked over to revive Drew, and offered his own wand to him to clean himself up. Drew did so, and asked what everyone else was thinking:

"What the hell is this thing?"

"Its what it looks like, a portable swamp. A couple of friends of mine invented it. Dead useful aren't they?" Everyone laughed, even Sophie and Reiko, who had heard much about them, but had not seen a swamp in action. Harry and Drew shook hands, and all of them got their wands back. After that, Harry poked around in the muck and managed to find the other swamp he had placed, putting it back in his pocket. Ripley surveyed the damage to the street, almost all of it caused by Harry and Drew..

"The elves aren't going to like this one bit." He was chuckling as he said this.

“Everyone follow me into the next classroom for the after action report.” They all exited the street, and filed into the room next door, a regular classroom that resembled the ones Harry had seen all during the week, but without desks, just armchairs. The ten students sat in a semi-circle around Ripley, as he set up a pensieve projector. The action had only taken about 20 minutes in total, with the last half almost being just Harry versus Drew. The professor had been standing far enough back that he was able to take in all of the action, and the students got a full view of their performances.

Sophie sat there feeling vaguely embarrassed that Harry had taken her down so easily.....but rationalized that at least she had lost to the overall winner. Reiko and Claudia felt much the same way, though Claudia let loose one zinger:

“Gee Harry, you have three friends in the class and you take us all out.....I think we need to vote on you again.”

The rest of the class was pretty quiet, as they waited for Ripley to critique them. He was relatively easy on them, saving his most interesting analysis for the last two.

“What you saw in the last duel was spell knowledge versus tactics. Drew has been through five years of the best Defense training in America, and is the best in his class, not to mention what he gets from his father on the side.....but he has not had to use this in any non-class situations. Harry on the other hand, has had, from his own descriptions to me, no less than two lost years of Defense teaching, one mediocre year, and two decent years.....but he has had to fight for his life quite a few times, with that lack of theoretical knowledge hampering him.....which has forced him to compensate by learning to use surprise. Spells versus tactics. Drew’s spells were mostly in advance of anything Harry was using, but Harry wound up using some out of the box thinking on more than one occasion. Drew, having looked at the scene, what would you have done differently?”

“Well I don’t really know Professor, I’d have to think on that a bit. I thought I had him until the swamp thing got me. I wasn’t getting tired really, and he wasn’t using any spells that would really have done much to me.”

“He’s right actually. I’ve done a lot of spell reading lately, but they’ve all been dangerous curses and shields, nothing I could really use in an exercise like this one. If I didn’t have the swamps in my pocket, well I’m not sure what I would have done.” He left unsaid that he surely would have thought of something, but felt that it would be impolitic to say it aloud.

“Okay class, I’m going to run the show one more time. Watch what you did very carefully, I want a one page paper for next time on what you would have done differently. Harry, I want you to do it too, even though you won, think up some alternate strategies. All of you keep your papers to yourselves until you turn them in, you might be need those tactics in a future mass duel.” He ran the show again, and Harry made a point of studying Drew and Reiko, looking for signs and tells (Reiko was ranked second in Defense until Harry arrived). Once in was over, Ripley dismissed the class, and Harry and company went upstairs.

“Please tell me you girls aren’t mad at me?” He said this with a “hopeful of leniency look” on his face.

Claudia knew from watching the pensieve that she really didn’t have a leg to stand on, and admitted as much.

“Yeah, you got me fair and square Harry, no problem.” Reiko said the same.

“The whole floating thing was nicely done, it caught me and Drew by surprise sure enough. I think that won you the exercise more than the swamps did.” Sophie had Harry’s hand, but disengaged long enough to give him a light elbow in the side.

“Well at least it was you who did it, I’m glad that if I had to lose, I lost to the best.” She took his hand back, and they all wandered to the Cortez Lounge, waiting for Warrick and Jonas.....who appeared about an hour later, their three hour class getting out pretty early as well. They got the blow by blow from Harry and the ladies, and Warrick looked particularly impressed that Harry wasn’t tied up and hanging from the ceiling.

“We thought about that boyfriend, but we don’t want Harry pulling punches next time. I can’t wait to see what he can do against a Lycan or a Kindred.” Harry had only been half listening to Reiko, but started a little.

“When would I find that out?” Claudia answered for them:

“Well rumor has it that in Advanced Defense we actually get some combat practice time against them. The government has some Lycans and Kindred on the payroll for stuff like this. You know, people who’ve offended their packs and clans and are banished for whatever reason. I guess technically they’re traitors to their kind, but they’re very helpful.....if the rumors are true that is.” Harry had never even seen, to his knowledge, a vampire up close..... And the idea of fighting a werewolf, even in practice, was rather daunting. Still, it was all about learning.

They all went to dinner, and the hall was relatively full. They grabbed their usual table, and Harry was about to sit down when he noticed Drew Baylor sitting in the corner by himself, reading the Chronicle as he was about to start eating. On an impulse, Harry walked over to him.

“Hey Drew, come over and join us mate.” The other boy looked a little startled, but didn’t say no right away.

“I don’t know if Jonas and Warrick would appreciate that.” Harry didn’t know what to make of that, but he had an easy answer to it regardless.

“Well the girls won’t mind, and they pretty much run the group. C’mon.” He grabbed Drew’s newspaper, giving him little choice but to follow, levitating his plates in front of him. Harry got to his place and squeezed his chair closer to Sophie, Reiko doing the same on the other side to make room.

“We had quite the duel today, I really want to learn that pulse spell you were using.”

“I owled my dad about those swamps, your friends can expect a big order of them.” This had the noticeable effect of relaxing the rest of the table, and the girls started laughing.

“Speaking of that, when do we get to meet those twins? Will they come for a visit?”

“Soon Jonas, they’re interested to meet you guys. The trick is getting them over here.” A not so subtle hint about the trunk secret.

“They run a joke shop you said? Like Zonko’s?”

“More or less Drew, they’ve had the idea for years but the store’s only been open for a few months. They tell me that the flyers are almost ready, so you guys can see all the stuff they’ve got pretty soon.” They talked about the twins for the rest of the meal, and while he was pretty quiet, Drew was drawn into the conversation almost in spite of himself. The others had heard a lot of these stories before, but they didn’t seem to mind. After the meal, the sextet (sans Drew) went back upstairs to get their books to do some studying. While in their room, Warrick had a question:

“So what was that about, with Drew?”

“He seems like a good guy, I don’t know.....it just seemed like the thing to do at the time.....why, what’s wrong with him?” Warrick shrugged his shoulders.

“Nothing really, he’s just a loner type, studying all the time. At first he got tagged with the informer rap, you know, because of his mom and dad.....but Jonas doesn’t really believe it. He’s not a bad guy, he’s just quiet. Not like Jonas and me.....beat you to it, didn’t I?” Indeed he had, Harry had already opened his mouth and was loaded for bear.

“I didn’t say a word.”

“You didn’t have to, I know you pretty well by now. Anyway, he’s not a bad guy, I don’t mind if you bring him around.”

“What will Jonas say?” Warrick hesitated a little bit, and Harry was tempted to grab the Map to see if there might be any fighting going on.

“They’re dissimilar enough that they’re not the best of buddies, let’s put it that way.”

“Yeah, I’ve noticed that guy roommates around here don’t always make the best of friends.....like with you and Joe, or even with you and Rick and Terry.”

“Pure coincidence my young friend. Nobody in our House really likes Joe, and he’s not too sad about it either (Clancy now had a room to himself, as no one else had wanted to put up with him). The difference between him and Drew is that Joe’s a jerk, and Drew is just quiet. He never throws his mom in our faces, even though she might be the next President.....okay, I’m warming up to him more and more now that I’m comparing him with Clancy. Rick and Terry are decent guys, just a little slow upstairs for my tastes.” He knew that Harry made a point of checking the room for Listening Charms, so there was no risk in the insult.....Harry still being somewhat paranoid about his privacy.

“Jonas will put up a bit of a fight if you do, but its nothing Claudia can’t manage. I’m faintly surprised he didn’t put up more of a fight about you, even if you were fait accompli for almost a month before he got back. You know, threat to his popularity and all.”

Harry had been warned about such a thing from Sophie and Reiko, but nothing had really manifested itself yet. He was wary of bringing up the subject with Warrick, wondering who he would side with in case things did split. The rest of the night was spent studying, as Harry dove into his Muggle Studies homework, trying to make sense of all the unfamiliar names and locations. Included in his textbook was a pretty detailed map of The United States, and he spent time studying that as well. He made a point of doing most of his work in the Lounge, so people wouldn't wonder where he was wandering off to.

Special Projects Classroom A

Harry and six other students sat in their chairs, awaiting Professor Kinsella, who was running a couple of minutes late (which had been announced at breakfast). This was pretty the same class composition as Defense, minus Claudia and three others, and adding Jack Straw, a Proctor House sixth year who had just missed the O cut for Defense (the class comprised the five students who had gotten O's in all of the wand subjects, plus Harry and Jack, who had just missed the O in one of their subjects). The room was quite small, befitting a seven person class size, and like all the others, was totally utilitarian. At ten minutes past the hour, Kinsella hurried in. He had brown hair, was of medium height, and could stand to lose a bit of weight. He took a few seconds to call the roll, and began his spiel.

Wands were stuck in pockets, and Harry, in a moment of whimsy, stuck his behind his ear, Luna like.....and yes, it drew as many odd stares here as it did at Hogwarts. He didn't care though, he'd explain to Reiko and Sophie afterward. Kinsella passed out small paper cups to everyone and resumed his place in front of them.

"Now in Advanced Charms, which all of you are in this afternoon I believe, you will work on doing your spells silently, and what we're doing here will help that. Now, at no volume louder than your normal tone of voice, I want you to point your wand hand, and try to levitate your cup. Begin."

As one, seven voices chimed out: Wingardium Leviosa.....not one cup budged, which didn't surprise Kinsella in the slightest.

"Okay, that didn't work.....good, it wasn't supposed to. I want you to focus your power on that cup, but don't be disappointed if you don't get it right away." After another 15 minutes of futility, he moved their chairs to give them some space, and began working individually with them. It took another 30 minutes for a breakthrough, as Drew managed to get his cup about three inches of air. This started a flood as everyone got their cup to move after that.....except for Harry, who was getting more and more frustrated by the minute. He threw the cup down on the ground in disgust, getting him some stares in the bargain.....and almost as an afterthought, he yelled out:

Accio Cup!

And what do you know, the cup flew right up to his hand, to his and all the other students' astonishment.

"Well done Harry, interesting that you could do the harder spell and not the easier one."

"That's the story of my life Professor.....err.....Ray." The older man chuckled, and waved the other students back to their practicing.

"Good with the Summoning Spell are you?"

“I wasn’t at first, but a couple of years ago I discovered that I really needed to learn it, and fast.....and though it took awhile, I mastered it. Now it’s one of my best spells, right along with the Patronus.”

“Yes, I’ve heard you can do that one. Interesting, now try Accio again, but at a normal tone.”

Accio Cup

Again, it flew right into his hand. Filled with confidence, Harry tried again:

Wingardium Leviosa

The cup didn’t so much move, as it flinched a bit.....but it was still more than Harry had done previously with wandless levitation. The students continued practicing, with Ray spending as much time with each of them as possible. He also gave them a couple of 15 minute breaks to rest, as this was tiring them out rapidly. By the end of class time (and this was the first of Harry’s to go the distance this week), all of the class had succeeded in at least moving their cup a few inches. Ray stressed that the levitation spell was arguably the easiest to use, so they shouldn’t get their hopes up about doing every spell wandlessly inside a week. It was a two year process, he explained to them, but they should all do pretty well (being the best wand students in their year).

A thoroughly exhausted Harry, Sophie, and Reiko staggered back to Cortez Lounge, where Harry promptly fell asleep on one of the couches. The girls were a little better off, and managed to stay awake until Warrick got there. He was coming out of Potions, and thus was completely fresh (magically). They solved the Harry problem by having Warrick use Mobilicorpus to get him to the dining hall.....which was quite the sight when they got there. Harry woke up to a sandwich being stuffed in his face, but after a hesitant “how the bloody hell did I get here” question, left well enough alone.

Charms Classroom B

2:00 pm

Harry had taken another nap after lunch, and was more or less ready to go by the time he got to Charms. This was the largest of the Advanced Classes, a credit to former Professors Heyman and Richard Segui, and current Professors Westin and Maloney. There were eighteen students in the class, including Reiko, Sophie, and Jonas.....who had not exhibited any latent irritation about Harry's reaching out to his roommate. Indeed he sat next to Drew during class, on the other side of Sophie.

Professor Janel Maloney was waiting for the class when they began trickling in. She was 29 years old, a graduate of Great Lakes eleven years ago. Tall, blond, and quite the looker, she was looked up to by the female students and ogled at by the boys. She had replaced Segui the year before Heyman was kicked upstairs, and was the youngest of the senior Professors.

"Welcome everyone to Advanced Charms, its nice to see so many O's from last year, the third highest O OWL total in the last twenty-five years in Charms, or so I'm told. We'll be doing kind of a hodgepodge for the next few months, working on various spells, and different ways of doing some old fashioned spells. The first thing we're going to work on, is what's called Silent Magic. Those of you who had Professor Kinsella this morning will have been clued in on this, but for the rest of you, the goal is this: to be able to say your incantations as quietly as possible, up to and including, not even moving your lips. Rather like a muggle ventriloquist act.....but a lot more fun. Now a bit of a warning: In Regular Charms, they're not even going to be attempting this kind of stuff until next year, so keep your tormenting of them to a minimum until then." Harry couldn't help himself and snapped his fingers in mock frustration. Maloney hit him with a dazzling smile.

"Forrester is an exception Harry, do you what you feel you must." The room exploded in laughter as Reiko in particular just shook her head (while grinning). They calmed down after a minute, and the lesson progressed much like the morning one had. Maloney had them start with simple spells and had them try them using a whisper.

Harry had learned an exhausting (not to mention frustrating) lesson of his own that morning, so he skipped right past the easy stuff and went right to the Summoning Spell.....which he nailed at a whisper. He didn't quite get it to work silently during the 90 minute exercise, but it was working well as a subtle whisper. Maloney let them out early, seeing that the Wandless students in particular were wearing down quickly by the 3:30 point. Harry waved the others to leave without him, and approached his Professor.

“Ma’am, I’m curious, will we be able to do all our magic this way eventually?”

“To a point Harry, some of the most powerful spells will still need at least some verbal incantations. The Unforgivables are almost impossible to do wandlessly, as well as the Patronus, and a few others. Are you thinking about Defense related things?”

“Yes ma’am, I tend to look at magic that way unfortunately, what I might need to fight someone or something off with.”

“Well given your history I don’t suppose I blame you. The basic offensive spells can be used silently, as can pretty much every shield I’ve tried. Defense was my second best subject here back in the day, so that’s something we’ll be working on a lot this year, and most of next year.”

“This kind of magic is best suited for Lycan and Kindred fighting? I don’t remember my older friends at Hogwarts making a big deal about silent magic.”

“The best defense against Lycans and Kindred is to get the drop on them without knowing we’re there, and silent magic allows us to do that better. We’ve never lost a war against them Harry, and we have to make sure we have that advantage in our quiver to keep it that way.”

“ Yes ma’am, so Professor Lyman told me.” Maloney got a mischievous grin when he mentioned Lyman, and Harry saw that the Cult of Lyman might not be limited to students only. He thanked her for her time, and ran to catch up to the others. He reflected on the way upstairs that he had now experienced one session of all his classes.....but had not used his pen once to take any notes, the lessons had been entirely practical.....with the exception of Muggle Studies, where Professor Ziegler took care of the notes (a 30 page notebook had been delivered to Harry's room during lunch this day, along with a few thousand pages of the notes that Ziegler had promised him on the state and local muggle governments).

The group didn't sit together at dinner, as Harry prevailed upon Warrick to have the two of them sit with Terry and Rick, figuring that some bonding was necessary before he broke the news of Dobby and Winky to them (he still hadn't as of yet). He learned quite a bit about his roommates, as this was their first meal together (Rick and Terry weren't big talkers after lights out). Rick was the only one in the room actually from Michigan, his family had a farm near Owosso, and he was muggleborn. Terry was from Illinois (like Sophie), and his family were all police officers, though some of them were wizards, some squibs. Harry learned an interesting fact that there were a lot of squibs in the U.S., their percentage of the magical population being double what it was in Britain.

The dinner didn't turn the two pairs into the closest of friends, but Rick and Terry were impressed that Harry went to some trouble (they knew what Warrick really thought of them), and at the end, when he sprung the existence of his 'staff' on them, they reacted very well. They welcomed the idea of Dobby and Winky helping out around the room (it was long rumored around school that the house elves made sure that the best food went to the people who caused them the fewest problems). They all retired to the room, and Harry made the introductions, and everyone seemed to be very happy with the arrangements.

Thursday and Friday held no new surprises for our players. Harry was tired enough, despite two naps on Wednesday, that he slept until lunchtime on Thursday.....having only Advanced Defense in the afternoon. That lesson didn't have the fireworks of the first one, as Ripley put them through a series of drills on basic movement and evasion tactics. These tactics were designed to work against any enemy, not just Wizards. He went flying that night, in preparation for the upcoming Quidditch trials, which were only two days away. Likewise on Friday, Charms and Wandless were just re-enforcements of the lessons learned on Wednesday, and Harry and company ended their week a lot less weary than they had feared they might.

The Oakwood Arms Hotel, Chicago, Illinois

9:00 pm (Central Time)

The six people at the table all eyed each other with some suspicion and wariness. This was a conclave of the Midwest branch of the Kindred, the five leaders of the vampire clans, and their Prince. To outsiders, the Kindred were as one, with one voice.....but in reality it was as fragile as any oligarchy.

Mark Frankel had been Prince now for almost 50 years, though he didn't look a day over 35. He was considered a brilliant war leader, and his efforts against Lycan and Wizard alike during the 1930's and 40's had won him his position. He was a Ventrue, very rich and successful in his business enterprises, but with one eye always on his enemies, both real and potential.

His Clan leaders were as disparate as one could imagine, and much of his time was spent talking them out of war with each other. Frankel's "coalition", if you will, rested on the support of the Nosferatu, Gangril, and Ventrue clans, with the Toreadors and Brujah giving him the most conflict (he also had a vote at the table, so it was usually 4-2). Still, their business enterprises were much entwined, and the last full out Kindred war had been over a century earlier. Business dealings had comprised the entire agenda so far.....then at the end, talk turned to politics.

The current state of affairs for the Kindred politically were one very uneasy, likely soon to be broken by one side, truce with the Lycans, though there was already sporadic fighting between individuals.....and a rather more solid truce with the Wizards, who generally preferred Kindred to Lycans in most cases. The muggles (though the Kindred did not use this word) officially thought that Vampires were legends and myth, and the subject of cheesy novels rife with homo-eroticism. Unofficially there had been too many unexplainable coincidences, and Kindred were always on their guard when out amongst the muggles.

“We have one more matter to discuss. I received a letter today from the leader of the Dark Wizards in Great Britain, this Lord Voldemort. He wishes our help on a small matter.” Patrick Bauchau, leader of the Ventrue (and Frankel’s predecessor) leaned forward.

“A small matter?”

“Yes, so it would seem on the surface anyway. There has been another outbreak of Wizard fighting over there, and the Dark side has made some gains. One of the icons of the Light Wizards, a teenager named Harry Potter, has relocated here to finish his schooling.....apparently there is some dissension on his side over his role in the conflict. Voldemort wishes our aid in locating him, and perhaps in taking him.” Brujah clan leader Brian Thompson immediately scoffed.

“We’re not in the business of spying on children Mark, why should we get involved? What’s he offering in payment if we do?”

“He’s not offering payment Brian, just an assurance that a favor would be owed us. I’m bringing this before the conclave, because cooperation with this wizard would put us definitively on one side of an intra-wizard conflict, something we have resisted doing.” Nosferatu clan leader Jeff Kober had a thoughtful look on his face.

“Why even bring it up Mark? Why not just mail him back a no answer and be done with it?”

“Because war is brewing again with the Lycans, and it might be useful to have Wizards on our side this time.” The other five chewed on this for a time, until Gangril boss Channon Roe asked what they were all musing about.

“But which side are you saying we should help Mark? Which side would be more beneficial to us against the Lycans? Dark Wizards are few and far between here, I can’t see how helping one in Britain would do us much good.” Frankel looked pleased at the question.

“Yes, that’s the rub isn’t it? Now we have done a little business with the Dark Wizards in Britain before. Mainly money laundering, and some hiding of their most wanted. But like Channon said, they really can’t do much for us here.” Stacy Haiduk, the Toreador leader, wasn’t sure she liked where this was heading.

“Are you saying we should turn this information over to the Wizards here? Why would we do that?”

“As a gesture of good faith, in advance of peace talks that are being considered. The national conclave (made up of the five Princes from around The United States) is meeting a week from Wednesday in Houston to discuss a possible full military alliance with the Wizards.” The air in the room was sucked in, as this caught the clan leaders totally by surprise.

“Whose idea was this alliance Mark? Ours, or the Wizards?”

“Ours Patrick, this situation with the Lycans has gone on long enough, it has to end soon or we’ll all be in jeopardy. The current thinking is to give them certain business concessions in exchange for full use of their intelligence apparatus against the Lycans, as well as the use of their Aurors.”

“And they will agree to this? How large are the concessions?”

“Large enough for them to help us wipe out the Lycans.....then we can deal with the Wizards one on one if we so choose. They know this as well, but they view the Lycans with more suspicion and hostility than they do us.”

None of the clan leaders openly argued against the peace plan per se, but they were as one suspicious of it’s ultimate usefulness. Thompson for one thought it was a waste of time, but not one that posed any true risks for them. Conversely, Kober was all for peace with the Wizards at most any price, as long as it was a peace between equals.....which he had his doubts it would be. Mark decided to end the meeting now while they were still somewhat thoughtful. He passed around five folders.

“I have not yet decided what to do about this letter yet, but I want your input before the national conclave. I’ve had one of my assistants prepare a brief for you to review, detailing what we know about the Wizards who want to deal with us, and about this teenage wizard they want us to watch. I will be in the office all day tomorrow, if you would like to give me your views on the subject. Is there anything else?”

No one had anything else to add to the discussion, and the other five soon left. The next day, all of them came to see him individually, and only Haiduk attempted to dissuade him from reaching out to the Light Wizards about Harry. Surprisingly, Thompson, his main rival lately among the clan leaders, gave a lukewarm endorsement for him to do what he wanted there (which Thompson assumed was to leak the letter), seeing more benefit than harm. Mark decided to bypass the Wizard government and deal directly with the source. Monday morning, he mailed off an express letter, to a certain former Auror’s mail drop.

GLMA Athletic Field

4:00 pm

Quidditch tryouts were now upon everyone, as the ‘lesser’ sport had the afternoon to do its team selecting. Each House got one hour at the field to do its tryouts, and Cortez happened to be slotted last (Quodpot trials had been in the morning with the same parameters). Cortez Quidditch Captain John Geyser had introduced himself to Harry on Monday, telling him that since there was no Seeker returning, he saw no reason not to just slot Harry in there without a tryout. Geyser was a seventh year Beater who had been on the team every year since he started as a Novice (first year), and got the Captain job from Heyman strictly due to seniority. Cortez had finished third the previous year in Quidditch standings, and had three players returning (all of whom you've now met).

Quodpot of course had been the focus of the day so far, and a lot of the kids trying out for Quidditch in the afternoon had not made the Quodpot team in the morning. Quodpot rules did not allow for a reserve team, the team that was on the field for the first game would have to be there all season, barring death or a genuine emergency (family related usually). Unofficially, the best Quidditch players were told to be 'ready' to sub in for Quodpot if it came to it (there was usually one such substitution each year for the four teams total). Harry had watched the Cortez Quodpot trials, and left the field only slightly less confused about the rules than when he'd arrived.

Cortez had a total of five kids trying out for the three open spots. Geyser gave them a quick introduction.

"Welcome to the Quidditch tryouts. There are three slots open this year, with three returning players and Harry, who's going to be on the team.....well because. For those of you I haven't officially met yet, I'm John Geyser, and this is my seventh year in Great Lakes and as a Beater. Warrick Forrester is in his sixth year as a Beater, and Reiko Aylesworth is in her second year as a Chaser. Harry played five years at Hogwarts as Seeker before coming here. The spots open are for Keeper, and two for Chaser. Now we only have an hour, so let's get up into the air."

Harry had flown with Warrick and Reiko quite a bit, and was pleasantly surprised at Geyser's flying ability.....his friends had filled him with so many 'Quidditch is second place here' stories that he half expected a bunch of boobs (not those kind of boobs) up there. The five kids were all first and second year students, which Geyser claimed to like, since they would be the backbone of the team once he and the three junior students all left. The brooms the others used were all the Nike brand, as Nike's owner (Phil Knight) was a closet wizard who, after much pressure, had finally gotten around to having brooms designed.....brooms that promptly drove Nimbus and Comet out of the North American market, and had Cleansweep and the Firebolt manufacturers fighting for 1/10 of the market.

Only one person tried out for Keeper, second year student Jane Abbott, which threw Harry a bit, as he'd never seen a girl Keeper before. She was pretty good though, and stopped quite a few shots from her fellow newbies. Even Reiko didn't really go wild on her with goal scoring. In the end, none of the others separated themselves from the Chaser flock, so Geyser told them what he had already planned to: They all made the team, and he would make the final selections for the Fall game based on practices. There was to be only one game in the fall, the second weekend in October for both games as a doubleheader. Then the snow would set in, and training would take place in the workout center in the basement.

Dining Hall

2:00 pm

As soon as the tables were cleaned from lunch, longer tables were set up. It was the Club Expo, as it was called. It was semi-tradition for most students to migrate from club to club on a yearly basis, to get a wide range of experience in some different things. As Murray had explained to Harry, students were required to participate in at least one club or sport, with most clubs meeting once a week (at night) for two hours. Quidditch and Quodpot were restricted to one weekday practice and one on the weekend, for 90 minutes each (mainly due to there being eight teams jockeying for practice time on one field).

To be recognized as a official, counting for the requirement, each club had to have at least five members, and have it's purpose ratified by Heyman or Murray (for example, a "Kill All The Squibs" club would not have passed muster, no matter how many students joined it). Harry went to the Expo figuring on just joining one club at most, and privately was hoping something grabbed him that his friends weren't involved in. Warrick and Reiko weren't big advocates of the club experience themselves, nor was Jonas. Warrick and Jonas had been on teams since Novice Year, so they had never really been tempted. Reiko preferred to spend her night time studying for class or socializing, and had finally given in to her then platonic friend Warrick's Quidditch entreaties more as a way of getting out of the club atmosphere. Claudia, on the other hand, was a club freak, she was a member of three different ones, and was not one who migrated (she was in the History, Charms, and Classic Films clubs). Sophie was in the middle, usually joining two clubs more as something to do, rather than for the added learning experiences (she also did History, and had done the Creative Writing club on three occasions).

As such, Warrick, Reiko, and Jonas didn't even show up to the Expo, while Claudia was there as the President of the History club and their table (while also re-signing up for her other clubs). Sophie quickly signed back up for History, but eschewed any other clubs while wandering around the displays with Harry. Harry was tempted by History until he found out that Lyman was rarely involved in the meetings (he had more homework than most to grade, and was a solo Professor to boot), but out of respect for Claudia, claimed he was thinking about it. After a tour around the tables, he decided to join the relatively small Wizard Chess club (eight members at that point in the day), wanting to see if the players here were anything close to Ron (none of his friends played regularly, so he couldn't tell by them). Drew was in the club, so Harry figured he would at least know one person there halfway well.

The Wizard Chess Club met on Tuesday nights, and thus didn't interfere with Quidditch practice on Thursday nights (the stadium was very well lit, and Harry had little extra trouble seeing the Snitch at night under those conditions). At the first meeting Harry wound up getting two games, one with Drew, and one with Shawnee House Sophomore Nan Mahon.....and he lost both games, though he made a match of it against Nan. His pieces, who'd grown cranky from lack of use since June (these were still the pieces he had gotten in a Christmas cracker during his first year), spent a few early minutes loudly wondering where Ron was. Harry was convinced he lost the Drew game because his pieces just couldn't fathom him having a shot of winning.....since they were so used to getting slaughtered by the veteran pieces of Ron's grandfather.

Cortez Lounge

Harry, Reiko, and Sophie walked into the lounge, finally done with their class week. Maloney still had them doing silent magic, but had said that they would be moving on to new things come next Wednesday. They plopped down on one of the couches, waiting for Warrick to come back.....but they were only there for a couple of minutes before Dobby popped in. This still startled a few of the younger students, especially muggleborns who weren't used to house elves period (like at Hogwarts, the GL elves weren't often seen around the building). The older students had all heard the Dobby story by now, and liked the little fellow and his "cute" accent.

"Harry, you must come with me now." He looked quite serious when he said this, which took them all aback somewhat.

"Just me? What's going on Dobby?"

"We must go now (he started whispering now). You have visitors." Dobby didn't know what winking (no pun intended) was, but his emphasis on visitors told Harry everything he needed to know. Just then Warrick walked in the door, and Harry motioned for all of them to follow him to the room. Rick and Terry, who were still not in the loop about the trunk (other than it being where Dobby and Winky lived), weren't around, so the four of them went down the ladder one by one, and found twin red headed fellows sitting in the living room. This was their second visit to Harry's side of the trunk, he usually went over to the shop once a week late at night, when there were no prying eyes.

"Hey there mate." Said in unison of course, as they took in the newcomers. Fred gave them the once over.

"You must be Warrick, and I'm betting you're Reiko (Reiko was one quarter Japanese, and it showed just enough to tell).....and process of elimination says this is Sophie." The twins shook hands all around, and while they were smiling, the smiles were more polite than anything, which Harry noted immediately.

“What’s wrong guys? I mean not that you being here isn’t cool and all.....but something looks wrong.” George sighed and took out something: The Marauder’s Map.

“What the hell? I had Winky get this to Neville last week, how’d you guys wind up with it?” George and Fred exchanged dark looks.

“What’s wrong is that little Ronniekins again put stuff together in his mind today (Harry had shown them Hermione’s first letter) and decided that you had given this to Neville. He started ransacking Neville’s stuff in order to try and find it.....Prefect’s privilege he called it.” Harry grew a new grey hair listening to this, not his first. Fred continued:

“He didn’t find it though, Neville had it very well hid apparently. He had it stashed in the underside of your bed.....yes, its still in there, the old codger maybe thinks you’ll give in eventually. He caught Ron doing the searching though.....” Harry knew this wouldn’t have a happy ending.

“Oh bugger, what happened?”

“Well Ron wasn’t ready for it that’s for sure, Neville popped him right in the teeth.” Warrick let out a laugh, and the girls were smiling as well. Harry just shook his head in exasperation (not at them mind you).

“You know, I’m out of that castle for two weeks.....”

“You’re telling us. Well Seamus went to grab Sloper.....can you believe that moron got to be Head Boy? We’re all well shot of that dump with things like that happening.....anyway, Sloper came in and found Neville’s things widely distributed on the floor, and demanded an explanation.”

“Oh brother, please tell me he didn’t spill about the Map.” Harry’s voice had its first hopeful tone to it.

“Okay, that’s what we’ll tell you.....thankfully it’s the truth, and that Ron’s not that stupid. He made up some half-assed story about fire whisky that Sloper might have bought about anyone but Neville. Neville said as little as possible, so Sloper marched Ron down to McGonagall and she tore him a new one, saying that one more foul-up would have his badge taken away, with mum to be floored five seconds later. Ron stuck to his story though, I suppose to his credit, as stupid as it sounds to us out loud now. While this was going on, Neville grabbed the Map and hightailed it to the Owlrey, and got it back to us.”

“Oh that’s the best part of the story Harry dear.....Hermione sent us a detailed letter not two hours later. She tried to play peacemaker between Ron and Neville, and it sort of worked. Neville promised that he wouldn’t retaliate.....you know that he has a blanket death threat to all of Luna’s roommates right? (Harry nodded). They’ve behaved so far, so good.....I tell you, our young Neville has certainly grown up, who would have thought that? Anyway, Hermione collected all the sides to the story and mailed them to us, I guess because she assumes we’ll tell you. That’s one smart girl you know, she’s sussed out that we have some sort of communication scam going on, though she probably hasn’t figured out what it is.” Harry could easily believe that Hermione would figure things like that. The only ones not in the trunk right now who knew though, were Jonas, Claudia, Peter, Bill, and Anthony Hook (the trunk seller), and Harry wasn’t about to change that.

“What was Ginny’s reaction?” Fred let out another sigh.

“She didn’t take a side mate, and that almost set Ron off again. He figured she’d back him if nobody else would..... But she didn’t. I guess Ron’s made a few threats to Dean about snogging.....and, well, other things that they might be doing. Dean told her, and she told him if he laid a finger on Dean, it’s a finger he’d soon lose.” Harry started cackling at hearing that.

“I’d pay good money to see that.”

“So would we, I’d bet on Ginny between her and Ron, she’s vicious. Anyhow that’s the story, and why we have this to give back to you. I guess Neville thought that Ron would eventually search your bed, and he didn’t have a better place to hide it.”

“Great, a prime piece of pranking material going to waste because of Ron, that git.”

“Hermione suggested that you find a way to get over there to talk to them, they might listen to you.” Harry immediately started shaking his head.

“Uh uh, no bloody way. I’m not getting caught putting one toe into that castle, I might never leave.”

“That’s what we figured, and the next Hogsmeade visit is over a month away. We thought we might do it, but alumni aren’t exactly allowed to stroll in and out of there as they please.....(he looked over to the Americans) any suggestions would be appreciated.” Warrick had no trouble voicing the obvious.

“The heck with them Harry, let them duke it out. Sounds like Neville’s going to win anyway though.” Sophie though, was a bit more diplomatic.

“I think you should try at least once to fix it, send them a letter with a firm talking to or something.” The twins were both shaking their heads at that, but before they could say anything, Reiko voiced their thoughts.

“I doubt that would work with Ron, from how you’ve described him. I imagine he’d say that you abandoned them, so what right do you have interfering.”

“I’m with her mate, our dear little brother now sees himself as Gryffindor’s leader.....your heir if you will, he’ll assume any advice you're giving will be for Neville's benefit." Harry hadn't gotten a letter from any of them since the day after his sorting, so he gritted his teeth and let loose a question:

"Do I dare ask if he was made Quidditch Captain?"

"Nah, that went to Katie, Hermione made sure to mention that as well. McGonagall told Ron that even if you were still there it would have gone to her, since she has so much more experience than Ron and even you." Harry knew that Ron wouldn't see it that way though.

"I'm going to go to hell for this, but something has to be done. Winky!" Winky popped into the other room and gingerly peeked around the corner.....a lesson learned from two nights previous when she had popped in unannounced and caught Harry and Sophie at.....well you can imagine I'm sure.

"Yes Harry?" He walked over to a chest of drawers in the corner and extracted two mirrors.....yes, the mirrors that Sirius had given him (Remus had given him the mate to his). He took hold of the Marauder's Map and:

"I solemnly swear that I'm up to no good!" The Map activated and Harry looked only two places: Gryffindor Tower, and the Library. He found what he was looking for quickly.

"Winky, I want you to go to Hogwarts and give this mirror to Hermione, she's in the library. Make sure she's alone when you explain to her what's going on, and take back the mirror when we're done talking. Got it?"

"Yes Harry, it will be done." Winky popped off, and Harry tapped his own mirror to turn it on.

"Why don't you want her to keep it Harry?"

"I don't want to turn into a crutch for these people Reiko, this is their one get out of jail free card. After this, I'm with Warrick, they can fight it out amongst themselves." A few seconds of silence ensued, as Harry watched the Map and Hermione's position in the library. Her dot moved over to a corner (the library was surprisingly busy for 10:30 pm on a Friday night). Harry quickly shooed the twins over to the side of the room, well out of the eyeline of the mirror.

"Harry? Hello?"

"Hi there Hermione, how's it going?" The question was asked with a tinge of sarcasm, which didn't escape Hermione's attention.

"You've talked to the twins I take it?"

"I got a long letter from them today when I had Dobby do a delivery. Big doings this afternoon there I gather. Are they all still alive?"

"Yes they are, though Ron and Neville won't go near each other, let alone talk. You have the Map now?"

"I do, that's how Winky was able to find you so quickly. The twins told me of your rather insane idea that I should go over there to be a peacemaker.....tell me you were just making a joke."

"Please Harry, they won't listen to anyone else. Even Professor Lupin has tried to defuse the tension between them, but nothing else has worked."

"Well leaving aside that I'm 10,000 kilometers away at the moment, why won't Ron listen to you? For crying out loud, cut off his snogging privileges until he shapes up." Sophie and company weren't sure whether Harry wanted their presence to be known to Hermione, so they covered their mouths and started laughing uproariously. Even through the mirror, Harry could see Hermione blushing furiously.

"Harry!"

"Well why not? I know if I was acting as moronically as Ron is right now, Sophie would smack me silly. It's your job Hermione, it's what you signed on for when you chose Ron." Harry had told Hermione about Sophie during his post-Sorting letter, though she had been conspicuous in her lack of acknowledgement of it in her return missive.

“I can’t do that Harry, he’ll think I’m turning on him too, just like he thinks Neville and Ginny have.....just like he thinks you have. I’m not saying he’s right about you, I now understand why you had to do what you did.....but he still doesn’t understand Harry.”

“I spent two hours last month trying to make him get it Hermione, and I’m done with that. If Ron hasn’t grown up by now, I don’t know what I can tell him that will change anything. Besides, you and I both know I don’t dare set foot in that castle, Dumbledore hasn’t given up on trying to get me to re-submit to his leadership, he’s just taking a break right now is all. I can’t win a duel with him right now Hermione, and that’s what it would take to get me out of that castle once I’m inside.” Surely she knew this already, Harry thought, what the hell was she playing at?

“I understand Harry, I just don’t know where else to turn to.” Harry had an idea, and couldn’t believe he didn’t think of this while talking to the twins.

“What about his parents? Try talking to Molly at the very least. He has no choice but to listen to her.” Hermione had a look on her face like she hadn’t thought of that either.

“I’ll try that, thanks. It’s hard you know, being caught in the middle like this. I love Ron, I do.....but he is getting rather impossible lately.” No kidding, Harry thought to himself. He had been wondering when Ron’s latent jealousy would come to the forefront, and now here it was.

“I’m sorry Hermione.....look, we’ll all see each other in a couple of weeks at the Death Eater trial right? I’ll try to talk to him then.” She had quite forgotten about the trials.

“Thank you, I hadn’t thought of that. We just got our summons papers yesterday, yours should be en route.”

“Yeah, the mail takes awhile to get here. Thank goodness for Dobby and Winky.”

“What does Hedwig do? She must be bored.”

“I’ve more or less loaned her to my friend Reiko, her parents are teachers at another Wizard school over here, and they like to write a lot.” They caught up on Harry’s friends for a few minutes, then Hermione had one last issue to discuss.

“I have to go in a few minutes, they close the library now at 11:00 pm for security reasons, even for Prefects, and this isn’t my night for patrol. Have you heard from Professor Lupin recently?”

“Not since school started, I was going to write him on the weekend, why?”

“Well we tried to re-start the DA…….”

“And the old git wouldn’t let you do it? That bloody ingrate, I swear I’ll…….” Hermione quickly interrupted him before a tirade ensued.

“Not quite, he is willing to let us have the DA, but with certain conditions. One is that Professor Lupin must be there for all the meetings.” Harry didn’t see how that was so bad.

“So? What’s wrong with that?”

“He also insisted that the DA be led by seventh years, Jack Sloper and Cho Chang. Besides being Head Boy and Girl, they’re also the two best seventh years in Defense.” Ah, the penny drops. Harry had never much cared for Sloper, and his feelings for Cho were always, he found in retrospect, purely skin deep. The idea of those two running the DA did not warm his heart.

“Why the hell did he insist on that? Those two have no practical experience at all! Luna would make a better leader, and her oars aren’t even all in the water. What rationale did he use?”

“He didn’t Harry, he did everything through Professor Lupin. We haven’t talked with him since the day you arrived in America.” Oh that was just wonderful, thought Harry. The old man couldn’t get at him directly, so he did the next best thing.

“How did Remus explain it to you? Or did he just announce it in class?”

“He took Ron, Neville, and I aside after class on Monday. He said that Dumbledore wanted to reassert the authority of the Head Boy and Girl. No mention was made of us, or so he claimed. I don’t know whether to believe him or not, though he did seem a little uncomfortable about the whole thing.”

“Are you guys still going to participate?”

“I don’t know, the five of us sat down in the library that night and talked about what to do. Before today I thought we might just work together, the five of us.....maybe with Dean too.....but now.....Harry, Madam Pince just announced the library is closing, I have to go.” No mention was made of continuing it in the hallway, so Winky must have told her she was taking the mirror back with her.

“Okay Hermione, we’ll do this again next week, I’ll have some ideas for you by then.....do what you can to keep the peace there okay? And don’t join the DA, keep training amongst yourselves.”

“I’ll try Harry.....thanks for calling, I appreciate it.”

“No worries Hermione, I’m glad I was able to help even a little. Goodnight.”

“Goodnight Harry.” Then the signal was cut off, and a few seconds later Winky was back with the mirror. Harry threw his friends, both English and American, a disgusted look as he put his mirrors away.

“The crap I have to put up with. You wonder now why I left!”

Indeed the three Americans were somewhat startled that Harry really hadn't been exaggerating about all of the politics he'd had to deal with at Hogwarts. For their part, Fred and George were mildly surprised that the room was being torn apart in front of their very eyes.

“Well that was fun wasn't it?” George had a wry smile on his face as he said that.

“You know there's trouble when you two are the voices of reason.” Harry said that with an exasperated grin creeping up on his face, the twins nodding in agreement.

“It's a world gone mad. Now do you lot want a look-see at the shop? Everything's closed up now, I think our little Harry can risk a trip back to bad ole Diagon Alley.” Eager looks were immediately on the faces of Reiko, Sophie, and Warrick as they nodded yes. Dobby was sent to fetch Jonas and Claudia (who they had planned to meet up with for dinner in a few minutes), and a few minutes later, the eight of them were flooing into WWW (Warrick had queried him about inviting Drew, but Harry wasn't quite ready to expand the trunk circle, if he ever would be).

They spent a good hour picking things over, with lots of “wow” being said. Harry very quietly told Fred and George that he would give them the money for whatever his friends picked out, though Fred and George would be dealing with dollars soon enough. WWW had it's catalog ready, and Harry took back 100 of them to be discreetly distributed back at GL.

“How's the new Map coming along?”

“We've got about 1/3 of it up and running. How're you coming on the spell grenades? We need those to finish it up.”

“Another couple of weeks at most, we’re getting close. One of us will be at the trial, we can give you the prototypes then.”

“I’ll probably see you the night before, I’ll be coming in through the trunk floo.”

“Don’t you need a muggle plane ride for your paper trail?”

“I’m not risking anything, even at Heathrow. Coming up through the shop is the one thing they won’t expect.”

“ Which “they” are you worried about? The Death Eaters? Dumbledore?”

“The Death Eaters won’t target me guys, they don’t want me coming back here anytime soon. No, it’s the old man I’m concerned about. I have an idea to get around him, but the less contact he and I have whilst I’m here, the better I’ll feel.”

Dinner was for eight, in Harry’s trunk (the twins hadn’t done much decorating in theirs), and Fred and George got a two hour crash course on American Wizarding culture. It was a fun night had by all, and further nights were planned for the near future.

After the rest of them were gone, Harry and Sophie relaxed on the sofa, holding each other, as between snogging interludes, they talked about the night’s events, and his Hogwarts based friends.

“ You know Sophie, I remember when life was simple.” She squeezed him tight.

“Really?”

“No.”

Cortez Room 6B

Noon

The sun was shining, the birds were chirping, the grass was really green.....and Harry was sleeping through it all like the proverbial rock. All of the practical magic he had been doing these past two weeks had worn him down a bit, and he took the opportunity to get a good, solid 12 hours of sleep. He had never used his wand so much in class than he had these two weeks, and once or twice had even missed the non-wand using Herbology and Astronomy (nothing could get him to miss Potions). Quidditch practice wasn't until 3:00 pm, he had plenty of time. He likely would have gone for thirteen hours of slumber (lunch being overrated), when he received a poke on the shoulder.

He shrugged off the poke at first, and then it became a bit more insistent.

“Go away Warrick, I'll be down later.”

“Harry.” That wasn't Warrick's voice was it? He gave in and turned over, seeing a large blur in front of him.....but it was a much paler blur than Warrick, so he fumbled for his glasses, and saw Heyman standing there in front of him.

“Professor Heyman.”

“ Good afternoon Harry.” Harry sat up, rubbing his eyes and stretching.

“I'm guessing you're not here to get me to lunch.” Heyman chuckled a bit, though it seemed a bit forced.

“Not quite Harry. Professor Murray needs to see you in her office, you have a couple of visitors.”

“Dumbledore?” The older man shook his head.

“Nope, not even close. You’re not in any trouble, I can promise you that. But you need to quick take a shower and come with me.” Harry went and did his bathroom thing and was back in 15 minutes. He followed Heyman down to Murray’s office and entered with a small amount of trepidation. He saw Murray sitting at her desk, and in the easy chairs in front of her were two men he had never seen before, dressed in muggle clothing. The older one was in an expensive looking business suit, the younger one looked more like a gang member, the way he was dressed.

“Hello Harry, thanks for coming.....or should I say thanks for waking up?” That Murray smile again.

“Your teachers are wearing me out ma’am, it’s all your fault.” A smile was returned, as he stood there wondering who the men were. Murray’s smile faded as she became serious.

“Harry, I’d like to introduce you to Mark Frankel and Channon Roe, they have something you need to see.” Mark and Channon stood up and offered their hands. Harry shook them, and immediately wondered at their very cold hands.

“Pleased to meet you both, what can I do for you?” Frankel began:

“Harry, are you aware of who I am?”

“No sir, though now that you mention it, your name does seem familiar.”

“I am the Prince of the Kindred here in the Midwest. Channon is one of my clan leaders, and my personal bodyguard.” Harry certainly knew now. Lyman may have spent more time on the Lycans in his tutoring during August, but he hadn’t neglected the Kindred.

“What could a Kindred Prince want to show someone like me?”

“A little over a week ago I received a letter concerning you, from someone who I think you know very well. This is a photocopy of the letter, the original is safe in our files.” He took a folded sheet of parchment out of his jacket pocket, and handed it to Harry. He opened it, and began reading:

Greetings Prince Frankel,

I am writing to you on behalf of my Lord Voldemort, and I relay his greetings and good wishes to our old business colleague. We are requesting your assistance, in a matter very important to us. One of our prime enemies, a young man named Harry Potter, has emigrated to your country. He is currently residing at a school for Wizards known as The Great Lakes Magical Institute, located somewhere in upper Michigan. We would like you to set up some kind of surveillance on Great Lakes, with an eye toward a possible kidnapping of Potter, should the need here arise. We would be amiss if we did not acknowledge and warn you that Potter is a very powerful Wizard, and very dangerous.....then again if he were a weakling he would be no threat, would he?

We would not think to insult you by offering a specific money figure, but know that your help to us here will be long remembered. Please return a message to us as soon as possible with your reply, and we will supply you with all the information on Potter that you will need, as well as pictures of him.

Thank you in advance for your assistance,

Peter Pettigrew

Aide-de-Camp, Lord Voldemort

Harry re-read the letter two more times before finally believing what his eyes were telling him. He kept his face rigidly neutral as he turned to Frankel.

“This is real? You aren’t someone’s older brother here playing a joke on me?”

“No Harry, it is real. I have never met this man Pettigrew before, but we have done business with his predecessors before, so he knew how to contact us.....though our last contact was many years ago.” Harry chewed on that for a moment, and then turned to Murray.

“Ma’am, could you duplicate this letter for me please?” Not getting what his idea was, she did it nevertheless. She handed over the copy to Harry, who very carefully tore off the portion that contained the signature and title at the bottom.

“Dobby!” He popped in, and his eyes got impossibly wide when he saw Frankel.

“I know this man Harry, he is a vampire!”

“So I’ve been told.....I take it one of those predecessors was named Malfoy? (seeing a nod, he turned back to Dobby and handed him the torn part of the letter). Take this slip of paper to Remus at Hogwarts, ask him if the writing is authentic please.” Harry had never seen Heyman or Murray looked so impressed with him, as they immediately figured out what he was after.

“Yes Harry, it will be done.” With an enigmatic look at Frankel, he popped off.

“Dobby was once a Malfoy house elf, before I scammed them out of him. Remus was once Peter’s best friend, he’ll know if the signature is legit.”

“Very cautious of you, good. I know you must have a question or two, but let us wait until your little friend comes back with the proof.” Dobby was back in a few minutes, looking very shaken.

“Yes Harry, he says that the writing is real. He wants you to contact him as soon as you can, he says he has many questions.”

“He and I both. I’m guessing that you don’t want go along with their request Mr. Frankel, am I right?” Mark laughed slightly, and even Channon smiled at the obvious.

“Yes Harry, I decided that it would not be in our best interests to aid them in harming you. I’ve read about your recent adventures with great interest, it was somewhat startling to get their overture, having not had contact with them since around the time of your birth.”

“Not in your best interest? Why does that make me nervous?”

“It shouldn’t Harry, this is but one small part of a larger plan with regard to your Wizard brethren here in our country.” Eh? Harry had no idea what this man was talking about, so he looked to Murray for clarification.

“Yes they were, war is brewing between us and our Lycan friends, we want the help of the Wizard government. With any luck our two sides will cut a deal in the coming days, and my fellow Princes and I will ratify it at our next meeting. Your situation.....let’s just say it could have caused us problems if we had helped this man, or even if we had ignored it and done nothing at all. Besides, I’m not too interested in making war on children, however much power they may have.” He seemed sincere when he said this, and Harry acknowledged that Frankel would seem to have no other reason to show him the letter.

“Thank you for that Mr. Frankel. I appreciate you not wanting to kidnap me.” This was not said as rudely as it can be read, its just that Harry didn’t really know what to say. He ran his hands through his hair.

“I guess I just thought that if I was over here, Voldemort wouldn't bother me anymore. Naïve I suppose wasn't I?” Murray was shaking her head in disagreement.

“Harry, if I may be honest with you.....I think this is a contingency plan, nothing more. Voldemort is just making sure you're marked, in case things turn there for him and he needs to do something desperate. I can tell you that since you've arrived here, we've heightened surveillance outside the immediate area of the school, and nothing has changed. Nor has any suspicious activity been noticed in Flackter Alley. I really don't think he's making a move on you Harry, not as of yet anyway.”

“I appreciate your efforts ma'am, I really do. I guess I have only one real question: What do we do about the letter? Am I right in guessing that you haven't replied to him Mr. Frankel?”

“You are correct Harry, we wanted to show it to you first. Now as I see it, there are two options here. Number one, I send a short note, politely declining the opportunity; or number two: we pretend to play along and manipulate the situation to suit our mutual purposes.” Harry looked at his Headmistress and her Deputy. Heyman injected himself into the conversation for the first time.

“I'm for the latter personally, as long as you're willing Mark. It would give us more of a window into what this Dark Wizard is thinking, without exposing Harry to any further danger. Joanne is correct, the school is just as secure as ever, Voldemort and his boys wouldn't even get inside the building if they tried a snatch.”

“I'm with David, though I would like to consult with some of my old Auror colleagues before we say for sure. Harry? What do you think?” Harry still didn't know what to think, though he was gratified to hear about how secure the campus was.....it sure didn't look that way from the outside, which was probably the point.

“I'm inclined to say yes, agree to what he wants and find out all you can.....but I'll go along with whichever you prefer to do Mr. Frankel.”

“That will be fine, we can always end our game at anytime. If you like Joanne, I can consult with some of your old Auror friends when I go to Boston on Monday for the talks.”

“I would appreciate that Mark, yes. I’ll owl ahead and have them expecting you.” She wrote down a couple of names on a piece of paper, and handed it to Mark.

“Thank you Joanne. Now I should be going, I have much to do on the plane back to Chicago. Harry, I’ve enjoyed meeting you, I hope we get a chance to talk further sometime soon.”

“I would like that Mr. Frankel.....you know that you and Mr. Roe are the first vampires I’ve ever met.....at least that I’m sure of.”

“There are very few of us in Britain for some reason.....I suppose English blood tastes as bad your cooking over there (much laughter from the Wizards). I would enjoy the chance to tell you some of our legends.....your Joshua Lyman is very smart, but he doesn’t know everything about us. Until then, goodbye.” He and Channon shook hands with the others, and Heyman escorted them out of the building, to a car they had waiting just outside of the “farm”.....which is how the non-Wizard folk saw the school. The door was barely shut before Harry queried his Headmistress.

“Are these talks for real?”

“They’re very real Harry, war between the Kindred and Lycans is only days away perhaps. They need an edge, and they see us as it.”

“What’s in it for us? By helping them I mean.”

“Money, they’re buying our support. They’re much wealthier than the Lycans, only they can afford to do this.”

“I thought all the Wizards over here were rich too? Why would money matter?”

“Money is power Harry, and what do all people of power want? More power, which means more money. I suppose we could always just steal from the muggles outright, but there’s no challenge in that Harry, that’s why any of us hold jobs in the first place if you think about it, it gives us something interesting to do. Without that, none of us would ever work or do anything productive.” With that last Machiavellian sally, Murray sent Harry off to the dining hall to get his lunch, with an admonishment not to share any of this with his friends until the peace treaty was signed, sealed, and delivered.

The peace treaty was signed and announced the next Thursday, with Wizard President Michael Chabon and Mark Frankel (representing his fellow Princes, they were all equal in power and influence) posing for pictures while signing the document. The news was trumpeted in The Chronicle the next day, and Harry quietly told his friends about his very peripheral role in the end of the process. They were all aghast at his story, and they resolved to be even more careful when they were outside the main doors. The first Flackter Alley visit was in just over a month, and they would have to be on their toes the entire time.

Frankel sent him a short letter the next day, informing him that he had “agreed” to do Voldemort his favor, telling the bad man that the treaty was one of convenience, not of substance. By now though, the entire American Wizard leadership knew of the game, and were fully on board with it. It irritated President Chabon in particular that Voldemort would be interfering somewhere he didn’t belong (don’t you just love righteous indignation?).

Harry ultimately decided not to tell anyone in Britain what was going on, as he did not trust the Order not to have any moles in it.....he was still convinced that Snape was really Voldemort’s man, and had no illusions that Dumbledore had dropped him. Bill had warned him of the rapprochement between Remus and Dumbledore, so he ignored the werewolf’s increasingly strident messages for clarification of the Dobby mission, the oath Remus swore at the will reading be damned. Nor did he say anything about it to Hermione when he mirror called her on Saturday. There was a continued truce between Ron and Neville, though they really couldn’t be called friends anymore.....rather they were allies of necessity. Harry again promised he would talk to both of them at the trial, though it would have to be a quick talk since he wasn't planning to be in public view any more than absolutely necessary. Hermione had taken his advice and the five of them were boycotting the new DA, as was Dean (for obvious reasons) and a few other Gryffindors.

Against his better judgment, Harry had Hermione turn the mirror over to Luna for a few minutes, as they were in the library studying together (Luna is a Ravenclaw remember). Luna was surprisingly lucid (Harry had often wondered if she was shamming all that just a bit), and Harry talked to her about Neville and getting him to lay off Ron, if possible. She told him that she had already done so, and that things while there was no love lost, things were progressing as well as could be expected. A few minutes turned into 15 or so, as the one Hogwarts person Sophie was dying to meet was Luna, so the girls chatted for a time and became fast friends. It helped that Sophie was all for diplomacy when it came to Ron and Neville.

12:15 am

Holding a short note in his hands, Harry approached Murray's door for the second time in less than two weeks. He wondered if it was the Lycan leader's turn to want to meet him, he found it hard to believe that Voldemort would stop at just the vampires. After being bidden to enter, he yet again found two visitors awaiting him.....but this time they were quite familiar faces:

Amelia Bones, Head of the Department of Magical Law Enforcement, and Nymphadora Tonks, Auror. Harry knew he shouldn't have been surprised, but he hadn't expected a personal touch.

Five days earlier, while watching a muggle crime movie with his friends, he had come to a series of belated realizations about the upcoming trials and his public return to Great Britain. He sent off a long message to Peter Tyson, outlining his concerns and some potential remedies. Tyson had sent Dobby back with an acknowledgement, and a promise to address them at the Ministry the next day. That was last Thursday, and he presumed his answers were being delivered now.

“Hello Madam Bones, Wotcher Tonks.”

“Hello Harry.”

“Wotcher Harry.” He surprised Bones by giving Tonks a quick hug.....more to make Tonks uncomfortable than anything, given their last encounter at Gringotts.....though she was a very attractive Witch.

“What brings you by? Quite a long portkey ride I imagine.” The look on Bones face was priceless.

“We have the trials to discuss Harry, and Peter Tyson’s demands on your behalf.”

“Well I wouldn’t call them demands Madam Bones, as much as guarantees that I feel are my right.” Murray couldn’t have looked more lost, so Harry explained for her benefit.

“I was watching A Few Good Men last week in the lounge, and came to the realization that I, in fact, did commit a crime or two during the Department of Mysteries fiasco. So I sent Dobby to have Peter Tyson get me a grant of immunity from prosecution. I don’ t know if those kinds of things are dealt with in Wizard law, but better safe than sorry. I believe I wanted it in writing, correct Madam Bones?” Bones pulled a piece of parchment from a rather muggle looking attaché case she had with her.

“Correct Harry, though we had no intention of charging you with anything. The Ministry wouldn’t survive the firestorm if we did.”

“I’m really going to bet my freedom on rational decision making by Cornelius Fudge and Albus Dumbledore.....right.” Murray couldn’t help but burst out laughing, and Tonks was fighting a grin as well.

“Very funny Harry, and even though your request was noticeably lacking in their regard, yesterday I handed similar guarantees to Hermione Granger, Luna Lovegood, Neville Longbottom, and Ron and Ginny Weasley.”

“Oh I was sure they wouldn’t be charged with anything Madam Bones.....though I’m sure I wouldn’t have been put in Azkaban.....just consigned to two years house arrest at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.” As plausible as that sounded, Bones couldn’t stand it anymore, she had to ask.

“What happened between you and Albus? Why do you mistrust him so much? I don’t blame you not trusting Fudge, I’d be suspicious of anyone who did.....but Dumbledore as well?”

“That’s a long answer to a complicated question Madam Bones, and one I prefer not to get into at the moment if you don’t mind.” Though this was said in a polite tone of voice, Bones looked like she minded quite a bit.....but saw Murray nodding in support of her student, and came to the belated realization that she was a guest in this office, and had no authority.

“Fair enough I suppose. Mr. Tyson also asked me to give you an update on Snape. Thus far he has met the terms of his house arrest, and nothing unusual has gone on in regards to him. Before you ask, yes, Dumbledore visits him periodically.....but that is his right, as Head of the Wizengamot. I agree that it should probably not reassure you about Albus, but there it is.”

No it did not reassure Harry in the slightest, and the look on his face communicated this more clearly than any of his words could. He set that aside for a moment, and readdressed Bones.

“Figures. Anyway, do you have the last document I asked for?” Bones’ face did its own communicating, but she pulled another document from her case, and handed it to Harry.....who did a thorough read of it (though it was quite short), and passed it over to Murray.

We the undersigned, do swear a written Wizard's Oath that Harry Potter will be protected at all costs from Albus Dumbledore before, during, and after his appearance at the trial of Lucious Malfoy, to take place on Monday, September 30, 1996. We further stipulate that said protection includes any attempts at physical assault or kidnapping by Dumbledore, members of The Order of the Phoenix, Hogwarts' Staff, or any Ministry personnel under his control or influence.

Signed

Amelia Bones

Head of Department of Magical Law Enforcement

Rufus Scrimgeour

Head Auror

Cornelius Fudge

Minister of Magic

"Harry, may I ask whose idea this was? Yours? Tyson's?"

"I believe in being thorough Madam Bones, trust me when I tell you that I wish this document wasn't necessary....but I need the reassurance." Bones just shrugged, she could tell that any argument she made would fall on deaf ears. Tonks sat there in silence, though inwardly she was howling with laughter at what Dumbledore would be thinking if he could hear any of this (they had been checked for charms before being allowed in the office, so he wasn't listening right now).

They spent the next half hour going over Harry's testimony, as Bones would be the prosecutor. She, without prompting, agreed to have Harry go first, in deference to his long travel journey. Murray gave him a piece of paper as well, signed by her and Wash, officially giving Harry permission to leave campus and skip Transfiguration. Before they left, Bones had a few final matters to bring up.

“Have you made your travel arrangements Harry? I’m assuming you will be taking muggle air transport.”

“I have made my arrangements Madam Bones, but I’ve arranged for a portkey to take me there and back. Me coming in on an airplane is too obvious, and I don’t want anyone to know where I am until I actually get to the Ministry.” All three women raised their eyebrows, but didn’t say anything.

“Good enough, I trust then that you will present yourself at the Ministry no later than 9:00 am next Monday.”

“Yes ma’am, I’ll be there. Tell me, is there any chance of a plea bargain?”

“There is always a chance Harry, we offered Malfoy one months ago: 15 years in Azkaban in exchange for pleading guilty, but he refused it, as did all his other compatriots. We put them under Veritaserum long ago, to see if they knew where Voldemort is hiding, but that information must have been erased from their minds before their mission.” Bones and Tonks got up and said their goodbyes. Harry waited until they were just out the door:

“Madam Bones, could you come back here a second, you dropped something!” Tonks waited in the hallway while Bones came back.

“I’m sorry to have dodged your question about Dumbledore ma’am, but I’m assuming he might do some mind work on Tonks to find out what I said today, I don’t want to give him any insight if I can help it.” Bones expression toward him softened a tad after hearing that, though inwardly she was saddened that such a bright (not to mention powerful) young man was reduced to this level of paranoia.

“Thank you for that Harry, I’ll see you next week.” She departed, one of house elves was waiting for the two of them to take them outside, where international portkeys tended to work better. Back in the office, Murray gave Harry a searching look.

“A portkey Harry?”

“Something like that ma’am. They won’t know where I am or how I got there.....just how I like it.”

“I was going to ask you if you wanted someone from here to come with you.” That wasn’t a half bad idea now that he thought about it, but in the end, if Dumbledore really wanted him, one American Wizard wasn’t going to be of much help.

“I’ll be fine Professor, but thank you for offering.”

“Run along to lunch now, enjoy your afternoon off.”

“Thank you ma’am.” He collected his papers and left; all the while wondering if Murray had an inkling of his trunk floo. He chided himself though, he really was getting too paranoid.

Harry’s trunk

6:00 pm

Wednesday night Harry decided to surprise Sophie, so he cooked her dinner in the trunk. No friends, no elves, just the two of them. He had an ulterior motive, having gotten another missive from the twins during lunchtime, the contents of which he kept private until now. They finished their Grilled Chicken Fettuccine Alfredo and salads, and were lazily doing the dishes.

“This is nice Harry, thank you. You’re very sweet.”

“You’re very welcome Sophie, I wish we could get away with doing this more often.”

“I don’t know, that makes it more special, that we can’t do it every night.” Do dinner like this is what she meant folks.

“I get you, and you’re right. But there is something we need to talk about for a minute.” Sophie got a look on her face that immediately sprung Harry into action. He really needed to learn to transition these things better.

“Oh no, it’s nothing bad.....well not from my point of view, you might think so.....I’m not really sure.” Sophie’s face went from looking like she was about to cry, to one of confusion. Harry pulled a shrunken magazine out of his pocket, and enlarged it. It was the current copy of Witch Weekly, and a certain scar-headed Wizard teenager was on the cover.

“This came out today, its what the twins got to me during lunch.” He handed to her.

The headline said it all:

Harry Potter’s New Love! The Yank Who Stole His Heart!

There was no picture of Sophie, thank goodness, but that’s about all it lacked. The accompanying article had most of the broad facts of the Harry/Sophie relationship correct, and only a few of the small details wrong. There was a lot they didn’t have of course, which ruled out Warrick, Reiko, Jonas, or Claudia as the source(s).

“Umm.....wow. I don’t know what to say.”

“I just thought you should know. I don’t know how much coverage this is going to get here, but I’m betting that we should expect some. Howlers must take awhile to get here from over there, they should get here tomorrow.” While Great Lakes students didn’t actually “experience” any Howlers that were addressed to them, they were told of their existence when they came. At last count, Harry had received 45 Howlers since The Chronicle article that had revealed him to be here.....which was still roughly one-fifth of those sent to Hogwarts about the same subject.

“How would they even know about us? One of our schoolmates told them?”

“Probably, unless Hermione told Ron, and he did it for spite or something.” Now that he thought of that, it made quite a bit of sense. Something else to buttonhole Ron about on Monday.

“It’s okay Harry, I’m not upset.....I’m proud to be your girlfriend, and I can take any Howlers that come my way. I just don’t understand why they would care so much about your personal life. I mean I know you’re famous over there, but you are still just a teenager.” Harry smiled ruefully, even from his limited knowledge of muggle media, he knew it wasn’t just Witch Weekly and The Daily Prophet that did this.

“This is nothing compared to Fleet Street back home, if you’re famous you’re fair game, period. I agree that in principle it’s none of their business, but there’s nothing we can do. You’ll never have to go there, and I doubt any of their reporters will be able gain entrance here to bother us.”

“Will I catch you in the Howler count you think?”

“Maybe, but I have a big head start.” He grinned saying this, and pulled her into a long hug. They relaxed the rest of the night, and at the end, when they were saying goodnight, he murmured to her.

“The next time I have to launch a Patronus, I know the happy memory I’m going to use.”

7:00 pm (London Time)

The weekly meeting of The Order of the Phoenix went in fairly normal fashion for the first part. All of the known members were present, including the Hogwarts contingent, bellies full from dinner. Mundane matters having been dealt with, Dumbledore proceeded to talk of the upcoming trials.

“Tonks, I understand that you and Amelia visited Harry this week.”

“Yes Headmaster, he’s looking very well…….I’d like to tell you he passed along his best wishes to you…….” Fred and George openly started giggling, earning them a glare from Molly and a rueful shake of the head from Arthur. Dumbledore let it pass though, as by and large he ignored the twins and their tomfoolery.

“He is still planning to testify?”

“He is, we went over his story very thoroughly. I’m betting we get convictions based just on his testimony, let alone the other kids, or us.”

“When is he arriving?” This seemed like an innocuous question, and it very well may have been, but Tonks wasn’t going there.

“I’m sorry Headmaster, but that’s really not your business.” This got everyone perked up right away, and Dumbledore (who knew full well what she meant), gave her an opportunity to take it back.

“Excuse me Tonks, but what did you say?” All Aurors undergo Occlumency training, and Tonks slammed her shields up to full mental power.

“Based on our meeting with Harry, I don’t believe he wants you to have that information. He’s still rather bitter about you, and…….well he’s a bit concerned about a kidnap attempt.” Not one Weasley looked surprised at hearing that, even Molly…….but the rest of them, even Remus, were aghast. McGonagall could hardly believe it.

“A kidnap attempt by whom? Surely not by anyone here!”

“Especially by people here Minerva.” She took a deep breath, and decided that Harry’s “oath document” would become semi-public soon enough anyway.

“He had Bones, Rufus, and Fudge all sign Wizard Oaths protecting him from you, and all of us here.....aside from Remus and myself of course.” They had each individually told Dumbledore about their oaths at the bank. Hagrid had never looked more hurt in his life, and McGonagall looked like she badly wanted to curse someone. Tellingly, there was little visible reaction from Dumbledore.

“I gather it was either agree to that, or he wouldn’t testify?”

“That was the deal, according to his representative that dealt with Fudge. It would have taken the entire Auror Command to fight our way in there to compel him to come testify, and even then I’m not sure it would have worked. That place is loaded with defense mechanisms, and that’s just from what I saw on the walk in.....Amelia and I didn’t exactly get a tour. But on the whole, I’d say it was a more secure building than Hogwarts Castle.” Molly looked hard at Dumbledore, as hard as she had looked at him since the night she threatened to kill him.

“Albus, swear to us right now that you had no intention of trying to compel him to remain here.” She was very careful not to say the word “kidnapping”.

“I have no trouble swearing to that Molly, since it’s the truth. I know full well that Harry wants no contact with me, and I will abide by his wishes. He will be back at Great Lakes in time for dinner on Monday, if he so chooses. You have my oath.” That even seemed to satisfy Fred and George, who had every intention of spilling the details to Harry as soon as they got home. McGonagall still did not look satisfied, and looked to be about to object, when she was headed off by Arthur of all people.

“Let it go Minerva, Harry is coming and he’s going to testify, that should be enough for you.....or anybody else. Yes, he’s become overly paranoid, but he has cause.....and I for one am tired of people criticizing him for it. He is what we've all helped make him, and frankly I am ashamed. Outside of Sirius, the people in this room are his adult figures.....and we've done a damn poor job of raising him if you ask me. Now Monday when he comes here, let him be. Just get his testimony, and then let him go back to America and be happy for once in his life." Arthur finished his somewhat bitter sounding soliloquy, and it did have it's desired effect: it shut up McGonagall quite effectively.

This was not as spontaneous as one might think, the twins had subtly been working on him, and Bill had as well. It wasn't lost on the Weasley patriarch that of all his former circle, Harry was closest to Fred and George....indeed closer to them really than he had been at school. Dumbledore stepped into the silence.

"I agree with Arthur.....on most of what he said anyway. Now is there anything else that needs to be discussed?" There was a collective shaking of heads, and the meeting soon broke up. Bill had people to meet, so he flooed off immediately, but the twins lingered. They walked up to their father, and in turn, gave him a hug. Arthur had rarely been so shocked, though Molly had a proud smile on her face.

"Thanks dad, we're proud of you.....and Harry will be too."

"Just make sure he gets to the Ministry on time boys."

"We will, we're both coming with him." This actually made Arthur feel better, he knew the twins could ultimately be counted on in a crisis.....though he fervently hoped one wasn't looming on Monday.

1:00 pm (Eastern Time, 7:00 pm London Time)

It had been a quiet weekend on the whole for Harry, with the gathering storm coming Monday for him. Saturday had been a rare moment of cooperation in Quidditch, as John Geyser arranged a scrimmage with Shawnee, whose own practice time abutted Cortez'. The two teams weren't scheduled to play until the final match in June (Cortez was playing Proctor in the first half of the doubleheader on October 12, with Shawnee taking on Jefferson immediately afterward), and both captains felt they needed something approaching game experience. The result was a combined three hour practice, which was the closest Harry had had to a game in almost a year. It was not a real game mind you, and there were lots of stoppages for strategy discussions.....and Harry wound up getting three Snitches over the course of the scrimmage (score wasn't kept). It was a lot of fun though, and he was reminded most of why he loved playing Quidditch.

Saturday evening was spent rehearsing his trial testimony in front of his friends, and Drew as well.....his mother had been a lawyer before segueing into politics. The performance, if you will, took place in the Cortez Lounge, and by the end of it quite the crowd had gathered. The curiosity factor wasn't really because of Harry himself, but because these kids had no real experience with Wizard v. Wizard conflict, and the fact that it was one of their own involved made it that much more fascinating. He went through the story three times, perfecting his delivery of it, and by 11:00 pm he thought he had it down pretty well.

Sunday afternoon before he left through the trunk, he said his private goodbye to Sophie, and handed her something.....a mirror.

"I should be back tomorrow before dinner, but if there's a chance the trial will get done tomorrow, I want to be there to see his face when he's sentenced to Azkaban, so I might be a little later."

"Call me when you get a chance, and be careful."

"I will, and I will.....I've got a lot to come back for." They held each other close for a very long moment, and Harry went off through the floo, exiting in the shop.

This was the appointed time, so Fred was waiting for him. They went upstairs, where by prior arrangement, Peter Tyson was waiting for them. Before they got down to business, Harry pulled a shrunken box out of his pocket, and handed it to the nearest twin.

“What’s this?”

“It’s filled with orders from my schoolmates. I did a count, there’s $2,200 in there.” Those who knew about Dobby had asked Harry to give them a break on shipping charges (the twins put a ten percent surcharge for overseas deliveries in the catalog, which was just about their cost). Fred and George grinned, this was going to be a good pipeline.

“Guys, could you excuse Peter and I for a moment?” The twins went back downstairs to do some work filling the orders from Great Lakes. Tyson got up, and closed the door, putting a Silencing Charm on it.

“So what’s going on Harry?”

“I have a problem Peter. Last night I spent all evening rehearsing my trial testimony in front of my friends.....but each time I did it, I came across one part of the story I couldn’t tell them.” The proverbial light bulb went off in Peter’s head.

“Bellatrix Lestrange.”

“Right in one. I have no doubt at all that she’s told her snotty sister all about it, and that it will come up tomorrow. I need to be able to deny it convincingly, even under Veritaserum.” It was unclear whether the witnesses would be put under the drug, but he had to plan as if he would be.

“Who else on the Light side knows about this Harry?”

“Nobody Peter, otherwise I wouldn’t have sent the twins out of the room. I haven’t even told Sophie about it.”

“You want me to Obliviate you, don’t you?”

“If you have a better idea of what to do, I’m all ears.” Peter didn’t have a better idea really.....but he was very uncomfortable with what he was about to do. He liked Harry a lot, and sympathized greatly with what he had been through.....this was a slippery slope though.

“You could always refuse to testify, there’s no reason anyone even needs to know you were here tonight. The testimony of your friends should be enough to convict Malfoy and the rest.” Harry had thought about that, but ultimately it wouldn’t work.

“That would be fine if I had decided to do it that way a month ago, but I didn’t. I’ve told Bones to her face that I would testify. You and I screwed that oath document out of her and Fudge (and Rufus) on the promise I would be here. Add to that the fact that I would be skewered in the Daily Prophet if I ducked out at the last minutes, and for once they’d be right. This is the only play I have Peter, and if you don’t do it, then I’ll have to get Bill.” Peter didn’t want that, the fewer people who knew about it, the better.

“Okay Harry, I’ll do it.....this one time, and one time only. You come to me with a scheme like this again, I’ll present you with a pensieve memory of this to tell you why I won’t do it. Agreed?” Harry didn’t hesitate.

“Agreed.”

“Okay, put the memory in the front of your mind.” Peter was not a professional Obliviator, but knew enough to excise this one small memory, especially from someone whose mind was helping in the process (which made it much, much easier to do). Within a couple of minutes, the job was done.

“Harry, have you ever performed the Cruciatus Curse?”

“Huh? What are you talking about?” Peter immediately Obliviated the question as well, and acknowledged a job well done.

“Are you ready for tomorrow Harry?”

“I am Peter, will you be there?”

“I will, I wouldn't miss this for the world.” Soon afterward he left to go home, and Harry and the twins played cards and shot the shit for most of the rest of the evening. Right before the twins went to bed, they had something to show Harry. They brought out a box of what looked like blue racquetballs.

“Are these what I think they are?”

“Yes they are, and be very, very careful with them. They're loaded with about seven different charms, but they do work. Fred, if you will.”

Fred took one of the balls, and took aim at it with his wand:

Rictusempra!

He handed the ball to Harry, and after about five seconds, Harry was hit with the tickling hex.....while the ball vanished in front of him. The twins let him twitch for a moment, before reversing it.

“Oh this is good, this is very, very good. Will it work with the spell I need to use for the Map?”

“It should, though it won't work for all spells. Basically any spell that uses an above average amount of power won't work. I doubt these will make a huge difference in a battle for instance, but they will do very well in terms of surprise. Let's face it though, these are pranks first and foremost. All we need is a name to call them, and they can be on the shelves a few days afterward. Don't let your schoolmates know until you have the Map finished though.”

“I won't, and thanks guys. We're now up to half of it completed, and most of the rest of what we need are individual dorm rooms.”

“You still have the old one?”

“Yeah, I have it with me. I'm ready to give it to one of them, if things have cooled down. Who knows really, a lot depends on Ron.”

“There’s always trouble when that’s your mantra.” The twins went to bed a few minutes later, after assuring Harry they’d get him up on time for the trial.

Harry wound up going to bed around 1:00 am, because of the time difference (he had gotten up extra early at GL to help compensate). He gave a short prayer that the next day would go smoothly, for everyone.

End Chapter

Author's Note: See, I can update more often than every five months. I made more than a couple small screw-ups in the last chapter, believe it or not I did proofread it, not that it showed. I won't detail each one of them, we'd run into Christmas, but I am sorry. I got an interesting review that asked nicely if I'd cut down on the parentheticals, and I would love to, except that that's how I happen to think, and it seems, write.....much like my run-on sentence habit, which has gotten a little better over the months.....but not much, I admit. One more thing: I tend to do a lot of foreshadowing in my writing, but some of it in this story are blind alleys I'm using to keep you off balance a bit. Bear that in mind when you read certain scenes, both in this chapter and in the future.

Ministry of Magic, Courtroom Orion

Harry and the twins made a point of getting there early, hoping that the Hogwarts contingent would be there as well, leaving Lee in charge of the shop (which was pretty dead on Mondays anyway). They had little trouble entering, and surprisingly were allowed to keep their wands, once it was verified who they were. The desk person explained that the rules were being relaxed for those with Ministry family members, and other special cases (such as Harry). They stopped by Arthur's office, only to find out that he was off on a "flying carpet" emergency, though he was expected back for the trial.....which was good, given that he was a witness, as a participant in the events in question. They had a friendly minute with Perkins, the Warlock who assisted Arthur, before taking their leave.

The three of them walked downstairs to the new courtroom, unofficially known as Courtroom Orion.....after Orion Gatsby, the Welsh Wizard who had designed it earlier in the year. It was quite large, twice the size of the room where Harry had his trial travesty 13 months before. The full Wizengamot would collectively sit on the east wall, with Fudge, Amos Diggory, and Percy sitting on the north side of the room, the witness chair being directly in front of them. The west side consisted pretty much of just the two entrances: one entrance from the rest of the Ministry.....the one Harry, Fred, and George took, and the other entrance led to the holding cells of the Department of Magical Law Enforcement, where Lucius Malfoy (spelled it right this week) and his ten brethren had spent a slightly comfortable night.....comfort being relative, as opposed to their last three months in Azkaban. The south side of the room consisted of the gallery, and could hold roughly 200 people, who sat directly behind the defendant. Also against the south wall was a station for the Wizing Wireless Network (WWN), which was broadcasting the trial live to all the wizard homes in Great Britain (the Wizard Irish could also pick up the signal, as could some in France).

Harry and friends were the first witnesses/spectators to arrive, though two Aurors were on station inside the doors. They weren't ones Harry was familiar with, but he greeted them amicably all the same, and they him. After doing so, he turned to see Fred.....yes he could tell them apart and always had been able to, though it was a secret he was unwilling to share with Ron or Ginny at any price or favor.....Fred was sitting in Fudge's chair, doing quite a realistic impression of the man, but being completely silent while doing so.....pantomiming I believe it's called. Harry turned back to the Aurors only to find them covering their mouths in equally silent laughter.

"Life is always interesting with you two, I'll grant you that."

"You'd be lost without us Harry, and you know it." He did know that, and nodded in agreement. Thankfully, Fred removed himself from Fudge's throne, because seconds later, in came the Hogwarts' group. They consisted of Ron, Ginny, Hermione, Neville, Luna, Hagrid, Remus, Flitwick, and McGonagall. Dumbledore presumably would be coming in with the rest of the Wizengamot. The students were all smiling at them, even Ron, but the four 'adults' all looked a bit stiff and uncomfortable. Harry took one look at the four teachers standing there and couldn't resist a shot across the bow:

"Crikey, isn't anyone minding the store back there?" McGonagall's lips got even tighter, if that's possible, though it made Flitwick and Remus relax a little bit. Remus approached the twins and Harry, and shook hands.

“Classes are cancelled for the day, since there are so many of us here. Professor Sprout is in charge until we get back. Good to see you so well Harry.” Harry gave Remus the once-over, and noted how healthy the older man was looking.

“Same to you Remus, teaching agrees with you it seems.” The twins were off talking to the kids, much to the disapproval of McGonagall. Harry saw this, and decided to torment her a little.

“Well hello there Minerva, how have you been?” Everyone froze at Harry’s use of her first name, and the teenagers goggled at the bright smile on his face as he did so. To her credit, she didn’t rise to the bait.

“Mr. Potter.” Said in a neutral voice, but one that promised a lot more that wanted to be spoken. Harry looked around and saw that more spectators were starting to file in. He blandly turned his back on his former teacher, and looked at his friends.

“C’mon you guys, we need to talk.” The eight of them went to a corner of the gallery, and Harry and George put up Silencing Charms all around them, so that they could talk without the audience hearing what they said. Keeping a weather eye on the Hogwarts’ faculty, Harry addressed Ron and Neville:

“Okay you two, where do things stand? Have you snogged and made up yet? Please tell me yes, so that we can just chat the rest of the time.” Neither of them said a word, though Ron had a mutinous look starting to appear on his face. Neville didn’t quite have a Luna look on his face, but was so much calmer in demeanor than Harry had ever seen him. Luna’s stock went up another ten points in Harry’s mind.

“I guess not. Have we at least had a cessation in hostilities?” Both of the boys nodded.

“Now Hermione has asked me to play peacemaker with you two, not feeling up to the job herself (Hermione flinched at that). Ron, The Marauder’s Map belongs to the twins and I, and only to us until we give it to somebody else. It’s our legacy to Hogwarts, and is no one’s right unless we say so.....are we clear?” The three owners stared hard at him, until Ron gave a small jerk of his head in acknowledgment.

“Neville, whether Ron deserved being nailed in the teeth is neither here nor there. You can’t have violence between you guys, at least not for something like that. Draco must have danced a jig when he heard about it, and that’s something we have to avoid at all costs. If Ron does something like that again, just prank him, or something benign like that. At most, you can tell his mother on him. Got it?”

“Got it.” This was too easy, Harry thought suspiciously.

“Now for the love of Merlin shake hands, you can skip the snogging this time.” Neville reached his hand out, and Ron briefly shook it.....though the look on his face didn’t exactly exude sincerity.

“Good, now pranks can travel overseas you know, and Dobby and Winky would have no problem popping in on you from time to time if I want them to. Don’t test me.” This might have gone just a tad too far, and Ron couldn’t take it any more.

“How is this any of your bloody business! You ditched us the first chance you got! You said yourself that you don’t care what You Know Who does! He could kill us all and you wouldn’t give a damn.” None of the four Hogwarts kids looked shocked at hearing this, giving Harry and the twins the idea that they’d heard this kind of thing before. Both twins closed their eyes in anticipation of Harry having a nutty, but he wound up disappointing them. He walked over to Ron and pulled him close, using his robes as handles.....quite a sight when you consider that Ron had a good six inches on Harry.

“It’s my bloody business because your girlfriend is making it so.....and because I care about her feelings, I’m acquiescing. All of you matter to me Ron, though perhaps a little more than I matter to you, you nutbar! I checked out for my own safety and sanity, and because the old man is willing to sacrifice me to kill Voldemort.....but I don't especially want to be sacrificed. Now whatever problem you have with me leaving, get over it. I never wanted your feelings to be hurt Ron, but I've been a shite sight more loyal to you than you to me over the years, I believe I deserve a little forbearance."

Ron didn't know what forbearance meant precisely, but he could guess from the looks on the others' faces. Luna and Neville had neutral expressions on their faces, while Hermione still looked troubled. His family is what brought him up short though: Ginny simply looked smug, while nodding in agreement with what Harry was saying.....but the threatening looks on the twins faces really threw him. He hadn't really caught on to just how close those three had become. Plus, the look on Harry's face unsettled him greatly. It was now dawning on him just how dangerous his erstwhile best friend had become. Ron sighed in frustration, he hated being cornered like this.

"You really believe Dumbledore would sacrifice you?" Harry saw the opportunity and pounced.

"In a heartbeat Ron, and he wouldn't think twice. I'm just a tool to him, and easily disposable to boot. That's why I left. Not because I don't love you guys, or because I'm afraid of Voldemort. It's because if I'm to face Voldemort, and I agree that its inevitable.....well I need more training and preparation that I've been getting. I've had one month of school over there, and I've learned more in that month than in any YEAR at Hogwarts. You know why? Because of no Snape, no incompetent Defense teachers, and an environment that helps me learn. Hell, if any of you want to join me over there, I'll pay the fees." Ginny is the only one who really perked up at hearing that, and Harry figured on an interrogation in the near future. Ron looked less hostile than he had been, which Harry supposed was a start.

"Now I don't expect you to like HOW I left Ron, and I agree that in a perfect world you'd have known the whole plan before the fireworks started.....but I had good reasons to do it how I did, and as far as I'm concerned, the result is what matters most here.....and the result is, my escape went off without a hitch.” Harry’s shallow to begin with reservoir of patience was draining with every word, but Ron let it be for the time being.

The meeting ended a few seconds later with the arrival of Molly and Bill, with Arthur hurrying in a few seconds later. Harry, well aware of the impression he’d made the last time he saw the Weasley parents (in the Dursley living room), made the first move. He went over and hugged Molly, and shook Arthur’s hand. They chitchatted for a few minutes as more people came into the room, and Arthur and Molly made it clear that there were no grudges. Hermione dragged Ron over to the group and peppered Harry with questions about his Wandless Magic class. This went on for a bit, until Remus couldn’t take any more, and he excused himself and Harry from the group, who dispersed to take their seats.

“ Peter Pettigrew, Aide-to-Camp, Lord Voldemort. That was a fascinating little piece of paper Harry.....what about the rest of it?” Harry had sent parents’ friend one letter since his meeting with Mark Frankel, and had not addressed the Wormtail issue.

“I can’t tell you much Remus, an agent for the American Wizard government intercepted it and showed it to me to verify.” To say that that little statement stretched the truth to it’s limits.....

“What did the rest of it say Harry?”

“They’re recruiting in America, that’s all I know. The Aurors over there are on it Remus, they’ll handle it.” Remus started laughing.

“Did you just make up that story Harry? I would have thought I deserve a better class of lie than that.” Harry just gave him a placid smile in return.

“ Believe it or not Remus, I am capable of accepting orders.....particularly when I trust their impartiality. I was asked not to divulge any more than that, and believe or not, I’m a man of my word.”

“I swore an oath to you Harry, I swore that I would support you over him. I’ve stood up to him on your behalf at Order meetings, you know this, since the twins tell you everything that goes on there.” This had a justifiably bitter tinge to it.

“Something you should have done 15 years ago Remus, when your best friends were murdered and their son orphaned. You let him put me with those muggles without so much as a by your leave. Don’t expect any sympathy about being kept out of the loop.....and while I’m glad of your very, very recent turnaround, you still have some penance to pay. Now if you’ll excuse me, I need to say hello to someone.” Harry didn’t even bring out his biggest gun: That Remus had only sworn such an oath on the promise of a million galleons and a large house, he felt he would save that for the next attempted guilt trip. Feeling a lot better having gotten that off his chest, he disengaged himself from a thoroughly unsatisfied (and hurt) Remus, and walked over to Rufus Scrimgeour, who had just entered the room.

“Hello Harry, it’s about time we met.”

“I agree sir. I bring greetings from Tom Ripley and Dick Greenleaf, they said to say hello.”

“Return them for me, thank you. How’s your Defense learning going? I imagine you’re picking up more than Hogwarts gave you.” He was eyeing Remus when he said this, but Harry didn’t necessarily disagree.

“I am, Professor Ripley is very good, very thorough. Not having to worry if he’s going to kill me is a plus.” They shared a rueful smile.

“No doubt. I’ll be over to the States for a meeting in a few weeks, I’ll stop by and we can chat some.”

“I’d like that sir.” They shook hands, and Harry went over to the seat in the second row that the twins were saving for him, the Wizengamot was filing in.....and a certain older wizard had noticed Harry and Rufus talking, not liking it. The courtroom was now almost full, as fifteen Aurors took their places around the room. Draco and his mother sat in the first row, directly behind the defendant's chair. The Hogwarts group was in the third row on the left. All that remained to enter was Fudge and his retinue, and the defendant. The Minister walked in a few minutes later, Diggory and Percy obediently following behind him. They took their places, and Fudge put a Sonorus Charm on to quiet the room.

"Let us have quiet now!" The room went silent, as they waited for the show to begin.

"Bring in the defendant!" A minute later, Lucius Malfoy was brought in. He was dressed in his finest robes, and somehow had that albino white hair of his looking normal.....but he was not looking too good otherwise. Harry hadn't technically seen him in a few years, but it certainly looked like he had lost about 30 pounds. He was walking very slowly, but that could be attributed to his having a thick chain connecting ankle-cuffs. Two Aurors marched in front of him, and two behind, making him look much more dangerous than he perhaps was. He was placed in the defendant's chair, and magical ropes wrapped around him automatically.

The one peculiar thing Harry noted, was the expression on Fudge's face, for some reason he was drawn to it. Based on their conversation in July, Harry had expected a look of satisfaction, or at the very least one of pleasure.....he didn't see either of those or anything like them. If anything, the Minister looked nervous. He pretty much avoided eye contact with Lucius, and was looking around the room, as if noting where Dumbledore, Rufus, and even Harry himself were stationed. Harry very subtly eyed those around him, wondering if anyone else was noticing this, but it didn't seem to be the case. Harry had assumed for months that these would be the easiest convictions since Snape, given the preponderance of the evidence, but now he was wondering.

Bones stood up from her position next to the Wizengamot, and indicated to Fudge that she was ready.

"The Ministry of Magic versus Lucius Malfoy. The defendant is charged with murder, attempted murder, breaking and entering, illegal use of Dark Magic, use of Unforgivable Curses, and being a Death Eater. Lucius Malfoy, how do you plead?”

“Not Guilty.” Malfoy’s voice was very hollow, but he managed to stand up straight and deliver it with a degree of his former arrogant bearing.

“Madam Bones, are you ready with your first witness?”

“I am. The DMLE calls Harry Potter.” Harry in fact had been the first person that most of the peanut gallery had been looking for when they came into the room, so the calling of his name didn’t create as much buzz as one might think. He walked up to the witness chair and sat down. Lucius appeared to be representing himself, and to Harry’s moderate surprise, didn’t ask him to take Veritaserum.....though Harry of course didn’t remember why that had been so important.

“Please state your name, age, and current place of residence for the record please.”

“Harry James Potter, 16, Great Lakes Magical Institute.”

“And though 16, you are an emancipated minor, is that correct?”

“Yes ma’am, though to be accurate, I wasn’t on the day in question.”

“Duly noted. Mr. Potter, when did you first meet the defendant?” Harry had to consider that for a second.

“I couldn’t tell you the exact date ma’am, but it was in August, 1992, at Flourish and Blotts.”

“What happened at that meeting?” Harry proceeded to describe the events that transpired at the Lockhart book signing. A lot of people looked at Arthur, the idea of him getting into a fight was rather shocking.

In turn, Harry was asked to describe his other meetings with Lucius: At the end of second year, both in Dumbledore's office and in the corridor right outside it; the scene right after the Tri-Wizard, in the graveyard; and finally, he spent 20 minutes describing in detail his memory of the battle at The Department of Mysteries.

"You are stating for the record that the defendant is a Death Eater and acknowledged as much in front of you?"

"Yes I am, though I would bet that he'll claim to be under Imperius."

"I tender the witness to the defense, though I reserve the right to recall."

Lucius eyed his son's rival, but any sense of menace he might have exuded was tempered by his being chained up. He could never look at Harry without being reminded of Dobby attacking him, but he tamped it down.

"Potter.....you hate me, do you not?"

"Yes I do." Expecting a rant, Malfoy was caught short a bit, but he rallied.

"Why?" Harry thought this would be obvious after 30 minutes of talking about Malfoy and his evils.

"Well, trying to kill me will tend to bring that feeling out in me Lucius, I'm not sure what you expected." The crowd tittered, and even Dumbledore smiled at hearing that.

"And you hate my son, do you not?" A stickier wicket really.

"Eh, not really." Say what? Lucius again recovered quickly.

"Is that so?"

“It’s hard to hate someone who fails to best you time and time again. I certainly don’t like him, but given that this is the last time I’ll have to see his snide features for a few years, I have no hate for him.” Yes, Harry had been rehearsing that speech. Bones had given him a few tips on what questions he should expect, and this was one of them. The crowd liked it too, though if Harry had turned around he would have noticed Fudge grimacing.

“Surely you cannot expect the court members to overlook your bias toward my family? You hate us, and want me in prison because of it!” Harry knew that he had to remain calm and controlled here.

“I want you in prison for your crimes Lucius, nothing more, nothing less. If not for you being a Death Eater, I would hardly know you. Meanwhile your son is merely an irritant to me, hardly worth sending you to prison just for that.”

“Isn’t it true that you yourself committed a series of crimes on the night I was falsely arrested? Breaking into the Ministry? Violating the bounds of the Department of Mysteries? Use of underage magic?”

“All true but the last, an underage wizard or witch is allowed to use magic to defend themselves.....as you well know.”

“Why were you not charged for your crimes do you think?”

“Because my crimes, as you call them, resulted in the capture of 11 Death Eaters and the official exposure of Voldemort’s return. I’m guessing that they felt the benefit was worth the cost.”

“Because you are the so-called Boy Who Lived?”

“I’m sure that was part of it.” Though Harry seemed to be handling this fine, Bones stood up.

“The DMLE would like to state for the record that Mr. Potter, Miss Weasley, Mr. Weasley, Miss Granger, Miss Lovegood, and Mr. Longbottom have been granted immunity for their transgressions in exchange for their testimony today, and that all six of them expressed their desire to testify before immunity was brought up by us.” Technically she was right, in very broad strokes. The five Hogwarts kids had indeed assumed that since charging them had never even been mentioned in the three months since the incident, that none were coming. Bones decided that Harry’s worrisome (to her anyway) paranoia need not be brought out into the open.

“The record will so acknowledge.”

Lucius did not, as expected, tender the witness. Instead he went over Harry’s previous testimony about their incidents, picking at them for perceived bias and inconsistencies. Lucius may have been arrogant and conceited, but Harry had to allow that he knew what he was doing. Bones looked bored shitless, but at no point had any cause to object. It took another 30 minutes, but Harry was finally off the witness stand at about 10:15 am, though Lucius too reserved the right to recall him. He made sure his back was turned to the Wizengamot and made an exaggerated wink at Draco.....who, surprisingly, simply smirked in return.

Hermione was next, followed by Ginny and Luna. Their stories pretty well matched Harry’s, since the first two girls had never met Lucius other than when Harry did. Surprisingly Luna had met him a couple of times with her dad, but they were nothing of consequence. Still, Malfoy’s cross examining kept the three of them on the stand for over an hour total, and Harry was brought up more than once. Bones, wondering why Malfoy was stalling so much, rose to her feet after Luna stepped down.

“The DMLE will stipulate that the testimony of Ronald Weasley and Neville Longbottom will not deviate substantially from that of Miss Granger or Miss Weasley, if the defendant will agree to forgo cross examination.” Malfoy did not even wait for Fudge to say anything.

“I will not stipulate to their testimony, and I will not forgo my rights under the law.”

“Very well, Madam Bones, call your next witness.” Bones shot Malfoy a look of irritation as she called Neville to the stand. Malfoy limited himself to a sneer in return.

Neville, after an uneventful (and rather hurried) examination by Bones, was, unfortunately, forced to answer many a Malfoy question about his parents and their condition, whereupon Bones finally had had enough and started a string of objections. Fudge announced to a restless crowd that a lunch break would be granted after Ron was done. Bones wrapped Ron in five minutes, and Malfoy was shockingly easy on him, nailing him only at the end.

“Mr. Weasley, what was your reaction when you heard that Potter had decamped for America?” This was a bit tricky, since Ron had heard the news in two separate parts: the first when he was told Harry had left Britain, the second when he found out specifically where. Ron, though a bit dim in most other respects, smelled a trap nonetheless.

“I was surprised.”

“Hurt perhaps?” Dim though he was, Ron didn’t like words being put in his mouth.

“How is that your business?” Beating Bones to it, as she was rising again to object the same.

“We are again discussing Potter’s honesty and trustworthiness. Is it true that you, his best friend, were not told about his move until after the fact?” Ron and the others had undergone a strict lecture from Remus and McGonagall before the trial about the Order and its secrets (the old man was still shunning them).....so while Ron, in theory, may have understood Harry’s reasons for leaving him in the dark.....he couldn’t explain them in open court. He wasn’t about to lie for Harry though, not anymore. Keeping his voice level:

“Yes, that is true.” Now there was a buzz in the courtroom, as eyes turned to Harry.....who had prepared his amiably smiling facial expression from the instant Malfoy asked the question. Ron smiled right back at him the same way, with the twins on either side of Harry fervently hoping that Ron had taken his pound of flesh and was done.

“I have no further use of this witness.” It was now a minute past noon.

“We will now break for lunch, everyone be back here at 1:30 pm.” Aurors led Lucius back to his holding area, and the gallery slowly filed out. Fred, George, and Harry just stood there waiting for Ron to come down. Molly and Arthur came up as well, hoping to avert a scene, with the Hogwarts crew waiting by the door with Bill, watching.

“Are we square now Ron?” Ron’s smile was now gone, replaced by a look of indignation.

“What was I supposed to say? It was the truth wasn’t it?” Harry just shook his head sadly, true or not, it had been done to damage him.

“Yes it was, you helped Lucius just enough. Thanks Ron. Oh yeah, if I find out you were the Witch Weekly source about Sophie.....” He left the threat understood but unspoken, turned and walked toward the door. Hermione stopped him before he could leave.

“What did you mean by that? Helping Malfoy?” Clearly she hadn’t seen as many courtroom movies as he had (Claudia had gotten him hooked on them, as she loved them too).

“ He’s setting me up for something Hermione, every cross examination dealt with me. He’s using past doubts about me to try and make me the villain. He knows he’ll have trouble getting the Wizengamot to acquit him, so he’s scoring points against me for the future.” This gave her pause, and time for the twins to catch up to Harry. Ginny grabbed his arm.

“You’re not leaving are you? Don’t let Ron drive you away.” Harry wasn’t going back to school, not yet. He hadn’t listened to Malfoy impugn him for over two hours for nothing. He wanted to hear the guilty verdict.

“I’m not leaving the country yet, if that’s what you’re asking. Heck, breakfast hasn’t even started back home (he emphasized the word home, and stared right at McGonagall and Remus while doing so). Gred and Forge and I are going to meet someone for lunch in muggle London, seeing as how we have so long a break.” The someone was Peter Tyson, who had quietly slipped out of the courtroom unnoticed by the others.....the main subjects being WWW and the trial (of course). Bill sidled up to them.

“I’m going to tag along too, if these guys don’t mind. I’m not sure I trust three guys as vague as this lot out and about in London by themselves.” Fred and George exchanged looks of mock affront, and quickly whipped out their wands and pointed them at Bill.....and the look on his face.....

“Oh that was good Fred, we need to do that more often.” The others were rather surprised as well.

“Right you are George. As you folks saw, we’ve been practicing the Potter Quick Draw. The only decent Defense teacher we ever had.” They walked out the door, still cackling as they pocketed their wands. Molly and Arthur said they would stay with the Hogwarts group, since they rarely got to see their youngest children during the school year. With McGonagall and Remus glaring at him, Harry didn’t even bother to ask if any of the other teenagers would be allowed to join them. He and Bill took off after the twins, and therefore missed a bit of fun. Ginny turned to her big brother and cracked him across the face, causing Molly to gasp.

“You snotty little bastard. What the hell did you think you were doing? No wonder Harry took off, having to put up with you all the time.” Ron had had enough from more than just Harry this day.

“You ever do that again Ginny, you’ll regret it.” Ginny looked like she was about to take him up on his threat, when cooler heads prevailed. Arthur stepped between them.

“Enough, both of you. The next one to misbehave is the one who will regret it, and I’m talking about more than just a de-gnoming. Am I understood?" For the second time in four hours, Ron agreed to a truce that he didn't really mean. He nodded his head, while Ginny just turned and stalked away, Luna and Neville following her. Ron's parents and Hermione didn't say anything to him, as the Hogwarts' faculty wisely stayed silent.

"Don't look at me like that, I haven't done anything wrong!" That was debatable, but the other chose to let it lie.

"Let's go guys, we can floo to the Leaky Cauldron from my office and have some lunch. Minerva?"

"Yes, let us do that. Mr. Weasley (addressing Ron), I do not want to hear of any incidents involving you and your sister, am I understood?"

"If she smacks me again, she's getting hit back.....hard. You can give me detentions from here to Christmas, I don't care." He walked away, but Hermione for once did not follow him.

"Hermione, please talk to him."

"I'll try Mrs. Weasley.....but I won't try much more. He's changed, and I don't like those changes." She hurried after Ginny, quietly talking to her as they went. Remus had a surprising comment.

"Well in this one small instance I'm with Ron.....if someone hits me, they're getting hit back, woman or not. I thought your blasé reaction to that was inappropriate Minerva. Come on, let's get to lunch." McGonagall colored at the criticism, as she did at all criticism not given by Dumbledore. The rest of the trial break went peacefully though. Ron sulked throughout the meal, but the others just ignored it and chatted amongst themselves.

The meal break for Harry and his group was even more relaxing. WWW covered most of it, as Fred and George talked about their plans to lease some space next to Madam Rosmerta's during the next Hogsmeade visit (to take place in less than three weeks, concurrent with one of the Great Lakes' Flackter Alley weekends). Expansion was also brought up, but they were in no hurry to put down roots in another store until the Voldemort situation was stabilized. When talk turned to the trial, Peter agreed that Lucius was up to something, and found it odd that he didn't have a lawyer with him. His theory is that Malfoy knew it was a loser, the standard "I was under Imperious" defense notwithstanding.....and was just saving money and making a point. None of them thought that Voldemort would make an appearance, they all figured that Lucius and his cronies were in disgrace and weren't worth saving. Harry recounted to them Bones' statement that she had used Veritaserum to pump them for information, but had come up empty handed. That sealed it, and they went back to talking about the shop.

Meanwhile, just inside The Forbidden Forest, one hundred meters east of Hagrid's home.

1:15 pm

The tall, gaunt figure of Fenrir Greyback surveyed his troops calmly. There were 20 of them, most of his pack as it was currently constituted (he had 10 others held back, in case things went bad here). He addressed them now.

"Remember the plan. Hogsmeade group, cause as much physical and property destruction as you possibly can, then set off the signal. Don't let the Aurors get too many shots at you when they get there.....but keep in mind that them getting there is what we are after. Kill if you must, but do not delay unnecessarily to feed. While it would be nice to have some new 'converts', that is not the focal point of the mission. Am I understood?" A collective:

"Yes sir." Edward Grant, an Irish werewolf, would be leading the Hogsmeade sortie. He was Fenrir's right-hand man, and could be trusted to do what was necessary.

"The rest of you, those that are coming with me, watch out for the Hogwarts' staff that remain. The most skilled teachers are at the trial right now, the only one we really need to worry about is Shepherd, the young one. Narcissa told me that he is skilled in Defense, no matter that he only teaches Potions. There are a number of students who are capable though, so there is no need to get inside.” Seeing nods of understanding from his troops, he was satisfied.

“Good, Edward, take your men to Hogsmeade. Give the signal when you are ready.”

“Yes sir. This will be a good day.” Greyback gave a hard smile.

“It’s the day we get back the initiative. All we need is that arrogant Wizard (he was referring to our friend Voldemort) to do his part.” Grant and 11 others slipped through the woods, all going together. They moved quickly and stealthily through the forest, and somehow managed to avoid any Centaur patrols (or perhaps they didn’t, but no contact was made by the Centaurs either way). They exited near the Shrieking Shack, right across the railroad tracks near Hogsmeade Station. Grant checked his watch, it was 1:35. He motioned to Castor Archer, his largest soldier, to give the signal:

AAAAAAWHHHHOOOOOOOOOO!

The howl split the afternoon air, and ears all over Hogsmeade perked up when they heard it.

“You men know what to do.....attack!” The dozen of them proceeded to transform, a very difficult and draining process when there was no full moon to be had.....but they had more than enough energy left for some destruction. They grouped off in four’s.....one quartet to The Three Broomsticks.....one to Zonkos.....and the last (with Grant) to Dervish and Banges. A look at a map of Hogsmeade would tell you that these three places were rather distant from each other, giving each unit a specific territory for carnage.....and carnage is what ensued. Within ten minutes the place was half destroyed, as the first mass werewolf attack in decades descended upon the unsuspecting citizens of the village.

The first sub-pack tore apart Madam Rosemerta’s establishment in less than a minute, terrorizing the few customers inside.....all of whom were listening to the Malfoy trial on the pub’s wireless set. Castor Archer made a point to get to the floo and destroy it, so that word could not get out quickly. In the heat of the moment, they disregarded Greyback's order about killing.....and two patrons were killed, but the rest Apparated away, including Madam Rosmerta. Archer and company moved on to the next building.....rinse, and repeat. Similar scenes happened with the other two groups, as there would be a need for nine gravestones for citizens of Hogsmeade. After about eight minutes, all of the living residents had Apparated away.....those with children had used camouflaged floor fireplaces for emergencies just like this. That left Grant and his troops only a few more minutes for destruction, and the werewolves used them well.

At that point, they heard the howl in the distance.....the retreat signal, this was concurrent with the arrival of the Aurors, who Apparated in near the Post Office, as all of the floors were now destroyed but the emergency ones. The werewolves rapidly massed back at their starting point, and disappeared into the forest, soon rendezvousing with their brethren.

Flashback ten minutes to Fenrir Greyback's position near Hagrid's hut.

"There's the signal, let's go." Greyback only had seven others with him, because he didn't anticipate much human resistance. After they made the change, they tore apart Hagrid's home first (Grawp was in parts unknown, and they did not come across him). Perversely, they let Fang live for some reason, and simply ignored him as they went about their home redesign. Once done, they advanced on the castle.....and some expected company.

Their inside man, a rather small white haired boy in Slytherin, had told them that flying lessons were not to be canceled this day. Madam Hooch and ten Hufflepuff and Ravenclaw first year students were outside for flying lesson number three. These were the kids who hadn't quite gotten the idea during the first two lessons earlier in the month, and almost all of them were muggleborns. They were on the ground when the noise from Hagrid's hut.....sorry, his former hut.....reached their ears. The kids didn't know what was going on, but Hooch was in the know about Grawp, and just assumed it was him doing some redecorating.

They found out soon enough, as Greyback led his cohorts straight up the path towards them.

“Everyone into the air, now!” These were muggleborn kids remember, and ironically, pretty much all of them had seen werewolves on television, or in the movies.....and these looked pretty representative. They all got on their brooms with a few seconds to spare, and got into the air.....doing that wasn't their problem, their reason for being here a third time (Neville had needed a third time as well), it was what to do once they did. Hooch barely got into the air before Fenrir reached her. She screamed at her charges:

“Go up to Astronomy Tower!” The kids still didn't fully appreciate what was going on, but Hooch had instructed them the first day that they should do whatever she told them.....and they obeyed.....some not very gracefully, some hesitantly.....but they all got up there, safe, in theory.

Hooch, upon seeing that, sped off toward the front doors, which were closed, but unlocked. She couldn't believe what was happening.....well she could, and that's what bothered her in the split seconds she had to think about it. She knew this couldn't be a coincidence, with the most powerful of the faculty being hundreds of kilometers away. Hooch was on a crap broom, and she may have been getting up there in years.....but she was the Flying Instructor for a very good reason, it was now a race to the doors.

Two of the werewolves had tried to head her off by going right for the doors, rather than the kids, but she got there just in time, using her wand to open them as she skidded through, almost hitting the ground. She whipped her wand back at the one open door, closing it just as the two werewolves crashed into it.

Compingo!

A basic locking spell, but one that would suffice against someone without magic.....at least for the time being. In order for the doors to become magically enhanced, the castle would have to be put into lockdown.....and that could only be done by Dumbledore,

McGonagall, or Flitwick.....and tellingly, the last time they had all been out of the castle at the same time (during the school year) was many years ago, one time.....when Flitwick was over in The United States, and Murray was there. Hooch took a second to pull herself together, and raised her wand to her throat

Magis Sonorous!

THE SCHOOL IS UNDER ATTACK! WEREWOLVES HAVE ENTERED THE GROUNDS, EVERYONE TO YOUR COMMON ROOMS.....NOW!

Magis Sonorus is basically Sonorous multiplied by ten, and made her voice capable of reaching the entire castle. Classes may have been cancelled, but they were replaced by mandatory study halls, so none of the students were outside goofing off. She could still hear werewolves battering at the doors.....but did not realize that there were only five of them.....Greyback and two others were ransacking the Herbology greenhouses.....where, thankfully, Sprout was not at the moment.

POMONA! SOUND THE ALARM!

The alarm in question, located in every staff office as well as the Great Hall, was connected directly to the Ministry, and needed only the wand of any teachers to activate it. The alarm had not been used since the time of Grindewald, but everyone was briefed on it every September. Seconds later it sounded, which coincided with Shepherd and Hill, who had been chatting in Hill's office, racing toward her. The alarm was much like a muggle fire alarm, and was very, very loud.

WHOOOP WHOOOP WHOOOP WHOOOP WHOOOP!

It sounded both at Hogwarts, and in The Ministry.....where our main players were just settling back in, as Remus had just been called by Bones to the witness chair.

The Ministry of Magic

2 Minutes earlier:

The crowd had been filing back in for the last 10 minutes, as Harry, Fred, and George managed to get their preferred seats back. The assumed order of witnesses were the Order members who had fought, though whether Dumbledore would take the stand was a subject of much speculation. Remus was still in the first few questions of his testimony, dealing with his experiences at the end of the last war, when they heard the alarm.

Harry covered his ears at the noise, as did most of the other gallery. Dumbledore, belying his age, sprang up as the place went into bedlam.

“Silence! Hagrid, stay here with the kids. Minerva, Remus, Filius, with me now!” He ran out the door, followed closely by the other three. They hurried to the nearest floor, and quickly got to Dumbledore’s office.

“Remus, Filius, to the front doors. Minerva, begin checking the Common Rooms.” McGonagall, like all teachers, had the current passwords to each of the Houses. Dumbledore himself raced to Sprout’s office, praying that this was some kind of misunderstanding. He reached her office just in time, as she was about to come to his. Sprout had only remained where she was in order to brief Dumbledore when he got there.

“What happened Pomona?”

“Werewolves Albus, eight of them from what Rolanda said. It just happened, that’s all I know.”

“Did any of them breach the doors?”

“I don’t know, that’s where Rolanda is right now, and I heard Jeffrey and Charles heading down there as well.”

“Very well, Minerva is checking on the students, take the other teachers and do the same. Make sure at least two teachers are in each Common Room until the crisis passes.” She nodded and immediately set off. After turning off the alarm, the old man hurried down to the front doors, where found the five of his faculty already there. There was no pounding on the doors any longer, though the doors themselves looked a little warped to his eyes.

“Rolanda, what happened?”

She didn’t have much more information than what Sprout had given him, since there were no windows in the front.

“What of the children?”

“There were supposed to be none outside, other than my flying students. I sent them up to Astronomy Tower, but I couldn’t see if they all got there.” True, she had been kind of busy at the time.

“Jeffrey, please go up there and see to them.”

“Yes Albus.” The Muggle Studies teacher rushed off.

“What do we do now Albus? The pounding stopped about a minute ago.” Where was Moody when you really needed him.....he had stayed behind in the courtroom.

“The Aurors will be here any second Charles, they will deal with what’s outside. Our responsibility is to the students inside. I have the other faculty checking on the Common Rooms. We will stay here and await the Aurors.” A couple of minutes passed before there was more pounding on the door.

“Ministry of Magic, open the doors!” The voice was that of Kingsley Shacklebolt, who had not been in the courtroom.....Bones not wanting to put any Aurors on the stand for Lucius to cross examine. Dumbledore breathed a sigh of relief, and he and Remus unlocked and opened the huge doors.

“Kingsley, it’s good to see you. What happened out there?”

“The werewolves are all gone, they sprinted into The Forbidden Forest as soon as we came in. We didn’t see how many.....but there is smoke on the horizon Albus, from the direction of Hogsmeade.” This should not have been surprising, given the number of werewolves who had attacked, but Dumbledore didn’t really have a good idea of the size of Greyback’s pack.

“Oh dear. You sent people over there?”

“We did, Tonks is leading them. Have all of your students been accounted for?”

“We are efforting that as we speak. Did you find anyone out there?”

“No, no bodies. You will need new Herbology greenhouses, and Hagrid will be sleeping in the castle tonight though.”

“Was it Greyback?”

“I don’t know Albus, we didn’t see any specific faces. They never tried to engage us, or even to throw any taunts.” Kingsley had three Aurors with him now, and five more had been sent to Hogsmeade. One of those Aurors (Monica Evans) came running from the front gate, where she had Apparated in.....one could not Apparate on the Hogwarts’ grounds either. Out of breath after the quarter mile sprint, she gasped out her report.

“The whole village has been leveled Kingsley, Headmaster.”

“Werewolves?”

“We think so, but there’s nobody left to ask. They’re either dead or they popped away. The damage did not look like it was magically done though.”

“How many dead Monica?”

“I don’t know Headmaster, I came back here after we found the first two in The Three Broomsticks. The others are searching the rest of the wreckage. The only buildings still standing are The Post Office and The Shrieking Shack, the rest are in pieces.” Fifteen minutes had now passed since the alarms had gone off, and Dumbledore was already tired because of the day’s events. Something was bothering him though, like a splinter in his mind. He walked a few steps outside, and saw the smoke Kingsley had referred to. McGonagall came hurrying up as he was thinking.

“All the students are accounted for Albus, outside of those six at the trial (Draco as well remember). They’re all in their Common Rooms, and they’re worried.” That was good, a worried student wouldn’t do anything rash, and the only truly rash students were at the trial.

The trial.....finally, it clicked.

“Kingsley, how many Aurors do you have here and in Hogsmeade?”

“Nine sir, including me.....add to that you, Remus, and Filius, we could beat the werewolves back if they return.”

“How many are back at The Ministry?”

“Around 50 throughout the building, plus 10 more at Azkaban, and 10 more who work nights and are off duty right now. That’s the entire Auror cadre.”

“Filius, Remus, come with me. Kingsley, get most of your people back to The Ministry. Minerva, put the castle in lockdown as soon as we have left.”

“What’s wrong?”

“I have a feeling that this was just a diversion. Go, now.” The teachers hurried after Dumbledore, and Kingsley directed a few instructions to Monica Evans before following them with the other three Aurors. The seven of them got to Dumbledore’s office and flooded into back to the office they had used before.....and it was unfortunate that Dumbledore had his light bulb moment when he did, because they came directly into an inferno.

Flashback to The Ministry

Harry watched the Hogwarts faculty stream out with a growing sense of unease. He knew what those alarms meant, and his 'who's minding the store' comment from this morning took on extra portent. He looked up at Fudge, who had now stood up and was waving for attention.

"Calm down everyone, calm down! The trial is temporarily recessed, we will resume when we have word of what has happened at Hogwarts. Everyone will remain in your seats." Except Fudge of course, who came down from his perch to whisper with Percy and Amos Diggory. After a hurried minute of consultation, Fudge waddled out the door, with his henchmen taking their seats again. Lucius was still chained in his seat, and Bones wandered over to talk with Rufus, who was seated in the front row. The alarm turned off after another moment, and everyone breathed a collective sigh of relief. It couldn't have been that bad, for the alarm to only last a few minutes, right?

Harry still didn't like it though. He and the twins were quietly talking and speculating, and he slipped his wand into his hand, trying to do so without attracting any attention. He nudged Fred, and he and George did likewise. Hermione saw them do this and left her seat, over Hagrid's objections, and the three 'adults' budged over to let her sit down.

"They haven't come back yet, what do you think is going on?" Fred had once conned Quirrel's immediate predecessor into telling him how to activate the alarm.....though even he wasn't that bold to actually try it.....he just wanted it for future information (indeed he had almost used it against Umbridge, but felt that that line shouldn't be crossed in that instance). He told them the spell that needed to be used.

"You can't set it off by accident, that's the main thing, its not like one of your muggle alarms where all you have to do is trip and you might activate it. It has to be an attack against the outer walls of some kind.” Hermione was about to ask another question when there was a crash against the outside door, the one that led to the rest of The Ministry. The door didn’t open, but one of the door guards went out to investigate.....and that’s when it happened.

Ten members of the Wizengamot stood up, wands in hand.....and put Death Eater masks over their faces. Each took aim at an Auror, and before anyone could blink:

AVADA KEDAVRA!

Times ten.

All ten Aurors targeted were killed, though none of them have yet been players in our story. The remaining nine (not including Rufus), five along the walls and Lucius’ guard detail reacted as fast as could be expected, and took down five of the Death Eaters before they could fire again.....but the five who dodged the return fire managed to kill four more Aurors

All this took roughly five seconds, and for the crowd, four and a half of those had been taken up by processing what was going on. Rufus strode out into the middle of the room and started taking aim at the masked men (yes, they were all men), but was distracted by the small occurrence of the main door being blown off its hinges, and more Death Eaters flowing into the room.

“Get down!” Rufus screamed at the gallery, and indeed most of them did.....even Hagrid, who had a hair bit of trouble hiding under or behind the pew. The regular Aurors were now all dead, and Rufus and Bones were going toe to toe with the new arrivals. Not all the Wizengamot members were past their prime or cowards, and curses soon filled the air, as their traitorous brethren soon bore the brunt of a hail of non-Avada Kedavra curses. One of the newly arrived Death Eaters took the time to free Lucius from his chains, and the defendant was hustled out of what remained of the door, but not before yelling:

“Not Guilty!”

In the second row, Hermione drew her wand and took aim at the horde, before Harry and George shoved her down.

“For the love of Merlin Granger, get down.” George said, as he jerked her out of the way, saving her from some sort of blue light coming straight for her. He, Fred, and Harry took aim and fired:

REDUCTO! REDUCTO! REDUCTO!

Straight into the main body of the Death Eaters, who looked to be about 30 at the least. The curses all hit home, though it now drew the bad guys’ attention. Only about a dozen or so of the gallery were doing as Harry and the twins did, and the good guys were quickly losing the battle.....Avada Kedavra versus any other spell is a battle that heavily favors the killing side.

“Mates, follow my lead.” Harry aimed his wand at the floor in front of him and fired down:

SERPENSORTIA!

A large snake appeared out of his wand, and the twins did likewise. Harry summoned up his rusty Parseltongue.

“Attack them! Kill anyone with a mask! No mercy to Death Eaters!”

The sound of anyone speaking Parseltongue is enough to give your average wizard the quivers, but to come from The Boy Who Lived was even more frightening, and did give most of the Death Eaters who heard it a moment of pause. The snakes did their part though, and slithered toward the Death Eaters, and even managed to kill one of them before they were put down.....Avada Kedavra works on magically created snakes too, it seemed. Harry repeated his ploy, but none of the snakes even made it to the enemy this time.....but plenty of killing curses were flowing his way. He thought quickly, and decided that the familiar tricks were sometimes the best. He shouted down to the twins and Hermione, who he had given up trying to keep out of the battle.

“Fire Reducto at the ceiling, we need some cover!” More people than just those three heard him, and they all thought that more cover was a splendid notion.

This is not a good thing mind you.

Soon the entire ceiling above had collapsed under a withering hail of Reducto curses as Harry now screamed at them to stop. Fortunately no one was in the offices above.....unfortunately a lot of people in the gallery were hit with debris. Some of the more rational spectators also aimed at the south wall, and more rubble was created.....Orion Gatsby would be suicidal if he could see this.

No one was seriously injured though, and enough people pitched in to make a nice sized barrier between the gallery and most of the Death Eaters. The Wizengamot members who had been willing to fight were mostly dead, except for what looked to be about two. They had beaten Harry and company to the punch when it came to creating a barrier.....but they had used the dead bodies of the Wizengamot traitors as their physical shield.

Harry's side was starting to pin the enemy down (somewhat), when things took a turn:

KABOOOOOOM!

The west wall exploded, and the gap that was formerly the door was now many meters wide.....and the new arrivals all had masks on but one:

Voldemort

The bad man waved his hand at the door leading down to the holding cells, and it ripped off its hinges. He turned toward a shorter figure standing next to him.....one with a silver hand.

“Go get the others Wormtail, kill who you have to.” Pettigrew ran through the door, followed closely by about a dozen of the new arrivals. The only resistance that Harry (whose scar had started tingling, but not hurting, a minute earlier) could see was coming from his side of the room.....though if he had looked in just the right place, he would have seen that the rear guard of the Death Eaters had a few things to do. His man-made wall was quickly being battered down, as the Death Eaters spread out around the room. He turned to Fred.

“Where the hell are the Aurors?” Fred knew Harry probably didn’t want to hear this, but.....

“They’re probably dead mate, and we will be soon too if we don’t do something.”

“We need more space, we’re too tightly packed in here. Do you guys know the explosion spell?” Heads were shaken.

“Abrumpere.....on the count of three, aim it at the north wall. One.....two.....three.....NOW!” The four of them rose up, and with help from behind:

ABRUMPERE!

Fudge would need a new throne, as a dozen others joined Harry, Hermione, Fred, and George in totally destroying the north wall, fortunately there was no one on the other side of it. Harry took a quick peek behind him to see who was helping him. Mostly they were adult wizards he’d never seen before, though Rufus and Bones were among them (I said mostly remember). Ginny and the others were still being held in place by Hagrid, but he saw that she was trying to break free, as were Neville, Luna, and even Ron.....no one could ever doubt his courage, no matter how idiotically he behaved. Peter Tyson, Bill, Molly, and Arthur were four rows behind them, and also had their wands out, Bill making sure his mother wasn’t in the line of fire. Interestingly, Draco and Narcissa Malfoy were still there, no longer in the front row, but making sure that they stayed well out of the firing line. Harry motioned to Rufus and Bones to make their way to the east wall (the Wizengamot wall) so that they could start to outflank the Death Eaters.....who were now numbering around 25, including Voldemort. Bones and Rufus suddenly rushed over to the wreckage of Fudge's throne/podium, drawing some fire and emboldening other, formerly timid, members of the gallery, who began firing curses at the Death Eaters. Harry and his small group began moving toward the west wall, which was not so populated by the bad guys any longer.

They were delayed in this effort by the return of Peter Pettigrew and his men, who had the ten other captured Death Eater defendants in tow.....though Pettigrew's crew seemed a bit smaller than the one that had left minutes earlier. Said defendants were hustled out as quickly as Lucius was.....but not before Pettigrew saw Harry.

"Potter!" Harry may not have hated Draco, but he certainly hated Wormtail.....he whipped up his wand:

REPUSLAR!

This was the pulse spell Drew had taught him after the Wizard Chess Club meeting last week, and it hit Pettigrew full in the face, knocking him flat on his back.....and relieving him of most of his teeth in the bargain. Before the others could draw a bead on him, Harry gave into most of his latent anger and started running toward the Death Eaters:

REPULSAR! REDUCTO! ABRUMPERE!

This rush wasn't as suicidal as one might think from hearing about it. He blasted a path right through the middle of the Death Eaters, and cut them into two groups. Fred, George, and Hermione quickly followed suit, mostly using Reducto and Confundo, as the four of them were now in the hallway outside the courtroom.....though the room now had just one wall remaining (the Wizengamot wall on the east). Ginny and company broke free of Hagrid and started attacking.

Now the Death Eaters were taking fire from three sides: Harry and his threesome to the west of them.....Bones and Rufus on the east side, and the rest of them to the south, with Ginny and Neville in the front behind what was left of the rubble pile. The good guys still weren't using Avada Kedavra, except for Rufus and Bones, but the bad folk weren't hitting as often as they were before. Plus, something to keep in mind, one cannot simply fire of the killing curse like a gun firing off bullets, one had to let their magical energy recharge a bit.....even Voldemort, though he was the most powerful in the room by a decent margin (keep in mind that Harry's magical power is still growing). The non-lethal curses use less energy, and the good guys were starting to gain the advantage back.

Percy and Diggory finally made appearances at this point, they had been hiding amongst the dead Wizengamot, but they joined the battle at last. Percy, who was as adept at Defense as anyone else in his family, attempted to move near his siblings.

Voldemort stood near the north side, effortlessly dodging the efforts of Bones and Rufus, rather enjoying the workout.....this was only his second battle since regaining his corporeal form (after The Department of Mysteries battle that was the point of this day to begin with). The mission could be considered a success, they had retrieved the Death Eaters they came for, and The Ministry was going to be needing some new Aurors pretty quickly. He loosed a few killing curses at Ginny and company just for the hell of it, and decided that enough was enough.

“Retreat! Back to your exits!”

Pettigrew stumbled to his feet, but his mask had been blasted off by Harry's curse.....and Ron started aiming for him.....Ron being one of the few people firing who actually recognized Pettigrew. This got Harry's attention outside the room, and as Wormtail was running away from his former owner, he let loose with a spell he'd studied hard just in case something like this arose.

SE FUNDERE!

He hit Pettigrew's silver hand dead on with the liquefying spell. It was far enough away, and done inexpertly enough, that it didn't totally melt the hand.....but it was now useless. Before Harry could do anything else to him though, he hurried off, his compatriots firing curse after curse at Harry to give him cover.

Voldemort was among the last out of the courtroom, and he saw his old friend Ginny begin to leave the (slight) safety of the rubble pile in order to get to Bones, Rufus, and now Percy. She had her back turned to him for a moment, believing that most of the danger had passed. A thin, cruel smile alighted the bad man's face as he lazily lifted his wand:

AVADA KEDAVRA!

The spell sped right toward her, and would have hit but for one thing: Someone had seen him about to fire, and that person leapt and managed to tackle Ginny out of the way.....taking the full brunt of the killing curse right in the back. Ron and Neville lead a firestorm of curses Voldemort's way, but he put up a shield and just as lazily blocked them, satisfied that his killing curse had gotten someone. He finally left the room, striding away confidently, his bodyguards hurrying along behind him. Ron ran around the makeshift wall, with Neville and Luna close behind, and sprinted up to his sister.

Ginny lay on her back, with a now dead body lying on top of her. Ron was the first to reach her, but he already knew the identity of her savior before flipping him over.....because of the hair.

It was Percy.

"Oh God, oh my God, Percy!" This was Molly, who had witnessed the whole scene and now rushed up to her children.....well all but Fred and George, who were busy avoiding death out in the hallway area. Ron helped his sister to her feet, and then knelt by his brother, who was being cradled by his mother.

"Percy.....I'm sorry man. I'm sure you'll fit right in with Sirius, James, and Lily up there." Bill touched his shoulder, though moved by the sentiment, of which he quite agreed.

"C'mon guys, the others are still out there, we have to help them." Ron nodded, and he, Neville, Luna, and Ginny followed Bill out the door, holding down their grief for their wayward brother and friend.....though Molly wouldn't let go of him, with Arthur holding on to her from behind.

Harry, Hermione, and the twins were about 15 meters away, having been herded there by Death Eater fire. They were the first courtroom people out there, though they could hear Aurors in the distance, fighting Death Eaters that had been performing rearguard duties. Harry knew, not so deep down, that he probably should just let them leave, and not risk his friends' lives any longer....or his own for that matter. He just couldn't though, he felt he had to make this as painful a victory for them as he could.

As the next to last wave of the Death Eaters came by, he swung around his corner and charged them.

REPULSAR! REPULSAR! ABRUMPERE!

He was running somewhat low on energy, so he used the pulse spell as his primary weapon, it using relatively little magical power to fire. The twins and Hermione, not wanting Harry to go down just yet, came around a few beats later and had his back. Their salvo pretty much wiped out the group of Death Eaters they were fighting.....but there was one more group coming.

Voldemort heard the fighting from behind the last corner, knowing this was his only line of retreat (he had four Death Eaters with him). He turned to them:

“Take out that wall, explode it outward.” The five of them took aim:

ABRUMPERE! ABRUMPERE! ABRUMPERE! ABRUMPERE!
ABRUMPERE!

The massed spells did their job, and the wall was turned into a ball-bearing-less claymore mine.....and it did it's damage:

WHAM!

Harry was caught square in the ribs and the back of the head, with a follow up explosion spell glancing off his left leg, while the twins somewhat shielded Hermione, taking the brunt of it in their backs. The shock wave knocked all four of them down, and the twins pretty much unconscious. Voldemort rounded the corner with his crew, and

Harry managed a weak Reducto at the first Death Eater.....but it hit right, nailing him in the head and putting him down (though he would live). Hermione struggled to get out from under the twins, and was helped up.....

By Voldemort.....who hauled her to her feet, his left arm around her neck, his wand at her head, hers on the ground next to her. He looked at Harry with grudging respect, not hatred.

“I have to admit Harry, you’re good. You’re every bit the fighter I’ve been hearing about and more. If I didn’t need to kill you I’d shake your hand.” Harry’s marbles were a little wobbly, but he managed to clear his head enough to reply.

“Likewise Tom, if you weren’t the Anti-Christ I’d almost admire your little plan here.”

The other three Death Eaters had levitated their injured colleague, and were anxiously awaiting Voldemort coming along.....though they stopped short of actually saying anything.

“So what should I do with your mudblood friend here? Kill her? Maybe I should take her with us, do some experimenting. After all, I’ve heard so much about her from Wormtail.” And Draco too, though Voldemort didn’t prefer to mention this. Harry was half sitting, half laying on the floor, and raised his right arm a little bit.....but stopped when Tom dug his wand into Hermione’s cheek, his other arm was slowly choking her.

“I don’t think so Harry. This isn’t one of those muggle films where the hero saves the girl. They force fed us those at the orphanage.....I so hated them. Put your wand down, and I won’t torture your friend. I’ll just kill her outright.” Harry surprised all three of them (including Hermione) by laying his wand hand on the ground, though he didn’t let go of it. Hermione’s eyes got very big.

“Thanks Harry.....Avada.....”

As soon as Voldemort said Harry, the young man in question raised his left hand.....the empty one, seemingly in a spasm of pain from one of his many injuries. Praying this would work, he mumbled:

Accio Wand

This was still the only wandless spell that Harry had a true handle on.....and it worked perfectly. Voldemort's wand flew effortlessly into Harry's left hand, and Harry used most of his energy for one last salvo with both wands:

REPULSAR!

The pulse spell grazed the top of Voldemort's head, simultaneously with Hermione kicking back with her heel, connecting with his ankle. Neither of these things knocked him down, and he retained enough of his faculties to throw up a wandless shield as Hermione (who was the least injured of the four friends) tried to curse him. Fred and George had been faking a little bit, and sent a few curses toward Voldemort's henchmen, and then put up shields that protected them and Harry from the non-killing curses that came back.....though not many did, as the bad man and his boys finally retreated. Within a minute or so, Harry's scar stopped tingling, signaling that his enemy was far away.....he had the connection controlled to the point that Voldemort's emotional state did not impact him very much.

Harry sat back against the wall.....right next to the space of wall whose parts had injured him. He put a hand to his head, and saw blood, though it wasn't gushing. He knew his left leg was broken, and probably at least four or five ribs. His head was still swimming a bit, but he summoned some strength from Merlin knows where.

"Dobby!"

The little elf popped in.....and almost had a heart attack when he saw Harry.

"Oh my, Harry, we must get you to a hospital....." Harry interrupted him, though he quite agreed with the sentiment.

“I have something more important for you Dobby. Take this wand, put it in my invisibility cloak inside the trunk. No one is to know about it, got it? Not even Sophie. Now hurry, I’ll see you in a little while.” He handed Dobby the wand he had captured (so to speak, some might prefer ‘scammed’) from Voldemort. The little fellow disappeared as Hermione rushed over to Harry.

“Oh God Harry, thank you.” She tried to hug him, but stopped when she touched his ribs and he let out a scream. She was about to pull back when he pulled her close.

“Hermione, don’t tell anyone about how I got that wand, or that I even got it at all. Just say I used the quick draw again.”

“What are you talking about?”

“That wand is the mate to mine, I can’t risk it going into circulation again. It’ll be safe in America. Trust me Hermione, I’ll explain it all later.” He kept her close, and they touched heads for a moment.

“Of course I won’t tell Harry.....thank you for saving my life.” This last part was whispered softly.

“I still owe you a few Hermione, I haven’t forgotten. But don’t forget this either: If I was a student at Hogwarts right now.....we’d both be dead.” It was just then that Bill and company came running around the corner. Ron saw his girlfriend and erstwhile best friend with their heads touching (though it was clear they weren’t kissing), and a rage started building within him.....but it was quickly extinguished when Hermione stood up, and he saw the blood drizzling down Harry’s face and the awkward angle of his broken leg. He quickly walked over to Hermione, eyes searching for any outward sign of injury. He didn’t see any.....except for a haunted look in her eyes, and a red mark around her neck.

“Are you okay? Are you hurt?”

“I’m okay Ron, I’m not injured.” He took her in his arms, and Hermione, for the time being anyway, forgot what a prat he had been lately, and just let herself be comforted.

Bill walked up to his brothers, both of them grimacing in pain from their backs, and decided that humor would work best here with these two.

“Still alive eh? Merlin must have a sense of humor.” In bad taste perhaps, considering Percy, but fitting for these two. They got up, wincing, and managed to get Harry to his feet.

“Right Fred, though Voldemort is one ugly bastard.....eh Harry?” Harry started to laugh, only to bring on another half-scream from his ribs, just talking hurt really badly.

“Don’t do that guys, not now.....and yeah, he won’t be put on the Witch Weekly list of eligible bachelors anytime soon.” The three of them stood there, agony on their faces, as Neville and Ginny each put an arm of Harry’s around their shoulders, relieving the twins of the weight.

“Are they all gone Harry?” Bill took one look at Harry’s leg, and conjured some bandages around it.

“They are from here Bill, I don’t know about the rest of the building. What’s happening inside? Where the bloody hell is Dumbledore?”

Speak of the devil, Dumbledore and company came rushing down the hall.....a hall that 30 meters down had bodies that resulted from the pitched battle between Voldemort’s rear guard and the Aurors who hadn’t been assigned to the trial. Bill waited until they got there before delivering his news.

“Harry.....he got Percy.” What? When last Harry saw him, Percy wasn’t even in the fight.....though Harry didn’t need to be told who the ‘he’ was.

“He fired a killing curse at me Harry, Percy pushed me out of the way and took it himself.” Ginny let go of Harry’s arm as it really hit her what had happened.....maybe saying it was the catalyst, who knows. Luna hugged her and tried to comfort her, while Dumbledore looked to be on the verge of tears himself, as Rufus came over from the courtroom, and Travis Biller strode tiredly up from the other battle.

“You want to tell them Dumbledore, or should I?” The old man looked confused.

“Tell them about what Harry?”

“That Percy was your man in Fudge’s office.....that he didn’t turn on his family.” The look on Dumbledore’s face confirmed Harry’s words.....and by looking around, one could tell that even Bill hadn’t known.

“He was what!”

“Yeah he was, Fudge told me at our meeting.....he’d known all along Dumbledore. I would have told you guys before now, but honestly it just slipped my mind.” Fudge knowing about his spy was clearly news to the Headmaster, as Bill was looking at him like he wanted to kill him.

“You let us think he betrayed us?”

“That was Percy’s idea Bill, your mother and father both knew what he was really doing. He wanted it kept secret, and it was his secret to tell you, not mine.” This was the first time Harry had heard Dumbledore make sense in quite a while, and it even took the wind out of Bill and Ron’s sails.....the twins, when not grimacing, didn’t look especially surprised either way, while Ginny was still crying on Luna’s shoulder. Rufus had quietly had one of the house elves on staff get a pain relieving potion for Harry, Fred, and George, who all drank the vials with gratitude. Harry looked hard at his erstwhile mentor.

“Where the hell were you Dumbledore? We sure could have used you 10 minutes ago. What happened at Hogwarts?”

“Werewolves attacked Hogwarts and Hogsmeade. They didn’t kill anyone at Hogwarts, but there were deaths in Hogsmeade, and the town was leveled.”

“So it was a diversion then.” This was Rufus talking, Bones was nowhere in sight.

“So it would seem. How many are dead here?” Biller answered for his part.

“15 on our end, and we had the entire available cadre battling it out. They had up some kind of barrier that wouldn’t let us get in. Once we did, we got about a dozen of them before they retreated.”

“Do we know how they got in Travis?”

“Not yet, but I’ve got people investigating it. We have another 10 or so injured, they’ve already been evacuated to St. Mungo’s.....speaking of the hospital.....we should probably get you there Harry.”

“They’ll patch me up at school.....how many did we lose in the courtroom Mr. Scrimgeour?”

“About 30 or so, including all the Aurors and eight members of the Wizengamot.....the non-traitors that is.” For the benefit of Dumbledore, Biller, and the others, Rufus took a moment to describe how the festivities in the courtroom had kicked off.

“You were a big help in there Harry, you inspired a lot of people to fight. Thank you.”

“Just doing my civic duty sir.” Harry was having trouble fathoming why no one was asking him about Voldemort.....but he wasn’t looking a gift horse in the mouth.....until now, as Dumbledore turned to him, and asked gently.

“How did you acquire your injuries Harry?” Harry winced in pain as he waved his hand at the destruction around him, his pain was now just manageable, but by no means gone.

“You see the wall here, any other smart questions?” The old man sighed.

“There has been enough conflict today Harry, do we need to add to it?” That blasé word choice almost set Harry off, and he was wondering whether he had enough juice left for one more curse. The rest of them looked fairly appalled as well, with the twins in particular fixing their former Headmaster with incredulous looks.

“Conflict! Conflict! Well we spent our afternoon time a bit differently than you did! While you got suckered into a fool’s errand back at the homestead, we had to fight off a few dozen Death Eaters, who were quite intent on killing us! I just had to kill at least six people Dumbledore, and let me tell you that I’m not happy about it. Now while it was lovely to see you as always, I need to be going. Neville, Hermione, will you help me into the courtroom so I can pay my condolences to Molly and Arthur?” They both nodded, and Hermione disengaged herself from Ron and put Harry’s other arm around her shoulder. Ron took a deep breath.

“No Hermione, I’ll help him.” He and Harry shared a look of understanding, as he took his girlfriend’s place, and the two young men acted as a set of living crutches for Harry, as they slowly made their way back to the shambles that was the courtroom, Fred and George gingerly following. Ginny, Luna, Hermione walked ahead, clearing the path, though there were only a few bodies to step over. Along the way, Ron had something to say to Harry.

“Thanks for saving her Harry, she says she owes you her life.” Given Ron’s jealousy lately, Harry was mildly surprised that he wasn’t fuming that he himself couldn’t save her.....but Ron seemed strangely subdued. Harry wondered if maybe Hermione had finally given him an ultimatum over lunch or something.

“You’re welcome Ron, I would never let anything happen to her.”

“Oh yeah, I didn’t give you up to Witch Weekly mate, I didn’t even know half that stuff.”

“Yeah, I never really thought you had, I was just a little pissed. Sorry about that.”

“Something I’m wondering. Bill told us that you don’t believe in the Prophecy, but you told us earlier that you agree you’ll have to have a showdown with Voldemort eventually.....what gives?” An inherent contradiction that was, and Harry was impressed that Ron had caught it.

“I don’t believe the Prophecy Ron, but Voldemort does, even if he doesn’t know all the particulars. He’ll force things until I have no choice but to really duel him.....what just happened doesn’t count. Give me another year or so with Ripley and my outside reading, and I’ll be ready.”

They hobbled into the courtroom to find that very few people had left (though Draco and Narcissa had exited the building), and many were gathered around Molly and Arthur.....neither of whom would let go of Percy.

“I’m so sorry, I don’t know what to say.” Molly looked up, tears still streaming down her face as she saw the mess that her surrogate son was, with her twins looking a bit worse for wear too. She leapt up and gave Fred and George a crushing hug.

“I’m so glad you two are okay, you were so brave, both of you.” The twins squeezed her back, it felt good to be alive. She made a move to hug Harry too, but he managed to stop her.

“Can we take a rain check on that hug Molly? I have a few ribs that need attention first.”

“Of course Harry dear.....oh my, your leg.....and all that blood.”

“Well I used the explosion spell quite a lot, it's only fitting that I got hit with the effects too. I am so sorry about Percy.....he died a hero though, he saved Ginny. If that's how I go, saving someone I love.....well I could handle that.” Arthur had his arms around Fred and George now. Harry looked around the room, as people from St. Mungo's entered, to handle the bodies. The injured had already been taken out, a relative few there were anyway.

“Hey, where did Fudge wind up getting to?” This was answered by Rufus, as he, Dumbledore, and Biller were just now entering the room.....having had a private chat.

“Good question, Amelia is beating the bushes, looking for him right now. Very curious his behavior.....then again, the man redefines the term 'curious'.” Rufus and Fudge had long been allies of expediency, neither caring for the other, but needing the other to advance. Dumbledore looked at Harry, and decided that his questions were worth the risk of antagonizing him.

“Harry, what happened with Voldemort? Did he confront you?”

“Yes, and I told him all about the Prophecy.” Harry wasn't so tired that he didn't appreciate the look on the old man's face. Hermione actually let out a laugh hearing that, which told Dumbledore that it was a joke.

“That was in very poor taste Harry. What happened?”

“My taste and yours don't need to match old man, as I'm not a student at your school any longer....surely you got the issue of The Chronicle I sent you? As for He Who Is a Git.....we had words, and I hit him with a Pulse spell when he wasn't expecting it. You old codgers, always underestimating me, pretty pathetic really.” The room was silent now, as Harry's insults hit home, much to the amusement of pretty much every Weasley especially.....and Luna, who let out a loud giggle. Harry felt a tickle on his defenses, and managed to raise his mental shields up.....but he knew they wouldn't last for long, as tired as he was. He had to get out of here.

“Mr. Scrimgeour, Dumbledore is trying to use Leglimency on me.....I am holding you to your oath.....as I am you Remus (Tonks was helping out at St. Mungo's).” Both Rufus and Lupin looked at each other, and proceeded to raise their wands on Dumbledore. Rufus speaking first.

“Get out of his mind Albus, now. I swore an oath.”

“Don't try it Albus, we won't allow it. I swore an oath.” The tickling subsided, as Dumbledore relented. Harry knew it was pointless for the most part, the Headmaster would just get it from Hermione, who had absolutely no training in Occlumency.....or powerful wizards to intervene on her behalf at school. Still, the more off balance he could keep him, the better.

“No, I did not tell that fool the Prophecy. No, I did not kill him, nor he I. Yes, the explosion spells he and his boys used kind of racked the twins and I up. Yes, I'm going back to school now, its breakfast time there and I'm so hungry I could kill.....some more.....for some pancakes. Mr. Scrimgeour, is it okay if Travis comes over there to debrief me?” This did not seem to satisfy Dumbledore, but Rufus seemed to agree, and Biller was nodding as well.

“I don't see that being a problem. George, Fred, you can take him to my office and use the floo from there to get into portkey territory.” The twins looked a bit confused about where to go, so Remus intervened.

“I'll show you guys where it is. Come on.” Harry hugged the women one last time, and shook hands with the men.....his clasp with Ron lasting the longest. With one last look of respect at Percy, he said his goodbyes.

“I'll see you all next summer sometime.” The foursome left, as the others prepared for their journeys back to home and school. Rufus' office was one floor up, and Remus levitated Harry up the stairs. They got to the office, and the three younger men prepared to floo.....and Harry decided to mend a fence (and prevent someone from blabbing about the new Map, soon to be completed).

“Remus, Voldemort was trying to recruit the vampires in America to spy on me.....and maybe do a snatch. That’s what the letter was about.” Remus was rarely surprised by Harry’s statements any more.....and this almost, but not quite, was a rarely.

“I’m guessing they said no.”

“You guess correct, sort of. They’re pretending to go along with it, to see what information we can glean. The American Aurors are running this with the Kindred leader I met. So what I told you earlier was technically correct, sort of.”

“Thanks for telling me.....I was half wondering if Voldemort was trying to recruit you in that letter.” The thought had occurred to Harry more than once over the months as well.

“Don’t tell the old man, he’ll tell Snape and Voldemort will know we’re playing him within hours.”

“Don’t worry, I won’t tell him. I agree, he’s too close to Snape for our comfort.”

“Oh yeah, I almost forgot.....Sloper and Cho leading the DA? Have you people gone crazy?”

“They are Head Boy and Girl Harry, and they’re tops in the seventh year in Defense.”

“Oh, like that’s saying a whole lot. Neither of them have risked what Hermione and the others have. Did you at least go to bat for them?”

“I tried until I was blue in the face, but it was no use. Dumbledore doesn’t want Ron and Hermione to be focal points in the school any longer. Besides, you and I both know that neither of them are leaders, nor is Neville quite yet. Ginny and Luna are too young, even in my opinion, even if Luna wasn't a little 'off'. Sloper and Chang won't wreck anything, and that's all we can hope for right now."

"I suppose so, but watch them like a hawk Remus. Anyway, I should get out of here."

"Be good Harry, talk to you soon."

"Take care Remus." The twins went first into the floo, to make sure that there were no 'guests' waiting for them when they got there. There weren't any, and Harry tumbled through, probably breaking another rib in the process, as he landed painfully on his bad leg as well. Fred conjured him up a cane for the little walking he would have to do. Harry had Winky come fetch the spell grenades, while he braved another trip through the trunk floo. Before that though:

"I owe you guys, big time. You had my back yet again, I won't ever forget that....I promise."

"Don't mention it mate, we wouldn't have it any other way." The three shared a moment, full of exhaustion.....and yet exhilaration at the same time, since they had fought their blood enemies and survived to tell the tale.

Harry emerged in his trunk to the anxious stares of Dobby and Winky.

"Dobby, is the wand where I want it?"

"Yes Harry, it's in the third drawer of the dresser."

"Good, now help me up to the room guys." Dobby went up to open the trunk lid, and Winky slowly elevated him to the top. Once up there, Harry told them that he wanted to go to the Dining Hall first.....he really wasn't hungry, that was just crap he threw at Dumbledore.....but he wanted to see Sophie before he went off to the med station. Dobby and Winky got him down to the main floor (the med station was in the basement, so it wasn't much further to go). He used his conjured up cane to hobble over to the Dining Hall.

Flashback five minutes to Great Lakes Dining Hall

Joanne Murray wore a troubled face as she walked in the Hall for breakfast. She was a bit later than usual, which was noteworthy for her.....and the expression on her face drew many looks from students and faculty alike. She whispered to Heyman for a moment, and then approached the table that held Sophie and her friends, which was their usual table near the door.

“Could you kids come with me for a moment.” They all froze in their chairs, this could only mean one thing: Harry. Murray said nothing, but motioned for Drew, Rick, and Terry to come with her and Heyman as well.....she felt Harry’s roommates should be told, and she had noticed Drew and Harry starting to become friends. They gathered in the hallway, eight teenagers and the two heads of the school.

“I don’t know another way to say this, so I’ll just say it. I just received a communication that the British Ministry of Magic was attacked by Dark Wizards.” The silence was thick in the hallway, as the kids tried to process this.

“Harry?”

“I don’t know Sophie, all I know is that it’s over now, and there are apparently a lot of casualties. Our government has a liaison inside their Ministry building, and he reported it to Boston a few minutes ago. They flooded me because Harry is one of us now, but no mention was made of him either way.”

“They have enough Dark Wizards to invade their government like that?” That was Jonas, but Claudia is the one who answered him.

“C’mon Jonas, we’ve all heard Harry mocking the quality of Defense teaching he’s gotten, and from what he says it goes back longer than that. How good could their Aurors be, with instruction that bad?” Murray was one of those instructors, albeit for just a year (1988-89 school year).....but she had to agree.

“When will we know ma’am?” This was the question wasn’t it?

“I don’t know Warrick, I don’t know.” Sophie looked worried, but she knew how much reading Harry had done, and she believed in him.

“He’ll be all right, if anyone can handle themselves in a battle it’s Harry.” Everyone looked at Sophie sympathetically, and Reiko grabbed her hand.

“I’ll be returning to my office after breakfast, I’ll see if there’s any further word. If that happens, you’ll all be notified immediately.” She didn’t tell them to keep this quiet, but all of them silently agreed to anyway. They went back inside, and ignored the looks and questions from their schoolmates.....who had easily noted the composition of the group, and surmised its purpose. Sophie and her friends picked at their meals in silence for a few moments, before they heard the kind of loud click of a wooden cane on the floor. They turned to look, and Reiko let out a little scream:

Bloody, hurting, with a bandage tight around his broken leg.....there stood Harry, with Dobby and Winky looking worried behind him.

“I think I need some medical attention.” Sophie leapt up and rushed over to him, and Harry had to yet again stop someone he cared about from hugging him.

“Ah, not so fast Sophie, I’ve got a side full of busted ribs, and a pain relieving potion that’s rapidly wearing off.” He directed her to his ‘good’ side, and she lightly squeezed him as the others came up. Claudia asked the obvious.

“What happened?”

“Quite a bit Claudia, it was a very interesting day over there.” Murray and what seemed like the entire faculty streamed over.

“Come on Harry, let’s get you to the med station.....and I believe you were already excused from class this morning. Questions, and I have a few hundred just for myself, can wait until you’re patched up.”

It was only now that Harry's strength finally gave out, as his good leg buckled and he started to collapse.....but Sophie hung on, and Warrick (who isn't small remember) managed to catch him before he hit the floor. Harry was still conscious mind you, but he was simply exhausted from the day's events.....and it still was only 2:20 in Great Britain, whose time he was still on.

Murray used Mobilocorpus to transport him downstairs to the med station, while Heyman strode quickly ahead to summon the doctor via the floo. Within minutes Harry was laying on an examining table, as Dr. John Carter began his examination, with Nurse Meryl Burbank assisting him. Harry had met both of them on his initial tour with Sophie, but had not had cause to use their services.

Great Lakes did not have a doctor and/or nurse just for them, rather they shared theirs with Salem. 36 year old John Carter had both muggle and Wizard medical training, and had been taking care of the 700 or so students of the two schools for four years now. He was based at Salem for his living quarters, while the 32 year old Burbank lived at Great Lakes, but with the floo, Carter was seconds away in case of an emergency.

Carter flashed his wand a few times, and a 3-D image of Harry rose above him, highlighting his skeleton and organs. Harry's injuries were fairly obvious to even an untrained observer.....who were all of them but four (Murray and Ripley had been injured more than once during their Auror tenures).

"Harry, you still with me? (he got a tired nod). Okay, you have one break and one fracture in your left femur, and you have five broken ribs on the left side, and two more that are cracked. You have no organ damage, and no head trauma other than a nice sized cut and a little blood loss. None of your injuries are permanent or life threatening, you have nothing to worry about okay?"

"Gotcha Dr. Carter."

"Good, now I'm going to give you some potions to speed the healing process. Your leg should be back to normal in a day or so, your ribs sometime tonight. The cut will heal within an hour or so, and rest will replace the blood loss. The potions do not make you sleepy though, actually they tend to keep you awake more than anything. I want you to stay here the rest of the day and relax. You've obviously expended a lot of magical energy, and you need to recharge. Any questions?"

"Please tell the potions won't make me gag."

"No, but they're not Coke either, so don't expect to want to drink more than you need to. I'll stick around for awhile to make sure no complications occur."

"Thanks Dr. Carter. Professor Murray, a British Auror named Travis Biller will be around at some point to debrief me on my role over there."

"I know Travis, we'll make sure he gets down here to see you. I guess you can figure we're all curious about what happened over there."

"It's a long story ma'am, how about we wait until Travis gets here, that way I only have to relive it one time today." Murray decided that her curiosity could wait a few hours.

"Sounds like a plan. Okay everyone, off to class with you. Sophie, you can remain if you like, I'm sure Dobby and Winky can get your books when Harry goes to sleep."

"Um, Professor Murray?"

"Yes Harry?"

"I might have done something a bit rash earlier.....no, it's not what you're thinking, hear me out. I was doing some bragging on the school here, before the trial started, and how much I've learned and all.....and I told my friends that if any of them wanted to transfer here, I'd pay their fees." Murray had a smile creep across her face, it was kind of cute she thought.

“Did any of them take you up on it?”

“Well Ginny looked like she wanted to talk about it, and if stuff hadn’t come apart later on I think I would have gotten an interrogation. I think Hermione might think about it as well, she’s pretty fascinated with me taking Wandless Magic, and that alone might get her to want to come over here.”

“Hermione is the brain amongst your group there, am I remembering correctly?”

“Yes ma’am, she was one spot ahead of me in the rankings after OWL’s.”

“Well don’t tell them in advance, but I don’t think they would have anything to worry about if they want to come here.”

“Thank you ma’am. Oh, one more thing.....try and get Professor Kinsella here if he’s willing, stuff I learned in his class played a part.”

Murray agreed to floo Kinsella, with a curious look on her face.....she really wanted to know the story now. The group trickled off, with Wash promising Harry he’d come by that evening to tell him what went on in class. Burbank flooded over to Salem to keep an eye on things there, while Carter, after seeing Harry chug the first of his battery of healing potions, went into his office to do some paperwork. Sophie and Harry were alone now (with the elves hovering as well). She squeezed his hand, and kissed it.

“Are you in a lot of pain Harry?”

“A little, the potions are doing their job pretty well. Oh yeah, I’m sorry I didn’t contact you, but I had a good excuse.” He pulled some of the remains of his mirror out of his pants pocket. It had been in his robes when the explosion spell pretty well ruined it. Sophie hadn’t even thought of the mirrors, so happy she was that he was okay.

“Was anyone.....I mean.....”

“Percy died Sophie, Voldemort was aiming for Ginny and he pushed her out of the way. He’s the only one I really knew that died.” Sophie had never had anyone close to her die, all her close relatives (including grandparents) were still living.....even if she was disowned, she got family updates from her brothers.

“Oh my God.....did you see it?”

“No, I was in the hallway fighting a bunch of them off. Voldemort and I had our little thing a few minutes later.”

“You dueled him?”

“Not really, he and four goons fired the explosion spells that got me like this. The twins got pretty roughed up too, I hope they’re at St. Mungo’s right now. Voldemort was about to kill Hermione, and I summoned his wand.....with my left hand.” Sophie’s eyes got big as she heard that, she knew that Harry’s wand arm was his right one.

“You took his wand?”

“Yep, my own plunder from the battle. It’s in the trunk as we speak. Travis will want it when he sees my pensieve memory, but he isn’t getting it.” By now Sophie knew all about the history of the brother wands, she could see why he’d want to hide it.

“They’ll want to examine it I’m sure.”

“They can do a Priori Incantatum here, maybe, if I’m in a good mood. I like Travis though, so I’ll probably let him.” Now on to a pricklier subject:

“Harry.....did you kill anyone?” Said hesitantly.

“Yeah, I got six or seven of them that I’m sure of, I’m not sure about any injured. They were doing their best to kill me Sophie, it was dog eat dog in there.” He had a bad feeling about this, but she nixed it quickly.

“I’m not judging Harry, honestly. You did what you had to do. Its just that you’re 16 years old, and you’re being forced to kill people to stay alive.....it’s just hard to fathom for me. I guess I’ve led a sheltered life compared to you over there.”

“Don’t say that like it’s a bad thing Sophie, I’m glad you’re not exposed to what I’ve gone through.....except through my memories. But you’re right, I did what I had to do, and that’s the way it’s going to be from now on. I’m tired of having my life threatened on a constant basis, so anyone trying to harm me with a wand is going to get it back in spades. I figure if I kill enough of them, word will get out that I’m not to be trifled with. I won’t seek anyone out, I promise you that much. I won’t be a vigilante, but if they come here looking for trouble I’ll make sure that they find it.” This was so cold, Sophie thought, but she could understand it. She didn’t look at Harry any differently after hearing that, she just felt sad that it was necessary for him to feel that way.

“Will they come over here to try and get you? I know we’ve speculated on it.....”

“Nah, the Kindred thing is as close as they dare. Tonks told the Order that she’d never seen so many defense mechanisms on a building, and that was just from what she could see on the way in. I almost hope he’s dumb enough to try, Voldemort, it would be a good way to wipe him and his henchman out.”

“I knew we were well guarded, but only the faculty and the government really know how tight our defenses are.”

“Eh, he won’t come over. I’m sure if I’d skipped the trial he still would have done what he did. He seemed to come upon me almost by accident.” Sophie had a ton more questions, but she decided to wait until Biller got there. They talked about other things for a bit, Sophie still tightly gripping his hand, wanting the reassurance of his touch, and then had Dobby bring their books so that they could get some studying done. Right after Dobby left, Harry remembered to tell her something.

“Oh yeah, the twins have perfected the spell grenades. I have a box of them back in the trunk.” Sophie’s face lit up.

“So we should have the Map done this week then.”

“If I wasn’t in here tonight, I’d say we could get it done by tomorrow.....but this weekend is good enough. We’ll need to make sure it works for the Map spell, but they seem to think that it will.” Dobby came back in with Sophie’s Runes materials, and Harry’s Muggle Studies notes.

“Dobby, go get one of those balls that Winky brought back from the shop will you, and the new Map we’ve been working on.” Dobby popped off, and came back in a few seconds.

“A racquetball?” Harry shrugged, he had never played it.

“It was the twins, who knows where they get their ideas. Try the spell out, see if it works.” She took the ball, walked out of the room, and pointed her wand at it.

Exostra Zotheca a Tabula

She then threw the ball into the room, and it bounced around for five seconds before disappearing. Sophie followed it in, and looked at her boyfriend expectantly. Harry looked at the Map, and the med station was now active, with three dots representing himself, Sophie, and Dr. Carter (the Map did not show house elves, otherwise there would be no room for anyone else).

“Bingo. It works, more brownie points for the twins.” He then explained the limitations of the balls, and in fact Sophie was silently relieved that they were somewhat limited.

“This should be a big seller for pranks.”

“I would give quite a bit to see the look on Filch’s face if he ever figures them out, I almost feel sorry for him in advance.....almost.”

They skipped their books and started plotting strategies to get into the most rooms in the quickest period of time. They had both Dobby and Winky, so they decided to have a pair of three person teams to do it. The couple also talked about pranking targets, and easily decided that Joe Clancy (who Sophie disliked almost as much as Warrick and Reiko did) would be the focus of some attention this coming weekend.

Still, work did intrude, and after Harry guzzled another pair of potions, they got to their homework. This was lecture week in Muggle Studies, so Harry caught up on his reading and prepared for what Ziegler would be covering the next morning (this week it would be the 1860 Presidential Election). After lunch, Biller still hadn't shown yet, so Harry convinced Sophie to go to her Runes class (he had no classes on Monday afternoons himself), if only to get her out of her chair for a couple of hours. She went though, after making him promise up and down that he would not leave the med station. He readily agreed, and somehow managed to fall asleep for a couple of hours, before being woken by Carter to take his last batch of potions. By this time, his ribs were feeling a lot better, the cut on his head had healed nicely, and he was able to use the cane well enough to get to the bathroom and back.

Sophie came back after class, and they again just chatted comfortably as the others trickled in. The other four reacted much as Sophie did to the spell grenades, and they readily signed on to the three person teams.....and to some attention to be paid to Joe Clancy.

"Oh man, I can't wait for that, five long years of suffering to be revenged." Harry shook his head with a smile.

"If only you were going to be in on it Warrick."

"What do you mean?" Warrick looked indignant, he had been looking forward to pranking Clancy since the minute he'd found out about the Map and it's possibilities.

"It means that when we prank him, you're going to be in the library studying, with multiple witnesses to attest to it." Ahhhh.

“Plausible deniability, I get it. I probably would be the first person Heyman would suspect. Just make sure it’s worth it buddy, I want him to suffer a bit.”

“Well he won’t be coming in here afterwards, but I have some ideas of what to do.” He ran a couple of them by the group, and after a suggestion or two, it was agreed that when the opportunity presented itself, Mr. Clancy would be paid a visit of a sort. Shortly thereafter, Dr. Carter came through the floo and gave Harry another examination, and pronounced him to be doing well.

“If you want to go upstairs for dinner, go ahead, but I want you to spend the night here. I’ll give you another look-see in the morning, and then we can probably send you off to class.”

“I have Muggle Studies first tomorrow, nothing with my wand until Defense in the afternoon.”

“All the better, though I’m sure Professor Ripley won’t tax you too much after what you went through today. Now go eat, be back here afterward.” The seven of them (Drew had joined them a few minutes earlier) went upstairs for Harry’s fourth meal of the day (he and the twins grabbed breakfast on the way to the trial). Harry was still feeling a bit time-lagged, but the nap had helped him immensely. Harry spent a lot of the meal politely dodging questions about what had happened from other students, his standard line came to be ‘it was quite a day’. Afterward, they set up studying shop in the med station, only to be interrupted around 7 pm by Murray....and friends.

One of the friends was Travis Biller, who was at the tail end of a long, bad day. Accompanying him was Michael Jacobson, a 54 year old American who the head of Auror Command in Boston. Murray also had with her what seemed to be every one of Harry’s teachers (plus Lyman), and Rick and Terry as well. This was going to be a group session it seemed, but like Harry had wanted, he would only have to tell the story once.

“Hi there Harry, how’re you feeling?”

“Getting better by the hour Travis, how’re things back there?” A complex look washed across Biller’s face.

“It’s complicated Harry, very complicated. This is Michael Jacobson, he’s the head Auror here in the U.S. We’re all about sharing information nowadays, and better for the American government to hear about things firsthand than through The Daily Prophet.” Harry and Jacobson shook hands, and exchanged polite greetings.

“Now first things first.....you asked this afternoon about Fudge.” Harry could only glean one meaning from this statement.

“He was killed? The rearguard got him?”

“If wishing made it so Harry.....the Death Eaters got in and out through his office.” Harry put a finger in his ear and wiggled it around.

“No way did I hear that right. I could have sworn you said they got in through Fudge’s office.”

“Well then your hearing wasn’t damaged along with your leg and ribs. We have incontrovertible evidence, and Fudge has disappeared to boot.....along with three million galleons of Ministry money, done very skillfully over the last three years.” Dead silence in the room, as everyone took this in. Sophie looked at Harry’s reaction and was fairly chilled by it.....he was just shaking his head sadly. He wasn’t mad, wasn’t surprised.

“So he’s been a Death Eater all along.”

“Not necessarily. We do have people inside Voldemort’s operation willing to sell us information for the right price.....and our main seller told me that Fudge is not with Voldemort right now, and another one of our sources says he’s skipped the country. You yourself proved how easy it can be to do it without attracting attention.”

“Which do you think it is?”

“I tend to think that someone from Voldemort’s gang caught Fudge at his dirty dealing. It might even have been Lucius for all we know. Voldemort has so many pure-blood wealthy Death Eaters at his command that three million galleons wouldn’t mean terribly much to him. They would much rather have Fudge doing them some favors.”

“I can’t imagine that Fudge would be hard to find, aren’t there only so many magical places in the world that he could be?”

“In theory, yes. But Gringotts and its siblings aren’t especially cooperative when it comes to tracking money, and that’s the best way to track someone. As far as they’re concerned, anyone with access to a vault can do what they want with it. And Fudge didn’t take everything, he only skimmed over a period of time, so they don’t really care. As for other means of finding him, we have alerts going out to all governments around the world to be on the lookout for him.....he is rather distinctive looking.”

“But you’re saying that if he’s really careful, he won’t be found?”

“I’m saying that if he’s as careful as he should be, it will take a piece of luck to find him.....and I’m trying to remember the last time our Ministry got that lucky. I think it was when you got that scar, and that was quite awhile ago.” Harry’s hand reflexively touched the scar.

“So who is the new Minister of Magic?”

“Rufus has assumed power.” That was an interesting phrase wasn’t it?

“Assumed? I thought the Wizengamot elected the Minister?”

“No, they can only impeach the Minister, they can’t elect a new one. They only have 22 members remaining, barely enough to have a quorum, though I think it took about ten minutes to impeach Fudge. The next in line is the Head of the Wizengamot, then the head of the DMLE.....and both Dumbledore and Bones declined the job. Next is the head Auror, and Rufus felt he had no choice but to take it.

Diggory was next in line, and we certainly don't need him having too much power." Harry had heard rumors through the twins about Amos' erratic behavior over the last two years, particularly around and near the anniversary of his son's death.

"I've heard he never got over Cedric being killed."

"Now, on to another, more painful matter." He waited a beat to see if Harry would guess and save him the trouble, but alas, no dice.

"Harry, Snape has left his home and gone off to Voldemort." Oh brother, thought Harry.

"Surprise, surprise. Was this a setup by Dumbledore, or was it him showing his colors?"

"Here's what we know: around the time of the Ministry battle, Snape was outside for walk. He's allowed one a day under close supervision from his two Auror guards, the only times he's allowed outside. During that time, his minders were rendered unconscious, and he was gone. The Aurors don't remember a thing, except for waking up to see their prisoner gone, and a Dark Mark hanging over the house. Dumbledore swears up and down that he knows nothing about it, and from the look on his face, I'm tending to agree."

"You can't track his portkey use?"

"He didn't use a portkey to get out, and no one used them to get in. The anti-Apparation wards around the manor are still in place, but much of his Potions equipment is gone. We have his wand under lock and key at The Ministry, so he can't use that.....but we're guessing that he either took a long hike, or someone used muggle transport to pick him and his things up. We'll investigate more, but as you saw, we're a little short on manpower at the moment."

Harry made a silent vow that one day very soon, he would finish the job on Snape once and for all. He couldn't get out of his mind that Dumbledore knew all about this, and it was his way of slipping Snape back into the spy role that the old man believed was so vital to the war effort. He was ruining the day he had just had the guy arrested and not permanently dealt with. Biller watched Harry's face very closely, and said a thankful prayer that he wasn't Snape, he knew what the lad was thinking.....and he never wanted to see that look directed at him.

"Now there will be time for more questions later Harry. I need to see your version of what happened in there. I've seen memories from Arthur, Bones, and Rufus, but I want to see your version." He pulled a small pensieve out of his robes, and Harry began gathering his thoughts. Travis pulled a quill and a pad of paper from another pocket (his robe was charmed to hold a lot more than it looked like it could).

"This isn't a Quick Quote's Quill Harry, don't worry. It will help me take down what I see."

"How far back do you want?"

"Well from what I hear the trial part was pretty boring (he hadn't been there, not being involved in the DOM incident), so begin with when you heard the Hogwarts alarm going off." Harry nodded his understanding. His memory was ready, and he placed it in the pensieve. Biller did the spell that projected it, and the nineteen people surrounding Harry's bed (Carter had wandered in, wanting to see what all the fuss was about) watched what happened during the 20 minutes or so of the battle. Harry himself was getting a lot out of it as well, noticing what others were doing in a way he couldn't before. The memory wasn't half over before he decided that the twins were going to be proxy buying a pensieve for him in the very, very near future. He could hear Travis quietly dictating to the Quill, and Harry was mildly surprised to hear that he was the only one who had really noticed Fudge's behavior.....yes he had looked around while it was happening, but thought that perhaps Bones and Rufus in particular were just keeping things close to the vest. But he saw that they barely even looked at Fudge.

Sophie felt like she was watching a horror movie, but involving people she should know. She spent a few minutes picking out people, since she had only met Fred and George.....but Harry had shown her a few photos, and given descriptions of everyone. She eyed Hermione very closely, and marveled at how realistically Harry had described her to them. She felt a visceral reaction when Harry charged at the Death Eaters, and yet again when the explosion hit that injured him.

The main attraction of the memory, of course, was Voldemort. Everyone was spellbound as he and Harry traded comments.....and then it happened, Harry summoned the wand. To her credit, Sophie had believed him completely, and thus was the only one not shocked. Harry had only included the memory because he had to, it wasn't the situation of choice for him. The memory stopped as he and the twins flooded back to the shop. He made sure his route back here wasn't revealed.....though by now he assumed that Murray suspected something. As the memory disappeared, and Harry placed it back where it belonged, silence filled the room. Biller didn't put his Quill away, but fixed Harry with a stare.

"Where is the wand now Harry?"

"You heard where it was, and don't even think about trying a burglary, it won't work."

"An Anthony Hook trunk eh?"

"Yes, and I'm betting you knew I had the wand already Travis." Biller had a slow smile come across his face.

"Just what makes you think that Harry?"

"Hermione Granger, locked in a school with Albus Dumbledore. I'd bet a galleon that he had her in his office before teatime, and the information five minutes later. Dumbledore's slipping, but he is still pretty thorough on the whole, he wouldn't have passed that chance up." Biller looked suitably impressed.

"Very good deductive reasoning, it makes what I'm to give you in a minute that much easier. Yes, the old man told Rufus and I.....I was named Head Auror by the way.....Dumbledore told us about it, and asked us to try and get it back.” Harry started snickering.

“Oh he did, did he? I’m fairly surprised he didn’t try to come with you and get it himself.”

“Like you said, he’s slipping, but he’s also not an idiot. He knows you would not respond favorably to a request like that from him, or even from me if he were here. All that said, we need to examine that wand Harry. It has immense forensic value, and would probably help solve a few questions we have.” Harry didn’t need to think about this, he wasn’t about to let that wand out of his sight.....well, out of his sight or his trunk.

“No, you can’t take it with you. But you can do your test right here, in front of all of us, if you want to. The wand stays here though, that’s the deal, take it or leave it.” Like I have a choice, thought Biller.

“I’ll take it.....which is what I was going to do anyway. I’ve heard the stories about your wand and his, I don’t want it back in circulation any more than you do.” For those uninitiated, Harry gave a minute long description of the relationship between his wand and Voldemort’s. Wash had a question though:

“What do you mean, back in circulation?” Other heads nodded, like they were thinking the same thing. Travis turned to Harry.

“Harry, would you like to say it?” He wanted to see if the kid was thinking as politically as he thought he might.

“Sure.....there were ten members of the Wizengamot who were traitors.....” Biller interrupted him.

“Eleven Harry, if you want to be technical. We found one dead body with a mask in his pocket, apparently he lost his nerve when the battle started.”

“Good grief (a head shake and a sigh). Anyway, there were eleven traitors there, plus Fudge.....I’m kind of doubting that was all of Voldemort's people inside the Ministry. If any of them can get hold of it, then my little advantage will be gone. I won't take that risk."

"Nor will I. Now we have a deal I take it?"

"You take right. Dobby!" Dobby appeared next to him.

"Dobby, please go get the wand I have hidden." Dobby had this 'are you sure' look on his face, but Harry nodded to him that it was okay. He reappeared a moment later, with the wand in his hand, which at Harry's direction, he gave to Biller.

Travis took 20 minutes to do his tests, and the results left a lot of the people present sick to their stomachs, though they wouldn't have missed this for the world.. It had been two years plus since Voldemort's 'rebirth', and he had been a busy beaver. Sophie stopped counting the Avada Kedavras at around 50, and Crucio was probably quadruple that. Biller never stopped talking quietly into his Quill, and Harry suspected that the Biller generated pensieve memory of this would be a well watched thing at the Ministry tomorrow. Travis stopped it after seeing Harry's duel with the bad man in the cemetery. He leaned back in his chair and closed his eyes for a moment.

"Long day for you Travis."

"Yes it has been Harry, and it's not over yet. There's still things to do when I get home. I doubt I'll be going to bed anytime soon." He took an envelope out of his pocket, and tossed it to Harry.

"Rufus is in the process of reactivating The Dark Force Defense League. That envelope contains a formal invitation to join, as well as details on when the next meeting is to be held. If you want to do it, just have one of your elves deliver an acknowledgement to him." Harry had long heard rumors about the League, and Lockhart during second year had bragged about being an honorary member, but otherwise he didn't know anything concrete about it.

"What exactly is the Dark Force Defense League, and why hasn't it been reactivated before now?"

“The Dark Force Defense League is made up of all current and former Aurors, all Hogwarts teachers who teach wand classes, and every member of the Wizengamot, along with other invited members.....of which you can be one if you accept the invite. The other invited members include most of the richer wizards and witches in the country, most of whom just want to be able to say they’re in the League. Obviously the League is much smaller than it would have been this morning, what with losing 18 members of the Wizengamot and 34 Aurors.”

“So the League will be taking a lot of responsibilities that Aurors usually do?”

“To a point, though I think having an Auror as Minister will help a lot of things. It’s mainly there for public relations, to assure the public at large that they’re protected.....even if they’re not. We need to recruit more Aurors pretty heavily of course, and we can expect a lot of foreign born Aurors next year when the schools graduate their seventh year classes.....Joanne, you can expect to see me again come Spring.”

“You’ll be welcome of course.....though I don’t know what kind of response you’ll get.” Biller had an ironic smile.

“It will be an adventure I’m sure. Harry, do you have any other questions?”

“How well do Rufus and Dumbledore get along?”

“They have a détente going, but they’ve never been close. They had a few dustups when Rufus was Head Boy back in the day, but it never degenerated down to the level where you and the old man are at.” Travis stifled a yawn, he was exhausted, but wanted to finish his point. He wondered at doing it in front of such a large group of people.....but decided to hell with it, only Harry would probably ever set foot in Britain to bother him about it, unless he married the young woman who had his hand in a vise-grip.

“You see, Rufus has a hold over Dumbledore now that’s going to be very tempting: All it takes is for two Wizengamot members to resign or not show up, and they’ll have lost their quorum, and it’s the Minister who appoints new members, in consultation.”

“So Rufus gets hold of two members and effectively hamstring the Wizengamot.”

“I’m not saying he’ll do it mind you, but he can if he feels the need. Rufus has always been more of a politician than a soldier, which is how he’s risen so fast in the ranks. He has a year and a half before the next election to consolidate power, and we’ve long been speculating that he would have run against Fudge anyway.”

“Well if he can screw Dumbledore so badly, why didn’t he just take the Minister position himself to prevent it.”

“Because Dumbledore wants to believe the best of people Harry, and while it would occur to him that someone would do that, he’ll assume that they won’t. It’s probably why he put up with Snape as long as he did, and why he hasn’t given up on fixing things with you yet.....even if he doesn’t really think he’s done anything wrong visa vi you. That said, he’ll forgive you if you ever came back, because that’s what he most wants. It’s one of his greatest strengths, yet at the same time an exploitable weakness.” That theory, which had never really occurred to Harry, slammed a lot of things into place for him. It explained so much, especially about the Dursleys.....he’d always assumed some kind of family connection or blackmail in regards to Snape.

“Will you let me know if Snape surfaces in Voldemort’s camp?” He assumed that he would, but there was always the off chance that the bad man might have wanted to just torture and kill Snape.....a thought that put a warm feeling in Harry for a brief moment.

“Not a problem.” He looked around at the crowd, which was hanging on every word.

“If you folks could excuse us for a moment, there are some things I want to talk over with Harry in private.....and I hope you won't go blabbing about my quorum theory.” Everyone seemed to agree not to, and they slowly filed out. Warrick and company said that they'd be back later, the rest said they'd see him at breakfast the next day. Sophie refused to leave however, and Biller did not make an issue out of her presence.....figuring it would do no good anyway.

“Harry, what are your short term plans here? Are you coming back anytime soon?” So that's why he wanted people to leave.

“Not a chance, my reasons for leaving are just as valid as they have ever been. Dumbledore could handle this if he really wanted to. It makes me nauseous to say this, but he should have become Minister, then prosecuted the war.” Biller didn't look like he disagreed, but pressed on.

“Not a chance eh? Then don't accept the invitation to join the League.”

“Why not?”

“It's a trap, by both Rufus and Dumbledore.....who is the head of the League, if I didn't tell you. They want to have excuses to bring you back there more often. Rufus will want you as a poster boy, Dumbledore so he can keep an eye on you.” This was very revealing to the young man, who had been very tempted to join, thinking that it sounded cool.

“Thanks for the warning, I think I'll just decline the offer and stay here for a couple of years. Can you do me a favor though?”

“Shoot.”

“I know you guys are shorthanded and all, but could you keep something of a close eye on WWW. The twins were right with me today as you saw, it might make them bigger targets.”

“Sure thing, we’ll keep a closer eye on the building....but only the building Harry. They go messing about in Knockturn Alley at their own risk.” Harry nodded in agreement.

“Understood, I’ll let them know.”

“Good, now one last thing, and this is something I should have done a couple of months ago, if only by owl.....I would appreciate a heads-up the next time you come to Britain, for a public appearance anyway.” Harry didn’t think this was so unreasonable.....given that it would rarely need to happen.

“No problem, are you thinking security concerns?”

“For the most part, but it’s also best to be prepared for any eventuality. I’m not saying I need a week or anything, but just send one of the elves by before you come over.”

“I’ll do that, but don’t expect to see Dobby or Winky anytime soon. I may go to the shop periodically, but that’s about it until next summer I think, barring anything else weird happening.” I should be so lucky, thought Harry, but he had to plan anyway.

“Not coming back for Christmas at all?”

“I’m not planning to, I have someplace special I’ll be spending most of the holiday at, far away from Hogwarts and all it’s attendant problems.” Both Biller and Sophie were a little curious now, but held their questions.

“Fair enough. One last thing before I take off: I was a Gryffindor Harry, one year behind your parents. I played Quidditch with your dad for four years, and succeeded him as Head Boy.....I mourned him and your mum Harry, and they would have been proud of you today, I have no doubt.” Harry never got tired of hearing that, especially now from someone who had known his mum and dad well. He smiled tiredly.

“Thanks for that Travis, I appreciate it.”

“You’re welcome Harry, see you soon.....hopefully not too soon.”
Biller left the med station to meet Jacobson, who was waiting for him in the hallway. He would soon hit the floo, back to Boston where he could portkey home.....and get some sleep sometime this week.

“I’m glad you’re not going back Harry, I was a little worried that if the war exploded you’d be tempted.”

“Nothing has changed over there Sophie, and certain people here have given me every reason to stay.” She smiled, and gave him a kiss (Carter was still around, so snogging wasn’t too practical).

“What did you mean just now about someplace special to go to for the holiday?”

“In Sirius’ will I inherited more than just a lot of money, I inherited an island too.....in the Caribbean. Not a bad place to get away from the snow that we’ll be hit with up here. I’m going to have Dobby or Winky go down there soon to check it out. Should be fun.”

Yes, it would a lot of fun indeed. Christmas was just under three months away, who knows what will happen in between though.

Dining Hall

8:15 am

Harry had been cleared for takeoff by Dr. Carter first thing in the morning. His ribs were now totally healed, and his leg was well enough along that he could go to class. Carter had given him a real cane to use for a couple of days, and Harry showed up at breakfast with a cane, a limp, and a big appetite. He had done a bit more studying the night before, and was actually a bit ahead for the week.....Hermione would be very proud of him he thought. He was in a good mood until the mail came.

The current issue of The Chronicle was full of news of the Ministry battle that Harry had been a large part of, and while his fellow students had suspected that some kind of fireworks had happened, this was confirmation. The articles, and there were more than one, quoted heavily from British sources, and gave a standard 'Potter was unavailable for comment' in most of them, though Harry wondered if they even went through the motion of trying. They treated him pretty gently all told, though the fact that he had killed Death Eaters was mentioned more than once. There was a lot of 'so that's what happened' from his schoolmates, and a few of the bolder ones asked what it was like to kill someone.....though they didn't mean it harshly, just curiously, though it was obvious to them immediately that Harry didn't appreciate those specific questions. Harry now had a sinking feeling, and figured he might as well know than not know.

"Dobby!" The little elf popped in.

"Please go to Diagon Alley and find me a copy of The Daily Prophet and bring it back here."

"Yes Harry, I will be right back." Off he went.

"What do you think it'll say Harry?" Harry grimaced.

“Well Claudia, having read The Chronicle, I’m betting my new nickname will be ‘The Boy Who Killed’.” Dobby was soon back, paper in hand.

“That was quick, I didn’t realize you kept money on you.”

“Oh no Harry, I just went to the shop and took the twins’ copy. A sickle saved is a sickle earned. Um, Harry.....twin Fred said you should sit down when you read it.” Uh oh.

This particular issue was entirely devoted to yesterday’s events, as expected, and the front page was almost one large series of headlines:

CHAOS AT THE MINISTRY! HOGSMEADE DESTROYED! YOU KNOW WHO IN PUBLIC!

Well that wasn’t so bad thus far was it.....well it was bad of course, but nothing so far dealing with him. Harry thought Fred might have been exaggerating. Then he turned the page, and saw it.

“Potter in Thick of Things at Ministry Battle!”

The headline may not have been lurid, but the accompanying article left little to the imagination. It was readily apparent that the writer, who Harry had never heard of, had been a spectator to the proceedings. Harry’s very active role in the events was detailed exhaustively, and a pretty accurate chart of the spells he had used was included.....and an entire, very long, paragraph of the story was devoted to Harry’s use of Parseltongue. The writer, in his defense, did mention that Harry sent the conjured snakes straight at the Death Eaters, but it was a brief mention. The writer also painted a rather stark portrait of Harry as being ruthless in his attacks on the Death Eaters, and more than implied that revenge was a motivation for him. His encounter with Voldemort was touched on briefly, but they had very few details, other than that Harry had hit him with the Pulse spell.....a spell the writer noted was one not taught at Hogwarts.

Another article dealt with the abbreviated trial itself, and heavily played on Lucius' insistence on bringing Harry up in every cross examination. Also printed, and the one part that made him smile, was a word for word account of his insults with Dumbledore.....and then he stopped smiling when the writer speculated on 'The Prophecy', and what Harry might have meant when he said that. None of his teenage friends were quoted in the articles, and only short quotes from Bill and Arthur. Harry, on the whole, came off not really as a hero in these articles, but more as.....well he couldn't put his finger on what he came off as, just that it seemed to have a negative tone throughout, though he reckoned it could have been worse. Part of him mentally railed at the ingratitude, he could very easily have pulled a Draco and sat the battle out. The problem with that is that he knew the article instead would have been ripping him for being a coward. Harry was very proud to be British, but sometimes he had dug a bit deep to find the reasons for that pride.

To be fair though, most everyone was getting nailed in The Prophet this day. Fudge took a bashing, though it seemed that his embezzlement and country fleeing had not been announced yet. His exiting the courtroom at the sound of the Hogwarts alarm was just seen as cowardice, and the writer merely mentioned that his office had 'no comment'. Bones and Rufus had some hide peeled as well, for their lack of foresight that something like this might happen, as well as the escape of the Death Eater prisoners. Dumbledore by and large got a pass, other than a few criticisms that weren't really specific to the day's incidents. It was more or less agreed amongst the various writers that he had to return to Hogwarts and make sure the children were safe, and was thus excused for not being in the battle.

The people who came off best in the paper, were of course, the dead. Glowing obituaries had been written for the eight non-traitor Wizengamot members who had fallen, as well as the 34 Aurors who had been killed. Harry learned that there had been eight Hogsmeade deaths, and he was saddened to read about The Three Broomsticks. He now knew that he wouldn't see his Hogwarts based friends anytime soon, since you couldn't have a Hogsmeade weekend without a Hogsmeade to go to.....not that he was dying to go, but life was all about options, and he hadn't closed his mind completely to that one.

He passed the paper over to Sophie, and hobbled up to Professor Murray at her table, which had five other faculty members, including Heyman, Ripley, and Lyman.

"Feeling better Harry?"

"A bit tired, but not bad considering. I just saw The Daily Prophet from Britain, and I was wondering what my Howler count was." Lyman actually started chuckling at hearing this, and was surprisingly the one who answered:

"I made a point of checking for you before I came down to breakfast, you're at three so far, but the day is still young, and they take awhile to get here." Hedwig had taken two days to reach Great Lakes from WWW, so this was a bit curious, the three coming so quickly. He put that away though, and had a laugh as well.

"I wonder if it will catch my total from coming to school here? Anyway, thanks." He made to leave, but Ripley stopped him.

"Harry, today in class I would like you to show your battle memory again, so the others can learn from it." Harry thought for a second, and saw no real harm in this, four of them had seen it already anyway: Sophie, Reiko, Claudia, and Drew, as well as Ripley himself.

"That's fine, but I would prefer to only show them the battle, not the aftermath. They don't need so much personal insight into my former life and dealings." Even though almost 20 people from school had seen the whole thing, Harry felt that the line had to be drawn somewhere.

"I don't have a problem with that. I'll want your views on what happened, and what you might have done differently, so start thinking about it. I'll give you some extra credit on your second term paper, since you already have some coming from the day one mock battle."

That term paper was due in three weeks, and Harry had written about half of it, dealing with his personal dueling style.

“I’ll be ready sir.” He went back to the table, but didn’t tell his friends what was in store for them that afternoon. Sophie and Reiko had their heads together, reading the paper.

“I’m only at three Howlers, I mean what’s wrong with those people? I’m ‘The Boy Who Killed!’” His roommate smiled amiably at him.

“I’ll be happy to send you one, maybe we can start a campaign here at school.”

“Funny Warrick, we need to send you out on tour.”

“Just trying to help, good grief, nobody ever likes my ideas.” The others showed Warrick how much they liked his ideas by pelting him with food. This is something that happened relatively frequently, so the other tables just laughed as Warrick cleaned the mess of himself and the table. They soon went off their separate ways, with Harry and Jonas making the trek to Muggle Studies.

“Are you going to be okay to play Quidditch next week?”

“I should be, Carter didn’t seem to have a concern about it when I asked him. I’m looking forward to Quodpot the next day, I’ve never seen a real game.”

“It’ll be a wild weekend, I need to start ragging on Claudia about it, with us playing Shawnee.”

“I’m sure it’ll be just the thing to get you two together.” Harry started laughing, but Jonas was just shaking his head in exasperation.

“Don’t you start too Harry, just because you’re in love, doesn’t mean you should try to foist it on the rest of us. Claudia and I are fine like we are. She doesn’t want a boyfriend right now, and I don’t need the drama of trying to convince her. This way I get to pick and choose.” Harry had heard this line before, but never said so vehemently.

“You really don’t have those kinds of feelings for her.....do you.” Not asked as a question, but more along the lines of confirming a slight revelation.

“Not really dude, no. I used to, but Claudia kept putting things off and putting things off, though not in a mean way or anything. I guess I gave up, I don’t want it to be a case of me wearing her down. She could tell me she loved me right now, and I don’t think I would say it back.” Harry and Jonas only really spent this time alone together, the time before and after Muggle Studies, so it’s not like they talked all the time. Harry had always just thought it was a matter of time, since that’s what Warrick and Sophie had been telling him.

“Fair enough, no more static about it from me, I promise. I only really did it because the others did, I don’t blame you for being tired of hearing it.” And he didn’t, one reason he had never really pursued Hermione is that he didn’t want to prove right the jerks who’d just assumed that they would.....and he suspected Hermione felt that same way.

“Thanks man, believe it or not I appreciate it. I won’t ask you to try to convince Sophie.....” He trailed off, clearly hoping to do just that.

“I’ll mention it to her, but you know what your real problem is.” They both said it together.

“Warrick.”

“Right in one mate, and that will be your problem.”

“Eh, he just likes getting a rise out of Claudia, I’m not even sure he expects us to hook up anymore.” Oh yes he did, thought Harry, but he let it lie for now.

They got to class and sat through another Ziegler three hour marathon, with it’s attendant ten minute break. Ziegler looked and acted like a mope, but his speaking style was such that he could engross you for that length of time, and you would not feel bored. Harry had heard that Professor Mendoza, the elderly man who taught Advanced Muggle Studies, was just as serious, but at the same time not nearly as interesting. There were even stories of students who had deliberately tanked their Muggle Studies OWL tests so as not to be in the Advanced class.....as students who got O's were not allowed to take the regular course if they wanted to. Jonas, who had told Harry the rumor in the first place, said that he wasn't one of those who had tanked.....but he said it with a notable lack of sincerity, he had all but winked.

Defense Classroom B

2 pm

The first hour of Basic Combat was spent on target practice, a new exercise which Ripley said would be happening with more and more frequency. The students practiced firing Reducto and other explosive spells at cinder block targets that their teacher had set up. Today it was basically just archery with wands, though in the future there would be moving targets and other challenges. This was somewhat similar to the student Olympics held every May, but without the destruction. He even intimated that another mass duel was upcoming, but declined to give any timetable when pressed. Harry was offered the chance to skip this, but he declined, this would be the only time today he had to use his wand. He used a mixture of Reducto and Repulsar, and like everyone, had some fun destroying the cinder blocks. He wore down about halfway in, but just shot the spells less frequently for the remainder of the time.

The second half of class was devoted to the Harry at the Ministry playback. Against his better judgment, Harry had allowed them to see the Voldemort duel as well, but not until he elicited a series of threats/promises from Ripley about the other five students not going blabbing about the fact that Harry had the bad man's wand. Ripley quietly asked Harry what the big deal was, it's not like Voldemort didn't know who had his wand. Harry replied that he just wasn't comfortable with the whole world knowing about it, so he cut the memory off as it showed Voldemort and his boys retreating. They watched the playback twice, once in silence, and the second time with Harry providing a running commentary about who everyone was, and what he was thinking when he did something. After this, Ripley shut down the pensieve, handed Harry his memory back, and hit him with a question:

“Well Harry, what would you have done differently?” Harry had watched the first playback with an eye specifically toward answering this question.

“Well for one, I would have exhorted the gallery behind me to do more. I realize they were scared, and not everyone charges into risking their lives like I do.....but another dozen of them fighting would have made a ton of difference. Another thing, I would have kept up the snake thing, maybe others behind me would have copied it, that would have drawn off a lot of fire.” Ray Elwood, Proctor House, had the most obvious question:

“ Why didn’t you use a more destructive curse against that Voldemort guy? I mean I know you were tired.....hell I’m exhausted just from watching it twice, but you really didn’t have anything left?”

“More or less, yeah I was Ray....and I don’t blame you for asking, I’d have done the same. The Pulse spell takes very little energy to fire, and I just didn’t have anything else left. Plus, there were political considerations to worry about. If I had used Avada Kedavra, I could very well have been arrested immediately afterward.” That even took Ripley by surprise.

“You think after killing a dangerous Dark Wizard you would be arrested? I mean the nickname notwithstanding, there are some Unforgivables that are forgivable.”

“I would not have been willing to take the chance. I decided that soon after the first spell was fired. That was another reason I didn’t try Avada Kedavra, I needed to make sure I had enough energy to maybe fight my way out. You guys don’t understand the political situation over there. I almost got thrown in prison last year for using a Patronus to save my cousin’s life and my own, I explained what happened and almost half the Wizengamot thought I was lying.....just because they didn't want to believe it, or because it suited their purposes to see The Boy Who Lived taken down a few pegs. Call me paranoid, you wouldn't be the first.....but I won't go to jail in exchange for killing Voldemort." Nobody could blame him for thinking that. A couple of questions were asked about the Pulse spell, and during his commentary Harry had mentioned that Drew had taught it to him, so he let him answer.

"Repulsar was developed a few years ago by our Auror Command to combat Lycans, and to a lesser extent, Kindred. It's meant as an easily re-usable delaying spell, one that leaves no outward marks other than a bruise.....or lost teeth if you hit it just right, as Harry proved yesterday. No strange messes for muggles to notice if they happen upon the scene, no uncomfortable questions. I used it the first day here last month just to try it out, and because if done a certain way, won't injure anyone. My dad taught it to me over the summer, and it's become part of the standard package of defensive spells that every Auror uses." Drew wasn't known for giving long discourses like that, so everyone paid attention to the rarity. His father, Mitchell, was a senior level Auror, stationed long term in Milwaukee, which is why Drew attended Great Lakes. His mother, Hollie, was a Midwestern Representative to the 25 person Wizard Congress.

A few other technical questions were asked, and then class was dismissed. Ripley held Harry back for a moment, his friends lingered with him.

"What are your plans with that second wand Harry? Are you going to work out with it?"

"I don't know really, I haven't thought much about it. It's the wand mate to mine, so I bet it would work pretty well for me."

"Let me know when you decide you want to do something with it, I'll set up some exercises for you. It's in a secure place?"

“Totally secure, I’m not worried about Voldemort coming to get it.” And he wasn’t really, he doubted anyone had the creative mind to suss out that Harry and the twins each had a floo capable trunk, and even if they did, Harry’s floo address was nigh impossible to guess, even if they somehow gained access to the one at WWW.....and the twins had it pretty well hid, and booby trapped, even Lee Jordan didn’t know they had it.

The kids went off to their rooms to get rid of their books, and the trunk sextet met in Harry’s trunk to discuss Map plans. The Map was pretty much a skeleton without muscles right now. They had all the hallways done, along with the four Lounges, and all their classrooms. What they were lacking was most of the teacher offices, and practically all of the dorm rooms, along with a couple of locked rooms in the basement. Warrick was quite gung ho to get started.

“Let’s start after dinner, at the very least we can get the basement done.”

“How many people do we want doing this? Won’t we attract some attention with the six of us wandering around?”

“You’re right Reiko, what we need to do is have the three person teams like we talked about, but only one team at a time goes around. That team will have the Map with them, and can check it for anyone coming up on them.”

“So who should go first Harry?” Harry looked around, it’s not like there was an easy lineup to select.

“Well who doesn’t have any homework that has to get done tonight?” Harry and Jonas were the only ones to raises their hands, though Sophie cleared her throat.

“Well I have about an hour of Runes if we can wait that long, I’m caught up otherwise.”

“Cool, it’s a plan then. At 8 pm the three of us will head down to the basement. The rest of you, see if you can get Clancy’s room. If he’s in the Lounge, slip out and use Winky to quickly get his room on the Map. We need to get an eye on him as quickly as possible, but don't do anything rash Warrick, I always see him watching you." Indeed he was, it was widely rumored within the junior year Cortez boys that Clancy was fearful of some kind of retaliation for his years of rumored tattling. Warrick was considered the most likely to nail him, since he had served the most detentions.....though as stated before, he could never prove anything.....until now, because of the Map. That's why Warrick and Reiko, more so than the other three, were big believers in the Map, they wanted it more as an early warning system than anything.

The nighttime excursion went off without a hitch, as the Map now included all of the basement rooms. This included the mysterious conference room that Winky had noticed on her initial forays when drawing the blueprint. They tried to get in, but as with all the dorm rooms upstairs, they had magical locks.....which could only be opened here at Great Lakes by Murray, Heyman, and whoever they keyed in. Joe Clancy's room also was added to the Map, as he was spotted heading to the library soon after Harry and company left. Reiko and Winky slipped off for a few minutes and got him on the Map. The staff offices were going to be hit on the weekend, as most teachers had families and did not live on campus, though many worked late on the weeknights. Notable exceptions were Murray, whose husband was a doctor at a muggle hospital in Marquette, Michigan. He was seldom seen at meals though, and they had no children; Heyman, whose muggle wife had passed on five years earlier, their children were now out of school; and Lyman, who just liked being single too much and was always wandering around. The three of them, and a few others, lived in rooms off of their offices. Harry was half tempted to tell Lyman about the Map, just to see what he'd say, but Sophie had thus far talked him down from the ledge on that one.

That night, after a re-read of his so-so publicity from The Daily Prophet, Harry wrote a short, very polite letter to Rufus Scrimgeour, declining membership in The Dark Force Defense League. He cited his current school commitments, as well as his gut feeling that most of the older wizards in the League would be opposed to his joining, causing unneeded controversy at such a difficult time in their society.

This was all quite true of course, so it was easy to come up with. What Harry didn't put down, though he dearly wanted to, is that he had absolutely no faith in The Ministry at all, beyond it's simple desire to mean well, and even that didn't include everyone. The idea of putting himself under even the nominal control of Rufus or Dumbledore left him a bit cold. He didn't want to close the door on a potential return to Britain after he graduated Great Lakes though.....indeed he mentioned in a PS that if the invitation were still good in July, 1998, he would probably accept it.....he didn't really mean that, but the word 'probably' is very vague, and sounds promising.

He received a brief acknowledgement a few days later, which matched his own note for its politeness and vagueness. The reactivation of the League received wide coverage in The Daily Prophet, but no mention was made of Harry's refusal. Rufus' stock went up in Harry's eyes, he wasn't going to throw him under the bus, Harry's new Howler count had leveled off at around 25. The Fudge scandal still had not broken, though the papers by the end of the week were starting to note that he had not been seen in public since the trial. Amazingly, none of the Americans who heard Travis' talk in the Med Station blabbed, feeling the Brits should deal with Brit business, so nothing appeared in The Chronicle. A couple of Harry's teachers approached him in wonderment by Friday, curious as to what was going on. He shrugged his shoulders, as confused as anyone. He sent a quick note, via Dobby, to Arthur, asking him about it, and got back a reply a few hours later. Arthur said that only the Heads of Department even knew about it, and everyone was pretending that Fudge was simply on vacation. Meanwhile Rufus, Bones, and Dumbledore were trying to figure out just what damage had been done, and how to ensure nothing like this happened again. He cautioned Harry about spreading this around, leaving Harry a bit amazed that just as many Americans knew about Fudge as Brits did.

The Map wound up being completed that weekend, though it took longer than they had expected. The problem was the amount of dorm rooms to get, and that they had no real access to Proctor House. Even their blueprint of Proctor was just an assumption that the dorm rooms were laid out just like Jefferson, Cortez, and Shawnee. Like with Hogwarts, there was no outside access to the individual rooms.

Eventually they risked doing it at Sunday dinner, as Claudia and Reiko stood outside the Proctor Lounge, loading up the grenades as they had both Dobby and Winky popping into hopefully empty dorm rooms.....thankfully they were all empty, except for one room where a Novice student was taking a nap. Sophie was standing at one corner of the hallway with the Map, in case someone came along. The whole operation took about 20 nerve racking minutes, but came off without any hitches. Harry, with his new found legalistic mind, had perused the Great Lakes Code of Rules, and had not found anything specific that prohibited what they were doing.....but they knew that Murray and Heyman would not look upon this fondly. That was one reason Harry had eventually coughed up to Remus the contents of the Pettigrew letter: he didn't want the man deciding that Harry needed a little comeuppance, by telling Murray about the Map.

The other three Houses were much easier, as they could just walk up and down each hallway and knock on doors, though again they did it during meal times. Their easy cover story, for those who actually answered, was that they were taking more orders for WWW. Harry had delivered the packages on Thursday, but no one questioned them. They had five situations where someone answered, but they just had one of the elves pop in behind them, drop the grenade, and pop out. They all gathered in the trunk after dinner Sunday.....well dinner in the Dining Hall for the guys, the girls shared a Winky made pizza, since they had been on Proctor duty most of the meal. There were things to discuss and decide. Jonas went first.

“Harry, are you going to be wanting to get Drew in on this?” Harry had thought long and hard about this, but hadn't really come to any decisions. He liked Drew, he was a nice contrast from Warrick and Jonas, but wasn't sure if this was going to be his kind of thing.

“I'm thinking no, for the time being. Let's see what kind of reaction he has to our initial pranks. Besides, the six of us did the work to get the Map up and running, we should be the ones to realize the initial fun.” Warrick had been preparing that same argument, but was kind of surprised that Harry of all people beat him to it.

“But down the line you'll want to?”

“Down the line is down the line. Right now just the six of us, plus Dobby and Winky, know about this, let’s keep it that way.”

“So you don’t have any intention of letting him in on the trunk either?”

“Well no I don’t Jonas, though I don’t consider the two of them linked. One doesn’t have to follow the other as far as I’m concerned. It’s the same with Rick and Terry, it’s kind of inconvenient not to be able to go inside when they’re in the room, but better safe than sorry. Now, have you all picked your Marauder names?” They all nodded. The group had debated a few choices, and quickly came to the consensus that they didn’t all have to be animal names, since none of them were to become animagi.

“Are you still going to be Prongs?” Harry had endured second thoughts about this over the weeks, as he was mildly afraid that Murray might have seen the Map during her tenure at Hogwarts, or that she might have heard a few stories. The only teachers at Hogwarts at that point who had been schoolmates of the original Marauders were Snape and McDowell.....and McDowell had been the other teacher, with Flitwick, in the trade that brought Murray over. Harry had a hard time fathoming Snape trading stories with Murray though. In the end though, he decided to take the chance, he really wanted to feel like a part of his father here.

“Yeah Reiko, I am. There are risks in it, but if we don’t sign our work, then Murray would only suspect something if she gets hold of the Map.”

“Well we don’t want that under any circumstances. I’m going to go with Quicksilver. It’s my grandma’s nickname, and since I already one have one grandmother’s name for real, I want this to be the other one.” Reiko’s maternal grandmother, who was full blooded Japanese, was also named Reiko, and her grandmother Aylesworth had fine silver hair.....and won the 100 and 200 meter dashes every year at the National Age Group Track and Field Championships in her age category, hence the ‘quick’ part. Warrick smiled, grandmother

Aylesworth, whose son had married a half Japanese woman, had no trouble with her granddaughter dating an African-American young man. She had immediately treated him just like family at Christmas time when they met, even though Reiko had only just started dating her long-time friend.

“I’m going to with Magician, I love the irony that when people think of magic, they think of Siegfried and Roy, and people like that. It’s one reason we’ve been able to stay so hidden here, it’s a gentle way of mocking the muggles.” Harry hadn’t been in America so long that he knew who everyone was:

“Who’re Siegfried and Roy?” Warrick took a few moments to fill him in, and Harry was scratching his head.

“So they’re tiger trainers? How’s that magic?”

“Don’t worry about it dude, we’ll go see a show next summer maybe, you’ll understand then.” Harry wasn’t so sure about that, but he took his word for it. Claudia was next, she and Jonas had been debating this together for weeks.

“I’m going to be Cherlindrea, from Willow. I liked how graceful she was.....even though I know I’m not.” Claudia hadn’t always been tall for her age, she had grown six inches in the last two years, and was just now catching up in coordination. She wasn’t ashamed of it though, she just acknowledged it and moved on. The two boys had been after her to at least try Quidditch or Quodpot, to help her that way, but she demurred. Jonas:

“ Well in keeping with the Willow theme, I’m going to be Madmartigan, the epitome of cool, and a badass warrior to boot.” Harry grinned, he had loved the Val Kilmer character as well.

“I love you Sorsha? I don’t love her, she kicked me in the face, I hate her.....don’t I?” They all started giggling at Harry’s favorite line from the movie. They all turned to Sophie, she was the only one left without a name. She had been thinking long and hard on this, and had discarded many possibilities. Even Harry was leaning forward, curious, she hadn't told him what she had picked.

"I'm going to be Half Pint, after Laura Ingalls. I grew up watching reruns of Little House on the Prairie, and she's always been my favorite character from TV, and literature after I read her books." They had all heard her speak of this, it made sense.

Harry pulled out the piece of paper that Remus had given him in August. He cast the listed spell on the new Map, and after it glowed, it went blank. Harry then pointed his wand at it.

"I solemnly swear that I am up to no good"

After a few seconds, some writing appeared.

Messrs. Prongs, Madmartigan, and Magician, in concert with Misses Quicksilver, Half Pint, and Cherlindrea present you The Marauders' Map II.

Eureka, it worked. After some discussion, they decided that Quidditch/Quodpot weekend would be their 'grand opening', so to speak. This was going to be a lot of fun.

Monday, October 7, 1996

After a week of a Fudge-less society, Rufus finally gave into the pressure and announced that the now former Minister had decamped, taking a few pieces of loose change with him.....they didn't announce the total. The press release to The Daily Prophet was brief and to the point, and covered with the usual lurid headlines.....all to relatively little effect. The twins, backs totally healed from their herniated disks and bruised muscles, came into the trunk the next night and told Harry that there was little stir in Diagon Alley about it. Few of the merchants, and the general public for that matter, were surprised that Fudge would do his cowardly deeds, so it was hard to be mad. They had all known what they were getting when they elected him, choosing not to have a dynamic leader who might take more and more power unto himself/herself. Rufus was not seen as terribly dynamic, but he was perceived to be solid and trustworthy, so there was little added controversy.

On Wednesday at lunch, Harry received a short note from Dumbledore, his first since the letter informing him of what would become Snape night at the Dursleys.

Dear Harry,

I hesitate to write this, but recent events make me feel like I have no choice. Rufus Scrimgeour has informed me of your declining of the invitation to join The Dark Force Defense League, and while I know mine is the last opinion you are seeking, nonetheless I am asking you to reconsider. I have seen Rufus' memory of the Ministry battle, and I am astounded at the skill you showed. Your defeat of Voldemort was also very impressive, and your lateral thinking was inspired. The war effort needs you Harry, we here at Hogwarts need you.

I am not asking you to return to Hogwarts, I will not go that far. But if you will indulge an old man, I would be remiss if I was to say that it is my hope that you will at least consider it. I know we have had our differences this year, but has anything you think I have done to you been unforgivable? Hogwarts and Britain are where you belong Harry, as safe as you may feel in America, you will always be a stranger there. I promise you that you will not be in any further danger inside the castle, and that I will not interfere with whatever summer plans you make, as I know you will be careful, even without my asking.

Another matter, I know from Miss Granger that you have Voldemort's wand, and I cannot urge you enough to destroy it at once. We both know the danger this wand poses to you, and to our society as a whole, it needs to cease to exist. Without his wand, Voldemort will not have his full power at his disposal. The wand chooses the Wizard, as Mr. Ollivander never tires of saying, and our friend cannot easily walk into a wand shop and try them out one by one.

I hope this letter can be the start of a reconnection between us Harry. I am not telling you to do anything, I know I can only ask.....but ask I must, for the good of our society. Please think about what I've said Harry, I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Albus

The owl that had delivered it looked pretty exhausted, and Harry surmised that Dumbledore must have sent the letter soon after The Daily Prophet coverage of Fudge broke. He really needed to get himself a trans-Atlantic trunk floo, Harry thought. Saves a lot of wear and tear on the owls. A month ago Harry and Hedwig had had a sort of conversation, involving Harry asking questions and trying to glean the answers from the hooting, which more or less established that Hedwig didn't care for crossing the ocean if she didn't have to. She was making the Michigan/Oklahoma run twice a week now, and Reiko's parents made sure she was well fed. Dobby and Winky were shuttling back and forth several times a day via the trunk floo, and were proving to be the best 50 galleons a month that Harry could ever have spent.

Harry pondered the letter for a few minutes, idly toying with his sandwich, and then slid the note over to Sophie, who read it, and it journeyed around the table, which included Drew as well. Claudia spoke first:

"Well he's trying, I'll give him that. That's the written equivalent of getting on your knees." Harry smiled faintly at hearing that.

"Yes, he is very trying, I quite agree." He thought of something and starting laughing.

"What's so funny?"

"Sophie, I'm just now imaging my reception if I just walked into Hogwarts Great Hall right now and said, 'sorry, I've changed my mind, where's my timetable?'" He was shaking with mirth now, and the others were all smiling now. None of them really thought he would leave though, indeed they were all kind of waiting to see how badly he'd roast Dumbledore merely for asking. Warrick got in the spirit of things.

“Oh yeah, and how many different ways could that Prophet paper call you a quitter? ‘Potter Crawls Back With Tail Between His Legs’”

“It would be classic, and I would never hear the end of it.....even if I wanted to take off, which I do not remotely want to do.” Drew hesitantly broke in, still not being entirely comfortable with group, though he was getting there.

“What about that wand? I’d have thought he’d want it for himself.” Harry started smirking.

“Well if he can’t have it back, and he knows I won’t give it to him, he wants it out of play completely. It’s not a bad notion really, and if it was anyone but me having it, I’d be all for it.”

“Have you played with it yet?”

“Yeah, I went outside last night after Chess. It worked just a bit worse than my normal wand, but I took a long time to get used to that one, so I’m not sure what that tells me. Not many people have two fully compatible me among the not many. I won’t need it for awhile, but it’s nice to have just in case.”

“So you’re not going to join the League, you won’t change your mind?”

“Nope, the next time I set foot in Britain will be next summer, I did promise my friends there a visit.” Left unsaid was that he went to Britain at least once a week, to the shop.....but Drew did not need to know that at this time. The rest of the meal was spent debating whether Harry should either: Rip Dumbledore a new one for rehashing what had already been decided, or just not respond at all. Harry said the least during this debate, though he saw the advantages of both.

All that said, Harry chose the third option. With a few minutes to go in the lunch period, he took out a piece of paper and wrote a quick note to his not so favorite person.

Dear Albus,

Thank you for your kind note, but I am afraid I am disinclined to say yes to any of your requests.

Have a nice day,

Harry

Again, he passed the note around the table, and Jonas succinctly summed up their reaction.

“This is going to confuse the shit out of him, you being polite like this.” Harry got a big smile on his face hearing that.

“I know.” The owl that had delivered Dumbledore’s letter was still hanging around the Owlrey that afternoon after class, so Harry tied his note to its leg and sent him off.

“Take your time, there’s no hurry.” Harry couldn’t help but wonder if he saw a look of relief on the owl’s face, but no matter. Harry had also written a longer letter to the twins, apprising them of the situation. Dobby came back with a quick reply from them that said that this was all news to them, that Dumbledore hadn’t mentioned anything at the Order meeting. This didn’t surprise Harry really, surely the old man was quick enough to figure that the twins were his conduit for Order information, and even if they didn’t, Bill would.

There would be no reply from Dumbledore to Harry’s rebuffing of his requests, and in the coming days, Dumbledore would recede to the back of Harry’s mind.....where he would not fester, but not leave either.

10 am

Great Lakes Athletic Field

It was Quidditch day at the GLAF, the first game to feature Cortez v. Proctor, with a short lunch break right afterward, then Jefferson v. Shawnee starting at 2 pm. There was no locker room at the field, so teams changed in their dorm rooms and hiked out to the pitch. Harry and Warrick didn't say much to each other this morning about the game.....but they both knew the stakes. With Harry now on board, Cortez was the overwhelming favorite to win the Cup.....which was not quite fair really, since Connor Banks, last year's now graduated Captain and Seeker, had actually caught two of the three Snitches.....though one of them was in a game they were already losing 240-50. Proctor House was technically the defending champions.....or they would be if they hadn't lost all of their championship players that is, so they were more champions in theory. Six had graduated from a veteran squad, and the seventh had made the Quodpot team and wasn't interested in a rebuilding phase for Quidditch. Still, they had the Cup, and the other three Houses were chasing it.

The announcer for the day was Elizabeth Westin, the junior Charms teacher, who won/lost the draw that morning. The teachers drew lots to see who would announce each game, with the caveat that he/she only had to do one game all season. There had nearly been a riot two years earlier when Great Lakes Caretaker Riley Poole had announced a match, though most of the 11 year olds had heard the majority of those words before. Needless to say, he was no longer in the draw, but had been allowed to keep his job after a blistering lecture from Murray and Heyman.

“Welcome one and all to our first match of the Quidditch season! This morning we have Cortez House versus the reigning Quidditch Champions Proctor House! Now let's meet the teams! For Cortez:

“At Keeper, a Freshman from Whitewater, Wisconsin, Jane Abbott!”

“ At Chaser, a Junior from Alice Springs, Oklahoma, Reiko Aylesworth!” Alice Springs' population consisted solely of The Tecumseh Magical Academy, where Reiko's parents were the Charms Department.

“At Chaser, a Novice from Georgetown, Michigan, Billy Amend!”

“At Chaser, a Freshman from Oakdale, Illinois, Kim Cuthbert!”

“At Captain and Beater, a Senior from Minneapolis, Minnesota, John Geyser!”

“At Beater, a Junior from Indianapolis, Indiana, Warrick Forrester!”

“And finally, at Seeker, a Junior from Godric’s Hollow, Wales, Harry Potter!”

The Cortez troops, who had been waiting outside the field, flew into the stadium as their names were called. Warrick got the biggest cheers, he was quite popular around school, and he flew over to the Cortez section to slap hands with people. Harry came in last, and got his own set of cheers. He could see Sophie in the front row of the Cortez cheering section, Jonas’ omnioculars in hand. Westin allowed it to die down a bit, before announcing Proctor.

“And now the defending Champions from Proctor:”

“At Keeper, a Freshman from Grand Rapids, Michigan, Neal Stephenson!”

“At Chaser, a Sophomore from Cuyahoga City, Ohio, Danny Waterhouse!”

“At Chaser, a Novice from Paducah, Kentucky, Elizabeth Zeur!”

“At Chaser, a Junior from Milan, Tennessee, Ike Newton!”

“At Beater, a Freshman from Holt, Michigan, Bobby Shaftoe!”

“At Beater, a Transition from Holt, Michigan, Jack Shaftoe!”

“And at Captain and Seeker, a Junior from Charleston, West Virginia, Ray Elwood!”

The Proctor players, none of which had played a minute last season, all flew out to the cheers of their House.....and pretty much no one else. Warrick's popularity and Harry's 'fame' had the other Houses rooting for Cortez.....the fact that Harry and Warrick were buddies with Jonas pretty much won Jefferson over anyway.

“Our match referee today is Cooper Manning, famed Keeper from the New York Thunderbolts!”

Manning, yes that Manning.....neck injury in college, hah.....gathered the Captains at the center of the field for the usual patter about rules and such. Manning released the balls, and the game was on.

“Cortez with the Quaffle, Aylesworth has it and it charging down the field, the only experienced Chaser in the game.....she shoots..... she scores! 10 points for Cortez!” Reiko threw her arms in the air in celebration.....which repeated itself a minute later, as she stole the Quaffle and passed it to Amend for an easy goal. The Snitch hadn't made an appearance as of yet, but Harry was having fun making mock charges at Keeper Stephenson, disrupting his rhythm and giving Reiko and the others better shots.

The Proctor offense had a hard time getting going though, as Cortez' experienced Beaters made their lives not as much fun as being a spectator would have been. Geyser was about as big as Warrick was, and the two of them were merciless on the young Chasers of Proctor, providing open lanes for Reiko, Billy, and Kim to get their shots in....and that was a bit of a problem, since Billy and Kim really weren't very good shots yet, though they weren't half bad at passing the Quaffle around. Fortunately, Reiko was good enough for the three of them, and Cortez maintained their early lead. No fouls were being committed, as the Proctor Chasers were too busy dodging Bludgers when they were on Defense, and Abbott was playing well enough as Keeper that the Cortez Chasers did not really feel the need to play physical with their counterparts.

After about 15 minutes, the score was 60-20 in favor of Cortez, and the Snitch made its first appearance, right near Abbott in the Cortez goal area. Harry charged off after it, while his Defense classmate Elwood came after him.....and it became readily apparent that Elwood wasn't a great flyer, just a competent one. Harry chased the Snitch for about a minute, before the little golden ball did some trickery and escaped. He looked around and saw that his side had added two more goals to Proctor's one.....and then a few minutes later, the Snitch came buzzing right toward him, he reached out his hand.....nope, not yet, as the little sucker did a 180 and zoomed away toward the crowd, Harry hurtling after it.

“So you want to play eh?”

WHOOSH!

The kids in the Jefferson section front rows quickly ducked their heads as Harry almost barreled into them.....and then again a few seconds later, as Elwood, deciding he had to at least try, clipped the top of the railing, sending him spiraling out of control and out of the stadium. He managed to right himself before hitting the ground, but it was quite a scare, and he took a few minutes to get back into the action.

It was too late though, as the Snitch led Harry on a wild, three minute ride that no rollercoaster could ever replicate. He nearly scared the life out of Abbott as he followed the Snitch through one of the hoops.....being small has a few advantages after all. He finally caught it after the Snitch did it's own, rather harrowing, version of the Wronski Feint, but Harry caught it just in time to pull out of his power dive, the end of his broom just inches from the turf. Westin had pretty much stopped calling the Quaffle action, and was having a fun time describing Harry Potter and the Elusive Snitch.

“And Harry gets the Snitch, narrowly avoiding leaving pieces of himself in the turf, and Cortez wins the game 230-40! That was a great game to start the season with!” The match had lasted just under thirty minutes, much to referee Manning's delight, as he was going to work the afternoon game as well at his alma mater. American Quidditch League games being played on Sundays, with all six teams in action the next day.

An out of breath Harry landed on the field, with Reiko almost flying into him as she hugged him.

“That was amazing, how’d it feel going through the hoop?”

“Like I’m glad I didn’t have that third pancake this morning.” Warrick, John, and the rest landed now, and they drank in the cheers of the crowd. Harry could easily hear Sophie yelling her head off. Warrick and Reiko embraced, and Warrick started crowing.

“How bout my girl! Eight goals baby!” Harry had been a little busy in the last minutes with the Snitch, but he had seen Warrick and John’s early work in the game.

“Did you wind up unseating anyone?”

“Nah, they’re even smaller than you Harry, they’re hard to hit.” Harry immediately started shaking his head emphatically.

“Uh uh, no way am I giving you more target practice during our workouts, forget it.”

“Aw c’mon, its for the good of the team!” By now the Proctor team had landed, and the two squads shook hands. Elwood was the only one Harry knew, and they had a laugh about their buzz of the Jefferson section.

“I came ‘this’ close to clipping Jonas, but the railing got in the way.”

“Well he should have good enough reflexes to duck shouldn’t he? I almost got him too, maybe the Snitch doesn’t like Quodpot players or something. Where did you wind up?”

“I pulled out of the spin about six feet from the ground, but I was so dizzy I had a hard time getting back in the stadium. I’ll try to give you a better match next year.”

“Good luck with the rest of your games mate.”

The teams and the crowd all hiked back to the Dining Hall for lunch, with many students walking up to Harry and complimenting him for the show. He was enjoying the feeling, it had been about a year since his last real game, and he was already anxious to play the next game, against Jefferson. That game, however, was over seven months away, and outdoor Quidditch practice was pretty much over with until April at the earliest, depending on the weather. In a fit of happiness and relaxation, he told Rick and Terry, who he and Warrick were eating lunch with, about the trunk, and most of its features.....all except the floo. It turns out they had suspected something like that all along, though they had not actually seen anyone come out of it. They each swore that they had never tried to open it, and laughed when Harry said that the trunk is why they never caught he and Sophie at anything. They had their own girlfriends though too, and made liberal use of Silencing Charms on some nights, with the darkness helping things greatly, as none of the dorm rooms had windows to the outside.

The second match was a massacre, as Jefferson whupped Shawnee 300-30, behind 10 goals by Transition sensation Sally Jenkins, last year’s Most Valuable Player in the Quidditch Cup. The game was even shorter than the day’s first one, at just 22 minutes. Shawnee was another squad that had no returning members, and despite their scrimmage work against Cortez, they were badly outmatched. That was a problem for some Quidditch teams over the years, more than a few players were just keeping ready for Quodpot, whose teams were usually made up of the older students. Cortez had not lost anyone this way, but they were the only House to be able to say that. Their four players had all graduated, and the four new players besides Harry, the two starters and two reserves, had all claimed that they were in it for the course.....much as Geyser and Warrick had been. Warrick told Harry that he had been offered Quodpot spots for years, but had never taken the plunge, preferring a sport where he was very good, rather than one where he would have to work hard just to be acceptable.

Harry and the rest of the team watched the match with great interest, and Abbott in particular wasn't looking forward to a Jenkins onslaught. Geyser, in a great mood because of the morning victory, took much pleasure in telling Abbott all about how Jenkins had rung up 18 goals on them the previous year.....this was the game where then-Seeker Connor Banks had caught the Snitch in a losing effort. Harry privately thought that Wood would have stopped most of her shots, and he had played against her in pickup games during the summer and honestly thought she was no better at Chaser than he was.....he with no training at the position. He inwardly smiled though, when he thought about Ron facing Jenkins, and what it would do to his friend's confidence if he had to face that kind of onslaught. The first Gryffindor Quidditch match was scheduled to occur in two weeks, against Ravenclaw, and Harry was half tempted to go see it, hidden in his Invisibility cloak. He was still chewing on it, and would kick it around with Fred and George the next time he saw them.

The party in Cortez Lounge that night was pretty loud, as it was prank night, a lot of students had been saving their WWW purchases for this weekend. This was likely to be their only celebrating, as Cortez was considered to be a strong candidate to finish last in the Quodpot Cup for the fourth year out of the last six. Their team was mostly made up of Transition and Apprentice Year players, along with a couple of Seniors. Harry stopped short of opening up a portable swamp, but he and Warrick had a fun time doing some Novice tormenting.....all in good fun of course. The party was only for Cortez students, which was a shame because no one liked Novice hazing more than Jonas did. Fred and George had a new product that reversed gravity on a person, which forced them to walk on their hands. It was hidden in chocolate candies, so it was easy to sucker the youngsters into trying it. Other favorites among the kids included gum that grew a person's hair a centimeter with every chew, and Talking Temporary Stick On Tattoos, which lasted anywhere from an hour to a day, depending on what you chose. The talking was all PG rated of course, though the twins hadn't ruled out making the language dirtier if the buyers seemed to want it.

While the mayhem was going on, and Warrick was in full sight of the room, Harry and Sophie slipped off and used some magical glue on Joe Clancy's door.....while he was still inside, having gone in to change his clothes after a Novice student had 'accidentally' thrown up on him, after the young girl had been walking upside down for ten minutes. Scourgify has its issues with vomit. The glue bonded to the door instantly, and, after placing a certain charm, the young couple slipped off before they started laughing too hard. They skipped the rest of the festivities, and adjourned to the trunk. While they were laying there in a heap on the couch:

"You know, this thing is very handy. It sure cuts down on our sneaking around."

"I will admit that having money is very convenient. I never had any to speak of growing up, and at Hogwarts there was no place to spend it, except at Hogsmeade.....but yeah, I'm really glad Peter thought of this." Sophie was glad too, if she ever met Peter she planned to shake his hand.

"You know, you looked good out there today. You should have seen your face while you were chasing the Snitch."

"What did I look like?"

"Pure joy Harry, you really were in your element." He squeezed her a little tighter.

"Oh I'm in my element now Sophie, never fear." She gave him a poke in the ribs.

"You should play professionally Harry, don't become an Auror."

"Okay, if that's what you want." She started laughing.

"Nice try buddy, but you're not that pliable."

"Yet. I'm getting there though, give me time."

“You are easy to train, if only Jonas was that simple to deal with, Claudia would be a lot happier.” Harry hadn’t yet gotten around to talking to her about that, but he had promised Jonas, and however fraught with peril this would be, he had promised. He hadn’t talked to Warrick yet either, figuring to do the easy part first.....Warrick wouldn’t give up his teasing ammunition lightly. This seemed like as good a time as any.

“Um, yeah.....well about that.....you see, it’s like this.....” She loved it when Harry went all weird like this, but it was always a bit confusing to get at what he meant.

“What on earth are you babbling about?”

“Well Jonas and I had a talk last week, and he kind of got across to me that he didn’t really feel that way about Claudia anymore.” This was news to her.

“How did he do that?”

“Well he said it flat out actually. He asked me, nicely, to lay off about Claudia, and I promised him I’d talk to you about it too.”

“Was he serious?”

“He sure seemed to be, I mean you’ve said yourself that they have not yet done anything, after all these years.” Jonas and Claudia had been friends now for about four years total.

Sophie paused for a moment to think.

“Well I did catch them kissing once, though it was under the mistletoe.” Feeling Harry start to scoff, “Hey, I can tell an innocent kiss from one that.....well it lasted about 10 seconds.” That was short as far as Harry was concerned, but he was wise enough not to say that out loud.

“When was this? Did they see you seeing them?”

“Christmas 1994, and no they didn’t.”

“Well that was quite a while ago, and it seems like nothing really took from it. I mean, there comes a time when the ghost has to be given up, right?”

“I guess so.....I guess that’s what Claudia has been saying all along. She’s been saying for years that she’s not ready for a boyfriend, and we’ve all been teasing her about that.”

“Well weren’t you saying the same things? That you weren’t ready for one? Yet nobody was trying to force you into dating someone.” That was a decent point on the surface, but not in one detail.

“Well the difference is that Claudia has always been able to talk to guys, and I haven’t. I mean I could talk to my brothers when I had them, but not boys at school, either muggle or here. Claudia could, and she doesn’t even have any brothers. She has a confidence, you know? And not just about boys. You pegged it that second day, when you said she seemed to be our leader.”

“Sophie, come clean now.....does Claudia have feelings for him?” She hesitated for a second.

“I think she does, yes.....but I wouldn’t be my life on it. I’d bet five dollars though.”

“Well she has waited too long, and I think we should just let it go. Claudia may laugh it off, but I think it’s finally starting to get to Jonas.....heck, I’m tired of it, and I’ve only had to listen to it for two months. All we’re doing is reminding Jonas that Claudia doesn’t think he’s good enough for her.” This brought Sophie up short, she had never thought of it like this.

“You’re right, I never looked at it from his perspective before. I mean, I don’t know what he’s said to Warrick in the past, but this is the first time I’ve ever heard of him complaining about it.”

“Well he has now, and I vote that we respect his wishes. All those in favor, say aye. Aye.” She just shook her head, smiling.

“Aye. What are we going to do about Warrick and Reiko? Should we talk to them?”

“I don’t know, I’m of two minds about that one. Part of me says that we should let Jonas talk to Warrick like he did me, the other part thinks we should help him out and do it for him. The more we’re talking about this the more sympathy I have for the guy.”

“I think we should give it another day, let’s wait until after the games tomorrow, just in case Warrick decides to get some shots in beforehand.” What the heck, Harry thought, one more day wouldn’t make much of a difference.

“Fair enough, that makes sense. And don’t get any ideas about setting her up with Drew either, now that you’ve given up on the Jonas idea.” Sophie started giggling.

“No Harry, I was not going to say that. I don’t think they fit well together, Drew and Claudia.....actually, I think Claudia kind of intimidates him.” Yes she did, thought Harry, and he knew that while Drew didn’t dislike Claudia, he wasn’t 100 percent fond of her either. They had spoken a little on this at their Wizard Chess game last week.

“Let’s not fix her up at all, and allow her to set her own pace there. I think everyone will benefit from the quiet on that front.” Sophie agreed, and the two of them set an example by ceasing to talk for a good long while.

9:00 am

Joe Clancy had needed a new door that morning, after he had to use Reducto multiple times to get out of his room, it turned out that he had not gone in to change, but to retire for the night. He immediately marched down to Heyman's office to demand an investigation. Heyman was no dummy, and suspected what had happened, though he doubted he would be able to prove anything. It wasn't lost on him that Clancy provoked a lot of these incidents, what with his condescending style and arrogant manner. It was worth noting that no one had actually physically assaulted him as of yet, and as much as Heyman gently mocked Warrick publicly and privately, he was mildly impressed that the larger boy had held back from what he likely dearly wanted to do. Heyman's great fear though, is that Clancy would do more to provoke Harry, who the Deputy Headmaster thought was more likely to pop him than Warrick was. Murray had told him all about the Potter/Draco Malfoy rivalry, with information gotten from Professor Hill back at Hogwarts. He thought it unlikely that Harry would put up with someone like that again, and was a young man who wouldn't rule out violence to settle his problems..

"Joe, I think you should just let this lie, and have a chuckle about it. Someone was playing a prank on you, and it worked. They were trying to get you worked up like this." Clancy was a very tall, reed thin fellow, with pale skin that somewhat resembled Snape's. He was proficient most in the non-wand classes, indeed, he had declined to continue with Charms, Defense, and Transfiguration, preferring to concentrate on the others: Arithmancy, Potions, Ancient Runes, Astronomy, and Herbology, the only one in the NEWT years to have that combination.

"My door was somehow sealed shut, and I had to destroy it to leave my room this morning. If this goes unchecked, who knows what will come next."

"Joe, you are not very popular in Cortez House, and you do not seem to mind this. You have to know that there is a price to pay for that." Heyman had tried the tack a few times before, with about the same success that he was having here.

"At least find out who do it."

“So you can get revenge?” Clancy didn’t deny this.

“So I can know who is after me, and prepare accordingly.” Well there was no harm in that.

“All right Joe, I’ll take a look at the door. Let’s go.” The two of them walked upstairs to the fourth floor and Cortez. As they got there, they passed by the Cortez Quodpot team on their way to the stadium. As it happened, none of them were junior year students, Harry, Reiko, and Warrick being the only athletes in that class. Breakfast had just ended, and a few students were congregating in the Lounge, some just waiting for the game to start, but most had heard the destruction of the door, and were waiting to see what happened.

Heyman went to the door, which was laying on the ground in about five pieces. He examined the frame, and found exactly.....nothing. He scanned it for any spells, and again found nothing. Clancy was standing behind him, growing more frustrated by the beat.

“There’s nothing here Joe, they either erased their tracks while you were gone, or you destroyed the evidence with your barrage.”

“Check Forrester’s wand then, you know he did it, either that or his new buddy Potter.”

“No I don’t know that Joe, and this does not warrant a full inquiry. Keep in mind also that if Forrester had not made friends with Harry, you would not have a room to yourself. Now, I’ll have Raffles send an elf to come fix your door, just sit tight for a few minutes.” This was a new tack for Heyman, not backing Clancy, and the younger man wasn’t liking it.

“Forrester is responsible, he’s trying to provoke me into something.”

“No I’m not you dick. I had nothing to do with.....whatever the heck happened here.” Warrick himself was now walking out of his room next door, Harry right behind him. He looked disgustedly at his former roommate, having heard most of the talk. Heyman figured he should at least ask.

“Warrick, you had nothing to do with this?”

“No I did not Professor Heyman, though I’m glad I wasn’t still asleep what with all the noise going on next door.” To prove himself, he offered his wand to Heyman, handle first.

“Feel free to check it if you want to.” He motioned to Harry, who did the same.

“Same here, you can check my wand too if you want to.” Heyman mentally debated for a second, were they bluffing or not.....but figured the best way to calm Clancy down was to check them. He took Harry’s first, and did a check of it.....and the spells that came out would have been useless in this case, mostly Silencing Spells and Transfiguration Spells that he had been practicing. Likewise Warrick’s wand proved to be innocent as well. After handing them back, Heyman looked at Clancy.

“Satisfied Joe?” The boy certainly did not look especially satisfied, but he knew when he was beaten.

“Fine, maybe it was someone else then.” This had a notable lack of sincerity attached to it, but he said nothing else. Warrick and Harry nodded politely at Heyman and walked off, and only started smiling when their backs were turned. They waited until they got to the Lounge to say anything

“Good thing it was Sophie who removed the glue and the Listening Charm.” The Listening Charm had been put there so they could not only hear the fireworks, but, if possible, send someone up to erase any evidence.

“Yes, my lady was on the ball wasn’t she? Nice trick with the wand, offering it to Heyman.”

“I thought for a second that he wouldn’t even check it, I guess he did it to shut Clancy up.”

“Oh man, the look on his face.” They started laughing as the girls came up to them. Reiko lightly swatted her boyfriend on the back of his head, but was grinning.

“I guess it worked.” Harry looked behind them, Heyman was just now coming into the Lounge, and the Deputy Headmaster did not even give the foursome a second glance as he left the room. Clancy followed a few minutes later, as his door was apparently now fixed. He walked right up to them, figuring that they wouldn’t do anything to him with this many witnesses.

“I know it was one of you.”

“You need to calm down Joe, so you had some trouble leaving your room, hardly worth this much trouble.”

“Oh shut up Potter, you may think you’re some badass, but you’re just a punk who thinks he’s bigger than he is.” Harry just fixed him with a half smile, he had heard this kind of crap before.....only this idiot didn’t have Crabbe and Goyle to protect him. He spoke softly, so that only the five of them could hear him.

“Don’t do this Joe, don’t take us on. There’s no possible way you can win, and we will make you look bad while losing. Don’t do it.”

“Are you threatening me Potter?”

“No, I’m just telling you what will happen if you make trouble for us like you just did, being a tattletale, with no proof to boot. You leave well enough alone, and so will we, that’s the deal on the table. A smart man would take it.”

Clancy showed what he thought of the deal by turning his back and walking away, with as much dignity as he could muster. Reiko looked at Harry thoughtfully, but with a grin.

“I’m really glad I’m your friend Harry, I wouldn’t want you talking to me that way.” Harry grinned back.

“I never will Reiko, don’t worry. I think he got the message though.” Warrick had a mock evil look on his face at that moment.

“The only trouble is, we’re not going to hold up our end of the bargain, are we?”

“Well he never agreed to the deal now did he? So we’re not obligated to forgo our fun at his expense. We’ll get him again tonight after the games.” Clancy had been spotted at the Quidditch games the day before, so he would be going again today probably.....even jerks are allowed to like sports, and indeed Clancy was a big Quodpot fan.

The four of them met Claudia downstairs, and they toddled off to the game.

The order of the games was reversed this morning, so Shawnee was playing Jefferson. This would be Harry’s first Quodpot game, and while he had watched a couple of the Cortez practices, he still had trouble imagining an entire game of it. There did not appear to be a ‘Quodpot Through the Ages’ kind of book for him to read, and Quidditch Through the Ages devoted just a couple of paragraphs to it. Still, the game was the number one sport in Wizard America, and was steadily gaining ground on Quidditch in Canada, Central America, and South America as well. The Quodpot World Cup had been held last year outside Colon, Panama, and attendance had never been higher, with The United States defeating Suriname handily in the final. The best European finish was San Marino, who had been eliminated in the Round of Eight.

How Quodpot was set up was this: There were 11 players on each side, all of them Quod handling players, with no Keeper. The Quod was a modified Quaffle, that looked more like a soccer ball than what the Quidditch people used, and it was charmed to explode at random times.....sometimes it exploded after five seconds, some after five minutes. The school record was nine minutes, and had happened over 20 years earlier. The 11 players were spread all over the air in soccer style formations, with a smallish cauldron at each end, with a barrier surrounding it, allowing no player to get within a three meter radius of it, hence, no Keepers. The idea was for teams to pass the Quod around the air and get it into the opposing team's cauldron.....all before the Quod exploded, when that happened, the team that did so was awarded a point. When the Quod exploded, and there was absolutely no warning when it did, the player who touched it last was sent off the field, unless the referee declared that it was a legitimate shot on goal, then the player was not sent off, and a new Quod brought out. The exploding stung a little bit, but all players wore magically enhanced goggles, so none of the remains of the ball hit anything vital.

The game lasted one hour, or when a team reached 10 goals, which ever happened last.....or when a team ran out of players, and that team could still lose even if it was ahead in goals, as the other team would have the rest of the game to score. This was to avoid slowdown type games, as was the rule that each team had to have at least one goal every 15 minutes, or the other team was awarded a goal by default. So fortune did not favor the meek in Quodpot, and the games were generally very fast affairs, and the average winning score was somewhere around 30 at school games, and 20 or so in professional games, where the players played better defense.

The stands were packed full this day, as everyone from school was attending, as well as hundreds of alumni and other interested parties. The announcer for this game was John Ryan, the senior Potions teacher. He was an older man, another former Auror whose side passion had always been Potions. After 10 years in Auror Command, he quit to pursue his real love. He in fact was not at all pasty either, rumor had it he spent his weekends on the beach in Florida, where he usually came back with a nice tan, grading essays amidst the sands.

“Welcome one and all to the first Quodpot game of the season! This morning we have Shawnee House taking on the defending champion Jefferson!” Ryan introduced the teams, Jonas was playing something called Center Midfield, and the celebrity referee was Don Frey of the Milwaukee Dragons of the professional league, a graduate of Salem five years earlier.

“And the Quod is up, Harris of Jefferson grabs it, passes it to Jonas Steele, who charges up the field.....no, he flips it to Hailey, Hailey shoots.....no, it bangs off the top of the cauldron, Anderson of Shawnee grabs the rebound and sends it up the field.” The teams were cold first three minutes, and the Quod had not exploded yet, until:

BOOM!

Weaver got showered with Quod remains, and dejectedly flew to the ground, it had been the first time all game he got to handle the Quod. A new Quod was brought out of the special barrel holding them, and Jefferson took it over. Jonas was like a laser with his passing, which was his major strength, and Jefferson soon took advantage:

“Bouton passes to Steele, who makes another rush at the goal, he’s approaching the barrier, he shoots.....no, he passes to Hailey, and Hailey shoots.....he scores! Jefferson goes up 1-0 on a goal by Senior forward Art Hailey.” Hailey raised his arms, and the Jefferson crowd was yelling even louder than before.

“Shawnee takes the Quod, Malina to Rydell, say hi to your granddad for me Jeff.” Jeff Rydell’s grandfather had preceded Murray as the Head of the school. “Rydell shoots.....no, it’s snatched out of the air by Bouton, he whips a long pass up field to MacFadyen...who flies right over the goal and drops it in perfectly, goal for Jefferson!” Angus MacFadyen, whose grandparents were Scottish natives who had graduated from Hogwarts, scored his first goal in two years, having been shut out the previous year.

Shawnee eventually went down 6-0 and another Quod exploding, before they got their first goal, but their joy was short lived as Jonas scored back to back goals, though in between Jefferson had a person sent off with a face full of Quod. Then Shawnee caught their, well their first wind, and rattled off three goals out of the next four, putting the score at 8-4. The Shawnee crowd, tantalized by three second place finishes in a row in the Quodpot Cup, started chanting:

“Our Year! Our Year!”

The Jefferson team didn't really appreciate that, and Jonas and Bouton started preying on Shawnee's better offensive players with a fury, stealing the Quod time after time, leading to easy goals by Bouton and Hailey, the two Senior stars on the team. No other squad had a top threesome even remotely as talented as Jefferson did with Bouton, Hailey, and Jonas, and it was showing, as the Jefferson lead inexorably went higher and higher.

The game got a little bit interesting just after the halfway point, when Jefferson had three players sent off in a four minute span, allowing Shawnee to get the score back to 24-10.....but that was to be their highlight of the match, as Jefferson did everything they could to force Shawnee to hold the Quod as long as possible, with more Quods in the face resulting. The Shawnee fans stayed into it until the bitter end, and did not let the Jefferson cheering squad drown them out, at least avoiding that defeat. At the end of the game, Ryan was hoarse, as he announced the final.

“So what did you think of your first Quodpot game?”

“It was interesting, probably easier to watch than Quidditch, since you only have to follow one ball. You sure you don’t want to go out for the team next year? You were really into it.”

“It’s fun to be a spectator for it, but I don’t really like playing it. You looked like you were having fun.”

“It was a blast, Jonas was amazing, I’ve never seen Quidditch players pass that well, and our ball is a lot easier to grab than the Quod.”

“Yeah, our boy is going to make a lot of money in two years. The Quodpot World Cup is only three years away, he’ll be playing in it.” They got to the main gates, and looked back and saw Jonas surrounded by his Quod groupies, all of whom were vying for his attention.....him being the only star player who was single. Harry thought the gang had been exaggerating that in their stories, but they had actually kind of downplayed it. Lunch was fun, with the highlight being Claudia standing up and singing Jonas’ favorite song, Train in Vain, by The Clash. This was the result of a bet made the week before, though Claudia had a 15 goal handicap, all to no avail.

The second match of the day could charitably be called a debacle for Cortez, as they lost 23-3 to Proctor, many of whose very happy fans could be heard chanting:

“Too bad Potter can’t play Quodpot too!”

Harry heard enough of this that he was moved, in the middle of the action, to put Sonorus on his throat and shoot back.

“Just give me time folks!”

The Cortez faithful started howling with laughter at that, and started cheering their team on all the louder, even as the game got further and further out of reach. At the one hour mark, Cortez was down to six players, and Proctor had four.....as well as the victory. Proctor did not rub it in too much as everyone left the stadium, and the Cortez kids were safe in the knowledge that they had a crappy team and that there was nothing they could do about it. Jefferson was the most pleased, they were the only House to have won both their games over the weekend, and were in first place in both Quidditch and Quodpot.

Harry, Warrick, Reiko, and Sophie wandered back to the main building, collecting Claudia along the way, figuring to go into the trunk to plan the next Joe Clancy mission. They looked for Jonas, but couldn't find him as they walked indoors. They decided to go up to Jefferson, perhaps he had gotten there ahead of them. Along the way, they mused about diversifying their target list. Reiko was interested in maybe pranking Poole, the Caretaker. Claudia put the kibosh on that one.

“Uh uh, no way. He's considered a member of the faculty, if we get him, they will investigate a lot harder than they would a student, even if what we do is benign.”

“Then we have to do something not easy to trace, something that doesn't use any WWW products, something simple, elegant.” They argued about this for a couple more minutes, as they reached the Jefferson Lounge.....at just the same time Drew did, coming from down the hall, there was more than one stairwell.

“Hey guys, looking for Jonas?” They nodded.

“Come on in, he's probably in the Lounge or in our room.” He opened the door, and they walked in after him. The Lounge was just filling up with kids returning from the game, and Jonas did not appear to be in the room. Drew hadn't sat with him, so he wasn't sure where he would be. They followed him down to his and Jonas' room, and Drew waved his hand in front of the door, and it silently came open. He walked in without really looking, and the others followed him.....and what they saw:

Jonas and his girl had removed clothes, but not bothered to let the curtain down. Jonas looked up only when everyone gasped. He was more than a little surprised, as was his girl.....who Harry vaguely knew as a Proctor from his and Warrick's Transfiguration class. She was the first one to say anything actually.

"Would you people mind leaving us alone?" Harry and friends immediately filed out the door, as Drew very calmly used his wand and pulled down the curtain on Jonas' bed, and stuck a Silencing Charm on the bed to boot. He grabbed some homework materials from his desk, and walked nonchalantly out of the room.

Once out in the hallway, they all stood there, a bit embarrassed. Claudia had a tightlipped smile on her face that greatly reminded Harry of McGonagall, though he chose not to mention this comparison out loud. Warrick, as usual, broke the ice.

"Gosh, that was awkward. Lovely day outside, wasn't it Drew?" Drew was always walking in on various roommates and their girls, so he was more casual about it than anyone.

"It sure was, a nice day to play Quodpot, yes definitely." Harry got in on it, as they slowly walked back down the hall.

"I wonder what we'll be having for dinner, I'd love some lasagna I think." Drew saw one of his other roommates coming at them in the hall, he discreetly waved him off, and he did a 180. He continued.

"You never know with the elves, one week a couple of years ago they got all strange on us and served hamburgers for 12 meals straight, you remember that Sophie?"

"I do, Murray had to beg them to change the menu. Reiko, do you remember what set them off?"

"I don't think the faculty ever told us did they? Claudia, do you remember?"

"I'm fine Reiko, we can all stop pretending, though you were all doing a nice job of it. Jonas is single and free to do what he wants. I have no hold over him." Her voice was very tight, but it was perfectly clear that she wasn't crying. Harry agreed with everything she was saying, though it wasn't apparent that anyone else did too. He decided to end the awkwardness.

"C'mon mates, let's get out of here. Jonas will join us when he's ready." Aside from Drew, for obvious reasons, they all split up to respective rooms for a time, and met up again at dinner. Jonas, to his credit, did not act the least bit ashamed of what he had done. Nobody really froze him out, and even Claudia chatted with him for a bit, though not as much as she normally did.

Between the incident and the meal, Harry and Warrick had a long talk about Jonas' wishes on the teasing subject, and his non-feelings about Claudia. Warrick was a bit torn, feeling that his loyalty might be being stretched. Just because Jonas had been the only other guy in their group for so long, did not mean that Warrick saw him as his best friend. While he had never technically used that label out loud, he had always thought of Reiko that way, even before their feelings developed. Harry did his best to calm him. It was strange for him too, as he spent about the same amount of time with both Jonas and Claudia, and spent much more with Sophie, Warrick, and Reiko.

"Don't worry, Claudia won't force him out over this, you just watch."

"How can you be so sure Harry?"

"Because if she does, it will show that it has gotten under her skin, and I'm betting she'll cut her left pinky off before she let's that happen."

"Where would you stand if she tried?"

"Warrick mate, Jonas did nothing wrong, other than not closing the curtain.....that was as close as I've come to seeing a porn film. He is single and can do what he wants, so yeah, that's where I come out in this."

"Sophie's with you?"

"Well she was before we saw all that, now, I don't know."

“Well Reiko will kill me for saying this, but I agree with you.” There was a knock on the door, and Sophie and Reiko came in seconds later. They wound up agreeing that Claudia was not likely to push the matter, and that they would do everything they could to smooth things over if she did. Jonas was not around after dinner, because of the party Jefferson was throwing to celebrate their dual wins this weekend.....Cortez had theirs a day early, knowing they wouldn't need one on Sunday. They left Clancy alone that night, Harry had scanned his door and found multiple alarm and surveillance charms.....fortunately Harry and Sophie were under his Invisibility Cloak, having suspected something like this. They would have to wait for a better moment, when they had him in the open.

Claudia did not press anything, though she stopped spending any time alone with Jonas.....who was not in fact dating the girl they caught him with, her name was Karen Bosworth by the way, and Harry and Warrick had dutifully ignored her in Transfiguration the next day. Other than that though, things stayed relatively normal for our players, who were all anxiously awaiting their Flackter Alley day on Saturday.

Great Lakes Dining Hall

10:00 am

The first of the Flackter Alley days was now upon them, and today was the day for the upperclassmen to go. At Great Lakes the only the eldest four years were permitted to leave campus on these weekends, the school not trusting the younger three years to be let loose in muggle Milwaukee. The school was big enough, at about 335 students total and 190 or so eligible for Flackter Alley visits, to need two days to get them all in. So Harry and his fellow Juniors, and the Seniors were to go today, with the Apprentice and Transition students to go the next day. Exceptions were made on a case by case basis, but there usually weren't many requested.

Murray looked at the assembled students, all 101 of them. She was always nervous on days like this, it only took one incident to get them into trouble.

“Remember the rules, no underage magic is to be used in Flackter Alley, and no magic of any kind is to be used in muggle Milwaukee unless your lives are in peril, that means you Seniors. Everyone is to be back at the portkey point by 5:30 pm, no exceptions. Any questions?”

There were no questions, as everyone was anxious to get going. Two teachers were going along too, in part to man the portkey point, in part to be there in case of emergencies. There weren't to be any official chaperones on this trip, though there would be the next day. The kids going today were all veterans of two or three years of Flackter visits, not counting summertime, and it was figured that if they couldn't be trusted, who could? Plus, if there were incidents, then the next trip, in middle December, would be in jeopardy. That was Christmas shopping season, and no one wanted to miss that.

The kids gathered in groups of five or six around the portkeys, and one by one, the popped away. The teachers had gone first, and shuffled the groups quickly out of the portkey point, which was right near the gateway to muggle Milwaukee. This wasn't like the summer trip, so there wasn't a ball bat to hang on to or anything, the return portkeys were in the hands of the teachers. Like many of the students, the sextet headed for the bank, saying goodbye to Drew in the process. He was going right to Milwaukee proper to spend the day with his father.

Sophie and Claudia, who both came from problem families, got a specific amount of spending money for each Flackter Alley visit, because of their scholarships. Claudia's family could redefine the term 'dysfunctional', and due to their instability, the American Ministry had authorized them to be Obliviated of Claudia's magical ability and her exact whereabouts during the school year. They still sent her the occasional letter via the muggle mail drop, but it was not a close relationship. Harry knew all about these kinds of families, and to himself, speculated that a lot of Claudia's relationship hang-ups came from her parents. Likewise, there were Listening charms all over Sophie's parents' house, just in case they got loose lipped.....though they had not as of yet, and Sophie was unwilling to have them Obliviated, she wanted them to love her for what she was, not for what she was pretending to be. Claudia had had no say, as her parents' behavior had caused a few incidents even during her Novice year.

Jonas had wealthy parents back in Chicago, and Reiko was fine too, as teachers in the Wizard world made very nice salaries. Warrick had finally fessed up to Harry that his uncle played for the Indiana Pacers basketball team, and was always slipping him money, even though Warrick's parents were unwilling to take the same.....his father was a wandmaker, his mother worked for the muggle municipal government in Indianapolis. His uncle hadn't been willing to front the cost of a trunk like Harry's though, Warrick had told him laughingly. There was only so much fat on the calf apparently. He promised to take Harry to a game during the Christmas Break.

After the kids got their money, they wandered around for a time, showing Harry a bit more of Flackter Alley than he had seen before. It was somewhat like Diagon Alley in the composition of the shops, though it was more spread out. Harry had his eye on a couple of places that would be perfect for another WWW store, if Fred and George ever decided to expand over here. There were no books to buy this time, and all their supplies were kept up to date by Dobby and Winky, who had been happy to go to the Apothecary for Warrick and Reiko, or to the Stationary Store for Claudia. Most other students didn't have this luxury though, and these stores and more got a healthy business, as they would the next day as well.

The one store they did need to go to was to get Harry a set of dress robes. He had shot up a whole inch over the last few months, and his robes were showing a bit too much sock. He chalked it up to a lower stress level than in years past, as well as a month less of the Dursleys and not being starved half to death.....as he had eaten well since the day he hired Dobby, and could send out for food. Sophie was insisting, and Harry knew better than to argue.....though he still tried, if only to keep the illusion that he had a say in things like this.

“Do I have a choice in this?” She grabbed his arm and yanked him along.

“Not really, no. Hey, look at the bright side, it’s better than a poke in the eye.”

“How much better?” Men, Sophie thought. But for all of Harry’s leadership abilities in battle, he knew that he was better off picking his battles and saving chits for the big ones.....though there had been no big ones as of yet.....thank goodness.

They entered The Playground, the new Wizard fashion shop that had opened up in the fall, with Harry threatening full pranking retaliation to the girls if they kept him in there more than 15 minutes. They took him half seriously, and only had him being pinned and measured for about 20 minutes or so. The three women, with Jonas and Warrick mocking Harry all the way, decided that purple was a great color for him, and forced him to order his dress robes in that color. Harry really didn’t care that much either way, and for fun, also ordered a robe in fluorescent green, just to have some fun with it all. After making arrangements to pick the robes up at the end of the afternoon, they went back up toward the gateway.

The original thinking was that they would split up for lunch, the two couples going off by themselves, and Jonas and Claudia going somewhere.....but last weeks’ events had cast a pall on that plan. The two were perfectly nice to each other, but there seemed to a warmth barrier between them.....and we’re not talking about a magical barrier either. They all decided to go to a Mexican place that Drew, who had grown up in Milwaukee, had recommended to them. It was near a Halloween Costume Shop, and they all had stuff to buy for the big party that was less than two weeks away now.

Once done eating the delicious food.....the elves weren’t big on trying interesting dishes to cook, they knew they were cooking for the masses.....they decided to save the Costume Shop for last, as they didn’t want to carry things around if they didn’t have to, and Harry had no interest in being caught using his wand. The girls went into a muggle fashion boutique, and the boys made straight for a video arcade.....cliché yes, but fun was had by all in spite of it. On the way over to a record store, Harry made a point of walking next to Reiko.

“Did you do it?”

“I got you, you’ll be squared away on our next visit.” Harry had asked Reiko to watch Sophie, to see if there was anything that really grabbed her. If so, he’d be paying a visit there during the next trip, to get it for her for Christmas.

They spent a couple of hours in the record store, which sold mostly used CD’s and a lot of imports and bootlegs, and had a bunch of listening stations to sample songs. Harry’s ignorance of muggle music was highlighted as he hadn’t heard of most of these bands, so he stuck with ones he had heard of. He had a stereo rigged up in the trunk, and Warrick had done some kind of mishmash to get it to play correctly, despite the magic. After wandering around for awhile, window shopping, it was getting on to 3:30 pm, and they adjourned to the Halloween Shop.

Harry and Sophie had been debating on what to go as, they wanted to do something either romantic, or funny.....or romantically funny. Reiko and Warrick always went for the funny, and quickly picked out matching superhero outfits. She was going as Storm, from the X-Men comics, and he was going to be Batman.....well they were matching in that they were both comic book superheroes anyway. Jonas had a thing for American football, so he bought a Packers jersey and helmet from the sporting goods store next door, he would be a magical Brett Favre for a night. Claudia made a joke of her tallness, and got a costume that showed her off as a living Statue of Liberty. Sophie was despairing of finding anything for the two of them, when she saw the perfect thing in the corner.....when she was a girl, she had loved a comic strip called Calvin and Hobbes, and the costume in the corner was an unlicensed Calvin and Hobbes kit. Guess who gets to play Hobbes?

Yep, Harry was short, but he still had Sophie by three inches, so he was told that he was going in the tiger suit, while her outfit was one of Calvin's t-shirts and a pair of shorts like he was drawn in. Sophie's own brown hair would be turned blond and spiky for the event. This was another Americanism that Harry wasn't familiar with, beyond a recollection that Sophie had told him about the comic strip. She remedied that by excusing the two of them for a few minutes, as they went up the block to a bookstore, and Harry was instructed to buy one of the books.....and he did her better by purchasing the whole set.

"You can borrow them whenever you want, I'm sure they're great."

"They are, you'll wonder where they've been all your life."

"I've had that feeling a lot these last few months." They squeezed hands tightly, and went back to join the others, with Harry fully loaded down with shopping bags. They went back into Flackter Alley, and after Harry gratefully shrunk all of their packages, they picked up Harry's robes. They had 20 minutes to kill, but Harry had one place he wanted to go. Drew had just gotten in, and they collected him to come along.

"I want to go into that Magical Objects Shop over there and get myself a pensieve."

"I thought you were going to have the twins get you one?"

"Well they're kind of busy lately Drew, and I'm assuming they're shadowed in some way, either by Dumbledore, The Ministry, or the bad folk. I don't want any of those groups to think that the twins have a pensieve, because the next logical step is that they bought it for me. Besides, they do a lot of stuff for me, I can do this little bitty thing."

They headed straight for the shop, and 10 minutes later, Harry was the proud owner of a medium sized pensieve.....which he didn't take on the portkey back, he had Dobby come fetch it. Right before the portkey left, Harry was feeling satisfied about his last purchase.

"Now you guys can see some of my adventures back over there. I'm sure you'll love the Dementors."

“I’m sure I won’t Harry, but thank you for thinking of us.”

“Anytime Claudia, I’m always here to help.”

10:30 am

Cortez Lounge

This was Harry’s off morning, and he was on the computer writing his Muggle Studies term paper, due Thanksgiving Wednesday. The 20 page paper dealt with a mythical run for the muggle Presidency by his ‘perfect’ candidate. This was his third go round with it, and he was up to 11 pages when he felt a tug on his sleeve.....it was an ashen faced Dobby.

“No ‘pop’ this time, that was a nice job sneaking up on me.....” He trailed off, Dobby’s eyes were even wider than usual, if that’s possible.

“Harry, you must come with me now.” The last time he’d heard this line, the twins had been visiting.

“Fred and George are here? Isn’t the shop still open?”

“No Harry, we must go to Professor Murray’s office, this is very important.” Harry shrugged, and saved his material from the computer, pocketing the disk. They went downstairs to the third floor and the Headmistresses office. Harry didn’t ask any questions of his small friend, figuring that if Dobby wanted to tell him, he would do it without him asking. Once there, Harry knocked on the door, and were bade to enter.

“Good morning ma’am.”

“Good morning Harry, what can I do for you?” He looked at Dobby.

“Umm.....good question ma'am. Dobby has something to share with us, I guess he wanted you to hear it at the same time I did.”

“Have a seat, both of you.” They did, and Dobby nervously cleared his throat, scooting up in his chair.

“Harry, Professor.....this morning Winky and I were in Flackter Alley, doing some food shopping. While we were walking toward the grocer, we heard a man speaking, and he sounded very out of place.” Harry and Murray were both staring at each other in confusion, where was this going? Dobby answered it now.

“The strange part of it Harry, is that he talked like you.....just like you.” Oh boy, Harry knew this wouldn't be good.

“You don't just mean with an English accent, do you?”

“His accent was just like yours Harry, from Surrey.” How Dobby knew a Surrey accent from any other was a bit of a mystery, but he certainly sounded sure of it. Murray saw her student go a bit pale.

“Harry, you look worried, what's going on?” Harry had to think for a moment.

“Dobby, what did this man look like?” Dobby could do better than a verbal description.

“Winky had a pencil in her pocket, and she used the back of our shopping list to draw him. And Harry, when I got a good look at him, I recognized him. He was a visitor to Malfoy Manor many times, though I do not know his name.” He took the slip of paper out of his pocket, and handed it to Murray first. She waved her wand and enlarged the photo to triple it's size, a nifty spell that didn't impinge on the photo's clarity.

“This is pretty good, I remember you telling me that one of your elves can draw.....do you recognize him Harry?”

He looked at the picture, it was a pretty detailed likeness indeed. It looked very familiar, not that he knew the man, but a relative.....wham, it came upon him.

“This looks like one of my former classmates at Hogwarts, Gregory Goyle. His father was Death Eater implicated, but he was not in on the Department of Mysteries fiasco.....and while his son didn’t talk much at school, he has the brains of a dead fish, he did talk like he was from Surrey. I don’t think I would have put it together if not for the picture, and Dobby saying he had seen him before. Surrey kids weren’t all over the place at Hogwarts, but Goyle and I weren’t the only ones.”

“You’re sure about this?” Harry scratched his head for a second.

“No ma’am, not with 100 percent certainty, I’ve never actually laid eyes on the man I don’t think.....maybe at King’s Cross a time or two, but nothing that stands out. But that picture looks an awful lot like Goyle Jr. Plus, the Goyles are very thick with the Malfoys.” Murray contemplated this for a moment.

“Dobby, where did you see this man?”

“Outside the Apothecary.”

“Have you seen him before?”

“I cannot remember ma’am, though I have not heard speech like Harry’s here in America before, except for on the television.”

“Who was he talking to?”

“No one ma’am, he seemed to be muttering to himself. He was not talking to anyone that I could see, or into one of those mirrors, like Harry had.” Murray rose out of her chair, and threw some floo powder in the fireplace.

“Mitchell Baylor!” Within a few seconds, Baylor’s face was in the fire.

“Joanne, a pleasure. What can I do for you?”

“I need you to come over here for a minute, do you have some time now?”

“Just give me a minute, I’ll be right over.” It was three minutes actually, and then he came tumbling out. Mitchell Baylor was 46 years old, just over six feet tall, with a muscular build.....and looked very much like his youngest son, Drew.....his two other children, both daughters, had already graduated from Great Lakes. He brushed himself off, and turned toward the others. He knew who Harry was, but waited to be introduced.

“Mitchell, this is Harry Potter, and his house elf Dobby.”

“Harry Potter, pleased to meet you, Drew’s told me all about you.” They shook hands, and Baylor politely said hello to Dobby as well.

“Pleased to meet you too sir, and belated thanks for teaching him that Pulse spell.” Mitchell had an easy smile.

“Yes, he said that you got some good use out of it at your brouhaha back in England. Now I gather that there’s more to this meeting than an introduction to a future colleague.” At Murray’s signal, Dobby repeated his spiel from before, sounding less nervous, but no less sure of his findings.

“Well, well..... I can’t say I’m especially surprised Harry. If this Voldemort character is as smart as we’ve heard, he would have set up some kind of long-term surveillance on you. The Kindred play is still going well, but he would have wanted a Wizard in there too. He would want someone relatively expendable, which fits your description of the man.”

Once a week, Harry muggle mailed a fake diary of his outdoor movements to Mark Frankel in Chicago, who then edited them down to a single page to mail to Voldemort. There had been no indication that the bad man was on to them yet, and Harry had actually had a fun time 're-imagining' his Flackter Alley trip the previous weekend.

"What can we do about it?"

"Well that's the rub really, being a Dark Wizard isn't technically against the law here, you actually have to be doing things that would jeopardize the secret of our existence from the muggles, or helping our enemies. Dark Wizards here don't do that, they're just as invested in our system as we are. Harry, you didn't notice anyone following you last week in Milwaukee?"

"No, but in muggle Milwaukee I wasn't really checking. We didn't spend a lot of time in Flackter Alley, but I'm pretty sure I wasn't followed then."

"You checked yourself for tracking charms and the like?"

"A couple of times in Flackter, and again before we took the portkey home. I didn't find any on me." Baylor thought, and checked his watch a moment.

"Well let me head back to the office a second and contact your British Aurors Harry, if this Goyle is wanted for any crimes there, we can pick him up for that."

"You think he'll be easy to find?"

"Dobby, did you or your friend get any sense that this man was aware that you were watching him."

"No sir, it took Winky a couple of minutes to do her sketch, and he never even looked at us."

"Good, then we take him quickly and easily. I'm sure he's watchful, but if he's a dullard like you say his son is, then I'm not too worried. Excuse me, I'll be right back." He went back through the floo, to the international connection that he had in his office. Rufus Scrimgeour's proposed meeting with Harry had not taken place yet, though Harry had read that Rufus had been in Boston the week before. He hoped there were no hard feelings from the man about his declining of the League invitation.

“What are you thinking Harry?”

“I’m thinking that if he talks to Rufus, it’s possible nothing could happen. He’s got a hard enough time governing right now without it being seen by the press that the Americans are doing his detective work for him. Plus, he might be a bit ticked at me for shunning the League. If it’s Travis? He’ll just be glad to have another potential headache gone. I don’t know about Bones, the only time I’ve really talked to her is that day in here, it’s hard to get a handle on her.”

“You’re becoming quite the political mind Harry, something tells me you weren’t before.”

“Well its Professors Lyman and Ziegler, they’ve had quite the influence on me.” Baylor came back through the floo a few moments later.

“Well I talked to Travis Biller, and he very quickly asked me to have him picked up. He is wanted for a few minor crimes over there, plus helping your Voldemort, a wanted man. It’s enough for me, and for Jacobson too. Harry, you don’t mind if I take this sketch with me?”

“Of course not sir, be my guest.” The older man shrunk it back to normal size, and pocketed it.

“I’ll let you two know when there are any developments. House elves catching a spy in our midst, I really have seen everything now, I might as well retire.” Dobby had a large smile on his face now.

“Are you going after him right now Mitchell?”

“I’m going to take a team down to Flackter Alley now, yes Joanne. I see no reason to wait, I’m curious as to how deep this Voldemort’s spy net goes. I don’t like it when foreign bad folk muck around on our side of the pond.” From his initial position, he seemed to be warming up to the idea of catching Goyle by the moment.

“Anyway, I’m off.” Baylor went back through the floo to his office, where he had a group of his Aurors assembling. Mitchell was the head of the Milwaukee Auror Command, one of five regional Auror Commands around the country. He had 60 Aurors working for him, plus support staff. He dusted himself off, and quickly made copies of the Winky sketch. He handed them out to the five person team, called a Pod, that would be going with him.

“This is the man we’re looking for. His name is Gregory Goyle, age 39, and is a wanted man in Great Britain for numerous crimes. He is a Dark Wizard ally of that Voldemort character, and will have a tattoo of a snake on his arm. The kid he’s spying on, Harry Potter, is a friend of my son’s, so I’ll be going with you this one time. Brian, are you ready?” Brian McCann, a small 33 year old, was the team leader of Pod 5, and he nodded his assent. They weren’t that well trained at taking down other wizards, indeed there had been so much peace lately for Wizards in America, that most Aurors had never killed anyone in the line of duty. They took the floo into Flackter Alley, sketches in their pockets, and fanned out. Like Aurors in Britain, they did not wear uniforms, so Goyle never really had a chance at evading them.

Gregory Goyle Sr. had been loitering around Flackter Alley for the better part of two months now, and up until this week at least, had not gained much attention from it’s regular denizens. He had not gone so far as to get a job, and thus kept his wandering somewhat limited, time wise. He often wondered why Voldemort had even put him here, Potter was hundreds of kilometers away, and as far as Goyle could tell, had only come into the Alley that once. Harry was wrong when he guessed that no one was following him though. Through Voldemort and Snape, Goyle had unlimited amounts of Polyjuice Potion, and had enough different samples of people, that he had followed Harry everywhere he went while in muggle Milwaukee. People rarely talked about Harry, except after The Battle of the Ministry, and a few comments after the Quidditch game. He didn’t complain though, at least not to Voldemort directly. He had read all about the Battle of the Ministry, and was actually a little relieved that he had been out of that fire. A few days earlier, while checking up on him, Pettigrew had told him there was no schedule for bringing him back yet, and to sit tight. The problem with sitting tight, was that he had nothing to do, and it was making him complacent, it was making him lazy.....it was making him mutter in his own accent.

McCann and his boys didn't take long to ferret out Goyle, he was near the Stationary store this time, and was distinctive enough that he stood out if you were looking for him. McCann and Baylor were the ones who saw him, McCann spoke surreptitiously into his mirror, drawing the others to the location. Baylor actually walked right past Goyle without giving him so much as a close look. He stationed himself right behind him, and subtly cast anti-Portkey and anti-Apparition wards around Goyle's area. McCann walked toward Baylor, but stopped right next to Goyle and started fumbling in his pockets, as if looking for something. He found it after about 30 seconds.....it was his wand, and he placed the tip right at Goyle's chest.

“ Raise your hands very slowly, don't make any sudden movements.” Goyle did not quite get the idea, and his right hand whipped up to a thick necklace he was wearing.

“Activate.” Nothing happened, but it was apparent that Goyle was not too gifted with accents, done under pressure, it was his normal one.

“Now why would you want to get away, if you've done nothing wrong? Mr. Goyle.” Goyle seemingly stayed still for a moment, but in reality he was trying futilely to Apparate.

“We put up wards against that kind of thing Goyle, and there are six wands on you right now, don't try anything. You're coming with us, no matter what Voldemort might want.” He used his non-wand hand and lifted Goyle's right sleeve.....and the Dark Mark was large and visible. He let the sleeve fall down, and relieved the Brit of his wand, which he tossed to one of his team members.

“Let’s go Goyle.” McCann took a portkey out of his pocket, and forced Goyle to grab it. They disappeared back to the office, while Baylor and the rest used the nearest floo.....portkeys not being cheap after all. Baylor went right to his office, where he floo called Murray, Jacobson, and Biller, in that order. After that was done, he headed right for interrogation room, where McCann, with his usual ruthless efficiency, had Goyle trussed up, and was about to administer Veritaserum. He got the nod from his boss, and three drops were placed in Goyle’s forcibly open mouth.

“What is your name?”

“Gregory Alan Goyle Sr.”

“How long have you been in The United States?”

“Since August 18th of this year.”

“Who sent you here?”

“Lord Voldemort.”

“Why did he send you over here?”

“He wanted me in place if we ever have to move on Potter.”

“Harry Potter?”

“Yes.”

“Have you ever been closer to his school than Flackter Alley?”

“No I have not, I haven’t yet left Milwaukee.”

“Have you seen Potter at all?”

“Yes.”

“When?”

“Last week, he was here with a bunch of his friends.”

“Did you follow him around?”

“I did, he spent most of his time in muggle Milwaukee, shopping.”

“Did you consider trying to take him out?”

“I thought about it, but I’m under orders not to touch him. I probably should have though, he’s very dangerous.”

“Where are you living while here?”

“I’m staying at a Holiday Inn in muggle Milwaukee.” Among the contents of Goyle’s pockets was a room key, with the Holiday Inn logo on the tag.

“Have you committed any crimes while you were here Goyle?”

“No.” Well that was neither here nor there really, but it would have been nice. Baylor and McCann left the room.

“Brian, go to my office and floo this information to Jacobson in Boston, and then send a man to his hotel room and get his things. I think we’re done with him for the moment.”

“Are the Brits coming to get him?”

“They are, Biller is sending a team, they should be here in about an hour he says. Just keep the guy locked up in the interrogation room, with the rest of your team guarding him. No sense taking any chances.”

“Got it. So this Potter kid is friends with Drew?”

“He is, they had a duel on the first day of Basic Combat and it was pretty good. After that, Potter just started to include Drew in things with his friends. He seems like a nice kid.”

“Not the calm killer that we read about in the paper?”

“Well I’m sure he’s that too, not a bad trait to have I suppose. He’s certainly decisive, I’ll grant him that. Jacobson saw his memory of that battle and told me about it, I wouldn’t want to face him alone in a dark alley.” McCann went off to update Jacobson, and Mitchell went back to Goyle’s holding pen to wait for the Brits.....who arrived 30 minutes later, led by Kingsley and Tonks. They took custody of the prisoner, and used a series of portkeys to take him back to The Ministry, via Boston, Reykjavik, Dublin, and on to London. No public mention was made of his arrest, and he was quickly shuffled off to Azkaban to await either trial, or prisoner exchange. Goyle only checked in through muggle mail, and his next report was not due for another week, so Voldemort had no idea that his spy had been removed.

Dining Hall, mail delivery time

Dear Harry,

Thank you for your letter from Sunday, I’m sorry I couldn’t get back to you before this, but I have had so much homework to get done. The new Potions teacher, Professor Shepherd, is much nicer than Snape was, but he gives a lot more homework. I don’t remember Professor Lupin giving this much either. Fewer classes does not mean less work, so I’m glad I stuck with just six.

The Quidditch game was last weekend, and I’m sorry to say that we lost. It was against Ravenclaw this time, and we lost 330-300, and Cho got the Snitch over Ginny. I’m relieved to say that Ron played better than the Ravenclaw Keeper, Katie Bell and Natalie McDonald had a field day on him. It was an exciting game, but I wish you had been in it. I'm glad that you won your game, your girlfriend is right, you are different when you're playing, in a good way of course.

By now you must know that Dumbledore got the information from your Voldemort battle from me, he invited me into his office to ask about the battle, and I did not really realize until afterward what had happened. Neville told me later that you surely would have assumed this would happen, so I hope you aren't angry with me. I remember you saying that your attorney got you some books on Occlumency, would it be a bother if I asked to borrow them? It sounds like a skill that will come in handy in the future. It makes me wonder why they don't just teach it here.

Ron and Neville have made peace, finally, though I would let it last a bit of time before you give Neville the Marauders Map again. From what Ginny says, they were a good team during the Ministry Battle, and that created a quick thaw in their relations. The problem is, it was replaced by Ron and Ginny now not getting along. I did not see it, but after you left the courtroom before lunch, Ginny slapped Ron hard across the face, and he told her if she ever did it again, she would regret it. She hasn't slapped him again, but that, in concert with her threatening him about Dean....well I think Ron has had enough. He talks to her only if he has to, though he's been much more friendly to Dean, if you can believe that. Overall though, he's much easier to be around than he was before the trial, and things are going fine between us.

Hogsmeade was canceled of course, but they are rebuilding the town now, and should have it all ready by Christmas. There is talk that we will be allowed to go to Diagon Alley for a visit in December, for Christmas shopping. I guess it all depends on the war. Speaking of the war, we're still boycotting the DA, but we decided not to make a big deal about it, to not attract so much attention. There are about 12 of us in the new club right now, all Gryffindors but Luna. Dumbledore hasn't mentioned anything about us not being there, either directly or through Professor Lupin.

I should go now, I have Prefect duty in a few minutes. I hope you are still doing well, and that we can make some kind of arrangement to see you during the Christmas Break. Take care of yourself Harry, we miss you.

Love,

Hermione

The students in the Dining Hall were fascinated with Pig, who had delivered Hermione's letter. He seemed to love the attention as well, as the standard line was:

"Oh he's so cute." Harry could even tell that Pig was preening, though he did look a bit tired. He sent the tiny owl down to hang out with Hedwig to rest up.

He checked his watch, and had Dobby gather all of his Occlumency material and deliver it to her after her classes were done.

The rest of the day went easily enough, with only Defense to contend with, and again, no mass duel, as Ripley had them doing more spell dodging. There was no need for an exercise period after you go through 90 minutes of spell dodging, and some of the kids were not doing too well afterward.....though everyone was looking forward to the party that night.

The party was in the Dining Hall, and was set to last from 6-9 pm, with all the years welcome. Special, themed, food was to be served, and the only cost of entry was a costume. Students who chose not to dress up, and there were always a few each year, could get a soup and sandwich dinner in their Lounges. In Harry's room, Rick and Terry quickly got ready and left, as a pirate and a muggle soldier, respectively.....leaving Warrick and Harry. Warrick's costume was actually pretty complicated, as it was the full deal, utility belt and all. Harry just had to rub some orange paint on his face, draw some whiskers, and climb into his tiger suit, which immediately started Warrick howling.

"You're really going to go out in public looking like that?"

“I wasn’t aware that I have a choice Warrick...besides, it doesn’t look that bad.” Warrick was still grinning widely.

“If you say so. Why not put a big “Whipped” sign on your back while you’re at it?”

“It would clash with the costume mate.”

“So you agree that you’re whipped.”

“It’s damn hard work too.” Harry grabbed a bag of WWW goodies, and left with as much dignity as he could muster.....though in truth he didn’t mind the costume. It was silly, but that was the whole point of Halloween wasn’t it?

He met up with Sophie in the Lounge, and she grinned when she saw him.

“That looks really good, we’ll make a great pair.” She had the Calvin look down pat.....if one could get past Calvin having a girl’s face, and breasts. Harry gave her a hug, and while doing so slipped his WWW stash into her pockets, given that he didn’t have any of his own. This was a two person mission tonight, none of the others were in on it.

They waited for Reiko and Warrick, who again started laughing at Harry, while Reiko was just looking at her boyfriend with an exasperated expression.....though to be fair, this was a frequent occurrence. They were to meet the others in the Dining Hall, so they went downstairs.

They were among the first to arrive, and they immediately hit the food tables, loading up on deviled eggs, and other themed snack things. Jonas and Claudia showed up within a minute of each other, and the place was full by 6:15. Entertainment was provided by the RWA, Radio Wizard America, whose show was piped into the room. Dancing was set up in the middle of the room, and as little as Harry had ever danced.....well he already looked ridiculous, so why not go for it. He dragged Sophie out on to the dance floor and they spent a good part of the evening there, and eventually Harry got the hang of it, Sophie already was a good dancer.

Every 20 minutes or so, Harry or Sophie would go get some punch, and a few minutes later the punch bowl contents would explode upward, showering everyone within range.....though coincidentally, Harry and Sophie never got wet. The twins had a new product, Liquid Cherry Bombs. They weren't made of liquid, but the explosion only affected liquid, so no punch bowls needed to be fixed. The cool thing about them is that there was a timer, anywhere from two seconds to ten minutes, all you had to do was place the tip of your wand on the cherry bomb and say the time out loud. This product was not on the market yet, it was still in the testing phase.....some of which testing was being done tonight.

They tried some familiar tricks as well, putting the Gravity Reversers in the candy bowl. The Cortez kids knew not to grab them, but there were 250 odd other kids who hadn't.....and it was a good thing that the girls wearing skirts were all wearing undergarments, because a lot of kids wound up on their hands for a few minutes. The faculty didn't mind all this mayhem, nobody was getting hurt, and a lot of people were laughing.

At Harry's request, the twins had whipped up a special batch of Talking Tattoos, only this time with dialogue that insulted the wearer. Harry and Sophie again took turns in 'accidentally sticking them on Joe Clancy, who had shown up dressed up in a professional Quodpot player, and a few others they considered to be unpleasant. The voices of the tattoos were quite loud, and this brought the teachers out into things.....until they realized it was a prank, then they just laughed and enjoyed the mayhem it was causing. Murray in particular had a feeling it was Harry and Warrick doing it, as she knew all about WWW and Harry's connection. She gave them points for creativity, and left it alone as long as no one got hurt. Offended she didn't mind, but hurt she would have.

The whole time, the other four were keeping their distance, and made sure they didn't touch anything they weren't sure of, allowing the pair to have their fun in their own way. Indeed Harry and Sophie were having a blast, they had agreed beforehand not to do anything like this during the Christmas Dance, but this was now being rethought. Their final flourish at the end involved a nice little combination charm that they put on the speakers in each of the four corners, and acted as a aural strobe, alternating the sound between super loud and super quiet on a irregularly rotating basis. Murray allowed this for a few minutes, but eventually tired of covering her ears, and stopped the music rather than try to remove the charms, as it was already 8:45. The two pranksters were shaking with laughter, and considered it a job well done for the night. On their way out the door, Murray stopped them for a second, and quietly said.

“Should I be thanking you two for providing the entertainment?” They just smiled at her, the nice Headmistress who had introduced them to each other. Sophie put her arm around Harry’s waist and replied.

“It was our pleasure ma’am.” They dissolved into giggles, and went upstairs, it had been a good night.

End Chapter

Author's Note: I'm revealing, sort of, who Warrick's NBA uncle is in this chapter, and for the record I have no idea if he has a sister period, let alone one that fits the criteria. The player will not make any direct appearances in the story, or at least not have any dialogue.

8:30 am breakfast mail call

Dining Hall

Dear Harry,

I half considered making this letter a Howler, but I acknowledge your good intentions and will do the same. Ginny has recently told me of your offer to pay for her and the others to finish their schooling with you in The United States. Whatever interest she may show about this offer when she writes you, I am telling you here and now that she will not be going. Great Britain is her home, and I will not see her driven from it either by war, or any feelings she may still have for you, however unrequited. My daughter is still a minor for another nine months, and by then it will be too late for her to decide to abandon her home. I'm not saying that I blame you for doing so Harry, and I've told Albus as much to his face, but she will not be going and that is final.

I have not mentioned Ron thus far, because you and I both know that he will not choose to accept your offer. Hermione has kept me well informed of his difficulties with you, and I feel confident in saying that he will finish at Hogwarts, war permitting. I know you meant your offer for the best Harry dear, but please do not put such ideas in front of my children again, or a Howler will be forthcoming to you.

Hermione has told me that you will not be returning home until next summer, but if you change your mind, you will be welcome here on Christmas day, as will anyone you choose to bring as your guest. Be safe Harry, study hard, and be good.

Love,

Molly Weasley

Harry chuckled, as he slid the letter over to Sophie.....he couldn't imagine that Molly meant the letter to be totally private.

"That was amusing. Did Ginny ever say that she was interested in your offer? I don't remember you mentioning it."

"No, her last letter was just news about Ron, Dean, and the DA, it didn't even touch on the offer. You think I should risk a Howler and make the offer again?"

"No, let Ginny make up her own mind.....though it sounds like her mom has already decided for her."

"A Weasley family trait. The twins rebelled enough for all of them I guess, she won't take any of it from Ginny, even if she tried."

"What about that part in the note about Ginny's feelings? I thought she was over all of that?"

"Who knows what she tells her mother, she hasn't mentioned anything about it to me, and it's a dead issue as far as I'm concerned, me being taken and all. She has a boyfriend now remember, Dean's smart enough to tell if she's not focused on him." Sophie didn't look too sure about that, but figured that Harry knew them best. She had seen the offer firsthand, after Harry had shown them all the entire incident at The Ministry, both the parts before and after the show he had provided while in the med station. She had seen that indeed Ginny had looked interested, Ron insulted, Hermione thoughtful, and Luna and Neville politely not interested.

Harry had a thought, and put it away until later. He looked at the owl that had delivered the letter, it was Hermes, Percy's owl. He idly wondered if Errol was even still alive, though there was no way he would have made a transatlantic crossing in less than two weeks. Harry thought of Percy's sacrifice every day, if only for a brief few seconds, and him having somewhat disliked the other man made it a little worse. He knew what it was like to be an outcast with your own family, and reckoned that Percy must have been after acceptance from his siblings, to do what he had done by spying on Fudge. This last month was the first time period that he felt he had really understood Percy, in the five years that he had known him. Percy had had a family only funeral three days after he died, and the twins had told Harry that the family had really come together.....even Ron and Ginny, for that one afternoon. His musing was interrupted by Murray, who had an announcement to make:

“Students, just to remind you that the Thanksgiving holiday is coming up, and classes on Wednesday the 27th will be held as scheduled, though your teacher may want to let you out early. Please let me or Professor Heyman know no later than two weeks from today what your plans will be. If you are staying here, then there is a signup sheet you must fill out. If you are going home, or to a friend’s home, let us know so that portkeys can be arranged for your trips there and back. The Wednesday port keys will be good anytime after 4:30 pm that day, the return ones are good anytime that you want to come back. Thank you.” She sat back down, and everyone returned their eating and chatting. Warrick turned to his roommate, he had gotten some mail too.

“I just got a letter from my folks, we’re all set for the holiday. You’ll come back with me to stay, they’re eager to meet you.”

“Cool, I’m looking forward to it.” Warrick and Sophie had done a pretty good job explaining the concept of Thanksgiving to him.....but mainly he just liked the idea of a table full of food. Though slim, Harry was always hungry.....and Warrick had done enough bragging on his mom’s cooking to make Harry interested.

“Reiko, my mom says that Thanksgiving Dinner is at 1 pm. So you three can come up with your family, and then we can go back with you for dinner there.” Claudia and Sophie had gone to Thanksgiving at Reiko’s parents’ home at Tecumseh for the last three and five years respectively.

“That works, the school usually has dinner there at 5 pm, lots of time for our parents to feel uncomfortable around each other.”

Everyone laughed, but the two of them were a little nervous about it. Reiko had long ago met Warrick's family, and vice versa, but the parents had not yet met each other.

"Just floo on in anytime after 10 am and everything will be going on. Mom usually starts cooking around then. Jonas, are you guys coming by too?"

"That's the plan right now, my mom is kind of mercurial with these kinds of things, us not having a big family and all. I'll be there if nothing else, I love your mom's cooking." Jonas' parents did not really like celebrating muggle holidays, except for Christmas, but they got along well with the Forresters, and had always been welcome at holiday dinners since Warrick and Jonas had become close friends three years before.

"How many of your family is showing up?"

"It's going to be small this year they say, only about 20 of us, besides you guys. Last year was 50 or so and it just didn't work." Indeed it didn't, cramming 50 magical people, including a dozen kids, into one large house was just begging for chaos.....and that was what ensued. Warrick's mother, even with magic, had needed two full days to clean up.

After lunch that afternoon, Harry returned to his dorm room and made his first Howler, something he had long avoided doing, for fear of getting to like them too much. Yes, he had never even sent Dumbledore or Snape any, he did not want them to get the impression that he thought about them very much. He had a book, in his now relocated Grimmauld Place collection, that explained how to make them, and learned that one could modulate the volume and tone of their voice, so for this one he made his as gentle as he could:

Hello Molly,

I got your letter today and wanted to make sure you got my reply as soon as possible. My offer to the gang to join me here was a spur of the moment thing, but I mean every word of it. I am getting a much better education here at Great Lakes than I ever did at your alma mater, with it's shoddy teaching, Death Eater professors, and Machiavellian Headmaster.....and I wanted to share that with my friends, if they would like to take the opportunity. That's all Molly, nothing more. I love your family more than I can say, can you blame me for wanting to help them? Oh yes, just so you know, you can send me Howlers by the thousand, and I will never get to hear them. Another good thing about our school, they don't let us hear them, somehow thinking that young people need not be yelled at from afar. Otherwise you could add to the 65 I have received so far from my home country.

Take care Molly,

Harry

He sealed it up, and called for Dobby.

“Yes Harry?”

“I need you to bring this to Molly Weasley at The Burrow.” Dobby was used to surprises by now after four months with Harry, but this still rocked him a little.

“You are sending the Weasley mother a Howler? Really?”

“It's a nice one Dobby, don't worry. In fact, I would like you to stick around and see her reaction.....no, wait, I have a better idea, get the twins over there with you. I think they'll appreciated this even more than I would.” Dobby was on the verge of feeling Harry's forehead, to see if he was suffering from malaria induced delusions, but somehow held off.

“If she says anything harsh Dobby, tell her I don't like veiled threats.....but tell her nicely.” Dobby still looked dubious

“Okay Harry, if you say so.” This was no longer the little fellow who would beat on his head for even thinking to disagree, Harry had quickly laid down the law on that score. He took the envelope, and copy of Molly's letter to show the twins, and disappeared into the trunk. He went through the floo and into the twins' research room.....or Frankenstein's Lab, as they had taken to calling it. Fred and George were there, working on some filling some orders for Hogwarts. They glanced up, and threw out a double:

"Hey Dobby."

"Hello twins. Harry has something he would like you to see." He handed over Molly's letter, and they read it with increasing laughter.

"Oh that's rich, Harry's life is danger every half hour, and she thinks a Howler is going to put him in line?" They dissolved into raucous laughter, but stopped when they saw Dobby frowning a little.

"What's the matter Dobby? Uh oh, how did he respond? What's his letter say?" Dobby merely held up the red envelope, and the twins went a bit pale.

"I do not know, it is in here. He says it is nice, but that he would like you two to come with me to hear it, and hear what your mother has to say back." Fred and George looked at each other, and in unison:

"A nice Howler?"

"That is what he said." Neither of them thought that Harry would really verbally roast their mother, but this was still a lot to take for granted.

"Umm.....okay, though we should probably ask if he looked mad when you left."

"No he did not, and he said that you two would probably appreciate her reaction more than he would." Well that was different, more and more they noticed that Harry shared their particular sense of humor, something they wished they had nourished more when they actually went to school with him and saw him on a daily basis. Still, their mother's sense of humor was much different from theirs, as they had found out hundreds of times over the last 18 years.

“I guess we should get this over with, we’d better not count on being asked to stay for dinner though.” The three of them went upstairs to the regular floo in the shop, and the twins tumbled through, followed closely by Dobby popping over. Their mother was in the kitchen, and just getting dinner started. Arthur had gotten home from work minutes earlier. Molly yelled hello to her sons, while she was stirring the pot.....she preferred the manual way most times, rather than have it stirred magically.

“Well hello you two, hello Dobby.” This, in fact, was Dobby’s first ever visit to The Burrow, but Arthur had taken to stopping in the shop a couple of times a week to talk with his sons, and he had met Dobby there.

“Hey Dad, how’re things?”

“Oh the same old thing mostly. Did have one interesting thing happen today. Rufus.....sorry, The Minister, I still can’t get used to calling him that.....well he wants to meet with me tomorrow at The Leaky Cauldron. He says it’s nothing bad though, he wants my views on a few things. Could be a promotion in it for me, all jobs at work have been frozen for the last month, while Bones and company sort out who is loyal and who isn’t.”

“Well there’s no doubt of your loyalty.”

“He mentioned that. Well we’ll see what happens. What brings you guys by? Need some home cooking?” Fred and George hesitated, as if hoping the other one would say it.

“Well, you see, what it is.....” George took over for his brother after he trailed off.

“It’s like this, this was not our idea, it was Harry’s.....but we kind of sort of agree with him on it, and he wanted us here to see it.” Arthur looked at his sons amusedly.

“Harry sent us something? Is that what you’re trying to say?”

“Well Dad.....okay, let’s try this again. Are you aware that Mum sent Harry a letter this week?”

“She mentioned something about it, I take it he got it? Hermes is pretty quick, Errol wouldn’t have gotten there until their muggle Thanksgiving.” Arthur, of course, had taken five years of Muggle Studies and knew all about their holidays, both in Britain and America.

“Yeah, today as a matter of fact. You wouldn’t by any chance know what she said in it would you?” This line of attack was making Arthur more curious with every sentence, usually the twins were either totally direct, or non-direct in a funny way. The fearful expressions that they had on their faces was something new to him.

“No I wouldn’t, now spit it out guys, what has got you looking like that? What’s Dobby doing here?” They looked at each other again, and mutually decided to get it over with and flee afterward. They handed Arthur his wife’s letter for comparison.

“Mum! Could you come out here please!” Molly walked in a few seconds later.

“What is it boys? Is something wrong? I haven’t heard you laugh since you got here.”

“Well you see.....” Arthur interrupted Fred.

“Out with it you hooligans! Enough beating about the bush.”

“Harry got your letter today, and he sent Dobby over with his reply.....and I guess he wanted us to bear witness. We don’t know what the reply says, so let’s not shoot the messengers okay?” Dobby was now nodding fearfully, the twins had infected him with it. Molly was now equally curious.

“Where is the reply?”

“Dobby, if you will.” Dobby was wearing a pair of kid’s athletic shorts, and pulled out the red envelope. The Weasley parents both gasped.

“He actually sent me a Howler?”

“Well you did threaten him with one Mum.....best open it and get it over with, and remember that we had nothing really to do with this. Sure he’s one of our best mates and our partner, and.....well remember we don’t tell him what to do.” Molly was getting a little mad now, and Arthur was reading the letter she had sent and was trying not to laugh.

She opened it, with the twins and Dobby all cringing slightly.....and the Howler played, just like Harry had intended.....maybe his voice was a little condescending in a place or two, exasperated in others.....but he wasn’t yelling, and the three messengers breathed easier with every word.

“Well.” Molly did not know whether to smile or frown. She quite considered Harry to be family, and this was the first Howler she had ever gotten from a family member.....but even she had to admit she’d asked for it in a way, and it was pretty funny. Fred and George had picked up Dobby and were balancing him on their shoulders, to the little guy’s delight.

“Dobby, you told us Harry wasn’t mad, and if we ever doubted you before, we never will again.”

“He wasn’t mad Dobby?”

“No ma’am, but they had pizza for lunch, and that always puts him a good mood.” Everyone started chuckling at hearing that.

“I didn’t know that they couldn’t get Howlers there.”

“He’s up to 65 now he says, the owls are directed to the Owlrey first, and any Howlers are taken away before the owls can go to the students.”

“Guys, you knew about this offer of Harry’s? To pay for the kids’ schooling if they wanted to come over there?”

“Sure Dad, we were standing right there when he said it. We didn’t really take it seriously though, even if he was sincere about it.”

“Well I agree with your mother on Ginny not going, and we all know Ron would never do it. What does Hermione say?” He remembered Hermione’s leaking patience with Ron, even though things were supposed to be better.

“Hanged if we know, we haven’t seen or heard from any of them since the trial fiasco.” Which was not technically true, since Harry always showed them Hermione’s letters, so they would understand what he was ranting about. Still, the Marauder’s Map letter was the only one they had gotten directly from her. Arthur appraised them.

“Why don’t you two do it? Go over there for a couple of months and finish school, have Lee run the shop, and the two of us, and maybe Bill, can help out when needed. I don’t blame you for not wanting to go back to Hogwarts after what happened this past summer, but this could be an option for you.” The twins started to scoff, but then.....

“You know, that’s not a half bad idea Fred.”

“Something to think about George, certainly. Anyway, we need to be off, we’re meeting Angelina and Alicia tonight for dinner, and we have some work to do at the shop later. Mum, any reply to Harry that Dobby can take back?”

“Just tell him that we all miss him, and that he should still try to get here for Christmas if he can.” Dobby nodded his head vigorously.

“I will ma’am. Goodbye.”

“Bye Dobby.” He popped back to the shop and went back through the trunk floo.....much easier that way, rather than pop 4,000 miles in one shot. Harry wasn’t there, he was at Advanced Charms, but he was very amused before dinner when Dobby acted it all out for him and the gang. Harry immediately started plotting on who to send his next Howler to, he would have to think on that for a time.

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

Noon GMT

Voldemort strode into the room, Pettigrew shuffling after him subserviently, as the room fell silent. All his senior Death Eaters were in the room, including all those rescued from The Ministry, though minus Goyle of course. Lucius and company had taken a couple of weeks to recover from their prison ordeal, not just from the physical side effects, but from the mental ones as well. Three months exposure to Dementors will do psychological damage even to a Dark Wizard. After that, it was a matter of planning and recruiting. They had lost over 35 Death Eaters to the Battle of the Ministry, and those numbers were harder to replenish than the similar losses for the good guys.

Snape was in the corner, now a full fledged member of the Council.....a Council of Advisors mind you, not one that had a scintilla of decision making ability unless their Lord allowed it. Indeed this was the first meeting of them since just after the Ministry battle. On Voldemort's instruction, Snape had sent a small note to Dumbledore, indicating that he was back inside the organization, and ready to do his duty. There had been no return note, but they had every belief that the old man had fallen for it again. Snape's true loyalty was always a question as far as the other Death Eaters were concerned, but Voldemort had peered deep into the man's mind, and found no intention to betray him. Snape still sneered at everyone, and treated his Death Eater colleagues much like he had his Order brethren.....knowing that none of them trusted him in slightest, except for his leader, be it Dumbledore or Voldemort.

"Everyone be seated, we have much to discuss." They all sat down, with Pettigrew still standing behind his master.

“I was just informed this morning that Goyle has been taken into custody. It would seem that American Aurors heard him speaking in his native accent, and picked the fool up on general principles. A few drops of Veritaserum later and our former colleague spilled everything he knows. The Ministry has him in a secure lockup at Azkaban.” He said this calmly, but with an edge to his voice that made the others a little fearful.

“Do you have any plans to rescue him my Lord?”

“Not at the moment Lucius, he is the only one of our people there, and Goyle himself is not worth the risk of an Azkaban assault.” Not exactly a ‘no one gets left behind’ ethos, but Goyle had created his own mess, there was no sympathy for him here.

“When was he taken my Lord?”

“Our sources aren’t sure, they only found out what they did through clandestine digging.” Voldemort kept most of his Ministry sources to himself and Pettigrew. Lucius and the others might have been worth rescuing, but their foul-ups had not gone unremembered.

“Will Goyle be replaced over there sire?”

“Not at this time, the mission was not generating any meaningful results, and we cannot spare sending an intelligent Death Eater over there, one who would, conceivably, not be caught using his true accent after over two months undercover.” This was said with a barely suppressed sense of rage, and everyone, who had been there at the time, forbore to remind him that the Goyle mission had been his idea in the first place.....until he did so as well.

“Still, I thought the idea had merit at the time, and Goyle’s reports did give us more familiarity with Flackter Alley and some of the differences between us and our American muggle loving brethren. Potter has shown no intention since of coming back over here, even for a visit, so he is still contained. Now, Wormtail, where do we stand on the Wizengamot and The Ministry?”

“Our new Minister is proceeding cautiously, as well he should. He had initiated a hiring freeze and no new personnel have been added. Plus, due to family objections, no autopsies were done, so Snape’s little potion was not detected.” Voldemort casually interrupted him.

“Good, we will have use for it again soon. A temporary Imperious Curse in a bottle, you outdid yourself Snape.”

“Thank you, my Master.”

“Continue Wormtail.”

“Thank you sire. So in reality, we only lost five of our Wizengamot members, instead of all ten.” Lucius looked at Voldemort as if asking permission to query, getting a nod, he asked.

“Has Scrimgeour announced plans to fill the 18 slots yet?”

“No he has not Malfoy, and there seems to be no hurry as far as he is concerned. He and Dumbledore appear to be getting along, but relations between them have always been strained. Right now he is meeting with Arthur Weasley, perhaps he’s offering a seat to him.”

“That muggle loving fool?”

“That muggle loving fool, Rastaban, is known to be loyal to their side, and after their debacle at the trial, Rufus needs loyal people. He’s not a stupid man, remember I know him better than any of you, having lived in his house for 12 years.....he’s just not ambitious, and while I know that does not fit any of us, please let us try to remember that there are other personality types out there. Plus, he’s known to have an influence with Potter, and perhaps our Minister is trying to open a back channel to the lad.” Pettigrew was growing more and more bold with his comments toward the repatriated Death Eaters, with Voldemort just smiling when he did so, which choked off any complaints. Pettigrew had not been sent on the DOM mission because his Master sensed that he did not believe in it, and since the rat was proven correct, he had more leeway than ever before.

“Have they found Fudge yet?”

“Not yet Bella, though it appears as if he might be in Australia or New Zealand, in that area of the world. Australia in particular is a very good place to hide, there are a lot of small Wizard villages in the Outback, and everyone assumes that there are some that have remained undetected. The Ministry is relying on foreign governments to search for him, as they are stretched somewhat thin at the present time. That is their latest information though.”

“What about the Auror recruiting?” Voldemort knew the answers to these questions already, but Pettigrew was taking more and more responsibility for the intelligence gathering, and was doing such a good job that the bad man wanted to remind his troops that doing a good job had benefits in their organization. So he wanted him to shine a little bit, and allowed the question and answer period.

“They haven’t done much yet, at least with new hires. They’ve telescoped the syllabus at the Auror Academy, but that does little for them right this minute. The earliest any of them could be ready is the spring. After that, they’ll begin large scale recruiting in every English speaking country.” The Auror Academy was located on the Isle of Man, and trained Aurors for not only Great Britain, but for Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada as well, but exceptions were made if the foreign students in question were to go to work for one of the governments using the Academy.

“The reactivation of The Dark Force Defense League has done a little bit to help, as a lot of retired Aurors are coming in to fill desk positions, freeing the others up to go into the field. A few European governments have offered Aurors to help on a temporary basis, and Rufus is considering it. Still, as of today, the Ministry as a whole is about 75 percent of what it was before our assault.”

“What about Travis Biller, the new Head Auror?”

“Nothing more than a calm professional. He resisted recruitment to our side when he was a student at Hogwarts, but was not hostile about it. He just said a flat no, and walked away. The Death Eater who tried the recruitment, Mason Adams, has since been killed in action, but he told me what was going on at the time.” Voldemort stood up, and Pettigrew went silent and retreated to the corner.

“So you are all wondering what happens next I’m sure. Our next mission is to take place in December, and will again take place at The Ministry. We are going to let them get built back up some, they will get complacent, and we will go in and deal them another setback. The loss of yet more Ministry workers and Aurors will further erode confidence in the government, and make our task that much easier.” Bellatrix Lestrange leaned forward

“Our next full scale Ministry assault will be in six weeks. I am counting on the fact that our dear Minister will not accept the assistance of the other governments, his own pride will keep him weak. There must be something about that job that makes people prideful and stubborn. Full details about the operation will given to you when the time is right.” Snape smiled faintly at the generalization, but did have a question on another matter.

“My Lord, are we interested in finding Fudge?” Voldemort had not really decided that issue. On the one hand, the idea of torturing Fudge was incredibly pleasing. On the other, it was work that would not advance their cause at all, and the buffoon had in fact done what he was told, when he was told. Only the emancipation of Potter had caused any problems, Fudge had given no notice of this. Their agreement with Fudge did not involve the idiot’s safety if he fled though.....only if he stayed in place.

“Wormtail, has The Ministry put a bounty on him at all?”

“Half a million galleons sir, plus half the money that he stole if that too is recovered.” He scoffed.

“Hardly worth the effort then, but keep your ears open anyway. He might be good for a little sport after all.” The look on Lucius’ face in particular was bloodthirsty.

“Narcissa, what has your son found out about Granger and the Weasley brats?”

“From what he tells me, the five of them are pretty much out of the mainstream there, if they were every really in it. Longbottom has taken up with Lovegood it seems, but his confidence is at an all time high, he’s no longer the coward he once was. The Weasley siblings are constantly fighting and arguing with each other, with the mudblood playing peacemaker, though she is still dating the Weasley boy.” Voldemort closed his eyes, never a good sign.

“All this social gossip is fascinating Narcissa of course, but that is not what I was asking.” No Crucio yet, but that did not mean it wasn’t coming.

“I am sorry my Lord. Their Defense group is proceeding without them, as the old coot removed them from the leadership of it when he sanctioned it as a school club. They might practice on their own, but Draco doesn’t know either way. There is no student leader there now, Dumbledore is trying to prop up the Head Boy and Girl, a Gryffindor and a Ravenclaw respectively.”

“Good, that is how we want it. Just make sure your arrogant son causes the five of them no trouble. For all we know Potter might just sneak into the castle and kill him, and we do need his services for the time being. Now is there anything else?” Pettigrew nervously cleared his throat.

“Greyback sir? He has been demanding a meeting again.” Now the bad man smiled, which made everyone at the table, save Snape, nervous.

“Regrettably I am still busy and am unable to meet with him. Wormtail, tell the animal he will just have to have patience, it’s not like he has anywhere else to turn to.” Pettigrew knew this would not go over well with the werewolf, but there was nothing to be done now but send the message.....there was no way he was going to meet that thing in person.

“Now, everyone is dismissed except for Wormtail and Snape. I will let the rest of you know when I need you. Now go.” They filed out, thankful that there had been no cursing. Snape just lounged where he was, while Pettigrew took the opportunity to sit down.

“Snape, I want you to set a meeting with the old man, we need to accelerate our plans with him and the Order. Tell him some details about our arrangements with Greyback, and imply that you might be able to find out where their lair is. Do not lay it on too thick however, he must not suspect a trap.....too much.” Snape knew that even Dumbledore had his limits, but he understood what buttons to push with him.

“Yes my Master. When shall I meet him?”

“A week from tomorrow, at night, but do not notify him until the very last moment. We won’t have anyone there, so if the old man suspects a setup, he will be disappointed.”

“My Lord, what if he does not believe in my ‘escape’? He could very well insist that I return with him to Hogwarts.”

“Then do what he wants, and use your talents to get free of him. He won’t insist though, he will want the information he thinks you can provide for him. Give him just enough to keep him going, much like a muggle narcotics dealer and an addict. If he does not believe you, then get out of there as best you can and return to the rendezvous point, and we will get you back here. Your potion making talents alone are enough to earn your keep here, never fear.” Snape knew how useful he was, and was not afraid. He agreed with his Master though, Dumbledore would believe almost anything he told him, because he wanted to.

“Yes Master.”

“Wormtail, tell Greyback that he will be able to dine on The Order of the Phoenix in about six weeks.....the same night we are destroying the Ministry.”

“Won’t the animal suspect something like that? That he is being used as a decoy again?” Voldemort raised his eyebrows.

“What does he have to complain about? He got to kill nine people and destroy Hogsmeade, not to mention put fear into Hogwarts while destroying some perfectly nice greenhouses.....all without losing a man. If he was an equal I would treat him like one, but he is not. There is no use questioning the air when it is all there is to breathe, is it?” No there was not, though Greyback, again, would probably not see it that way. Still, orders were orders, and he was already mentally composing the message in his mind.

“Yes Master.”

“One last thing, start thinking of someone who would make a good Flackter Alley spy, and when you have a name, give it to me. This will be a short-term assignment, and will be meant to coincide with Potter’s next field trip. I want them prepared to bring a camera with him, I want to learn more about the lad’s new circle of friends. The gossip article about his new girlfriend was not enough.” The article, the Witch Weekly one that Harry had showed Sophie, had also listed the names of the other four friends, but no details about them.

“Yes Master, no action to be taken on Potter if he or she gets the chance?”

“No action, just pictures. Don’t bother having them trying to plant any charms on him either, it would be too easy to get caught. For all we know that is how they nailed Goyle, that moron.” With a wave of his hand, he dismissed the two men, and leaned back, contemplating.

2:00 pm GMT

The Leaky Cauldron

Arthur and Rufus were finishing their lunch and their discussion, which was more a free flowing idea exchange about the future of The Ministry, problems with The Order, and Arthur’s own ambitions about his job. For two men that had never really had a conversation before last month, they were getting on quite well. Arthur could not help but compare the man to Fudge, and while there are very few that would not win that comparison, he was still impressed.

“Arthur, I am prepared to name you as the new Head of Muggle Affairs, if you are interested.” This had been what Arthur had been hoping for, as the current Head was quite anti-muggle for the job he held, and the Deputy was his daughter, and held the same views. They had been very close allies of Fudge though, which explained their remaining in the jobs.

“I am interested, but only if it is for the right reasons Rufus. I don’t want to be your inside man to The Order, or to Harry, if your interest lies there.”

“The Order of the Phoenix is not a problem for me Arthur, for as long as they stay within bounds and protocols. As long as Dumbledore knows his place, I will not move against him. As for Potter, well he is thousands of kilometers away and seems bound and determined to stay there, so for the time being he is not a factor.” Arthur almost goggled at the Dumbledore comment, but Bill’s self control had come from Arthur himself.

“What did you think when he declined to join The League?”

“I suppose I don’t blame him, though the war effort would be better with him as a more public face for us. I’m sure the old man is responsible, being the titular head of The League. Even after the publicity in August, I had not fully grasped Potter’s distrust of Dumbledore. The old man always sloughed it off, saying it was an exaggeration.”

“It was under-exaggerated Rufus, by everyone, including Harry for many years. It took a lot to break him from Dumbledore, but it is broken.....probably irretrievably. Albus is very charismatic, no doubt Harry is worried about him getting others to do the dirty work, while his hands remain clean.”

“The kid’s serious about staying over there for two years?” This was asking for insight, but many more people than Rufus had asked him this very question, so Arthur didn’t mind.

“So it would seem. My two youngest and their friend Hermione tried hard to bring him back, but he appears to be resolute. I gather from my twins that Harry is thriving over there, and learning much more than was taught him at Hogwarts.” Rufus just shook his head.

“What a waste, from what I’ve seen and heard the kid can outfight most of my Aurors. Travis is ready to offer him a job right now, bypassing the Auror Academy. Anyway, enough about Potter, as long as he is out of sight he should be out of mind. Back to business, do you accept the position?”

“Of course I do, I would be a fool if I did not. What about hiring my replacement?”

“Your call, in consultation if it comes from outside the current Ministry workers. If you want Perkins to replace you, then it is a done deal as soon as you tell him.” Since that was precisely who Arthur wanted to get the job, this was a relief.

“Perkins will do a fine job, and there are a few people I would have my eye on to be his assistant. I am somewhat hopeful that I can persuade my youngest son to take a job in the office when he graduates in a couple of years.”

“He won’t want to join those twins in their business?” Arthur grimaced, he would have thought so too before recent events. He knew that even if Ron could stomach being ordered around constantly by the twins, he could not see Ron putting himself under Harry’s power any more. Harry may not have exerted any authority in the shop, but the twins doted on him, and certainly seemed to have taken Harry’s side in his difficulties with Ron.

“No, I can’t see that happening. Maybe Ginny, but not Ron.” He knew he had probably gone too far, giving this relative stranger insight into his admittedly complicated family life, so a change of subject was in order.

“So when do I take office?”

“Monday morning, bright and early. Your predecessor will have your new office cleared out and ready to go.” Arthur only had one more topic he wanted to explore.

“What about the Wizengamot? There are 18 spots to fill if I recall correctly.”

“Are you interested in one of them?”

“Absolutely, in fact if I have to choose between the promotion I just accepted, and a spot on the Wizengamot, it is a very easy choice to make.”

“I’ll keep that in mind Arthur, and I am confident in telling you that when the slots are filled, you will get one, without sacrificing your promotion in any way.” No donut ever made had a hole bigger than the one in that statement.

“You’re not going to do it anytime soon?”

“Not right away no, it would just be too difficult. I may add some names here and there, but do not expect a full 40 person Wizengamot to be seated for at least six months, if not more. Dumbledore needs watching Arthur, and the less power he has while doing so the better.”

“If he wanted power, he could have just taken the position as Minister couldn’t he?”

“He could have yes, but that would have opened him and his dealings up to much more scrutiny than he is accustomed to, even after Fudge set The Daily Prophet on him last year. That whole Snape thing has raised a lot of questions, as has the Potter situation, though the majority of the public blames the kid for it rather than Albus. Add in his uneven record at Hogwarts recently.....” Even Arthur had to admit the Hogwarts issues, and a small part of him did not mind the idea of Ginny in Michigan for that reason, if Molly had not been mortally opposed to it.

“So you’re going to threaten him with those unfilled seats?”

“I already have, and while I would not exactly call it a threat, he got my meaning plainly.” Dumbledore really has fallen on hard times, thought Arthur. First he was played by Fudge and Umbridge, then Harry hoodwinked him on his way out of the country, and who knows what happened with Snape, whether his escape was done with Dumbledore’s knowledge or not.....and now, Rufus Scrimgeour was putting him in his place. How the mighty have tumbled.

“Don’t ask me to get in the middle of a turf war between you and Dumbledore.”

“I won’t Arthur, I have every intention of staying within the rules against him, and if he goes outside them? Then he’ll be finished, and there won’t need to be a war.” Going outside the rules was a Dumbledore specialty, but Arthur didn’t mention this, as the other man knew the Headmaster just as well as he did, if not better.

They soon wrapped up their lunch and went their separate ways, Rufus back to the office.....he was unmarried and had no children.....Arthur to The Burrow, where he told a beyond happy Molly about his new promotion. They flooded their adult children with the news, and a special dinner was planned for the next night. This was a two level jump on the ladder for him, with a 50 percent pay increase.....it would be a good Christmas in The Burrow this year. On the whole, he felt good about the lunch, though it was strange to be dealing with an intelligent Minister of Magic, let alone with one who had an interest in his views. There had been a lot of things about The Ministry that had bothered him over the years, and he was pleased to finally have an outlet for them.

He took over his new job Monday morning as promised, and immediately indulged himself with a message to the muggle Prime Minister, who he would be dealing with frequently. They made an appointment for the next week to discuss things, with Voldemort being tops on the list. He was not the only new Department head of course, he was one of seven changes made by the new Minister, and more were promised if things did not shape up. Among the letters of congratulations he received were notes from Dumbledore, and from Harry.....both of them were very pleased with the long overdue recognition their friend was now getting.

Special Projects Classroom G

2:00 pm

Ripley ushered them into a different looking classroom than they usually used. This one was set up like a muggle office building floor, filled with offices and cubicles. The students filed in, and sat on top of the desks as they quickly figured out what was going on. There was a slight buzz of excitement in the air, as they were about to put into practice what they had been learning.

“Welcome one and all to your second mass duel of the year, and your last one of 1996. There are some different rules this time. Now you will be part of a team, a team that I will choose for you. Five of you against the other five. The basic rules from last time still apply: No physical assaults, no spells that can deliberately cause a trip to the med station, and you still are allowed to use just two stunning spells. Teamwork of course is now allowed, and the winning team will all get a five percent bump on their next term paper, one that will be due in early February.....do not take any hints from this about when the next duel will be, you might have another in January, I haven't yet decided.....or maybe I have, and I'm not telling you. The object of the exercise is to give me the other teams' wands.....oh yes, two more rules: You cannot summon wands, you have to go get them when you incapacitate your opponents, nor can you use any captured wands against your opponents.....and the other one, in Harry's honor obviously, is that you cannot props, just your wands and your wits.“ Harry smirked at his Professor, he didn’t have any swamps on him anyway. He tuned his ears to Ripley, as he used his eyes to look around the floor:

There were six enclosed offices on each side, with glass windows that allowed someone on the outside to see in unless the blinds were drawn, and wood doors. There were a series of randomly laid out cubicles spread throughout the main area of the floor, and all of the desks were laden with the usual assortment of office paraphernalia, including computer terminals and such. Harry was nodding along with Ripley to show that he was paying attention to him, but was already looking for sightlines and defilades.....of course he was not the only one doing so.

“Now, I will separate you into your teams, and you will be given five minutes to make your plans. Any questions?” Claudia raised her hand.

“Just to make sure, you aren’t getting involved this time are you?”

“No I’m not Claudia, though that will probably change at the next one.” Ray Elwood had a question as well.

“When you say props, are we not allowed to use the stuff in the office to fight with?”

“Yes and no Ray, you can use anything that will not seriously harm the other person. In other words, no blood. Don’t get any ideas about throwing desks on the other team. And the ‘outside’ doors lead to brick walls, so you have no choice but to stay on the floor.” He looked around and saw that there were no more queries.

“Now, when I say your name, go in the direction I tell you. I will make the teams relatively even, but do not read anything into who is on your team. Those on the left will be the Blue team, on the right will be the Red team.”

“Harold Abrahams on the right.” Harold was from Shawnee, though he and Claudia did not get along well.

“Eric Liddell, on the left.” Eric was the other Jefferson House person in the class, besides Drew.

“Liesel Matthews, on the right.” Liesel was one of Claudia’s roommates.

“You will have no official captains, but I put Harry and Drew on separate teams for a reason. Go plan, you have five minutes.”

Harry, Reiko, Sophie, Ray, and Eric all went into one of the offices, as Drew and his people stayed out in the main area. Harry threw a Silencing Charm at the door, and another at the wall, while Eric closed the blinds. They were now totally closed off. Reiko looked at Harry.

“So what’s the plan boss?” He stuck out his tongue at the boss part.

“First things first, take out Drew as soon as humanly possible. He’s probably saying the same thing about me, so there shouldn’t be much fire coming at you. Okay, who’s the best here at banishing?” That would be Reiko, from a lifetime of two Charms teachers being her parents.

“What do you want me to banish?”

“As much paper and paper like things that are on those desks, banish them right at the main body of the other team, don’t use anything metal except for paper clips. Sophie, Ray: once she does that, use Wind spells to make the stuff fly around. Eric, you and I will use the confusion to start picking them off if we can. Hang on a second.” He had a thought and left the room, with his hands over his ears in a gesture towards Drew’s team, letting them know he wasn’t trying to overhear them.

“Professor Ripley, could you tell us where we’re starting?” Ripley smiled, he was only going to share that information if asked for it, and Harry had been the first.

“Take your hands off your ears Harry. You and your group can start in the office where you are. The other side will start in that one over there.” He pointed to an identical office diagonally across the room.

“Thank you sir.”

He returned to the office and shared the information.

“Okay, that changes things a little, but not much. Let’s gather up the papers in here, as much as we can. Eric, you’ll help Reiko do the banishing, and I’ll keep them distracted. Only use Stupefy right away if you have a sure shot, and on someone who is by themselves. Remember, if we stick together, in pairs at the very least, then anyone who is stunned can immediately be revived, and they’ve lost a stunner.....they only get ten remember, as do we.” They spent the next minute gathering the papers up, and then Ripley called out:

“Thirty seconds!” Reiko and Eric stood by the door with their paper ammunition, with Ray and Sophie right behind them, ready to spread it. Harry stood next to the wall that adjoined the next office over, and threw a series of Muting Charms at the door, though not at his compatriots themselves, who did not know what he was planning to do here.

“BEGIN!”

Harry's wand was already aimed at the wall connecting his office with the next one.

ABRUMPERE!

The wall exploded inward and Harry ran through the hole, putting his wand to his throat:

Sonorus!

He then starting yelling unintelligible things at the top of his lungs, and saw the immediate effects as the Red group collectively grabbed their ears as a cascade of loose paper flew right into them, buffeted around by the wind spells of Sophie and Ray. The other four Blues were protected somewhat by Harry's Muting Charms, as they kept up the paper assault.

Drew screamed at his teammates to put Muting Charms on themselves, as he raised his wand and pointed it at Harry's new office:

And transfigured the windows into water, which did not hold too well as window material, and soon Harry's shoes were damp. Drew then put a Muting Charm on himself and let loose a barrage of tickling charms at Harry, hitting him with one, and forcing him to cease his aural assault in order to take it off. Harry removed the charm, and backed up behind the desk.....which was a good thing, since all five Red team folk started in on him, trying to knock him out in one fusillade as Claudia and Liesel advanced forward, perhaps hoping to rush him and take him out. Harry threw up a shield and yelled out:

"Time for Plan B guys!" There was no Plan B of course, they had barely had time to work out the first plan.....and for all of Harry's vaunted battle expertise, he still was not used to trying it the 'sanitized' way. It's not that he liked killing, or got his jollies from harming people.....but it was a lot more straightforward and clear cut than this was, and fewer rules to follow. The spells from the Reds were just bouncing off his shield, as Sophie and Ray ran through the hole in the wall that he had created and used the closer angle to lay down some fire of their own, all the while Reiko and Eric were still banishing paper at the Reds, though it was now more an irritant than a deterrent. Ray looked over innocently:

“You mentioned a Plan B Harry?” Harry moved the desk slightly to give the other two some more room.

“ Very funny Ray, I’m open to suggestions.....wait a second.....Ripley’s going to hate me for this one. Reiko! Eric! Get in here!” The two in question came through the wall and looked at him quizzically as they threw up their own shields.

“Ray, you and I will shield the others while they use Reducto and knock out the lights out there, make the place as dark as you can, but only on our side at first, make their side of the floor stand out that much more. Do it now.” Ray and Harry stood in front of the other three and put up their strongest shields, one’s that took the most energy, but would stop almost anything. Ray was not chosen lightly for this task by Harry, they had done enough shield work in class for Harry to have seen that Ray trailed only Drew and himself in that ability. The other three stood behind the shield bubble and aimed above it, at the outside lights:

REDUCTO!

Times thirty, as the three of them proceeded to explode every light on the south side of the floor, as bits of glass and filament littered the ground. The side was now in relative darkness as Sophie and the others started picking off lights on the Red side as well, though none of them that were very close. Drew halted the stream of fire his side was generating when he saw the hexes and jinxes just bouncing off the combined shield of Harry and Ray. Not having a clear idea of what Harry was after, Drew told his people to hold off until it was made more clear.

By now 2/3 of the floor was dark, with some light emanating from some offices on the side, but not much. Harry motioned for Eric to sneak out of the original starting office and get behind one of the cubicles. Reiko and Sophie were using their Silent Magic skills to rapid fire Reducto at the various side offices, shattering their windows and taking out their lights as well, which gave Eric cover enough to get back through the hole in the wall and find a spot to hide, about halfway between his teammates and the Reds.

By now the main floor looked like the office from Die Hard, and Harry was more than half tempted to summon the other team's collective shoes and make them advance barefoot. He did not give into temptation though, he wasn't sure what Ripley would say about the rules in that regard. He and Ray kept up their shielding as he motioned for Reiko to slip out and join Eric. To cover this movement, Sophie was still destroying the odd light out there, and Harry took aim at the next office wall:

ABRUMPERE!

At Harry's signal Ray ran through that wall, and now it was just Harry and Sophie in the second office on the left, with Ray in the third office of the six on that side. Eric and Reiko were now stationed at around the middle point of the cubicles, across from Ray. Drew and his team were still grouped together at the opposite end of the floor, all of them out in the open and under normal light.

Drew looked at his group, all bunched up together, and decided that he had played defense long enough. Using hand signals, he motioned them forward a few feet. He whispered as loud as he dared to.

"Stay together, mass your fire."

That was not quite quiet enough, and Ray heard it in the third office. He took some initiative and leaned out the open office door and used a fire hose spell to wet them all down. Eric and Reiko saw this and used the distraction to advance another cubicle, which now put them only 15 feet from the Reds. Harry and Sophie now crept out of the second office and drew some fire as the other side had just enough light to spot them. Nothing hit though, and Harry knocked out another light as he covered Sophie's retreat.

Drew saw that Harry had for some reason mostly divided his forces, and decided to take out Ray. First he did a drying charm on the floor, getting some decent traction for his next move. He motioned them to move ahead another five feet, and then leaned over to first to Claudia, then to Harold.

“Take Amanda and go get Ray out of that office, either get his wand, or make him retreat. If we can push them back, it’ll limit their options. We’ll cover in five, four, three, two, one.....go.”

Harold Abrahams and Amanda Knight sprinted toward the third office, but Ray had been ready for that, he physically kicked the office door shut, and throwing a locking charm on it as well, after which he exploded the next office wall and ran through the hole.....just in time to escape Amanda and Harold, who blew the previous door off its hinges and almost got him before he threw a solid shield in front of the hole, stopping their progress temporarily.

Meanwhile Harry was a ways away, and wanting to rip Ray’s head off for getting caught out like that. So much for the gradual approach, he waved at Sophie to go forward and join Reiko and Eric.

“I’m going to try to get Ray and I behind Drew. When you see us attacking, come at them full force.”

“Gotcha.” She moved off to join the others.

Harry himself ran back into office number two, and poked his wand through the hole and started firing Tripping Jinxes unexpectedly at Harold and Amanda, the third and fourth of which hit them, knocking them to the ground, to their great surprise.

Stupefy! Stupefy!

Both of Harry’s allotted stunners hit their targets, putting them out of the game. Harry ducked through the hole and collected their wands, pocketing them. He pounded on the wall to get Ray’s attention.

“Ray! I got them! Dissolve your shield mate!” The other boy did so, and Harry joined him in the fourth office.....though this news was loud enough to be heard by everyone outside. He left Amanda and Harold lying there, they were unconscious, so they would not bother anyone. Once inside, Ray was ready for him.

“I know I know, too rash.” Harry did not argue the point, but it was not all bad. In a quiet tone of voice:

“Hey, it worked, we now have the advantage. Let’s get behind the others and end this thing right now.” It would not be that easy though.

By now Drew and company were rushing forward and attacking the others, seeing no choice, having Harry potentially behind them.....though while they assumed that Harold and Amanda were out of action, they were not aware that Harry was stunner-less now.

Drew was in the middle, flanked by Claudia on his left, and Liesel on his right. Drew pointed his wand right at the cubicle hiding the three Blues, seeing only a large dim shape in the near darkness that they were engulfed in..

“Wingardium Leviosa!”

The cubicle raised into the air, and Drew threw it into the office on the other side of where Harry and Ray were stationed, the window shattering and glass showering inside and out. Claudia and Liesel were firing Petrificus Totalus spells even before Drew removed the obstacle, and thus walked their fire right into Eric and Reiko, freezing them on the ground before they were able to adjust to their cover being removed. They lay frozen on the floor, with Sophie hastily putting up a shield as it was battered by the freezing spells half a blink afterward. They kept up the attack, while Drew took a page out of Ray’s handbook and sprayed Harry’s door with a fire hose spell, temporarily delaying Harry and Ray from helping Sophie. Liesel kept hammering at Sophie’s shield while Claudia collected the wands from Eric and Reiko. It was now three on three, and Harry needed Plan C.

“Ray, get into the first office and flank them, Sophie is not going to last much longer with the three of them out there.” Ray quickly nodded and went back through the wall holes. Harry stepped toward Drew’s water spell and shouted:

INCENDIO!

Steam immediately filled that area of the floor as Harry only held the spell for a brief moment, not wanting to take the chance that Drew would end his water spell and get the full force of the fire spell.....not only because it might hurt Drew, but Harry also did not want to get disqualified, more sanitized fighting. He used the diversion and moved out into the main floor and started firing long range pulse spells at Drew to keep him occupied.....though it would not last long, as Drew used his wand to drag a cubicle into the line of fire, and then turned his attention to Sophie.

Ray had gotten around in front of the remaining Reds, and was individually dueling with Claudia as Drew now teamed with Liesel to batter down Sophie’s shield.....an advanced type that Harry had taught her, gleaned from one of his Grimmauld books. Still, with Drew throwing pulse spells at it at a rapid rate, it soon dissolved.....but Sophie was ready for it:

STUPEFY!

Which hit Liesel point blank in the chest, though Sophie’s happiness was short-lived because Drew took advantage by nailing her with the same.

STUPEFY!

Now it was dueling duos, with Harry against Drew, and Ray against Claudia.....though that would not last too long, as Harry put up his best shield and ran as fast as he could around Drew.....and dropped the shield as he dove to the ground, hitting Claudia full in the back with a Petrificus Totalus, while whipping back around and putting his shield back up.....which did deflect one of Drew’s allotted Stupefy spells. Ray ran up to Harry and put up a shield in front of him to stop another Drew barrage. Harry kept his own shield up.

“I’m out of stunners to use, it has to be you.” Ray started firing tripping jinxes like crazy, and while they were dissolving easily on Drew’s shield, that meant that he could not go on offense, and Harry dissolved his own defense and started his own rapid fire pulse barrage as he moved to Drew’s side, inching closer to the other boy as he did so.....as did Ray, and soon they could see Drew’s shield weakening, and then it all ended in a flash:

Drew ended his shield and whipped his wand over to Harry, and in complete silence launched his last stunner at him.....and missed, as Harry jerked his body out of the way in a blur. That left Ray wide open to take his shot, and he did not miss.

STUPEFY!

And the match was now almost done. All that was left was the collection of the wands, and a minute or so later, Harry and Ray handed five captured wands to Ripley, who had materialized out of nowhere at the end of the battle.

“Nice trick Professor, Disillusionment Charm or Invisibility Cloak? Where were you?” Ripley gave him an enigmatic smile.

“These are all good questions Ray. Now let’s go wake up your classmates.” The battle had lasted fifteen minutes, and Harry was still full of adrenaline and was actually breathing rather heavily as his classmates joined the two survivors. Sophie went right up to Harry.

“How long was I out?” Harry thought for a tic.

“Oh, about a minute I guess, it didn’t last long after that. You did great though Sophie, you held them off long enough for Ray and I to get there and take care of them.” They were interrupted by Ripley.

“All right, everyone out and into the next classroom for the after action report.” They all walked out after him, and down the hallway to Classroom B. They sat down at their usual spots, and waited for Ripley to begin his critique.

“Okay, first things first. Harry and Ray, you get a six percent bump on your February term paper for surviving the entire thing. Reiko, Sophie, and Eric, you each get five percent.....and Drew will get two percent for being the last one on his team to go down. Now I know it was pretty dark in there.....Harry.....but there was enough light that I think you will get a decent view of the memory in my pensieve. Let’s take a look.” He took out the bowl and did his thing with his wand and the memory. They watched the show twice, with no commentary either time, and Harry saw more than a couple of things that he would probably have done differently.

“All right then, now that you have a had a look see at the battle. Harry, give us something you found interesting about it.”

“Well sir, in overall terms, their strategy was pretty sound.....too sound really, since Ray’s rashness clearly fouled it up, even though it was not something I would have chosen for him to do.”

“Good point. Drew, what do you think?”

“He’s right I guess. If I had it do differently I would have just tried to seal up that office and move against the main body with all five of my people instead of three, and then mopped up Ray afterward if it came to that.”

“Ray, why did you do what you did?” All eyes turned to the Proctor House Junior.

“Just like Harry said, it was rash and unexpected. I saw them trying to stay en masse, and I wanted to disrupt that.”

“Interesting, very out of the box, but that’s the whole point. Now Harry, why did you guys blast out those lights? Did it work for you?” Harry shrugged.

“Well I wanted to give them a moment of pause more than anything. Plus I was both counting on Ray to stay put and for Drew and them to stay where they were as well. The darkness on our side would have been a great defilade if we would have had time to use it, but we didn’t. So in that sense it didn’t work, but on the other hand, it did us no harm either.”

“True, very true. Proof that just because something does not work as intended, it does not make it a bad idea on the whole. Now your homework will be the same as after the last mass duel. Just make it one typed page of what you would have done differently, if anything. If you don’t feel that you would have, Harry and Ray, spend your page justifying that viewpoint.” He looked at his watch, it was still only 3:15 pm.

“All right, get out of here and get some rest. Next time we will have a former Auror come in and give you a talk on some of his Lycan experiences, plus some demonstrations. Have a good night, see you in the Dining Hall.” They walked out, with the students all going to their various dorm rooms or Lounges to do some relaxing and/or wait for dinner. Harry stopped Drew for a moment and talked with him quietly, after which they shook hands. Harry, Sophie, and Reiko then walked to Cortez in relative silence, only broken once they got through the doors.

“What do you think Harry? That was a good victory.”

“Yeah, but it was kind of tainted don’t you think?” They look at him quizzically.

“What do you mean?”

“You really didn’t see it?” Seeing their confusion at what he was getting at, he explained it.

“It was tainted because we easily had the better team overall. The top four Defense students in the class are the three of us and Drew, and Ray is arguably fifth, yet we were all on the same team. Why do you think that is?” They had not thought of it like that.

“Well it can’t be because he doesn’t like Drew, Ripley’s always gotten along really well with him, Drew has been number one in our class in Defense since Novice Year. I think he and Drew’s dad served together at some point in the last Lycan war too.” Sophie nodded.

“You’re right Reiko, it can’t be that. Maybe he was testing Drew more than anything, to see what he could do with a weaker supporting cast. He still did really well, even with that. I guess that was what you were talking to Drew about Harry, what did he think?”

“He wasn’t sure either way, though he noticed the weakness of his team right away.....all that being relative of course, since the tenth best in our class in Defense is still damn good. Interesting though, the way things work sometimes.”

It was something they all chewed on for awhile until Warrick got back. He quickly raised their spirits with a long story about dueling in his Regular Defense class, and soon they were all laughing again. Before they went to dinner though, Harry went down into the trunk and called for Winky.

“Winky, I’ve got a little trip for you to take, something I only seem to remember when I’m in class, which is why I’ve waited this long to get you to do it.”

“What is it Harry? Where am I going?” Harry took out an ornate looking key from his desk drawer. It had a mate that he left in there. He also took out a Wizards camera and handed it to her.

“Do you remember me telling you that I inherited an island from Sirius?” She nodded.

“Well this is a portkey to get there. I want you to check the place out, see what the living arrangements are like, if there are any other people on the island, stuff like that. Take a full set of pictures, and stay as long as you need to get the job done, though if you were back before bed tonight that would be great. It’s possible that we will be spending part of the Christmas holiday there, and I want to see if that's feasible."

"Okay Harry, you want me to go right now?"

"Yep, this is one of the portkeys I got from Gringotts that will get you there. I have another, and we can get it copied if necessary." Winky nodded and activated the portkey, taking her away.

She returned that night about an hour before bed, and found the gang in the Lounge playing cards with Dobby. She gave them her report right there.

"There is just one dwelling on the island, a three room muggle cabin, with no magic on it except for some muggle repelling charms. There is no floo fireplace, so you will to use a portkey to get there. The island is about three kilometers by two kilometers, and has a lot of coconut trees on it. I walked the island over and found no other people, and only a few animals and birds."

"Interesting, very interesting. Does that sound good for a trip there guys?" Winky cleared her throat before they could do much more than nod their heads.

"One thing though Harry, there is no indoor plumbing there or running water, so you must take the trunk with you when you go, so that these facilities are available." Good point, thought Harry. The gang all agreed that they would have to do an on-site visit during the Christmas holidays.

MacTavish's Pub and Brewery, Aberdeen Scotland

11:00 pm GMT

Albus Dumbledore sat in a corner booth in the back sipping some hot cider, somewhat disguised in muggle clothes, though his long beard was still an eye catcher. He had received a floo message from Tom at The Leaky Cauldron less than half an hour ago, telling him to come here and meet with 'a friend'.....which he could only assume either meant Snape or Harry, and he felt confident that it was not going to be Harry. He had brought only Tonks with him, she not being on duty this evening surprisingly, as all Aurors had been working a lot of overtime since the trial disaster. He had considered taking Remus along, on the off chance that it might be Harry.....but ultimately he had decided that the risk was not worth the reward if it wound up being Snape, who while he merely loathed Remus, as opposed to hating Sirius and James, it still would not be politic to have the two in the same room.

From his vantage point, he had a good view of the front door, but was surprised when Snape suddenly appeared right next to him, a pint of the black stuff in his right hand. The old man had placed anti-portkey and anti-Apparition wards around his immediate area, so Snape must have been hiding at another table, or in the restroom.

"Hello Albus." They both smiled warily at each other, but shaking hands was something neither had ever been especially comfortable with.

"Severus, how have you been?"

"Well enough I suppose." Indeed the younger man did not look bad, though as always he was pale and greasy haired, indicating that he was spending a lot of time in front of cauldrons.

"I had hoped that you were the 'friend' that Tom sent me up here to meet." Snape smirked faintly.

"Not the brat?" Dumbledore's brow furrowed a bit hearing that.

"Harry and I are not friends any longer, if we ever were." Snape, though not trying to be especially emotive, could not help but smile at hearing that.

"What has he done this time?"

“Nothing in particular Severus, nothing that Voldemort needs to worry about.”

“Are you worrying about it, that is the question. I know that you are convinced that you need the brat to finish off Voldemort.”

Dumbledore declined to answer this, and Snape saw the fat pitch coming right down the middle of the plate, and swung hard:

“One must wonder who Potter hates more, you or Voldemort?”
Dumbledore was no dummy.

“Is Voldemort wondering that himself perhaps?”

“I imagine it has crossed his mind a time or two. Potter is an excellent fighter, for all his other failings. He would be an asset to anyone’s side of a battle if kept under proper controls, even I can admit that in candor.” And he could.

“Has he made Harry an offer yet?”

“Not so far as I know. He is well pleased with Potter being across the ocean.”

“Even after the trial? After his wand being taken.” Snape smiled again.

“He does not really need a wand, as we both well know. I am quite sure he can perform the killing curse with just a wave of the hand. As for the trial? He considers that a success on the whole.” Dumbledore did not really disagree with this assessment if he were to be honest.

“How did he get you out? Were you aware of it ahead of time?”

“I was not aware, I had only intermittent contact with Pettigrew during the time of my house arrest, and the attempt caught me by just as much surprise as it did my minders.”

“Where is his headquarters?” Snape shook his head immediately.

“I cannot tell you that, for the simple reason that I do not know myself. Everything I have done has been by portkeys. I go to a public place and I am met by someone with a portkey, and I go back.”

“Does he know that we are meeting right now?”

“Yes, but he is not aware that I am telling you the truth, rather than the lies he has fabricated for you.”

“What have you been told to tell me?” Snape now pretended to grimace, but inwardly was a little wary of how smoothly this was all going. Dumbledore had not tried any mind tricks on him yet, and that was worrisome as well.

“I was told to tell you that there is another Ministry attack in offing, to take place sometime next month. It will not be a full scale takeover, just another killing spree, in order to heighten fear and weaken the Ministry.....and to take out some more Aurors, that is the attack’s primary goal.” Dumbledore raised his eyebrows.

“And this is not going to happen?”

“No it will not, there are no more large scaled Death Eater attacks planned for the rest of the year. Pettigrew and Malfoy are busy recruiting new Death Eaters, as there were significant losses during the trial assault.” This last sentence was totally accurate, as Snape had figured that he had to tell Dumbledore some true things, if only to keep the lies straighter in his own head.....and for the aftermath of the real Ministry attack to take place.

“Is Malfoy back to being second in command?”

“Not really, there is no hard and fast deputy there right now. There are Death Eaters with specific areas of responsibility that they run, but any second in command could be seen as a rival. Pettigrew is the Intelligence Chief, while Malfoy is back to handling the finances.

Bellatrix Lestrange heads the killing squads, while Nott leads most of the research.....and I, well I am the Potions Master there of course."

"So that is his brain trust? You five?"

"Not necessarily, he does solicit input from more than just us, but we are the main leaders." This was true in theory, as Voldemort was a little more cautious since the DOM and Goyle's capture.

Dumbledore leaned back and pondered for a moment as he sipped at his cider. He badly wanted to believe his friend, and this was the kind of information that he had been seeking, but there was something wrong in all this, something he could not quite put his mental finger on.

"What of Greyback, how does he fit into the whole situation?"

"He supplies extra troops, and we coordinate our actions with him to enhance the damage he does. He styles himself some kind of conqueror, but Voldemort will not even deign to meet him."

"Do you know where his lair is?" It took most of Snape's considerable self control not to sneer at these elementary questions that even Longbottom would know were fruitless. He took a second to compose himself inside before answering.

"None of us know that, Greyback is not quite that gullible. He knows that all things being equal, Voldemort would order us to take him out in a heartbeat. We use owls to communicate with them, mostly Pettigrew is the one who does it."

"Does Voldemort have any people inside Hogwarts?" The old man did not want to believe this was possible, but one could never be too sure. He himself had not suspected Quirrel after all.

"He might have one person, I'm not sure. That's the last thing he would tell me obviously, since I might be able to give you clues about it without meaning to. But given things that Pettigrew has mentioned in passing, it certainly seems possible."

“Who do you think it could be? The new man, Shepherd, perhaps?”

“Surely you subjected him to some sort of Veritaserum test didn’t you?” Snape spoke this as if any five year old should have thought of it.

“No, I could not do that Severus, he was reluctant to take the position in the first place, he never would have agreed to me interrogating him like that. Plus, there has never been any indication of Death Eater involvement by him or his family.” The wealthy Shepherds owned Witch Weekly, and were also one of the few British Wizard families with significant financial dealings in the muggle business world. They were all Slytherin, but not considered part of the nasty branch of them.

“Well then you should have done it on the sly then Albus, perhaps you are too trusting at times.” Snape was cackling on the inside, but this shot did not go unanswered by the old man.

“Some would say that about me in regards to you Severus, that I have trusted you for too long.”

“And they have been proven wrong, have they not? Do you regret the choice you made? Me over Potter?” This hit right between the eyes, but Dumbledore did not really agree.

“I did not have to choose there Severus, I have your services, and I will have Harry’s as well when the time comes. He will never choose Voldemort over his friends, so when the time comes, he will fight.....as he did at The Ministry, as you have no doubt been told. And you have wisely not forced me to choose either, so the status quo remains.”

“I personally don’t care whether Potter lives or dies, or if he is even involved at all.....that is the difference between the brat and I, because you and I both know he does care, a lot. That’s the reason you have not gone to that school to try and fetch him out, because he holds you responsible for me, and what I am doing. And you worry that your old friend Murray would let him attack you.”

“Oh please Severus, you greatly overestimate things about Harry, as usual. If Harry attacked me he knows he would be persona non grata in Great Britain, and he does not want that. He has maintained close ties with his friends over here, in spite of being thousands of kilometers away.”

“He is a headstrong child, and I maintain that if you and he were in the same room in America, you would have to fight your way out of there, at best.....you know the at worst scenario.” Deep down Dumbledore totally agreed with this statement, but he did not dare admit this in front of Snape, or anyone else. Remus had anticipated this fear though, and assured him that Harry did not harbor violent intentions toward him, but he did not believe his younger colleague, at least not totally.

Snape took out his pocket watch and gave it a look. He did not want to linger here too long, and fully understood that he had pressed a few buttons a bit harder than he had intended. Dumbledore was smart enough that manipulating him was rather taxing, and Snape realized that his touch there was a little bit rusty.

“Enough about the brat, there is one piece of information that I feel I should pass on before I must go. The werewolves have agreed to do another attack for us.”

“Where and when?”

“Hogsmeade again, sometime in the middle of next month. Voldemort wants the town to be built back up again before they knock it down.”

“Not Hogwarts this time?”

“That was just a diversion, to get you and the others out of The Ministry. I mean they would have been happy to kill Hooch or any of her flying students, but that was just a bonus.”

“You will let me know the exact date and time?” Snape answered that question, and another, unasked one, that had been nagging at Dumbledore.

“Of course, as soon as I know them myself. Voldemort does not know that I am aware of this attack mind you, I placed a few Listening Charms in Pettigrew’s quarters, he likes to use a dictating quill when doing his correspondence. Voldemort would have a fit if he knew I had told you this, and my life would not be worth a Sickle.”

“Of course Severus, I will keep this to myself for the time being, until you can get me more specific information.”

“Do not tell Lupin especially, one never knows where his true loyalties lie there.” Dumbledore just ignored that last insult, if anyone could be trusted to stay loyal to the light side, it was Remus.

“As I said, I will keep it to myself, the only exception would be to tell Alastor.”

“I have no problem with that, if anyone can understand secrecy it is Moody. Now I must go, I cannot linger too long or Voldemort will wonder what else I have been telling you.”

“Thank you for meeting me Severus, I am very glad that you are still in the fold.” Snape smiled.

“As am I Albus, thank you for believing in me. I will contact you when I have any further information, probably through Tom again, he is a safe conduit.”

“He is at that. Be well Severus, and be safe.”

“You too Albus.” Snape walked away from the table, and had almost made it to the door, before being stopped by a elderly woman, bent and stooped, who grabbed his arm.

“Just because he believes you Snape, does not mean that we all do. Be very careful.” Snape just sneered at her.

“Your true face comes out Nymphadora.” He swatted her arm away and left.....fortunately for him, he spotted and removed the tracking charm she had laid on him before he got back to his rendezvous point to meet Bella. She scanned him thoroughly, and pronounced him clean before he was allowed to grab the portkey taking them home. Once they got back to Riddle Manor, he immediately reported to the study and a waiting Voldemort.

“Well Snape, did he buy what you were selling?”

“He certainly appeared to my Lord.....”

“But?”

“Let me have you watch it Master, and you tell me. Something about it all just does not fit.” Voldemort pulled a pensieve out of a cabinet, and watched the memory, amused to see his old rival grasping for Snape’s table scraps of information.

“You worry too much Snape, he believed you. Of course he is a little suspicious at first, who wouldn’t be? In the end though, he believed you.”

“Yes Master.”

“Good, you may return to your cauldrons now Snape. Good work.”

“Thank you my Lord.” Snape nonchalantly left the study, robes billowing as he did.

Meanwhile, back at the pub, Tonks reverted to her normal form and approached Dumbledore’s table. He was still sipping his cider, contemplating. She had heard the whole thing at the next table.

“Was he alone Tonks?”

“He did not make contact with anyone, that I know. Whether or not he had backup here, I couldn’t tell you beyond that.”

“Good enough, a very illuminating discussion.”

“So you believed him?” Dumbledore gave her a soft smile.

“I did not say that Tonks, I merely said that it was very illuminating.” With that, he got up and left the pub without another word, while Tonks just stood there looking confused.

Defense Classroom E

4:00 pm

Class was just letting out, and Harry stopped his classmate Ray Elwood for a moment.

“Hey Ray, can you do me a small favor?”

“Sure Harry, what’s up?”

“Could you post this in your Lounge? Somewhere where people will see it.” He handed his friend a small poster. The other boy looked it over and started giggling.

“This is for real?” Harry couldn’t resist a laugh himself.

“You bet, I’d really appreciate it if you would put that up for me.”

“No problem, I’ll do it when I get up there.” This was going to be good, Ray thought to himself.

“Thanks mate.” They went their separate ways, and when Ray got up to Proctor Lounge, he used a Sticking Charm to put Harry’s poster on the bulletin board. A few students came over to look at it, and laughter ensued. It read as follows:

A notice to all WWW customers!

I thank all of you who have ordered products over these last months from WWW, and we look forward to filling even more orders from you in the future. Fred and George are introducing new products all the time, and you will be notified when a new one is ready for sale.

There is going to be one change in our delivery system though. So far I have used my staff, Dobby and Winky, to deliver your orders to you, and save you money on shipping costs that would ordinarily add ten percent to your bill. Dobby and Winky will still be doing this, but there is a small payment to be made for this, though not in money. For every WWW order you make, we will continue to waive shipping fees in exchange for you providing one Howler, in your voice, to the British person of my choice. I will have a script all laid out for you, and I will pick the person. This is a process that will take two or three minutes of your life, and should be some fun to boot.

If you are not comfortable with making a Howler, then the ten percent shipping fee will be applied to your orders. Any questions about this new policy, or to place a new order, just come see me. All orders already in the system will not be affected by this new policy, though you can still make a Howler donation if you like at any time.

Thank you for your attention,

Harry Potter

Harry had decided to take advantage of the 'students don't get Howlers' policy at school, and have some fun at Dumbledore's.....and some other peoples', expense. He, Sophie, and Reiko had spent the previous evening typing out scripts for Dumbledore, Draco, Filch, McGonagall, and a few other Hogwarts students that Harry had never really cared for, with Warrick sitting behind them, throwing out ideas.....Warrick couldn't type to save his life, even after five plus years of school term papers to do, hunt and peck was very slow working.....Reiko typed them for him after he wrote them out for her first, with him repaying her with various favors over the course of the year.

People that he left off the list, for now, included his quintet of friends back there, Vernon and Petunia, and also Cho Chang.....though just because Harry decided that, did not make it so. Sophie and Reiko had enlisted their roommates, and Claudia and her roommates as well, to send Cho some not-so love notes, ragging on her for her crap treatment of Harry last year.....most of which he had shown the three of them in the pensieve, at Sophie's request. They had debated on whether to tell Harry or not, with the verdict being that he did not need to know at the present time. None of the Howlers, all individually done, were profane or threatening.....barely.

That first night, seven students/customers came by and recorded their messages.....all to McGonagall, as Harry wanted to send her a message about how little she had protected him over the years. Just seeing her at the trial, even if it was six weeks previous, had unlocked a lot of bitterness toward his former Head of House. He felt that she should have at least pretended to be a buffer against Snape for him and Neville especially, and her non-reaction during the Chamber of Secrets and his Heir of Slytherin crap had resonated as well. A lot of this he had pushed back in his mind over the years, with the knowledge that there was nothing to be done until graduation, until now. He sent the seven, plus one of his own, off with Dobby to be mailed from the Post Office in Hogsmeade.....he wanted to give the town some business as it was being rebuilt.

The first repercussion, though, occurred the next morning, as apparently Murray and Heyman had seen or heard about the posters. They stopped by his breakfast table for a chat, Murray fighting off a smile as she asked:

“Harry, just what the heck do you think you are doing with those Howlers?” Harry grinned sheepishly, as the two administrators did not look angry, just amusedly exasperated.

“I don't suppose having fun is a good enough answer for you?”

“Not really, no. Dare I ask why?”

“A little payback for the most part, but done in a fun way. Dobby!”
He popped in.

“Could you go get the Howler scripts for me please? I need to show them to the Professors here.”

“Right away Harry.” He popped out.

“I know I should have kept copies on me to show, but I just didn’t think of it.”

“House elves are handy to have around.” Dobby came back, and handed the pages to Murray, who passed half of them to Heyman as she read. Heyman had apparently gotten Dumbledore’s, which was the longest, and his eyes were looking quite similar to Dobby’s at certain points. Murray had abandoned all decorum and was shaking with silent laughter as she read McGonagall’s, and then Draco’s. She handed hers back to Dobby.

“All right, all right, they are quite funny, and not malicious in their words, if not intent. David?” Heyman handed his back to Dobby as well, though he passed the Dumbledore one to his boss.

“You really hate Dumbledore don’t you?” Harry shrugged, that was not as clear cut as most people assumed it was.

“Not really I guess. I’m always changing my mind on whether I hate him, or just loathe him and want him out of my life. I figure if I change my mind that much about him, I can’t really hate him.”

“Point taken. I agree with Professor Murray, as long as they stay funny and non-profane, I won’t prevent you from doing it, or waive the Howler policy here.....so that they cannot get revenge, if they so choose.”

“Thank you Professors. If I add new targets, or if the scripts change at all, I’ll make it a point to let you know.” They smiled at that courtesy, and after wishing them all a good day, walked away. The gang of six all grinned at each other, this was going to be fun.

Over the next week Harry and company got a total of 43 Howler donations, most from WWW customers, and a few from students who just plain wanted to Howler someone, even if it was someone they did not know, with the contents not being their own thoughts. This also had the benefit of selling more WWW goods, and while Harry had thought of it more as a prank, it was turning out to be a good business strategy as well. As they tallied up the numbers, Sophie just shook her head at her boyfriend:

“You know, you really do have a criminal mind.”

“Why thank you dear.” He pulled her into a loud kiss.....loud because they were in the Lounge at the time, business before pleasure.

“The twins don’t need an American store in one of the Alleys, they have you.”

“For two more years anyway. They’re very happy with how things are going, I have a sneaking suspicion that they’re sending some Howlers of their own too.”

“You’ve started a craze you know, what’s your next move?”

“A DIY Howler Kit? Make the envelopes purple or something, and they’ll explode into jam or something if they’re not opened.” Sophie opened her mouth to object, but then closed it thoughtfully. Harry immediately wrote the idea down for later delivery to the twins.

On the following Sunday, the 17th, Harry got his first feedback from Britain, courtesy of a letter from his old Transfiguration teacher.

Mr. Potter,

You will cease this harassment of me at once. All of your petty complaints and grudges make me that much more sympathetic to Professor Snape and his attitude toward you. I am warning you now, any further Howlers with American voices, and you will regret it.

Minerva McGonagall

Deputy Headmistress

Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry

Harry was roaring with laughter after he read it, and the others did as well when they perused it. He had not sent McGonagall any others after the initial salvo, but that was about to change. He first had his own, normal, letter to send back to her.

Dearest Minerva,

You did nothing more than prove my point with your reaction to my campaign.....a campaign to open your eyes to a few of your shortcomings as a teacher and administrator. The fact that you cannot take criticism is one of them, and I will continue to delight in remonstrating with you about it. You also seem to have forgotten that I am beyond your reach, as it were. My Headmistress and Deputy Headmaster reviewed the script for the Howlers I had you sent, and they did not object. So while I do not have official school sanction for what I am doing, they are fully aware and taking a hands off position.

As for me regretting anything, don't kid yourself Minerva. I have the most powerful Wizard in the world plotting daily to kill me, you think your petty threats are any bother to me? I do thank you for the laugh though, I needed something to wake me up.

Mr. Potter

He sent this off with Dobby again to be mailed, he did not like sending Dobby and Winky into the castle if he could help it. In fact the only time he had done so was to get Hermione the mirror back in September. There was no reply unfortunately, and Harry knew now more than ever that his bridges to Hogwarts were burned.....and the ashes scattered to the winds. He didn't mind though, his new favorite PG rated daydream was imagining his stick in the butt former Transfiguration teacher getting a Howler right in the middle of breakfast.

Dumbledore, Draco, and the others took their Howler barrage either in silence, or they tried to send Howlers back and Harry just did not get them.....that was likely Draco's strategy. He had made Dumbledore's Howler the harshest, but ironically sent him the fewest. He halted the campaign for the Thanksgiving Holiday, putting up another poster asking his fellow students, politely, not to send any Howlers while everyone was away. Harry soon got letters from all five of his friends back at the old stomping grounds, typical of them was Neville's:

Dear Harry,

Just so you know, you're almost causing a riot at every mail call. We all figured out it was you after that first morning when seven of the Howlers had Yank voices to them. I thought McGonagall was going to have a fit, and by the fifth one we were taking bets on who she would hex first.....it almost was Malfoy and his gang during Transfiguration that day, the ferret was making comments under his breath about her and you, and she overheard one of them and gave him a week's detention with Filch. Believe it or not Draco seemed kind of impressed with what you were doing, very Slytherin he said, getting others to do your dirty work for you.....until a couple of days later, when he got his batch of them, though he had to assume he was due. The rest of us are keeping our mouths shut about the whole thing, and McGonagall seemed to believe us when we said we had no idea you were planning it. Ron was very convincing in this regard, though he was laughing his bum off before and after.

Things are running normal here otherwise, there are 14 of us in the alternate DA, and we mainly just practice outside, or in one of the unused classrooms, always on Sundays. I'm assuming Hermione has filled you in on all that. I heard about the big deal Mrs. Weasley made about your offer to pay the Great Lakes fees for us, and I should probably tell you that while I really appreciate it, I won't be doing it. It's getting better for me here now, with no Snape, and Draco laying off.....though I'm sure he only does it on his boss's orders, probably doesn't want you to come back here and nail him I suppose. I'm ready for Malfoy if he ever tries anything, but he hasn't yet. Nor have Luna's roommates, her stuff has gone untampered with, and they are a little nicer to her, though she spends most of her time with me or Ginny still.

I'm glad to hear you're doing well, your sense of humor is rivaling the twins, they have had quite an influence on you it seems. Take care mate, if you ever need anything, just let me know.

Your mate,

Neville

Harry had been a little taken aback at reading how Malfoy had approved of what he had done.....but shook it off after realizing that what they had pulled off was funny, and Draco probably had a normal sense of humor, way deep down. He was debating now on whether or not just end the campaign as it was, but nothing needed to be decided now of course. It could wait until after the holiday weekend.

That night, he and his Quidditch teammates had a raucous snowball fight out in the stadium, issuing a challenge to the Novice years in their House.....and the older kids pasted them, despite having two of their own on the Novice side. It was a fun time though, releasing a lot of pent-up energy. Even Reiko enjoyed it, as it was not that cold outside yet, but there was lots of snow. While the others were fighting it out, she quickly built a snowman and charmed it to chase after the little kids, to Harry and Warrick's delight, as they followed it and rained havoc down on the youngsters. They returned to the Lounge 90 minutes later, exhausted and exhilarated.

Special Projects Classroom A

10:30 am

Harry was straining with effort, trying to levitate his chair.....with him in it. It had taken him six weeks to get the cup hovering, and then Kinsella had them moving on to doing more and more weight, in addition to doing other charms and spells wandlessly. Harry was now floating about a foot off the ground, when Kinsella called time. Harry didn't hear him at first, he was concentrating so intently on what he was doing. He hit the ground with a thud when Ray tapped him on the shoulder, breaking his concentration and earning him some chuckles from his classmates.

"That was very good Harry, a foot in the air.....more than anyone else, but you needed total concentration to do it. Are you tired at all?"

"Not that much really, I just kind of zoned out there for a time, it really helped when I did that." That was interesting, Ray had never seen a student blank out like that when doing a simple Levitation spell.

"Something for you to think about Harry, it won't be of much use during a battle, but around the home it might." He turned to the class.

"All right, that's enough for the week, there is no homework for the weekend either. Have a good time with your families and friends the next few days, be good and be safe." The class exited, and Harry and company walked slowly upstairs. Rumor had it that Professor Maloney was barely even going to try to have class, understanding that the students would not be totally into the subject, them having visions of a four day vacation. Maloney in the past had generally let students out early, but officially it was a little frowned upon by the brass. In the grand scheme of things though, it wouldn't matter. None of the portkeys were going to be given out until 4:30 pm anyway.

The rumors wound up being true, sort of. No charms were actually performed during class, rather Maloney talked for an hour about NEWT preparation, the first time she had even mentioned the word NEWT in over a month. It was a free flowing discussion, and Drew contributed the most of the students, as his sisters, who were two and three years removed from Great Lakes respectively, had gone into great detail with him about their OWL and NEWT exams, one reason why he was ranked number two in the class overall, by a hair.....right behind Reiko, who had her own sources of information, her parents.

The Professors Aylesworth, however, were a little thrifty with their insight on specific questions, wanting to see their only child do well without too much of a helping hand from them, and she had proven their method correct by being the top student overall.....Sophie was third, Harry now sixth, Claudia clocked in at eleventh, Warrick and Jonas right next to each other at sixteenth and seventeenth. Claudia had given Harry a lot of grief back in September when these ranks were posted and she was booted out of the top ten with his arrival.....and only the top 20 were posted, so no one had the ignominy of being last in the class, that they knew about.

After the clock struck 3 pm, Maloney ended the discussion thus:

“Okay folks, that’s all the business we have to deal with today. I’ve been asked by Professor Heyman to keep class going in here until at least 3:30, so you guys can just shoot the breeze until then.” They did, and no class stuff was talked about for the next half hour. The big subject was the holiday, and everyone’s plans for it. It turned out that only eleven students were sticking around school, all younger muggleborns who had been forced into the same kind of choice that Sophie had, and either did not have close friends to go home with, or just wanted to enjoy having their Lounges mostly to themselves. Harry had met his gang so early in his Great Lakes experience that he had not really found it necessary to speculate on where he would have gone for the holiday, it was just assumed by all of them that he would go with Warrick, Reiko, or Jonas. When he thought about it later, he supposed he would have just taken a four day holiday at WWW or something, or perhaps taking a room in Flackter Alley and doing some more exploring.

Once Maloney let them out, the gang went upstairs to pack.....which Harry and Sophie had already done, wanting some alone time in the trunk, not anticipating getting much privacy over the next four days or so.

“So you’re meeting your first American family, you nervous?”

“A little I guess, the only family I’m really used to being around is the Weasleys, this will be different I’m sure.” He barely counted the Dursleys as a family, more a collection of social misfits.

“It will be fun, Warrick’s parents have heard so many horror stories about Clancy, and even Rick and Terry, that you will be welcomed that much more.”

“Yeah, Warrick did not get much of a roommate bonanza did he?” Harry found his other two roommates just as dull as Warrick had, and in far shorter a time frame. They were nice guys though, he felt he should be grateful for that.

“No he didn’t. This is the second time in a row I’ve lucked out, first Ron, now Warrick. All that bad karma with the Dursleys paid off in other ways.” Goodness knows that his time with them should have some advantage, Harry thought.

Talk soon ended, and Harry and Sophie spent their private time being private. No they were not having sex yet, though the urges were getting harder and harder to control. Harry often reflected that he would never have been this adventurous at Hogwarts. There were always rumors of rampant sex of course, but the castle was somewhat wanting of places to do it.....at least privately anyway. None of the classrooms had locks on the doors, and the ghosts were always wandering around.....though some teenagers did not mind them as an audience. There had to be some ultra private places, since Ginny had dated Michael Corner right under Ron’s and his noses for so long.

They emerged, after some straightening up, into an empty room thank goodness. They had forgotten to check the Map a few times doing this, and had been caught a couple of times by a leering Warrick.....whose private place with Reiko was still unknown to the rest of the group, though Harry had quickly assumed it to be in the basement, since there was no shelter on the roof, and the two of them had not yet asked to borrow the trunk. Rick and Terry just brought their girlfriends into the room, and used Silencing Charms and curtains at night. Harry just smiled at the girls come morning usually, and went about his business of getting ready for the day. They were two girls, Amy and Jill, that were in the other Cortez Junior Year room, the one not housing Sophie and Reiko.

It was now 4:35, and they grabbed their things and walked quickly to the Lounge. Harry just shrunk the trunk and put it in his pocket, while Sophie had two magical suitcases.....they could handle about four times the capacity of muggle suitcases whilst being the same general size. They were still pretty heavy, and Harry mentally grouched about her taking her room with her. He did not say this out loud though, he was pretty well trained by now. Jonas had already taken off for home by this time, but Warrick, Reiko, and Claudia were waiting impatiently for them in the Lounge. Claudia looked crossly at them.

“What the heck took you so long.....never mind, I’m sure I don’t want any details.” Reiko and Sophie traded details all the time, and Warrick just assumed certain things since Harry wouldn’t tell him much beyond ‘we have a lot of fun’. Reiko and Sophie kissed their boyfriends goodbye before grabbing onto the jump rope that was their portkey.

“Goodbye guys, we’ll see you tomorrow morning!” At Claudia’s command, the jump rope took them to Alice Springs, Oklahoma and the front door of The Tecumseh Magical Academy.

Warrick turned to Harry.

“You ready?”

“Yeah mate, let’s hit the road.” They both started chuckling, as neither of them had been in a car in months. Their portkey was a paperback book, and they picked it up.

“Activate!” With a jolt, they were away and as usual, it seemed like the whole world was spinning for Harry. He had gotten really used to floo travel over the last three months, but this was his first portkey since the car and his airport pickup. They were somewhat similar experiences, but he always felt so out of control when he was traveling that way. After about ten seconds, the two of them landed in a heap.....with Warrick on top of his nearly 70 pounds lighter roommate.

“Ouch, would you get your elbow out of my ear please?”

“It’s not my fault you’re so damned small.....and your bony knee isn’t doing my ribs any good either you know.” They disentangled themselves and stood up, and Harry found himself next to the Forresters’ front door, on the inside thankfully. The Forresters lived in a muggle section of town, though their house was loaded down with charms and other magical enhancements. Warrick had told Harry that his mother used a car to get to work at City Hall usually, and his dad worked from home making his wands, though he did have to travel some to get the materials needed to make them.

The two parents had heard the friends bitching at each other and came in. They had big smiles and each embraced their son, while shaking Harry’s hand.

“Hello there, you must be Harry. I’m Nick Forrester, pleased to meet you.”

“I’m Karen, Warrick’s mother, nice to meet you Harry, Warrick’s written us all about you.” It was easy to see where Warrick had gotten his height from. Karen was about 5’8”, an inch taller than Harry himself still, and Nick was a good 6’5, three inches taller than his only child. Warrick’s basketball uncle, Karen’s baby brother, was 6’9”, so there was no telling how big Warrick might get.

“I’m pleased to meet you both, thank you for inviting me over for Thanksgiving.” Nick gave him a light pat on the back, which still almost knocked the wind out of him.

“You’re very welcome of course Harry. I’m guessing you guys shrunk your luggage or something?” They nodded in the affirmative. Warrick had a regular Wizard trunk, with three compartments and no living space or floo system.

“Go ahead and put your stuff upstairs, we’re waiting for both sets of our parents to get here, then we’ll go out and get something to eat.”

“Are we going to get to see Uncle Antonio this weekend? Are the Pacers playing here?”

“Sorry but no, they’re on the road playing Friday and Saturday, on the west coast. You’ll get a chance to see him next month, they have a homestand during your next holiday break.” Harry knew what basketball was, but he had never played it himself, and there were no hoops at Great Lakes. The televisions at Great Lakes did not pick up any actual channels, by design, and were there only to watch videos with. The library carried copies of muggle entertainment magazines so that students who lived at school year round, like Sophie, would have a reasonable idea of what movies they would like to watch.

“Come on Harry, let’s get our trunks upstairs.” Harry started after him, only to stop and clear his throat.

“Ahem, Warrick? What about Dobby and Winky?”

“Oh yeah, Mom, Dad, do you mind if Harry’s house elves stay over here too?” The Forresters did not have any house elves of their own, and they looked at each other and shrugged. Karen answered.

“I don’t see why not.”

“Dobby! Winky!” The two popped in, and were introduced. They beamed at Nick and Karen, and Dobby addressed them.

“Nice to meet you, parents of Warrick, he speaks of you often. He is a good young man, even if he does bet a little too recklessly on the flop.” Nick had taught his son how to play poker, and nearly cracked a rib laughing.

“I thought I taught you better than that son.”

“He cheats Dad, don’t listen to him.” Dobby looked affronted until he realized Warrick was kidding.

“Mother of Warrick, Winky and I have familiarized ourselves with your American holiday of Thanksgiving, and we will be pleased to help you tomorrow in any way we can.” Karen raised her eyebrows.

“Thank you both, I will find something for you to do in the morning, there is a lot of food to prepare.” The elves nodded eagerly.

They went upstairs to deposit their trunks in Warrick’s room, a large, rather empty, one that looked like it was lived in by a ten year old.....oh yeah. Harry now understood why Warrick’s closet at school was enlarged to it’s maximum capacity.....all his stuff was there. One of the parents had transfigured the king sized bed into a bunk bed setup. They set their trunks down on the floor, and the elves went back into Harry’s, as they were going to a muggle restaurant that night.

Soon after they went back downstairs, Nick’s parents arrived. Martin and June Forrester were in their early 60’s and also lived in Indianapolis. They greeted Harry warmly, and asked him all sorts of questions about Britain and what it was like over there. Martin owned a group of muggle restaurants, currently run by his two other sons, who would be joining everyone the next day. Karen’s parents arrived about ten minutes later. Thomas and Mary Elliot lived in Bloomington, about an hour’s drive south, where Mary was a Professor of American Literature at the big university there. Thomas worked as a Nike representative for the area, dealing with both muggle and wizard merchandise. Warrick had gotten his broom from his grandfather upon making the Quidditch team five years earlier. Both sides of the family were long time wizards, and Warrick had hinted on more than one occasion that he was under a lot of pressure to marry another pureblood to keep the bloodline clear.....they did not care a whit about what race she was, only that she be pureblood.

The eight of them went out to eat, Chinese food, as everyone made a big deal about Harry throughout the meal. Not because he was famous, although that was touched on, but because they had quite resigned themselves to never meeting any of Warrick's roommates. They had heard so many horror stories about Clancy, and so little about Rick and Terry over the years that Harry was a novelty. Because of this, he didn't mind the attention at all, knowing that he was a bit of an in-person conversation piece. They asked little about the war over in Britain, and Harry certainly wasn't eager to volunteer anything about it if he did not have to. He found himself feeling very comfortable around them, and he was less nervous now about meeting everyone else the next day.

Harry and Warrick stayed up late watching television, something Harry had never gotten to do until the summer, with a few times in his hotel. They watched some Sportscenter, with Warrick explaining the ins and outs of American football.

"So why do they stop all the time? Doesn't that get boring to watch eventually?" Warrick sighed.

"Don't worry dude, we'll have time during the Christmas break for you to go to a game. Uncle Antonio can always get us tickets for the Colts.....that's the team here in Indianapolis. There are a couple of games on TV tomorrow, I'm sure we'll watch some of it here.

They also watched David Letterman, and Harry loved it, he had acquired a taste for comedy while watching movies, and was disappointed to find out that there were no Letterman video tapes out there for sale. They went to bed pretty late, and even then only when Karen came out and warned them that if they fell asleep at the dinner table the next, they would be wearing that food the rest of the day.

Thanksgiving Day (U.S.)

10 am

Forrester Residence, Indianapolis.

Just as Harry and Warrick came downstairs, Jonas came tumbling out of the floo.

“Hi Mr. Forrester, what’s up guys?” Nick and Jonas shook hands, as no one else appeared to be coming out of the fireplace.

“Good to see you again Jonas, are your parents coming by?”

“I don’t think so sir, my mother is.....well she’s not feeling well this morning. Dad said he would stop by for dessert if that’s okay.” Warrick had dropped enough hints to Harry about Jonas’ mother to give the impression that she was a bit unstable. This happened every once in awhile to pureblood families who were obsessed with not ‘polluting’ the bloodline. Jonas’ mother’s family, the Harringtons, were especially noteworthy in this view. The problem was, there were very few other totally pureblood families left, and the blood was getting very familiar. Jonas’ father’s family, the Steeles, were of pureblood descent also, but they had emigrated from Australia right after Michael Steele was born 36 years earlier. Jonas himself was fine, and wanted nothing to do with marrying a pureblood simply because he had to.

“That’ll be fine Jonas, make yourself at home.” The three boys wandered into the kitchen, where the cooking was already beginning. The turkeys were already in the ovens, and Dobby and Winky were sitting on the counter, chopping vegetables and happily chatting away with Karen, her mother, mother-in-law, and two women who turned out to be Karen’s sisters, Grace and Lina. Harry was introduced to Grace and Lina, and the boys were quickly shooed away after grabbing some juice.

“Don’t worry about breakfast dude, you want a lot of room in your stomach before you visit my mom’s cooking.” Jonas was nodding at hearing that, his face had gotten greedy as soon as he had walked in the kitchen, perhaps hoping for an early sample.

More Forresters and Elliots streamed in during the rest of the morning, and soon there were about two dozen people there, though there were no other family expected as the noon hour approached. The Tecumseh contingent came through the floo right at noon: Sophie, Claudia, Reiko, and her parents and paternal grandparents.....her maternal ones lived in Hawaii and did not like to travel. The teenage couples had a kiss-like reunion, and Warrick's parents came out to greet the newcomers. Reiko's parents, Lisa and Karl, warmly shook hands with their counterparts, as Reiko made the introductions.

"It's nice to meet you finally, Reiko and Warrick both have told us all about you."

Nick and Karen had both long taken to Reiko, who had been friends with Warrick since almost the first day of school back in September, 1991.

"Likewise, you have a lovely daughter, she's very good for Warrick I think." Warrick grimaced as his dad said that, but Harry and Jonas could not agree more.....and Jonas said so.

"I know what you mean Mr. Forrester, he was just impossible until Reiko agreed to go out with him."

"Oh shut up Jonas." Everyone laughed, and the ice was broken. The Aylesworths turned then to Harry.

"You must be Harry, nice to meet you." Harry shook hands with all four of them, and soon some shop talk started, as Harry proceeded to pick Lisa's and Karl's brains about some particular charms he had read about in one of his Grimmauld books. Jonas and Warrick soon abandoned them for the TV and football, while Sophie, Reiko, and Claudia went and played with the half dozen or so children that had come over. Harry was greatly impressed with their Charms knowledge, and agreed to send them a couple of Grimmauld books, volumes that they had long heard about, but had not been able to find copies of.

Dinner was served just before 1:00 pm, and it lasted three hours as course after course hit the table, only to be wiped out in what seemed like seconds. Jonas' dad Michael had floored in just before the prayer, and a place was found for him at the table as he spent a couple of minutes shaking hands and catching up. Harry and Jonas, neither of whom got cooking this good at their homes.....when Harry had a home that is.....ate until they could literally not move for fear of an 'accident'. Sophie decided to have a little fun with her man upon seeing this.

"Harry, come on, let's go into the trunk and fool around." Harry groaned back a reply.

"Only if you want me hurling all over you dearest. If one more thing enters my mouth the results will be very gross.....and one more thing includes your tongue. I love you though Sophie, even if you're taunting me right now." She grinned and kissed him lightly on the cheek.

"It's okay, the show was worth it anyway. I've never seen so small a person pack so much food away." Harry groaned again at the memory.

"Hey, I learned from the best, Ron. That guy can easily put way half his body weight in food." A slight exaggeration, but Harry's mind was stuffed as well and not firing on all cylinders at the moment.. Soon Karen came out of the living room with a large camera and set it up with a timer. Everyone gathered in as tight as they could around the table. Sophie and Harry had their arms around each other, Winky and Dobby in their laps, respectively, as the 32 people and two house elves all said on cue:

CHEESE!

End Chapter.

Author's Note: Warrick's mother's maiden name should be Davis, not Elliot. Just a bit of forgetfulness from me, sorry. I'm making up so many names in this story that it got away from me there for a minute. For the time being, I'm going to start referring to the new Marauders: Harry, Sophie, Warrick, Jonas, Claudia, and Reiko, as 'the gang', for no other reason than a shorthand way to call them something. So when I refer to 'the gang' that is who I'm talking about. Further additions to the gang may be forthcoming, but one never knows. One last thing, there is a battle in this chapter, one that I have been sending feelers out about for the last two chapters. It's a short one in terms of chapter space, not because it is unimportant, but because Harry is not involved, and I want to keep most of the story about him.

Thanksgiving Day

Indianapolis, Indiana and Alice Springs, Oklahoma

Mid-afternoon

Harry and Jonas were able to move after about a half hour or so, and they gathered around the television for Harry's first American football game, even if only on TV. Michael Steele, Jonas' father, joined the three boys and watched the game with them, and Harry was more confused than after he had watched his first Quodpot practice. Michael was a investment broker in Chicago, and dealt mainly with Wizards who wanted to invest in muggle businesses. He made arrangements to have the kids come by the next afternoon for a tour, before he headed home at halftime to attend to his wife.....the official word was that she was 'feeling poorly'.

Soon thereafter, the kids and Reiko's family all flooded over to Tecumseh for the dinner there,. They joined most of the faculty and about a dozen students for another traditional American Thanksgiving dinner. Harry and Jonas got sick just looking at the food, but managed a small sample of everything, to be polite. Warrick and the women had paced themselves better, and did not rub it in too much to the stuffed ones. Harry was all eager to explore Tecumseh after dinner, until Reiko quashed it by informing him that there was very little difference between the schools. Great Lakes and Tecumseh had been built within five years of each other, and the same architects had done both schools. The view outside was different, that was for sure. It had not snowed yet in this section of Oklahoma, and the six of them had a nice walk outside after dinner.

While Reiko's parents had been Tecumseh teachers all her life, she had never actually lived at the school, aside from holidays the last six years. Teachers at Wizard schools made more than enough to afford homes outside of school if they chose, and were not encouraged to live at school with small children. So Reiko had grown up in Tulsa, a stone's throw from Chrokar Alley, and had gone to muggle primary school through fifth grade, her mom and dad flooding to work every day. After that it was a debate on where to send her, as she was not allowed to attend her local school. Lisa had gone to Pathfinder in California, while Karl had attended Salem.....so they and Reiko decided on the road not traveled and enrolled her at Great Lakes. There were about three dozen such students floating around the system, including Murray's daughter, who was attending Salem as a fourth year. As soon as Reiko was enrolled at Great Lakes, Lisa and Karl had sold their house and moved into Tecumseh, saving for what they told the kids was an early retirement.

The boys flooded back north that night, and they all met at Michael Steele's office the next morning for the tour. Harry had picked up enough business stuff from the twins that he was able to ask some smart questions, and Michael in turn quizzed him about WWW and any expansion plans. Some of the terms flew over Harry's head, and he finally had to ask.

"Look Michael, if I can get Fred and George over here, would you give them an hour to talk about some of these things?" For an investment banker, Michael was not big on formality, and all the kids called him by his first name.

"Sure Harry, just owl me a few days ahead of time and I'll schedule a lunch for us."

“Thanks Michael, it will probably be during our Christmas break, but I really want them to hear some of your ideas.”

“Likewise, you three seem to have started something interesting over there. Zonko’s has always lacked a real challenger in that market, your WWW might be the thing that does it.”

The rest of the holiday was spent lounging around Warrick’s house, watching television and doing relatively little in particular. The other four looked the other way when Harry and Sophie disappeared into the trunk for a couple of hours, and after dinner Warrick and Reiko always seemed to want to ‘take a walk’. They were careful not to leave Jonas and Claudia alone, though things were warming up, slowly. Jonas was still not dating anyone regularly, and Claudia seemed totally put off by the whole process. Sophie and Harry were wondering if she was even going to go to the Christmas Dance, though they were afraid to bring up the subject to her.

They returned to school Sunday afternoon, and found that in fact the place had not burned down without them there. Harry zipped off a letter to Hermione about his holiday, and crossed his fingers while delivering it. He was no longer in possession of the original Marauder’s Map, having sent it to Neville prior to the break. He was already bracing for Ron’s reaction, though not badly enough to have changed his mind about what to do with the Map. There was no firestorm though, Hermione wrote a quick note back saying that Ron did not even know that Neville now had the Map, and that not a whole lot of anything else was going on at school.

Dining Hall

8:20 am

Professor Murray stood up and addressed the masses.

“Welcome back students and faculty. I trust we all had a relaxing, not to mention stomach filling, vacation these past days. Now that we are back, it is only a short sprint until the Christmas Break, just 16 days. A reminder that the next Flackter Alley weekend will that of the 14th and 15th, with the two uppermost years going first on Saturday as usual, then the next two years on Sunday. The Christmas Dance will be held on the last day of classes on the Wednesday the 18th, starting at 7:00 pm here in the Dining Hall. Everyone is eligible to attend, and dress robes are strongly encouraged. Your portkeys home will be available the following morning during breakfast. Those of you staying at school should see either Professor Heyman or myself this week to sign up. Classes will resume on Monday morning, January 6th. Any questions, see any of the faculty. Have a good week.” She sat down, and the morning buzz started back in.

There was a debate that night on whether or not to turn on the Howler campaign for a couple of weeks. There had been no mail awaiting Harry upon his return from Indianapolis, so there seemed to be no repercussions, nor had Hermione mentioned any in her short note the day before. Ultimately he decided to continue the postponement until the new year. He planned on doing some kind of trip to Britain during the holiday, and wanted to hear first hand from somebody at Hogwarts how the Howlers had come off, though the recent letters from his friends there had all mentioned them. He also told the others that he was going to let Drew in on the trunk, though not the Map or the floo quite yet. He was tired of having to tip toe around that kind of thing when he was talking to Drew, and figured that he could be trusted. The others had no real objection, and Drew was initiated into the trunk the following afternoon after Defense with no difficulties. Harry’s one time statement to Warrick that there must be American trunk makers who did this kind of thing turned out to be inaccurate, as Drew’s cousin owned a Wizard Furniture business, and he had never heard of deluxe models like Harry’s, especially with that kind of price tag and extra features.

Reiko turned 17 the Wednesday after they returned, and her pleas about no party and no presents were blithely ignored by her friends, and they had a nice soiree for her in Harry’s trunk. She got quite a nice array of presents, including CD’s, clothes, and a lovely necklace from Warrick. Claudia and Sophie each turned of age in March, with Jonas and Warrick following in April and June respectively. Harry, though the first to be allowed to use his wand outside of school, was the youngster of the bunch with his July birthday. He and Reiko were over by the kitchen, getting some food ready.

“You know, now that you’re legal, you can help me and the twins put up the wards on the cabin.”

“I can’t wait to see it. What kind of wards do you want on it? Aren’t the Muggle Repelling Charms enough?”

“I’m debating on whether to put it under Fidelius or not, and I want some stuff for convenience too.”

“Are you thinking about going there that often? Be like Professor Ryan and his Florida trips?” Harry laughed, he was fascinated by Ryan’s deep tan, and in December no less.

“I don’t know, I’m still chewing on it. Life is all about options you know.”

“That’s a lot of money in portkeys if you do decide that. You should just get another trunk and place it there, I’m sure the twins wouldn’t mind a vacation place.” Harry was stunned into silence, broken only by:

“Now why the hell didn’t I think of that?” Reiko cuffed him lightly on the back of his head.

“Hey, just because you do that to Warrick.....” He was smiling though, and she took his arm and led him back to Sophie, who was by the stereo talking with Claudia.

“You aren’t the only one around here with good ideas you know.”

“Yes dear.” He reached over and hugged her.

“Happy Birthday Reiko.....you get first dibs on your bunk when we get there.”

“Thanks Harry.....I think.” They shared a laugh, and told the others what they had talked about, and everyone agreed that it was a terrific idea, and Reiko was saluted once more. Harry had paid 2,500 galleons for the twin set of trunks he had purchased back in July, and he figured around 1,300 or so for just one. The thing is though, portkeys on the black market in Britain or America, usually ran around 30 or 40 galleons apiece, depending on quantity, distance, and who you dealt with. So in the long-term, the buying of another trunk made a lot of sense, given that the only people using the island were trunk holders and friends, which would ensure secrecy. Harry checked his watch, it was now too late to send Dobby to the twins, even if they were awake, they were likely to be ‘occupied’.

Harry had one portkey left for the island, which was unnamed, and had to either copy it, or buy the trunk.....so of course he decided to do both. Come Tuesday morning he sent Dobby and Winky both to WWW and asked the twins to get him 10 copies made of the island portkey, and at some point during the week, to go to buy another trunk from Anthony Hook in Knockturn Alley. The notes stressed that the twins were more than welcome to make themselves at home on the island whenever they wanted.....and to bring Alicia and Angelina along if they wanted, as long as the guys didn’t blab about Harry’s trunk. Remus and Tonks knew about the island, given that they had been at the will reading, and Harry assumed that Sirius had told Dumbledore. The thing was, he was sure that Dumbledore did not know where the island was, as Sirius had seemed to anticipate his ‘Dumbledore difficulties’ with his binding oaths to the two other beneficiaries. He really wanted to tell Hermione and the others about it too, but it was just too chancy to tell them pieces of the tale, as Hermione was easily smart enough to put the various puzzles together, and she was just too close in proximity to the old man.

The twins got the missives and acted on them immediately, buying the trunk during lunchtime, and getting the portkey copies done that afternoon, once Dobby got the money from Gringotts. The two of them did not have much that they specifically had to do during the day, just stuff that had to get done at some point. They did not mind doing these tasks for Harry really, he was contributing a lot of sales to the shop with his schoolmates, and essentially took no salary or profit sharing, other than a personal supply of pranks for himself and his circle over there. They had loved the idea for the DIY Howler kit, and were putting the finishing touches on them in time for Christmas. Plus, the twins loved the idea of an island getaway, free from the war and The Ministry.

MacTavish's Pub and Brewery

Aberdeen, Scotland

9:00 pm GMT

Snape was already waiting at the corner table when Dumbledore arrived, he was looking around nervously until he spotted his 'friend'.....and a guest. Remus was with him. Snape sneered at his former classmate, and addressed Dumbledore with a grumpy look.

"The metamorph not available for bodyguard duty?" Dumbledore ignored the rudeness, as he always did with Snape, to Remus' ever loving wonderment.

"Not as such, no Severus, she is on duty at present."

"It's always lovely to see you Snape, how have you been?" Remus was the soul of kindness, which he knew would tie Snape into knots.....and the expression on the greaseball's face was priceless.

"Oh shut up animal, don't give me an excuse." Remus still had his grin as he was about to respond, but the old man stopped him.

"Gentleman please, this bickering is pointless. Severus, you called this meeting, what do you have for us?" The three of them paused as the waitress brought pints of ale for Remus and Dumbledore.

"Greyback and his pack are set to hit Hogsmeade this Friday, in the late afternoon." Remus leaned forward, fingers interlaced.

"Why then? Why not at night?" Snape looked at Lupin with distaste.

“I do not choose the time and place of their attacks, animal. Though I am quite sure you knew the time and place yourself, being their kinsman.” Remus was still smiling, but now had slipped his wand out and was aiming at Snape under the table.

“It won’t work Snivellus. Much as I would love to kill you right here in the pub, you cannot goad me into it. I’ve made promises you see.” He used his free hand to gesture at Dumbledore, and now Snape had a good idea of where the other hand was, and what it was holding. He had no fear here though, he knew Dumbledore would not let Lupin harm him. He rolled his eyes dismissively.

“Whatever you say werewolf. That is the information as I have gleaned it, the rest is up to you Albus. We are paying Greyback a significant sum of galleons to do this, he will be there make sure his fee gets collected.”

“How much is he getting?”

“Malfoy told me somewhere around 100,000 galleons if the attack comes off as planned. Half has already been delivered to him.” That kind of coin was not going to put much of a dent in the Death Eaters’ coffers, but was a lot of money most other people, including Greyback.

“There is to be no diversionary attack by the Death Eaters?”

“None that I am aware of. Our next campaign will be against our squib population, though that will not start until next month. It will be a rite of passage, so to speak, for our new initiates.”

“How big a pack is he bringing with him?” Dumbledore was eyeing the younger man very carefully, focusing on hand and eye movement.

“I do not know exactly, he hit Hogsmeade and Hogwarts with 20, I assume there are reserves, but Greyback isn’t fool enough to divulge them to us.”

“You are not planning to wipe him out yourselves? I know Voldemort is not a fan of humans with ‘problems’.”

“They have their uses for the moment, there will be plenty of time to take care of them once Voldemort gets what he wants.....not that he will of course.” Snape’s mask had slipped a little, and Remus was hard pressed not to curse him Dumbledore laid a hand on his arm.

“We knew what you meant Severus. Do you have anything else for us?”

“Only that an offer to Potter is probably forthcoming, after the new year. Voldemort will offer him second in command in exchange for a public betrayal of you and Scrimgeour.” Snape was just making this part up, but it was so plausible that he could see both Remus and Dumbledore chewing on it, but neither was willing to comment on it in front of Snape.

“One more question Severus. Are your people looking for Fudge? Have you any leads on him?” Dumbledore had not heard the same Oceania rumors that Pettigrew had, only that Fudge was not in the Death Eater camp.

“He is currently hiding somewhere in the Australian Outback, ill gotten gains firmly in hand. It’s possible that we might mount a mission sometime in the new year to go get him, but I don’t know. Sometimes Voldemort cares about getting him, sometimes he does not. Now I must go, I’ve tarried here long enough. If something changes, I will send you an owl, or a message through Tom.” Without waiting for goodbyes, he smoothly got up and swept away. Remus stared hard at the other man.

“Please tell me that you are not buying his crap Albus.”

“I am not convinced, if that’s what you are asking Remus. There’s just something too neat and tidy about all of this.”

“Did you try to use Legilimency on him?”

“No, I couldn’t, I couldn’t let him think that I do not trust him. He would have sensed my intrusion in an instant, and adjusted accordingly.” Even Remus acknowledged this much, but he had something else on his mind for the moment.

“You know that Harry will never turn.” Dumbledore fixed him with a beady stare, then smiled.

“Yes I do know that Remus, do not worry. If Harry was going to go over, he would have done so by now I believe. Whatever Harry’s and my differences, we are both on the same side, and the other knows it.” Remus wanted very badly to believe this last statement, and while he trusted the old man miles more than he did Snape, he still was not totally there yet.

“So what do we do now? How seriously do we take Snape?” Dumbledore finished his pint, and got to his feet, signaling for Remus to do the same.

“We go back to Hogwarts, Order members are awaiting us there. Thank you for not cursing him by the way, I could tell that you wanted to.” He walked out the door and around the corner, and Apparated back to the school gates, a surprised Remus following.

15 minutes later, in Dumbledore’s office:

Dumbledore and Remus walked in on a mini Order meeting, with Moody, Kingsley, Bill, Arthur, and Molly present.....Tonks really was on duty this night. Moody opened things up.

“Well what did he want?” Dumbledore merely went to his pensieve and placed the memory in it, and showed it to them. At a previous meeting they had viewed the first Snape/Dumbledore discussion. Bill had the first reaction:

“Well who else thinks this is a setup?” There were heads nodding all around. Moody barely trusted the people in this room, let alone someone as wishy-washy as Snape, while Kingsley had had trouble taking Snape seriously since watching Harry put him into a wall back in July. There was no need to wonder what the collective Weasleys thought. Molly was looking at Dumbledore.

“Albus? You were quiet after showing us the last meeting as well. What do you think?”

“I am sad to say that I believe you all are right, we are being played. Now the only question is whether or not it is Voldemort manipulating Severus to play us, or the both of them together. There seems to be no third choice that makes any sense under the circumstances.” This was as close as he had come, publicly, to saying that he did not trust Snape, in the over 16 years since Snape had ‘turned’ to the good side. Moody looked as happy as he was capable of looking, after hearing Dumbledore’s doubts.

“At what point do we alert Rufus?”

“I will go see him tomorrow morning, him and Amelia and Biller. I would prefer to keep this in-house within The Order, but The Minister has made it clear that any unilateral action by us will cost us dearly. I have not told him about the first meeting, wanting to get a specific time for the attack before I did anything like that.”

“What does that mean Albus? Cost us?”

“Molly, it means that Rufus made it very plain to me that he is not Cornelius Fudge, that he is not a bumbling fool that things need to be kept from.” Arthur had not shared with most of the others Rufus’ comments about Dumbledore and The Order knowing their places, but he was a bit shocked to see Dumbledore taking it so seriously. He leaned back and asked:

“What do you think Voldemort is really up to Albus?”

“I think the werewolves hitting Hogsmeade will happen in some manner, but it will be another diversion.” Moody got up and started hobbling/pacing around.

“Well there are four obvious targets: Hogwarts, Diagon Alley, Azkaban, and The Ministry. That’s not counting countless muggle targets they could hit. Azkaban is out, the only Death Eater they have there now is Goyle, and that fool is certainly not worth a major raid. Hogwarts is too easy to defend if it’s in lockdown. It’s either going to be Diagon Alley or The Ministry again.” Bill now weighed in.

“Well you forgot about Gringotts, but they are not stupid enough to try anything in there, yet. I personally think it will be The Ministry. If they can get one more victory like they did at the trial, there won’t be any Aurors left to stop them from any future targets.” Everyone looked at Kingsley, now third in command at the DMLE, behind Bones and Biller.

“Azkaban has been secured now, it would take a breach of The Minister’s office or Bones’ office to get to the prison, unless they actually fly over it, or get in a boat and find it that way.”

“What about The Ministry building itself?” Kingsley paused, and Molly’s question took on new portent. He replied cautiously.

“We lost at the trial because it was a surprise attack, though I agree that we should have expected something along those lines. If we are ready for them? Then it will depend on the size of their force and how many traitors are still left in the government. The Aurors we have now are good people, and experienced. A lot of the troops we lost in the rearguard fight were the new ones, though some experienced troops were killed in the courtroom.”

Dumbledore made a decision, changing his mind, and got up and went to the fireplace. He threw some powder in and shouted:

“Rufus Scrimgeour!” Using his actual name got him at home, whereas saying ‘Minister Scrimgeour’ would have gotten his office.

The man himself appeared within a few seconds.

“Albus, what can I do for you?”

“Could you come over to my office for a moment, I have something you need to see.”

“I’ll be over in a minute.” He vanished from the floo, and then came through the fireplace a few beats later. Dumbledore gave him very little preamble, and hit him with the pensieve memories of the first and second Snape meetings. He explained to the younger man why he had delayed in informing him of the first meeting, and Rufus seemed to understand. Moody repeated his theories, and Bill and Arthur kicked in a few thoughts as well. You could see Rufus’ mind calculating things as he listened, quite a change from his predecessor. It was quite an adjustment for most of them, having a Minister they could respect.

“Well, well. The plot thickens doesn’t it? I think you may regret not arresting Snape after that second meeting, but I understand why you didn’t. Interesting, very interesting. I agree that he’s trying to scam you Albus.” No kidding, thought everyone not named Albus.

“What do you want us to do Minister?” Rufus thought for a moment, and acknowledged that Dumbledore was asking, not assuming.

“Use your non-Auror members and cover Hogsmeade, I’ll leave it to you to plan how. Kingsley, you and Tonks may assist there as well. All your other Auror members will be detailed to the home office. I agree with Alastor that Hogwarts and Azkaban are not likely targets, and there is no value in hitting Diagon Alley, other than to piss off the rest of our population, and our friend should be smarter than that. Arthur, warn the kid in America, Voldemort might have some kind of plan to nail him there. His school goes on it’s Flackter Alley trip the day after the planned attacks.” A few eyebrows were raised at how closely Rufus kept tabs on Harry’s school events, but no comments were made out loud.

“Yes Minister, I’ll have my sons contact him tomorrow.”

“Good. For use against any werewolf or Death Eater for this day, those of your group who do not have it already, will have Avada Kedavra privileges.” All Aurors were authorized to use the Killing

Curse when they felt it necessary, though they would have to defend it in front of an inquiry afterwards, much like muggle police and a shooting board. Likewise, all former Aurors who left the service in good standing, such as Moody, were allowed to use it to defend themselves, as were members of the Wizengamot, and the Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher at Hogwarts.

“Albus, if you hear anything else, contact either myself or Travis, he will be running the show on Friday.” He left a few moments later, and the rest of the rump meeting was spent planning how to defend Hogsmeade, and how many, if any, of its residents should be told about the possible attack. Ultimately they agreed to warn them on the day, and quietly evacuate the town before any of the werewolves got there. That was the plan anyway, and they were wagering a lot of lives that Snape had not really meant to say ‘Thursday’.

Arthur paid a visit to the shop the next day, and sat down in the workshop with his sons and went over the situation.

“Now I know that you guys are in constant contact with Harry, so make sure to let him know what I told you.”

“We will Dad, We’re coming to Hogsmeade Friday, we’re going to help.” Fred and George both looked resolute enough, and seemed to be marshalling arguments to counter their dad saying no. He surprised them though, with his next words.

“I know you will, and I won’t try to stop you. You proved at the trial that you’re probably the best fighters in the family.....don’t tell Bill I said that by the way. Don’t use Avada Kedavra indiscriminately either, use your good judgment, and I know you guys have it. Interesting the ways you lot and Harry have rubbed off on each other. He’s made you better fighters, you’ve made him a lot funnier. All because Ron couldn’t find an empty train compartment 5 ½ years ago, and made friends with the quiet kid with the scar on his forehead..” He smiled, and sighed at the same time, a bit wistful. His sons were almost all grown up, and these two, who he and Molly had despaired about for years with their goofiness and lack of discipline, well he was proud of them. He yanked himself out of his reverie and stood up.

“Now get back to work, I’m sure you have loads to do, big tycoons that you are now. Come by for dinner on Thursday and we will hash everything out for the next day.”

“Sure Dad, we will be there.” Arthur hugged his sons, and after a quick hello to Lee upstairs, went back to work.

On the edge of the Forbidden Forest

Fenrir Greyback and Edward Grant surveyed the now totally rebuilt village of Hogsmeade. Even the Shrieking Shack had been fixed up, though few would ever go near unless they had to or were on a dare. They had their entire pack with them, now 40 strong after some new ‘recruiting’, as Grant euphemistically called it. The rest of the pack was situated about 10 meters back. They were using standard muggle binoculars, and all they saw were some Wizards and Witches wandering around the edge of the village, but that was to be expected, and had been planned for. They did not see Dumbledore, who was rather distinctive looking, or anyone else in the hierarchy that they knew.

“Do you think the Wizards are waiting for us in there?”

“I would not be surprised Edward, but it won’t do them any good. Voldemort will keep what’s left of the Aurors busy, they won’t have a chance to come over here and do any damage.”

“I don’t like the feel of this Fenrir, this has got setup written all over it.”

“I know, I know. But we have no choice, we need the cash that Malfoy is providing us. Besides, Dumbledore won’t be here, even if he was tipped off. He has to remain behind at the school just in case we try something there again. Make sure you and your group take out the Shrieking Shack first though, that would be a good place for them to put an ambush.”

“And Lupin?” Greyback smiled at his friend, he always smiled when he thought of Lupin, the most powerful wizard he had ever turned.

“He will stay behind as well I’m sure, can’t let the little kiddies be exposed to any risk. Plus, I think the man is afraid of temptation if he were too near to us.” He checked his watch, it was now time to go. He turned the rest of his pack and motioned them forward to join him and Grant.

“Gentlemen, remember your assignments, we want this quick, clean, and casualty free, at least on our end anyway. Leave the Post Office alone like before, a little post slaughter confusion never did anyone any harm. Check your watches, we want this to take no longer than ten minutes at most. Now, let us talk a walk, shall we.”

Within a minute, the 40 grown men were spread out and ambling toward Hogsmeade. There was to be no film like charge this time, as they fully expected either company of some sort awaiting them, or at least some kind of early warning system. They easily got inside the village with no trouble, and spread out even more, so that no more or less than two or three werewolves were in front of each building, though they were all standing casually talking, trying not to attract any undue attention.

Greyback was standing in front of Dervish and Banges, waiting for the signal to begin. About three, very long, minutes after they got into position, he got it:

A single Filibuster firework shot into the air from the edge of the village. Greyback answered with a howl of his own, and his troops all transformed into their alter egos, before then bursting into whatever building they were standing next to, all ready to tear the place apart. There was only one problem:

A welcoming committee awaited them in each building.

Simultaneously, at The Ministry of Magic:

Magdalena Edgecombe's office, Floo Regulatory Panel

Magdalena Edgecombe, who was in charge of the British floo system for The Ministry, started manipulating controls on a grid next to her desk. The grid was the hub of the floo system, and with a flick of her wand, she could disable as few as one fireplace, and as many as all of them. This time though, she was concentrating on one small village in central Scotland.

Flashback five minutes to the inside of The Three Broomsticks.

There were at least two Order members in every building but the Shrieking Shack, which was empty. Remus and Tonks were in this building, and awaited the arrival of Dumbledore, who was getting ready to put the castle into lockdown so that he and Flitwick could head to Hogsmeade, McGonagall needing to remain behind to take the castle back out of lockdown. Only Remus and Hagrid, who was in Dervish and Banges, were here in the village from the Hogwarts faculty. The rest of the villagers had been evacuated to Diagon Alley.

"Are they out there Remus? Can you sense them?"

"It doesn't work that way Tonks, I can't sense them any more than I can sense a regular human. But yes, I think they're out there."

"What if this is nothing more than a feint? How do we even know they're attacking here? Or here today?"

"For the love of God Tonks calm the bloody hell down. I detest Snape more than you ever could, but I believed him when he said there would be an attack today, and here to boot. He has too much to risk to lie to us." Tonks looked incredulous.

"Say what?"

"Tonks, Voldemort is saving Snape for when he lures Harry over here to try and finish him off. He's not going to waste him on something like this. Even if Voldemort destroys both the Order and the Aurors, he still hasn't won until he takes out Harry. Our numbers can always be replaced."

"And the small factor of Harry not believing in the Prophecy?" Remus just waved that off.

"Details Tonks, details. Nobody wants Voldemort dead more than Harry does, even if he won't admit it to anyone but himself. He can talk about not caring all he wants, but Voldemort is still the man who murdered his mother and father in front of him." Tonks looked at Remus with a new perspective.

"You sound like Dumbledore when you say things like that." The older man grimaced.

"I really hope not, because after Harry kills Voldemort, our beloved Headmaster will likely be next." Tonks didn't get a chance to respond to that, because Dumbledore came through the floo just then.

"The castle is in lockdown, nothing can go in or out."

"What about those mirrors? Draco could be using one of those to communicate with one or more of his parents."

"I have a jamming spell operating throughout the castle, rendering them ineffective. Draco Malfoy is currently serving a detention with Professor Sprout, and his wand has been taken away, just in case. There will be no warnings from Hogwarts to our enemies, wherever they might be." Remus and Tonks took this in, both were impressed with the thoroughness. Silence filled the room, and a few moments later they heard the faint sound of a firework go off, then a few seconds later, a werewolf howl. This was followed by the obvious, and painful for Remus, sounds of the change. The Wizards already had their wands out and aimed, and braced themselves.

"Good luck Remus, good luck Tonks."

The door was broken open just then, and three werewolves broke in, immediately looking for people to kill.

AVADA KEDAVRA! AVADA KEDAVRA! AVADA KEDAVRA!

The werewolves were very, very fast, and were almost upon their enemies when the spells hit them, and they all hit their targets. They could withstand a lot of magical punishment, and could shrug off most curses, one reason they had not been decimated by the Wizards in America.....but a direct hit by Avada Kedavra, no matter where, was immediately fatal to anyone caught by it.

The werewolves, none of them Greyback or Grant, fell hard, and the floor shook a little bit. The werewolves were now slowly transforming back to human form, as death made the change take a little longer. The Wizards did not recognize any of them.

“Let’s go now, the others will be needing us.” Dumbledore had just gotten that out when they heard multiple explosions in the near distance.

“Those are magical explosions, it would appear as if we have more company.” He blinked for a moment, trying to Apparate out, but he couldn’t. He took a portkey out of his robes, destination The Ministry, and it would not activate either. He strode over to the fireplace he had used minutes earlier and threw some floo powder in it, useless.

“The Death Eaters are here, they have anti-Apparition and anti-portkey wards up, and have somehow shut the floo off. We will have to fight our way out. Let’s go.” The three of them left the pub, and saw that Zonkos and Gladrags were both in flames, and Death Eaters were starting to enter the village. Dark Marks covered the sky now, and green light was now being sent toward them, as the three of them seemed to be the only Light Wizards out and about at the moment. They ducked back behind the building.

“Remus, I am afraid I must ask you to transform for the moment. You will run much faster as a werewolf, and that seems to be the only way out of here at the moment. Go outside the zone and get to The Ministry.” Remus did not argue, he knew it was the best way.

“I’ll be back with help before you know it.” He pocketed his wand, and made the painful transformation into his ‘other side’. Tonks had never seen this before, and was horrified at what her close friend was becoming.

Remus did not waste a second after the change was complete, and immediately sped away, running at three times the pace that a normal human could. He got about 400 meters outside the village, and gambled that the ‘no-fly’ zone did not extend any further. He willed himself to change back to human form, and though he struggled, managed to do so. He had a special portkey on his person, much like Dumbledore did, that took him right to Travis Biller’s office. Biller was in there talking to his former crew, now led by Sarah Westbrook. Everything had been quiet at The Ministry up until now.

“Remus? What’s happening there?”

“Death Eaters have sealed off Hogsmeade, no floo, portkey, Apparition, nothing. I think we got the drop on the other werewolves, but Voldemort’s forces are attacking now.” Travis was up now, and led Remus and the other Aurors out.

“How many Death Eaters?”

“I didn’t get a good look Travis, maybe a few dozen. Dumbledore sent me off right away to get word to you.”

“How close can we get to Hogsmeade via Apparition?”

“About 400 meters or so.”

Biller turned to a portal on the wall and stuck his wand in it. Instantly a very loud alarm sounded, and Travis put Magis Sonorus on his voice:

“Attention all Aurors, Hogsmeade is now under attack! Werewolves and Death Eaters have both been sighted there en masse! All floo, portkey, and Apparition to Hogsmeade has been jammed! I want Crews A through T to immediately portkey to any point 400 meters outside of the village, and then proceed to Hogsmeade and assist the Order of Phoenix people! Move!" Crews A-T represented over $\frac{3}{4}$ of the Auror Command, all of whom were on duty of some sort at this moment, each crew having three members. This would leave only 15 Aurors to defend the home office, but what else was there to do. By the end of this spiel Rufus and Bones both had come a running over to them. Remus hurriedly explained the situation to them, and Biller pointed at them.

"Get back in your offices, both of you, we can't risk either of you being captured if this is just a large diversion. We'll seal off The Ministry, and no one will be able to get in or out. Let's go Remus." Biller stopped to speak to one of his aides for a few seconds on the way out, and they made their way to the Apparition point. When they got to the appointed spot outside Hogsmeade, they saw dozens of Aurors sprinting toward the village, and they ran to join them. From the time Remus left Dumbledore and Tonks to the time he returned to Hogsmeade took only three minutes.

Flashback three minutes:

Dumbledore and Tonks waited until Remus was clear, and saw him turn back to his human form and pop away. They came back around the building and immediately started firing Reducto at anyone who did not look familiar, which was pretty much everyone outside now. They did not see any werewolves, nor was Voldemort in sight at this time, but more Dark Marks had been launched into the air. The nearest muggle town was over 10 kilometers away, but there were enough Marks in the air that the Obliviators would be rather busy in a little while.

As Tonks and Dumbledore strode deliberately, and not willy-nilly, into the main area of the village, they saw Fred and George sprinting out of Honeydukes, they had refused to garrison Zonkos, firing Reducto like crazy at a half dozen Death Eaters who were pursuing them, hitting two of them in the chest area, while dodging return fire. Tonks ran up to stand by them as they finally halted and launched a series of Killing Curses, taking much better aim this time.

AVADA KEDAVRA! AVADA KEDAVRA! AVADA KEDAVRA!

Fred and George had not used that curse yet against any regular humans, and together with Tonks' curse, it took the pursuers totally by surprise, killing all three they had aimed at. Dumbledore, who loathed using the Killing Curse, nonetheless launched his own at the survivor, killing him from a distance of 20 meters.

The sound of battle filled the air in the village, as Fred and George caught their breath and reported, as Tonks gathered up the stray wands and made sure that the two injured Death Eaters would never harm anyone again. Dumbledore hurried up to join them, the stress of the situation was now beginning to show on his face.

“We got two werewolves in Honeydukes, and then those guys came up the stairs from the basement and started firing. There was only the six of them as far as I know sir.” The old man knew full well about the Honeydukes passage into Hogwarts, and had had it sealed before the Fall term had begun. He could not tell the two apart, so he simply addressed them both, quickly.

“Thank you Fred, George, good work. Now let us help the others.”

They moved toward the sound of screaming at Gladrags, and they rushed up to find a pitched battle taking place outside the ruins of the building, which was now half in flames. There were five Order members, including Hestia and Kingsley, taking on an equal number of Death Eaters, and four werewolves, including Edward Grant. Everyone was using Avada Kedavra, except the werewolves, who were advancing closer with every second. If Harry and his classmates had been able to see this small battle, they would have more fully grasped why Professor Ripley had them spend at least two classes a month on dodging spells. No one had yet fallen from the human side, though there seemed to be the bodies of at least two werewolves in the non-burning part of the wreckage.

Dumbledore was a little tired and stressed, but getting angrier with every heartbeat. He aimed a burst of magical energy at the nearest werewolf, exploding his head open. Grant was on the verge of leaping upon Jones when he saw this in the corner of his eye.....so he somehow sped up, and tackled her, ripping her open with his claws, as an aghast Tonks and Kingsley started madly firing killing curses at him. It was to no avail, it was just the right angle for him to use her as a human shield, and he let a howl out into the air.....he had seen a new threat approaching.

The Aurors had arrived, and were yelling battle cries as they sprinted the half kilometer into the town, firing curses as soon as they got remotely in range of anyone in a mask or not wearing a robe of some sort. Sarah Westbrook and Rob Graham, who had assisted Biller at the Dursleys that night back in July, were at the head of the column as they crashed into a large force of Death Eaters coming up to meet them from Scrivenshafts. The Death Eaters still had their masks on, but among them were the three Lestranges as well as both Malfoys, and to a person all of them were amazed that the Aurors had responded this quickly. Apparently they had not considered that someone might get out of the village non-magically and warn The Ministry.

There is something a Darwinian selection process when an army, as the Aurors more or less were, loses a battle as badly as they had at the trial. The survivors tend to be hardened by the experience, and they also tend to fight a little dirtier the next time.....and that was the case here. This was the first pitched battle in magical Britain in over 15 years, and the Death Eaters came up on the short end of the stick in the end, as the Aurors fought with a passion and a fervor that amazed even themselves when they looked back on it. Westbrook personally took out two Death Eaters and a retreating werewolf, and was taking aim at another Death Eater when more fireworks shot into the sky. This was a retreat signal, or so it seemed, because soon the Death Eaters were collapsing back toward the Hog's Head Pub as quickly as they could without getting mass Killing Curses in the back.

A few Aurors pursued them, but there were enough Death Eaters fighting the rearguard to make this take an unpleasant and hazardous one. Rob Graham quietly pursued the fleeing enemy, not firing at them, but wanting to see where they went and how they got out. He peeked around the Hog's Head and saw a collection of Death Eaters taking portkeys from a small Wizard with a silver hand, Pettigrew, from what he had heard. There looked to be about three dozen Death Eaters leaving, and he took the opportunity, as the last ones were leaving, to take a potshot at one of them.

“AVADA KEDAVRA!”

He hit one square in the back of the head right as he and three others disappeared. Rob didn't know it, and never would, but he had just killed Walden Macnair, one of the senior Death Eaters, and cutter of Hermione back in the DOM.

He ran back to find the battle over, less than 10 minutes after it had begun. Biller and Remus were with Dumbledore and the others now, and Graham reported to his boss.

“I counted about 35 Death Eaters retreating by the Hog's Head Pub, a Wizard with a silver hand was organizing them and their portkeys. I got one of them as he or she disappeared, but I couldn't tell you who it was.” Biller had already detailed people to sift through the bodies and find out how many casualties there were for the three sides.

“Rob, get back to The Ministry and inform Bones and The Minister that the battle is over. Tell them I said to still stay there, but the danger has likely passed. I will be there shortly with a full report.”

“Right Travis.” He started jogging toward the edge of the village, as the wards were still up. More people were coming up to them now, including Molly, Arthur, and Bill. None of them appeared seriously hurt, although Molly was holding her left arm.

“Where are Fred and George, are they all right?” The twins were helping out with the body counting, and soon appeared, to the relief of their family, as Molly and Arthur ran up to them. Tonks walked quietly up to Bill.

“Your brothers did really well Bill, they took out at least a trio of werewolves and a pair of Death Eaters. You should be proud of them.” Bill looked at his brothers, calm and cool expressions on their faces. He patted Tonks on the shoulder, and went to join his family.

“I already was Tonks, but thank you.”

Auror Nelson DeMille, one of the senior Crew leaders, came up to Travis with his body count report.

“Travis, we have a total count of 14 Death Eaters killed, no wounded; 26 werewolves dead, no wounded; and four Order members killed, and a couple wounded, including Mrs. Weasley. One of the Auror members was Hestia Jones. No current Aurors were killed or wounded.” Hestia Jones had left the Auror Command earlier in the fall to join the Order full-time, Dumbledore providing a substitute paycheck out of his own funds. She had still been a member of the Dark Force Defense League, and had resumed many of her old duties, though without official Auror status.

It was a rout, a debacle, and Voldemort and Fenrir Greyback would not be pleased, they had lost troops at a ratio of 10 to 1. The Light Side had finally regained the initiative, and some of its swagger back, after 18 long months in retreat. The Aurors’ confidence grew leaps and bounds, and tales of this battle would be immediately spread around at the Auror Academy on the Isle of Man. No longer would they be the hound dog bunch of the last couple of months.

Bill personally supervised the cleanup of the bodies, both friend and foe, and saw that only three buildings had been completely destroyed: Gladrags, Zonkos, and the Shrieking Shack, though no battle had taken place at the latter location. Other buildings were somewhat damaged, and it would be a long debate within The Ministry of the next few weeks on whether or not to even start rebuilding the village, given the war and its ease as a target.

The Order of the Phoenix had a full meeting that night in one of the Hogwarts conference rooms. They mourned the losses of Hestia Jones, Daedulus Diggle, Marcus Griffin, and Eliza Archer.....whose brother Castor had fought on the other side this day, as he was a werewolf, though no one in the Order knew this, but overall the talk was upbeat and proud, of the way they had fought. Much discussion was made of Snape, and how badly he would be punished. After seeing how the Death Eaters had come into the battle, even Dumbledore was hardening his heart against his former protégé.

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

Early evening GMT

There was no large meeting of the Death Eater council, only Voldemort, Snape, and Pettigrew. Wormtail had not been involved in the fighting, just in the signaling, while Snape had joined his Master here at the Manor. The bad man did not even wait for Snape to sit down before:

CRUCIO!

He held it for 15 seconds.

“I guess you were not very convincing Snape!” He motioned for Wormtail to join him, and the rat did so with great pleasure.

CRUCIO! CRUCIO!

They worked Snape over for about 10 minutes, with a lot of screaming, before Voldemort decided that enough was enough. A barely conscious Snape was placed in a chair and Voldemort went rampaging through his mind and still found no treachery in the man, only incompetence.

“Fetch one of his Sleeping Draughts.” The rat hurried out and returned within a minute to find his Master Obliviating knowledge of the torture from Snape’s mind.

“We need this bungler too much right now to have him turn on us. Start beating the bushes for another Potion’s Master though. The next time I torture this fool I might not have so much self control.”

“Yes Master.” Pettigrew administered the vial to his rival, and Snape’s eyes finally closed.

10 am

Dining Hall

The Junior and Senior students had assembled to hear Murray’s instructions for their Flackter Alley trip. She stood up at the back of the room and waved her hands for quiet.

“Okay folks, you all remember my spiel from October?” A hundred heads nodded.

“Good, just pretend I’ve said it again. Be safe and have fun, see you all at dinner.” The students lined up to get their portkeys and as Harry and company came up to get theirs, Murray gave him a serious look.

“Be careful today Harry, be on your guard.”

“I’m never off it ma’am, we’ll be fine.” Said with more confidence than he felt perhaps. He knew Voldemort would be angry after the previous day’s events, and he would never be in more danger here in America than he would be now. The night before, after hearing the news from Fred and George, he had taught the scanning spell to Reiko, figuring that they both could keep an eye out during their time in muggle Milwaukee.

The seven of them, including Drew, took their wild ride into Flackter Alley without complications.....meaning that no one hurled at the end. This is worth mentioning because after the last visit in October for the Sunday group, one big story was that a few of the Apprentice students, fourth years, had not taken well to their first portkey rides, and blew chunks in a quite spectacular way. Remember, Scourgify and vomit do not interact well together.

The bank was first up, as always, and then it was Christmas shopping time. The gang had negotiated at dinner the night before over presents and dollar amounts, and set a limit of $15 per person, though boyfriends and girlfriends were exempt from that obviously. Harry had a huge list of people to buy for, as he wanted to find stuff that was 'American-ish' for his friends back in Britain, and so withdrew the most amount of money. He didn't figure to find that in Flackter though, and plans were made to visit the large mall down the road from the gateway. The seven of them, once out of the bank, left Flackter and walked through the door to muggle Milwaukee.

Their first trip though, was to a movie theater, something that they had not done on their last two trips. Jonas, the big sports fan, had seen countless advertisements during the Thanksgiving Holiday for Jerry Maguire, the new Tom Cruise film, and had talked them all into going. They got their lunch at the concession stands and Harry saw only his second movie ever on the big screen, the first being Independence Day while on the lam in muggle London in July. They had a great time, all of them loving the movie, and Harry was wondering out loud about putting a big screen television inside his trunk, the bigger the better. They talked him out of buying a television and accessories this day, but it was unclear whether he was convinced or just did not want to argue about it at this time.

Next stop was clothes, for the ladies anyway, as the three of them were all buying outfits for each other and openly mocking the price limits they had agreed to less than 18 hours earlier. Sophie and Claudia had spent relatively little during the last Flackter trip, so as to save up for this, though their scholarships really were fully functional, as there was bump in spending money for the Christmas season. Reiko had been slipped some cash by Harry, and while Sophie was in the dressing room trying something on, had quickly picked up a few things that she had seen Sophie eyeing on the last trip. When Sophie came out, she was none the wiser, as Reiko had walked outside and given the bag to Harry, who had delayed his CD buying to grab it, shrink it, and put it in his pocket. Reiko did have to talk her out of buying one dress though, and had to use a lot of cunning to do it, as her friend really liked it.

The guys stayed strictly to the plan, more or less, and they all just picked out a CD to give to the other three. No muss, no fuss, and no surprises come Christmas morning for the four young men. Harry had requested, and gotten, three of The Eagles discs that he didn't have. He had become a fan after trying one of them at the listening station in October, and had bought a few that day. Warrick, contrary to what some might think, was not into rap, 'too nasty' was his reason, he was more into jazz, and got some to his liking there from the guys. Harry too found that kind of music pretty relaxing at times, and the two of them often fell asleep listening to John Coltrane on the room's stereo. Drew and Jonas, in one piece of harmony that had always marked their tenure as roommates, were both into REM and The Cure and acts like that, so they got a nice selection of discs from that category. The ladies had hounded them the night before into making their planned CD purchases into presents opened on Christmas, so they would have to wait to listen to their booty. They delighted in making the purchases, saying that the royalties that the Boston government got from the sales would buy a new case of toilet paper for the bathrooms, or perhaps give Caretaker Riley Poole enough money for a decent haircut. This whole process only took an hour, and the boys only had to wait about 15 minutes for the others.

That only left presents for the women, and they figured to get those at the mall. While waiting outside the boutique, Warrick was stressing about what to get for Reiko, and railed at Harry for not getting Sophie to do the same kind of spying on Reiko.

"But Warrick mate, that would give the game up that I was doing it for her, and would ruin the surprise, and my trademark with her has kind of gotten to be surprises."

"We could have found a way around it."

"Get your own ideas Warrick for crying out loud, you've been with her for a year."

"It's easy for you Jonas, you don't have to worry about buying gifts for your girl of the day."

“Convenient isn’t it?” The four of them laughed, but in truth Warrick had always envied Jonas his popularity with the girls. Reiko was not his first girlfriend at Great Lakes, but was the only one to have lasted past three months, with this that and the other thing always breaking them up. Jonas, to his credit, made a point of not rubbing in his success, and was not prone to bragging, which the women of Great Lakes knew about, and only added to his appeal. Jonas always said he was looking for the right girl to start a relationship, and was in fact a little openly envious of Warrick’s and Harry’s stable relationships, or so he said. Drew did not have a steady girlfriend, but had his date to the Christmas Dance all lined up, and had also bought a CD for her.

The girls exited with shopping bags full, and once outside, the boys formed a circle blocking them from view as Reiko shrunk the bags and handed them back to be pocketed. She had a huge grin on her face as she did so:

“My first magic in Milwaukee, this is so cool.” Sophie slung her arm around her roommate.

“You guys are so lucky, I can’t wait to be able to do magic anywhere I want.”

“Just a few short months away now.” Drew, whose birthday was in January, was curious about something.

“Harry, what spell did you first use when you got legal?”

“I burned my Hogwarts robes in the trash can using Incendio, then I did a duplicating spell on my emancipation document.” He said this with such a sense of satisfaction that they all laughed. They had all seen the results of the second spell, as the petition had been framed and was in the living room of his trunk. He hadn’t kept the robe ashes though, he had sprinkled them on his bed at the Dursleys.....then wet it down with a fire hose spell. The resulting smell was not pleasant, though unfortunately Harry had not witnessed Petunia’s reaction, but he could imagine it..

The next, and likely last, stop was the large mall down the street. They still had about three hours before the portkey home, but the clock was still ticking and there were many presents to buy. They entered the mall from a different entrance than the last time, and Harry saw a store that had escaped him the first two times: a novelty store that sold knick knacks and other odd stuff. He decided that this was ideal for at least Arthur and the twins, so he wandered in. He had never been in a store like this before, and was immediately glad he was in there now. He looked around and saw that none of the others had followed him in, so he started poking around.

Unfortunately he had to forgo the lava lamps, as they worked with batteries and/or electricity, neither of which would work in the shop or The Burrow. One of the first things he stumbled upon was a glow in the dark fish tank, one that did not use any sort of muggle power. It was pretty big, and Harry thought it would be perfect for The Burrow's living room. He found an Einstein poster to give to Hermione, Einstein was dressed in a Milwaukee Buck's uniform, but he figured she would understand and have a laugh about it. He found a few things that would be good for Bill and Charlie, but nothing that really fit the twins or the others. He walked up to the clerk and made sure that there would be more than one aquarium, in case there was a run of them before he left the mall. The clerk assured him that there would be one waiting for him.

He left the store, and came upon Sophie and Reiko, who had come back to look for him.

"We were wondering where you got off to."

"Just picking up some stuff for some of the Weasleys and Hermione." After showing them what he had gotten, they moved off to the food court for some snacks.

There was a sporting goods shop that Jonas and Warrick were always talking about, and Harry picked up some soccer stuff there to give to Ginny and Dean. The new American soccer league, MLS, had started earlier in the year, and he figured that more soccer posters in the dorm might irritate Ron, so he made a point to pick the gaudiest ones. Neville's present was a little tougher, as he did not know him as well as the others back there, aside from Luna. She was easy to shop for, he had asked Sophie to buy her the weirdest, most offbeat dress in the boutique. It was a steal too, a multi-colored thing that he would have never let Sophie live down if she wore it, but it suited Luna. He had decided on a subscription to The Chronicle for Remus, thinking he might enjoy the contrast with The Daily Prophet.

There was a large chain bookstore in the mall as well, and Harry bought a copy of 'How to Win Friends and Influence People' , for a nice gift for Dumbledore. He also got Hermione a couple of books on American folklore and myth, thinking she would be into that kind of thing.

"You're buying an awful lot for that girl Harry." Warrick was tsk tsking him in front of the others.

"Five months ago I thought she had betrayed me to Dumbledore over the last few years, I have a guilty conscience okay?" The others started roaring with laughter, and Harry was fighting back a smile.

"Besides, Ron will screw up his present somehow, and I have to make sure she gets something decent from someone not her parents." Sophie again dissolved into giggles, she loved hearing about Ron and his difficulties.

All that was left in Britain to buy for was Neville and Ron, and he couldn't think of anything right there to get them. He and Sophie moved off into the calendars section, and Harry picked out one each for all of his British friends. Sophie had a thought.

"Give them one roundtrip portkey to the island, for use anytime during the year." That wasn't a half bad idea for Neville, as he and Luna would be discreet about it. They didn't need to know about the trunk system, and they would probably appreciate the time alone together. It wouldn't work for Ron though, but Harry had a different notion along those same lines.

“That’s an excellent idea my dear.” He kissed her.

“I’m going to use that for Neville, but not Ron. Ron I’m going to get him a written promise of a muggle plane ticket, round-trip, anywhere in the world. All he will have to do is tell me when and where.”

“But not necessarily here though?”

“I don’t know, I might have them over next summer if I can get Murray to okay it. But I would use the trunk then, I’ll figure out some kind of security arrangement for it. No, this ticket would be for tourism, if he and Hermione want to go, I’ll get her one too. I’ll give the poster and the books to Arthur, it’ll confuse the hell out of him.”

“So who do you have left now?”

“Just Claudia and Reiko.” She looked confused.

“You got mine already? When? You didn’t spend too much did you?”

“These are all good question Sophie.” He walked away calmly, and she scurried after him, peppering him with questions that he had no intention of answering. He managed to stop her before she started checking his coat pockets though.

“All I’ll say is that yes, I have gotten most of your presents, but I won’t say what, or how much more. Nor do you want me to.” Sadly, that did not stop her, but Harry was firm and resolute for once with her, and in the end, she agreed to stop asking.

Harry wound up just asking Claudia and Reiko if there was anything in particular that they wanted. Claudia asked for a history book that she had had her eye on in the Barnes and Noble they had been in, while Reiko had been eyeing a toy store in the corner near Harry’s first stop, and said that she would love it if he would buy her a couple of board games. Both purchases violated the spending limit, but Harry flat out told them he could care less about that. After a stop at a drugstore, so the ladies could pick up some makeup and other female items, they were off. They picked up Harry's new aquariums on their way out.....yes, plural, he decided that he wanted one for himself as well, to brighten up the trunk. They were heavy suckers, and another circle was formed so that he could shrink them down to be able to carry them properly.

At no point during the trip did the teenagers notice the tourists taking pictures of them, Harry had so been concentrating on his shopping and what to get people, that he had only once scanned the immediate area for other wizards, and had missed the two that were tailing him and his friends. They got a dozen rolls of film, and had gotten close enough they could figure out who was who in the gang. Voldemort would be very pleased with them they thought, as they slowly broke off visual contact with Potter, and made their way to the taxi stand, where they would soon be bound for the airport.

6:45 pm

Cortez Room 6B

The four guys were milling around, trying to kill time before picking up their girlfriends. Warrick was giving himself a haircut in the mirror. Usually he was bald, but lately had started growing his hair out a little, which lasted about three weeks until Reiko complained that she missed the smoothness. Hence the haircut, using his wand and a Shaving Charm. Rick and Terry were slicking back their hair, and Harry was just watching, amused by it all. His hair was pretty much as it had always been, and he no longer even tried anything with it. This was the beauty of dress robes for guys, they had little else to do to get ready, Rick wasn't even wearing a clean shirt underneath. Harry was wearing his purple robes, having threatened up until lunchtime to wear the translucent green ones that he had gotten the same day. The other five threatened mass retribution if he did so though, and he relented, reluctantly.....he kind of dug them if truth be told.

"Will you girls get ready already?" Rick was ready with a retort, he had seen Harry's mocking smile in his mirror.

“You know not all of us have a bird’s nest for hair like you do, we have to do a little work on ours.” Harry grinned.

“It’s low maintenance.” Rick and Terry rolled their eyes as they said their goodbyes, and went to the Lounge to wait for their girlfriends. Warrick was now bald and straightening up his robes, which were pearl white, he loved the contrast.

“You ready to go dude?”

“Just about. Winky!” Winky popped in with camera in hand.

“Just a couple here, then come with us to the Lounge please.” The two friends stood next to each other, no arms around or anything like that for these guys, and Winky did not wait for Cheese, as she snapped off a pair of pictures. The fellows collected their corsages and exited the room.

“How long do you think they’ll make us wait?” They walked slowly down the hallway toward the Lounge.

“I don’t know dude, Reiko only made me wait 10 minutes last year.”

“Who did Sophie go with?” Harry had never remembered to ask that question when he and Sophie were alone.

“She and Claudia went together, and they paired up with Reiko and I, and Jonas and his date, whose name is escaping me at the moment.”

“No really? I never would have figured that.”

“It’s like picking jellybeans from a jar for that boy. What’s her name this time? The one he’s going with?”

“Jane somebody, she’s a Transition from Jefferson I think. I don’t know, I’ve only met her once.”

“Oh yeah, the one on the Quodpot team, I should have figured. Let’s see if this one lasts past tonight.”

They arrived in a very busy Lounge to find that no one was waiting for them, big surprise. The three televisions were being monopolized by a lot of younger students, who finally got to choose the programming, since most of the two youngest years could not be bothered to go to the festivities. The rest of the room was filled with dressed up teenagers, mostly guys, as they waited for their partners. The Lounge door was open for the time being, and Claudia and her date walked in, Claudia being one of those on-time freaks who hates to be kept waiting. She had still refused to tell them in advance who her date was, only that she had one, and in fact had not been the asker.

It turned out that her date was Ray Elwood, from Defense Class and Harry’s fellow Seeker. They walked in not holding hands, but seeming at least somewhat comfortable around each other. Harry now remembered that Ray was in the History Club with her. Claudia had on robes of a kind of gold color, and her hair was swept up in some kind of knot, rather than her usual ponytail. She was not wearing any makeup, and no jewelry beyond a thin necklace that she always had on. In truth, Harry thought, she looked much more attractive that she usually did, when she made relatively little effort. She was not ugly by any means, just average.

“Well, well, well, what do we have here? Ray, you have been holding out on us Casanova.” The other boy blushed a bit. Harry and Ray did not know each other much beyond class, but he felt comfortable enough to say something snarky around him. Warrick barely knew him at all, but remembered him from classes and the Quidditch game.

“She made me promise not to tell you guys.”

“And I know you were thinking that I was bluffing, that I would be going by myself.” Harry and Warrick in fact had thought that, but were not quite so stupid as to say so in front of her. They simply adopted placid smiles, and shook Ray’s hand heartily.

“Welcome to the club mate, do we need to tell you to treat our lady Claudia right?” She gave the two of them a mock glare.

“Don’t go there guys, don’t even try it.”

“Try what, I don’t know what you’re on about.” That was Warrick, in his best Monty Python impersonation. He had been around Harry for long enough that he had a British accent down pretty pat. A further retort from Claudia was preempted by Jonas and his date coming through the door. She was redhead, rather small and petite, and wearing fuchsia colored robes.

“Hey there guys, you remember Jane Aubrey don’t you?” Smile were exchanged, and even Claudia was friendly to the younger girl, who was a bit nervous being with the Quod God, and with his tight knit friends, though the other three guys could not help but noticed how attractive she was. After a couple of minutes of chitchatting, Reiko and Sophie made their appearance, to catcalls of ‘Finally’ and ‘It’s about time.’ from everyone except Harry and Warrick, who simply smiled really big at the ladies, and sensibly made no moves to look at their watches.

Reiko was wearing maroon colored robes that were only a few shades away from Harry’s own. Her long hair was flowing freely behind her, and she wore a little more makeup than usual, but it looked great on her. Warrick walked up to her and pinned the corsage.

“Happy One Year Anniversary baby.” They hugged tightly, and everyone went a little gooey inside watching it. Actually their anniversary had been two days before, due to the vagaries of the calendar and leap years and such, but they had agreed beforehand that this was much more romantic and stylish.

Sophie, meanwhile, was wearing light blue robes that she had picked out last spring during the last Flackter trip of that term. Her light brown hair was braided down the back and loop tied, and she looked so good Harry was half tempted to say to hell with the dance and kidnap her down to the trunk. He resisted though, and pinned the corsage, while whispering.

“You look so beautiful, do we really have to go to the dance?”

“You better believe it mister, do you know how long it took me to get ready?”

“Fine, fine, we’ll dance our feet off.” She grinned at him.

“Then we’ll go into the trunk.” They exchanged a giggle, and all assembled knew what the gist was. Winky did her picture thing with all the couples, pausing twice to reload film. They didn’t do a group shot, the party was not totally complete. Sophie looked at Jonas.

“Is Drew meeting us in there?”

“He is, he should already be there I think. He left right before we did, he said he and his date would stake out a big table for us.” The gang, plus two, made their way to the Dining Hall. Winky and her camera were trailing behind as she took some random shots of people on their way to the dance. There was no student newspaper or yearbook or anything like that, but no one else seemed to be taking any photos, so Winky thought she might give them to Harry to post on the bulletin boards.

They got to the dance and found the place about half full, with it filling up more by the minute. The decorations were mainly Christmas in nature, with a large Christmas tree right in the middle of the room, decorated to the hilt. The tables were the same as ever, with red and green tablecloths spread over them, and fancy dinner wear topping them. Drew and his date, who turned out to be a Jefferson Senior named Kristy Penman, were holding down in the corner at a table just big enough for the ten of them. Kristy was introduced all around, as the non-Jeffersonians were not familiar with her, and Winky took a number of group pictures. Murray, who was looking very stylish in her pink dress robes, walked over to them. She had only met Winky the once, right at the beginning, but knew this wasn’t Dobby.

“Harry, I was wondering if we might borrow Winky for the night, somehow I forgot to designate a photographer for the dance. Winky, if we get you enough film, would you mind taking pictures for us?” Harry was nodding at the idea, and Winky smiled shyly.

“Yes Professor ma’am, I would be happy to.”

“Terrific, come with me and we will stock you up with film. Have a good time folks.” The two of them went away, chatting as they did. Dinner was served a few minutes later, as a buffet was set up along the west wall, loaded with anything and everything that someone could want to eat. It was like a potluck, except none of the kids needed to bring a dish to pass. Once loaded up with food, they retreated to the table, which Harry had been guarding for them. Music was playing over the speakers, from a stereo setup it sounded like, at least it was not the RWA, Radio Wizard America.

The ten teenagers spent the hour that ensued chatting amiably, and getting to know the three new people. Jane, Jonas’ date, wound up contributing relatively little to the conversation, uncomfortable about being in this company. She was no dunce though, and the little she did say supported that, so she was not simply one of Jonas’ Quod groupies, well not JUST one of them anyway. The dancing had not started yet, so she sat there quietly eating her food. Ray had at least one class with all of the gang, and had been Proctor House’s biggest buyer of WWW products, which had endeared him to Harry. Kristy had just gotten word that morning at mail call that she had gotten accepted into Harvard, her ghost school grades and test scores had gotten her in easily.

“Yeah, it was weird when I took my SAT’s, it was at the muggle high school in Marquette, and there were about a dozen of us there. Everyone was looking at us strangely, who were these geeks with coats and ties, and a skirt in my case.” All Great Lakes students were registered at a ghost school named Great Lakes Preparatory Institute, just the changing of one word. They received muggle grades that reflected their magical marks at GLMI. That said, any students wanting to possibly go to muggle university had to actually take the SAT, the college entrance examination, themselves, live and in color.

This would separate out the wheat from the chaff. This was usually done in March of their Junior years, and some of Sophie's and Claudia's outside reading was dealing with prep work for the SAT, and was going to take up some of their free time over the break, as teachers did not assign homework over it. Harry and Jonas had no interest in continuing their educations past June 1998, with Quidditch/WWW and Quodpot calling them respectively. Reiko and Warrick were still waffling though, and were probably going to take the tests just to see what their options were.

The dancing began soon after, but Warrick had a quick question first.

"Harry, Sophie, do we need to stay away from the punch bowl tonight?" The table all started laughing, as it was explained to the newcomers about the minds behind the Halloween mayhem.

"You're fine folks, don't worry. Harry and I decided that no dress robes needed punch on them. Right Harry?" Harry was looking mock mutinous listening to this.

"Um yeah, WE decided. Yep, you betcha." They had actually debated it, but did not want to draw Murray's wrath. Harry had not protested, too much.

The ten of them headed out to the dance floor, and Harry and Sophie spent most of the rest of the evening dancing, mostly with each other, but with other members of the gang and their dates as well. Harry and Warrick both spent a dance each with Jane Aubrey trying to her to say more than 'hello', but failed miserably. Reiko had to be talked out of going over to a date-less, but still at the dance, Joe Clancy and asking for a turn around the floor. It was unclear how heinous her intentions were, but Warrick was the voice of reason for once in his life. Besides, he had already arranged for Dobby to sneak into Clancy's room and rearrange his furniture while the dance was going on. The little elf was to open the door from the inside and leave it open, covering his tracks.

At the halfway point, Harry had a dance with Claudia, and felt free to inquire about Ray.

“So is this just a date to the dance, or am I going to be inducting our man Ray into the trunk soon?” Claudia had that look on her face now.

“Gee, why would we get any ideas?”

“He is a very nice guy, but neither of us are looking for a relationship. I think he has a muggle girl back in West Virginia that he is interested in.”

“Why is that Claudia? Why are you so opposed to having a boyfriend?” Harry and Claudia spent practically no time alone, and Sophie and Reiko had told him that it was Claudia’s reasons to tell, not theirs.

“There’s too much pressure at our age Harry, too much pressure to be pretty, to be popular. I have enough to deal with, and I don’t want to take all that on. I mean Sophie and Reiko can handle it, but I just don’t want to.”

“I guess I don’t blame you.”

“I mean it’s easy for you, you’re popular without having to try.” Whoa, danger Will Robinson, Harry did not like the sound of that.

“Hang on a second there Claudia. I’m popular, if in fact I really am, because I’m a novelty, the English kid with the funny accent who has access to a cool joke shop.” Harry had no doubt in his mind that WWW was a big reason that he got along with most people, plus it had allowed him to meet and talk to kids that he never would have otherwise, a big difference from Hogwarts. Even if the twins were to allow Ron to sell for them, they mostly used Ginny, he couldn’t see his friend interacting with all different Houses in that way.

“That’s my point, and I don’t begrudge you any of that, or having Sophie fall for you in a matter of hours. I just don’t want it for myself, or at least I don't want to make so much effort. Things like that do not come easily for me." Now it seemed they were talking about two subjects: popularity and romance, and the two did not necessarily have to be linked, in Harry's mind anyway. He decided to bypass a popularity argument that he could never win.

"So you're going to wait until university to start dating?"

"That's the plan, but hey, I'll admit that if someone comes along that knocks my socks off, I'll reconsider. Like Sophie did with you, she was saying the same things that I just did only a few months ago." Sophie had hinted along those lines, true.

"All right, all right, I won't bug you about it. I was just curious is all." She gave him a smile, and the dance ended. The others were over by the punch bowl, and the two of them slowly wandered over to join them.

"It's okay, I've been wondering why it's taken you so long to ask me. You're damn polite you know, clearly Warrick and Jonas have not rubbed off on you. Warrick is like 'when are you going to get a guy?' I mean he's been asking on the average of once a week for years." Harry had little trouble believing that.

"I would love to say that I'm polite because of Sophie's influence, but Hermione is probably the one to thank for that. She had this look that she would give Ron and I when we did something rude or nasty. I guess I just hated having that look directed at me. It didn't do as much for Ron though, he would just ignore it. Makes me wonder how she puts up with him as a boyfriend."

"All 11 year old boys should have a female buddy to teach them things like that."

"I'm a better guy for it I think." Harry's summer opinion of Hermione, which had been so negative, had softened to the point of being marshmallow like in the ensuing months. He was remembering all the good things about their time together, rather than his nitpicky issues with her in the last couple of years. After some non-pranked punch, they went back out dancing, with their own dates this time.

“So you and Claudia seemed to spend more time talking than dancing.”

“We finally had the talk about why she doesn’t want a boyfriend.”

“Ahhhh, I figured that was it. Enlightening for you?”

“Pretty much, she said that you had the same issues before you met me.” She laughed a little at hearing that.

“I don’t know about that, but she’s not totally wrong. Anyway, you fell into my lap, so to speak.”

“Yes I did, and speaking of that, how much longer do we have to hang around here? It’s 9:30 already for crying out loud.” The dance was scheduled to last until 11 pm, though most would trickle out before then. There was no hard and fast curfew at Great Lakes normally. The younger students were encouraged by peer pressure to show good sense, rather than a ‘lights out at midnight approach’.

“Okay, okay. We’ll go after this dance.” She did not seem any more eager to stay than he did, given her tone of voice. After another dance, one of Sophie’s favorite songs had come on, they made their excuses and decamped to the trunk, where much half clothed frolicking ensued. After awhile, when they were entangled on the couch, Harry got curious about what the others were doing. His wand was nowhere near, but the Map was on his writing desk. He reached out his hand:

Accio Map!

He was getting a lot better at wandless magic, but the Summoning Spell was still his bread and butter. The Map flew over, and Harry solemnly swore that he was up to no good.

“You’re a nosy sucker.”

“Hey, they know where we are don’t they? I’m half tempted to do some pranking right now anyway.” They were now sitting up, and Sophie was looking at the Map too.

“Okay fine, you’ve got me curious, where are they?” He peered first at the dorm rooms.

“Well my other roommates are now going at it with their girlfriends right upstairs here, those pairs of dots are awfully close together. I’m dreading the day I walk into an orgy in there, I won’t know who to hex first.....let’s see now, Drew and Kristy are in the Jefferson Lounge, looks like the night is still going for them. Jonas and Jane, yep, they’re in his room all right, I hope they’re having fun, she’s not really a conversationalist.” Sophie whacked him on the arm.

“Hey, I tried for a whole dance and couldn’t get anything more than a one word answer to any question. Warrick and Drew too, and if you can find three more disparate personality types than the three of us, good luck.” She just shook her head and laughed.

“What about Reiko and Warrick? Look in the basement.” They did, and.....yes, the two were in the basement, in a small storage room off in the corner.

“Oh yes, the secret hideaway. Oh this is going to be good.”

“Not tonight though Harry, let them have some fun without you nailing them.....well without us nailing them anyway.” Harry reacted with mock outrage.

“What do you mean? They’ve probably had a year down there without being interrupted, one night of mayhem won’t kill them.” Sophie moved her hand slightly.

“Yeah, but we have better things to do, don’t we?” Halftime was over it seemed, and Harry quickly banished the Map back to his desk.

“I still say they’re getting off light.” Talking ceased for the time being.

Everyone took their portkeys back the next morning, right on schedule. That night, the gang, along with the Forrester, Steele, and Aylesworth parents, all had an early dinner at a nice steakhouse in Chicago, which was Harry’s Christmas present to the Forrester’s especially, much as they protested. This was followed by flooing back to Indianapolis for a Pacers v. Nets basketball game, courtesy of tickets provided by Uncle Antonio. After the game, Harry met the NBA player, a closet wizard, who had used time turners to go between Great Lakes, his alma mater in the magical world, and his muggle high school, where he could play basketball. He was, officially, the only magical person to be playing big time muggle professional sports, and he promised to tell Harry more about it at Christmas during dinner.

Springfield, Illinois

5:45 pm

Harry and Warrick emerged from the floo point, at a children’s park about a mile from their destination. The girls were in Tulsa for the evening, doing some shopping and having a ‘girls night out’, and Warrick’s parents were at some kind of charity function that the two boys had paid little attention to the details about. So they had a free evening, and Harry had decided to give something a try. They consulted a map that Winky had obtained for them in Flackter Alley, and set off.....for Sophie’s family’s house. This was Harry’s idea of a creative Christmas present, a possible rapprochement for Sophie with them, or at least a shot at it. This was something he had only been plotting for a week or so, after thinking about Warrick and his family, and of course the Weasleys. He thought it was worth a try, and had coerced Warrick into joining him on the mission by promising him dinner. The six of them were due to leave for the island the next day and there would probably not be time to this before Christmas Day if they put it off.

The Weir residence was right off a main road, and quite easy to find with help from the map. As they approached the front door, they saw that lights were on all over the house, which was a relief, as they had been worried about the family being gone, out to a restaurant perhaps. Warrick took a look around and then stared at his friend.

“Just for the record, this a very bad idea.”

“If it was so bad you would have been able to talk me out of it.”

“Like that’s possible. Once you’ve got the bit between your teeth it’s pretty hard to dissuade you.”

“Just keep your objections to yourself while we’re in there, if we get in.” Harry did a quick and dirty scan of the house, but only found the Listening Charms Sophie had told him about. There was no evidence of any other magical people about, so Sophie’s brothers were not magical, as Harry had somewhat suspected.

“I know the score, don’t worry.” They were on the doorstep by now, and Warrick rang the doorbell. A few seconds later, a young man opened it, he appeared to be about five years older than they were. This would be the oldest brother, Jason, the one who was a Senior at Northwestern. He was the one Sophie wrote to the most, and the only one who had not initially cut her off.....though their letters were still done on the sly, as were her letters to the other brother, Ned. Sophie did not have any pictures of her family in her room. Harry had not asked, but naturally assumed it was just too painful for her.

“Hello, you must be Jason.” He looked at them quizzically.

“Yes I am, who are you?”

“I’m Harry Potter, this is Warrick Forrester.” Jason’s eyes got very big as he heard this, and looked behind them as he stepped outside and closed the door.

“Is Sophie here with you?” He sounded worried, this was not a good sign.

“No she isn’t, and she does not know that we’re here.” the other man looked a little relieved.

“What are you doing here?”

“We.....well, I want to talk to your parents if I can.” Warrick had nudged him at the ‘we’ part.

“Look, Sophie’s written me about both of you, but my parents.....” He was interrupted by the door cracking open, it was Ned.

“What’s going on Jason? Who are these guys?”

“Ned, this is Harry Potter and Warrick Forrester.” More eyes getting big, and Jason headed off the next question.

“No Ned, Sophie isn’t here. Where is she by the way?”

“Reiko? That’s her name right?” Warrick made his first sally into the conversation.

“Yes it is, she’s my girlfriend. Her family takes Sophie in during the holidays.” He said this pointedly, as if to emphasize that at least someone did. Harry gave him a quick, but dirty look, this was not helping things. Warrick gave him an equally hard look back, reminding him that he had known and befriended Sophie long before Harry ever put a thought in his head to come to America. Jason took stock of this non-verbal argument, then broke it up by saying:

“Look guys, I can guess why you’re here, and while its pretty noble of you Harry, it’s also fruitless.”

“Why?”

“Because Ned and I have tried until we were blue in the face, and they will not budge. I think it’s just too late now guys.” He was looking nervously at the door, as if anticipating that his parents might soon wonder where their sons were.

“Do they know that you two are in contact with her?” Sophie sent a letter a month to each of them during the school year, Ned was now a freshman at the University of Illinois. Ned had originally followed his parents lead, but that only lasted a few months as Jason had worked hard on turning him.

“I don’t know dude, I really don’t. They know that I never approved of what they did to her, but that didn’t matter to them. They haven’t asked, and I haven’t told.” Jason had just cricked his neck for another look at the door, when it opened again. A man in his late 40’s appeared, tall with grey thinning hair. He smiled at his sons.

“Boys, it’s awfully cold out here to be chatting. Who are your friends?” Jason and Ned looked at each other blankly, they had no idea of what to do here. Harry decided to be proactive, and he reached his hand out:

“Hello sir, my name is Harry Potter, this is my friend Warrick Forrester.” Sophie’s father did not look as if he recognized their names, though Harry’s English accent made his eyebrows go up a little.

“Peter Weir, nice to meet you both.” He shook Harry’s outstretched hand, and repeated with Warrick.....who now had a slightly sick feeling at seeing his close friend’s father. He had been one of the first at school to see Sophie after she returned with then Headmaster Rydell, after she had been thrown out of this very house, for being magical. He was one of the ones, along with Reiko and a few others, who had comforted her that night as she cried her eyes out for hours, he had not seen her cry since. In the four years plus since that night, Sophie had never, in his hearing, harshly criticized her parents for what they had done, but Reiko and Warrick had long agreed that if they ever got a shot at payback, they would take it for her.....except that Warrick did not have his wand with him. As with all holidays, it was stuck to his dresser until the day he and Harry were due to portkey back to school. Harry was the only one armed this day, and while Warrick would not put it past him to bring violence upon this man for what he had done, he knew that Harry was hoping beyond hope for diplomacy to work here.

“Are you boys friends of Ned’s? Why don’t we take this inside?” Harry smiled gratefully, not only was he cold, but getting in the front door was what he had figured would be the hard part.

“Thank you sir.” The five of them went inside, and all sat down in the living room. Sophie’s mother was not in evidence anywhere, so it was just the men folk.

“Mr. Weir, Warrick and I aren’t friends of Ned exactly.” He stopped there, and the Weir patriarch needed no other hints, as they were clearly too young to be friends of Jason.

“You are friends of my daughter.” Said flatly, with little emotion.

“Yes we are, though I am privileged to add the title of ‘boyfriend’ as well.” Another cold stare at them, but at least he was not trying to kick them out yet.....not that Harry was prepared to go quickly and quietly if that happened.

“Does she have something to say to us?”

“Not as such, no. Sophie doesn’t know that we are here.”

“So what do you want? Surely she has told you our terms for her return.” Harry could sense Warrick’s hostility growing by the second, but didn’t dare break eye contact with Peter while he had it.

“I was hoping, that over the course of four and a half years, that those terms might have softened a little.....or a lot.”

“Why would you assume that?”

“She’s your daughter Mr. Weir, she loves you and her mother to this day. Can you really say that you don’t love her?”

“She made a choice young man, and she has to live by that choice.” Harry stayed calm at considerable effort, and kept his tone soft.

“What kind of parent forces a 12 year old girl into that kind of choice?” He was rewarded with a flinch, but the man’s expression did not change.

“It should not have been too hard to choose her family over magic. I suppose your parents just sent you off to Wizard school without a second thought.” Harry and Warrick looked at each other.

“Well my parents died when I was a baby, but they were magical, and would have wanted me to follow in their footsteps.” He didn’t dare mention the Dursleys in this company.

“My parents are Wizards too Mr. Weir, and they had no problem with me maximizing my potential. I should tell you that they made it clear that if I didn’t want to go to Great Lakes, I didn’t have to.”

“Well that is well and good for the two of you, who grew up in that culture, but not for my daughter.” Just then, a woman who Harry supposed was Sophie’s mother appeared. She had the beginnings of a smile at seeing guests, but it froze when she saw the hard look on her husband’s face, and the worried looks of her sons.

“I’m sorry, I wasn’t aware that we had company.” She didn’t hear the doorbell? Harry found this to be a bit dubious. Harry and Warrick stood up.

“Hello ma’am, my name is Harry Potter and this Warrick Forrester. We’re boyfriend and friend, respectively, to Sophie.” The look on her face was priceless, she clearly had not been eavesdropping.

“Is Sophie all right? Has something happened?” Harry decided he had been overly polite long enough.

“Thank you for being the first one here to ask that question Mrs. Weir, but no, nothing is wrong with her.” The brothers looked a bit abashed, and even their father appeared to be a little uncomfortable after that salvo.

“And you two are here to try for a reconciliation?” Harry was liking her more by the second, especially compared to her husband. Now that he was staring at her, he noticed a strong resemblance between her and her daughter.

“Yes ma’am, that is our hope.” Warrick didn’t make a sound this time with the ‘our’ comment, but Peter had something to say.

“A reconciliation that will not be happening as long as she stays at that school.”

“What happens in 18 months after she graduates, and she’s third in our class, just so you know, a very gifted student.” No one seemed to have a good answer to that one, and Harry was a few seconds away from starting in with the threats, and then Peter stood up.

“I think it’s time you boys left. I suppose I can’t blame you for trying, but nothing has changed for any of us, and until it does, she will not be welcome back here.” Harry laid a hand on Warrick’s arm to forestall him from getting up. He eyed the Weirs for a moment, and things came together mentally.

“I mean it boys, you need to leave.” Harry made no moved to get up, but did take his wand out of his coat.....just to see what the reaction would be. The brothers looked curious, the mother troubled, and the father was enraged.

“Are you threatening me?”

“Not at all Mr. Weir, why would you think that me just pulling out my wand would be a threat? After all, Warrick hasn’t taken his out” That he couldn’t was not a detail that needed to be disclosed right about now.

“Because you’re not leaving after I told you to.”

“No we’re not. But we will leave if you can answer just one easy question.” Weir was conscious that he had lost control of the situation, but there was only one right answer here.

“Fine, what’s your question?”

“Which one of you is the squib? You, or your wife?” The brothers seemed to know what a squib was, and turned to stare at their parents. Mrs. Weir, whose first name was Wendy, went white, and Peter did not look much better. Warrick just stared at his roommate, and badly wanted to ask him how he had figured that out, but decided to wait until later to do so.

“You know, it didn’t hit me until after I sat down here, but I should have figured it out months ago. You see, Sophie has no idea why you turned on her like you did, and she could never come up with a good reason.....but she also mentioned that she never seemed to see her grandparents much, on either side. Neither of you are saying no to my question yet.”

Peter Weir just started pacing, and then turned to his ‘guests’. He was less hostile than before, but there was something in his eyes.

“How would you feel if you grew up in a wonderful environment, filled with amazing things.....but were only allowed to look, but not touch.....see, but not do. That was me, from age 11 on until now, and for the rest of my life.” Everyone was breathing very quietly as he said this, and the pain he obviously felt was palpable.

“I do understand sir, I was raised by my aunt, who hated the fact that her sister was a muggleborn witch, and could do all those things that she could not. She and her husband spent 10 years trying to stomp the magic out of me, sometimes literally. Believe me Mr. Weir, if anyone here understands where you’re coming from, it’s me.....but how is any of that your daughter’s fault?” Peter continued as if Harry had not even spoken.

“I dreaded the months up until Jason’s 11th birthday, and then he didn’t get a letter..... the same with Ned, no letter. I honestly thought we were in the clear. Then Sophie got hers, and to my parents’ old school no less. I tried, I really tried. Wendy and I decided to go along with it, Sophie had seen the letter and asked so many questions.....but I just couldn’t, I couldn’t do it in the end.”

“So you forced her into choosing between herself and her family.” That was not a question, and seemed to bring Weir out of his reverie.

“Yes we did, and I do not regret it. She left us, young man. She chose magic and her own desires over her family, and I stand by our choice.”

“I repeat my earlier question, can you honestly tell us that you don’t love your daughter?” Wendy Weir now had tears in her eyes, and the brothers were not far behind.

“There are times when love is not enough young man. Duty to family is just as important. Yes I love Sophie, and I always will.....but she will not cross this doorway with a wand in her hand, or anywhere else on her person.”

“That’s cold sir.”

“That’s your opinion, not that I care to hear any more of it. Now you said you would leave after I answered your question, and I have. Don’t make me call the police.” Harry and Warrick both started laughing, shocking the others, and between guffaws:.

“What would you tell them when they came? All we have to do is yell the word ‘Magic’ in front of them and the Aurors would come a running. That said, we are leaving. I suppose we should thank you for your time, but given how I feel about your daughter, I’ve used up all my politeness towards you.” Harry stood up, put his wand away, and walked to the door, followed closely by Warrick. They had just gotten outside when the door opened back up behind them, and Wendy and her sons stopped them.

“Boys.....is Sophie happy? Does she have a good life at that school?” A crack in the foundation, and Harry went right for the jugular.

“Yes she is happy ma’am, but nothing would make her happier than to hear from you. Just send her a Christmas card, your husband doesn’t have to know.” He pulled a pre-prepared slip of paper from his pocket, it had Great Lakes muggle mail drop address on it.

“Thank you boys.” She pocketed the paper, and walked quickly back inside. The brothers eyed the Wizards for a moment.

“I guess we should thank you for not giving us up in there, tell Sophie that we love her, and that we look forward to her next letter. Right Ned?”

“Right bro.....I’m glad she’s happy, and that you guys and your other friends are there for her. Jason and I will continue to do our best for her here, I promise.”

“Good enough.” Harry girded himself and shook hands with them, though Warrick declined, and was already halfway down the front walk. They walked back inside, as Harry jogged a bit to catch up with his friend. They started the walk back to the floo point, deciding that dinner could wait until they were back in Indianapolis.

“So was it worth it? Did you get what you wanted?”

“I did Warrick, yeah. I got an explanation, and that’s the best I could hope for.”

“I guess I have to agree with you on that. You didn’t really expect them to have a change of heart, did you?” Harry grimaced at his roommate.

“Of course not. I’m persuasive up to a point I suppose, but I’m not that good.”

“What are you going to tell Sophie?” Harry looked at him in surprise.

“The truth of course.”

“Maybe you should wait until after Christmas, you never know what this might do to her.” That was a thought, but with a giant problem attached to it.

“That won’t work, the brothers will surely write to her and tell her we were there, and I’ll bet you five bucks right now that her mom will send something.....and then you and I will get the big question of why we didn’t tell her right away. And while I will get most of the punishment, you won’t go unscathed mate.” Warrick acknowledged this.

“Yeah, I guess you’re right. She wouldn’t stop at killing you, that’s for sure.” They spent the rest of the walk talking about restaurants, and how far they wanted to travel. Warrick may have lived in a muggle area, but he had no idea how to drive a car. It was part of the price he paid for staying at school the past three summers, it was a boon to his grades, which had improved by leaps and bounds.....but he did miss out on a few things.

They flooded back to the Forrester home, fully expecting it to be empty.....not quite.

Sophie, Claudia, Reiko, and Jonas were all in the living room watching television, or were before their heads turned toward the floo fireplace.....the Forresters had a floo fireplace and a real fireplace. Quite the conversation piece when muggle friends came by. Reiko was just bringing some drinks for them, they had the run of the fridge.

“Hey guys, we were wondering where you were. Doing some Christmas shopping?” Warrick’s look at Harry clearly communicated: ‘this was your idea, you proclaim it and defend it.’.

“Well we were shopping for Christmas of a sort I guess.” Warrick snorted.

“You are not helping Warrick. Well there is no easy way to say this, so I’ll just say it: We were in Springfield.”

Dead silence hit the room, and Jonas had the presence of mind to turn the television off. Sophie stood up, and Harry had so rarely seen her angry that he really couldn’t peg the signs yet.

“You saw my family?”

“We did, I wanted to see if there was any chance there.” He had half-heartedly decided to shield Warrick if he could.

“Why didn’t you tell me beforehand? No, scratch that, why didn’t you ask me first before you even went?” Okay, now she was getting angry, and Harry reflexively took a half step back.

“I didn’t want to get your hopes up, I didn’t want to have you dreading what I might come back with.” Harry’s voice was as calming as he could possibly make it, though he was very grateful that Sophie couldn’t use her wand right now.....though Reiko could, and she and Claudia weren’t looking too thrilled with him and Warrick right about now.

“So you met my parents.”

“We did, and your brothers, who seem like good guys by the way.” Sophie now sighed, and some of the anger was dissipating. Harry now took that half step back forward.

“So what happened?”

“Well the upshot is that your brothers are still on your side.....your mother seems very conflicted and perhaps willing to switch teams.....” He hesitated, and then barreled forward when she looked expectant.

“And your father is a squib.” More dead silence, as Sophie’s facial expression changed about four times inside as many seconds.

“I know I did not hear that right.”

“You did Sophie, and he admitted it right in front of us, and your mother and brothers. Your mother didn’t seem surprised.....well she seem surprised that he was fessing up to it anyway. Your brother were stunned.” Warrick decided to show some solidarity here.

“It was Harry who figured it out Sophie, he put stuff together and flat out asked him, and your dad gave us this spiel about stuff he missed out on, and that he tried to understand about your magic, and crap like that. He still doesn’t want you there without a wand though, but he seemed to be the only one there who felt that way.” Sophie was quiet now, and a tear was running from her left eye. Harry was unsure about whether or not he should go over to her, but decided to chance it, and walked over and took her hands in his.

“Sophie, I guess I just wanted you to have an explanation, one gotten without having to face any hostility yourself.” She stayed silent, and there were still hard looks coming from Reiko and Claudia, while Jonas had sidled up to Warrick and they were trading facial expressions.

“My mom looked conflicted you said?” The one piece of information Harry was going to leave out unless asked for was the possibility of a letter from the mother.

“As we were leaving, she asked us if you were happy, and safe. Your dad did most of the talking of course, but she did not look at all resolute. Your brothers didn’t say a word inside, but before and after we talked with your dad, they told us that they love you, and that they look forward to your next letter.” The tears were coming a bit harder now, but she was squeezing Harry’s hands, which meant that she could not slug him. She was quiet for a minute.

“Thank you for trying Harry, and you too Warrick.....a squib. I mean I believe you, and it does make a lot of sense in retrospect.. How did he keep all that a secret for so long?”

“How often did you see his parents growing up?”

“Two or three times maybe, they live in Seattle and Dad isn’t big on taking long trips.”

“They must have reached some kind of deal with your dad, or maybe he just shut them out.....seems to be something of a pattern with the guy.”

“You didn’t like him?” Harry made a face, and his voice got very indignant.

“Of course I didn’t like him, and I wasn’t going to, even if he had done everything I wanted. He threw you out of your home Sophie, he is lucky there are Listening Charms all over the place there, or I might have vented some frustration on him.” Sophie’s eyes got a little big on hearing that.

“Please tell me you didn’t threaten him.” Harry and Warrick looked at each other.

“Well I did take out my wand at one point, but I swear it was just to see his and your mother’s reactions to it, this was right after I formed my squib theory. I even told him that I wasn’t threatening him after he accused me of it.” He took a deep breath.

“Do you want to see the pensieve memory of it? I had no intention of keeping this from you Sophie, I just figured we would next see each other tomorrow, and I would take you aside and tell you then, I promise.” She chewed on this offer for a moment, as a lot of the tension in the room dissolved. The others thought that if Sophie was going to slug her boyfriend, she would have done it by now.

“I think I’ll pass on that for the time being Harry. Don’t worry, I’m not mad at you, I understand why you wanted to go there.”

“Why I wasn’t worried about that at all Sophie.” Harry’s facial expression and tone of voice did not match that statement mind you, and he would have wiped his brow had Sophie not still been holding his hands in hers.

“Oh shut up.” She lightly kissed him, and then went over to Warrick and kissed him on the cheek.

“Hey, he didn’t even want to go, why does he get a kiss.” Warrick just smiled at him.

“Shut up Harry.”

“And I was going to spring for a nice restaurant tonight, but no, its fast food for you, traitor.” They all laughed as Harry explained his bribe. Ultimately they decided to order pizza and stay in, since they were traveling tomorrow. There was no electricity at the island, and Harry didn’t have a television in his trunk, so they just watched sports all night, as the Pacers were playing, and everyone was mocking Warrick for being the runt in the family, and how Uncle Antonio was twice the athlete that he would ever be.

“Hey, I’m only 16 you know.” They rolled their eyes.

“And just how tall was Antonio then?” Warrick threw up his hands.

“Oh for crying out loud.” That was when he got hit with all the couch cushions, just a typical night with the gang.

Noon

Forrester House, Indianapolis

The gang gathered in Warrick's room and they prepared for their 'trip'. Everyone had stashed clothes and other beach supplies in the trunk the night before, and Winky had just gone to the island to place the trunk. Fred and George were due to join them either that evening or the next day, since WWW was not open on Sundays, and there was just enough business from the on holiday Hogwarts kids to need more than just Lee Jordan there on a Saturday afternoon. All the teenagers were wearing t-shirts and shorts, and were having a difficult time with doing so in the middle of winter in Indiana.

"Are you serious with this floo address Harry? It's even stranger than the one for this trunk."

"Fred is the one to blame this time, I wasn't there remember?" Winky fired the floo and came back.

"All is set now Harry and friends. I put the trunk in the middle of the room for now." Everyone motioned for Harry to go first, so he got in the fireplace, threw the floo powder in, and yelled out:

"Mr. Toad's Wild Ride!"

Don't ask.

He vanished, and then reappeared in a trunk just like his, except that it had no furniture or decorations. He waited a minute as the others came through one by one, ending with Warrick.

The Forrester, Steele, and Aylesworth parents, out of necessity, had been told about the island and their method of getting there. Harry had not wanted to do any of this, but Warrick had convinced him that as mature as Harry often acted, the lot of them were still teenagers, and had to let people know where to find them, just in case. Harry had grudgingly agreed, and Dobby and Winky were instructed to come if any of the parents called for them, in case someone needed to be gotten for an emergency. The parents, who had been told at the big dinner on Thursday night, were all aghast at how easily Harry had been able to travel between Michigan and London. The kids assured them that the rest of them had only done the journey once, to see the shop, and had not gone outside at any point during the visit. The adults calmed down quickly though, as all the teenagers promised them that they were not about to screw up so sweet a deal by being reckless with it.

Harry went up the ladder first, and popped open the trunk lid, climbing out. He saw what was a very basic muggle built cabin. There were two doors on the south side of the room, those must be the bedrooms that Winky had told him about. There was no kitchen area, and just some rudimentary furniture in the main area. The others had come out of the trunk by now, and were taking the room in.

“Well I guess we will be roughing it, until we get some furniture in here.” Harry checked his watch. The shop closed in less than an hour back in Britain.

“Dobby!” The little fellow popped in, and immediately started looking around. He had never been here, Winky doing all the cabin stuff.

“Yes Harry?”

“Please go back to the shop and get a twin or two, and as much money as you need to, and get some furniture for this place. Figure on at least three couches, ten mattresses, some easy chairs, stuff like that. It can be wizard made or muggle made, I don’t care. And make sure you get something the right size for you and Winky too.”

“Yes Harry, I will be back in a little while.” He popped back down to the trunk. The women were all eager to go outside, and Claudia walked over and opened the door. Two things hit them immediately:

The heat was one of them, it must have been at least 80 degrees outside. That isn’t that hot for most people, but it was snowing in Indianapolis at this point, so everything is relative here.

The other thing easily noticed was the spectacular view. The door of the cabin, and there was only the one, looked right out on to the ocean that was about 100 meters away. Only a few trees blocked the sight of the surf, and the beach was nice and wide. The six of them walked outside and soaked in the fresh air and the view. Sophie couldn't stop looking around.

"Wow, your godfather sure did know how to pick the spots didn't he?"

"Yes he did didn't he? I'm sorry he had to leave it." He was already looking for the large bird of the type that Sirius had used to send him letters. All Harry knew about the island is that Sirius had purchased it a few months before his Azakaban tenure, it had not been an inheritance from the Blacks, though he had of course used their money. At least that's what Harry had gleaned from Fortrap, who had queried about it a few days after the trial. Fortrap had done some digging, and was positive that no other Blacks had known about it, as the island was Unplottable, and Gringotts had held the only portkeys for it.

"Let's go down to the beach." They strolled down to the beach and immediately decided that bare feet should be the order of the day. The shucked off their socks and shoes, and wiggled their toes in the sand, inhaling the tropical air as they listened to the sound of the surf.

Harry was thinking to himself: 'It's the middle of winter, and I'm here on my own private island paradise that only 10 humans on earth have a clue about. Please Merlin, do not wake me up anytime soon.'

The others were thinking much the same thing, and Sophie and Reiko could not help but see how romantic this all could be, and were each plotting about how often they could drag their boys here during the school year. With his trunk and food and things, Harry had more or less adopted a 'mine is yours' policy toward the other five, and Fred and George as well. Soon enough though, the idle daydreaming ended, and the six of them trooped back to the trunk to get their swimwear and beach towels.

They put these to good use and were soon laying out on the beach, Dr. Peppers in hand as they felt very, very lazy. A couple of hours passed by, and then they heard some noises behind them: It was

Fred, George, Alicia, and Angelina, followed by Dobby and Winky. Fred took a look at the six teenagers and the beautiful vista:

“Well Toto, we are definitely not in Kansas anymore.”

“How the bloody hell do you know about The Wizard of Oz?” The twins looked at Harry like the answer should have been obvious, as they spread out their own towels. George explained.

“Dad of course. One of his roommates at school was muggleborn and Dad watched it at his house during some such vacation, I’m not too clear on it. Anyway, he used it as a bedtime story for years, even Percy liked it.” Harry himself had never seen complete The Wizard of Oz, though a video of it was in the Cortez Lounge and he had walked in on it halfway through a few weeks before. He knew the basic story though and could easily imagine Arthur going for it.

“Lee not coming?”

“No, he’s romancing some muggle girl and they have a date tonight.” This was news to Harry, who saw Lee at least once a week.

“A muggle? I’m guessing she doesn’t know about our little world within a world?” Fred grimaced.

“Not according to Lee she doesn’t, they’ve only been going out for about a month or so. I don’t know how serious it is, as we have not been introduced to her. He’ll have a hell of a time showing her where he works though.” He mimicked Lee.

“Trust me dear, there really is a pub there, even if you can’t see it. No, don’t worry, this stick will tap these bricks and the door will open.” The group got a loud laugh out of that image.

“Did you guys get the furniture and everything?”

“Yeah, we’re all set up in there. A discount furniture place opened up just around the corner from The Leaky Cauldron a couple of months ago, we raided it and got some great deals. I think it cost you about 500 galleons, and we pitched in a like amount.” Harry opened his mouth to protest, but George wouldn’t hear it.

“Hey, we’re going to get just as much use out of this paradise as you are mate, it is only fair that we kick some cash in to get it going. Thanks in part to you and your fine schoolmates here.....and your Howler brilliance, the business happens to be pretty flush with cash at present. You figured out a name for it yet? For the island?”

“What else could I call it but Isla de Marauder.....Marauder Island.” The ten of them smiled. Fred and George each had a large towel set down, and their girlfriends joined them on them. Angelina and Alicia were introduced to the Americans, who they had heard all about, but obviously never met.

“Say Angelina, didn’t you have a game today?”

“Nah, we’re shut down until February. You should sneak back and see a game or something, I’ll figure out a way to keep you hidden from your many fans.” Angelina was a first year Chaser for the Wimbourne Wasps, Ludo Bagman’s old team, something that Fred and George had given her much grief over in the time since they drafted her, as Bagman still owed them some money.

“Don’t tempt me Angelina, but it’s probably better if I keep a low profile for the time being.” Alicia snickered at the thought.

“Just so you know Harry, mum will definitely be the word on how you, and we got here. No nosy git Headmasters will find out, we promise.”

“I thought you loved him?”

“Not since he let Snape attack you back in July. You should hear how they talk about him at The Prophet, my goodness. How times have changed.” Harry was almost afraid to ask this next question, but ultimately could not resist.

“How do they talk about me?” Alicia made a slight grimace, but nothing major.

“Oh most of the staff don’t blame you for checking out, and the Snape story sold a ton of papers thanks to you and Winky. Thanks for that by the way, it did a lot for me there.” Alicia had just moved from trainee to regular reporter, though she had not covered the Malfoy trial in any way.

“No problem, always glad to help out a former teammate.”

They talked for awhile of Gryffindor’s chances against Slytherin, which had stomped Hufflepuff in their opening match. The four of them had been at the Gryffindor game and agreed that Ron had never looked better in goal, but needed a hell of a lot of improvement if he was going to make a career of Quidditch. Ginny had looked better than average, but Cho had still gotten the Snitch over her rather easily. Sloper and Kirke had not gone out for Beater this year, and the twins and their girlfriends could not even agree on who their replacements were, let alone if they were any good or not. Katie Bell had scored 18 goals by herself, and was heading up the draft list with every one of them. Harry learned that Oliver Wood, their old captain, was now starting at Keeper for Puddlemere United. Rumor had it that he was a serious candidate for the Scottish National Team, as their incumbent starting Keeper was only a reserve for the Chudley Cannons. Angelina herself had been called up by the English National Team, and was due to play with them during a friendly against Norway in January. Alicia had not so much as been on a broom since the Ravenclaw game, she had long had moderately severe back problems, and did not miss Quidditch at all as a participant, though she never missed Angelina’s games.

Talk like that continued throughout the afternoon as the two groups, with little more than Harry in common, got comfortable with each other. At night they had dinner in the cabin, as the Brits had indeed stocked the place up well. The two bedrooms were pretty much covered in double and single mattresses, with only aisles providing any space. The living room likewise had two recliners, three large couches, and three loveseats. The stuff was not luxury oriented, but it was not cheap looking furniture to say the least.

“How the bloody hell did you lot get this outside the store? Let alone shrunk without witnesses?”

“Oh it was easy. We simply told them that we had a big rental truck coming by, and for them to stack the stuff in the back on their loading dock. They were so happy to make that kind of a sale, they would have done anything we wanted them to. Once the handlers went back inside, we shrunk the stuff and put them in our bags. The whole trip took less than an hour.”

“Bloody amazing, is this where you got the stuff for my trunk?”

“Nah, that was another place that Anthony Hook had told us about, in Knockturn Alley. The place we went today was muggle.”

After dinner, Harry and Sophie stole away and explored the island. They walked slowly and said little. There seemed to be no residual anger from Sophie about the Springfield trip, much to Harry's inner relief, and what little talking they did was about the island itself. They did the requisite snogging on the beach, which both enjoyed immensely. They listened to the surf as they lay there, not knowing or caring about what the others were doing. Afterwards, Harry was musing about how life had changed from a year ago, or even six months ago. Harry talked to her about Sirius, something he rarely did to anyone, as it was usually just too painful for him to do so. But tonight was different, this was Sirius' haven after all, a place Harry now felt his godfather never should have left. He told her all his Sirius stories, and though Sophie had seen the man in Harry's pensieve, she now finally started to understand him as she listened to Harry talk about him.

“How different do you think your life would have been if he had raised you?”

“So different I cannot possibly imagine it.”

“I’m sure it would have been a lot better.”

“Anything that would have gotten me away from the Dursleys would have been better. I will never forgive the old man for putting me there, never.”

“You’ve had five months of relative peace though, maybe you’ve found your place.”

“It does agree with me, I have to admit.” They laid there for another hour, listening to the waves and holding each other. There was peace in Harry’s life, and he was now more determined than ever to hold on to it, however he had to do it.

End Chapter

Author's Note: Fleur makes her first, and probably not last, appearance in the story, and I have decided that life is just too short to try and write a French accent into all her dialogue, however much she may have. Let's just pretend that her six months or so in Britain smoothed her accent over some. In screw-up news, in one chapter I say that Professor Murray has no children, then two chapters later I give her a daughter, whoops. Let the official record say that she has the daughter, one that might fit into the overall plot at some point, one never knows.

Isla de Marauder

Harry and Sophie returned the cabin a little before midnight, and found everyone still up swapping stories, except for Warrick and Reiko, who had gone on their own walk somewhere. The Americans and Brits were getting along great, as Claudia was now telling them some Joe Clancy stories. Jonas interrupted her:

“So Harry, I never heard about his reaction to Dobby moving his furniture around.”

“Oh he was livid, and he never suspected us either, or at least didn't admit to suspecting us.”

“He didn't go to Heyman?”

“Not this time, since nothing was damaged. Lattimore looked around in there and told Clancy to take his medicine like a man, and the idiot actually took the advice.” Ed Lattimore was one of the Senior students in Cortez, and more or less the student leader in the House, though everything was unofficial of course. He was Captain of the Quodpot team, and he and the gang got along quite well. Sophie had been there for the mini-altercation.

“It's about time someone put Clancy in his place.....though I think Harry did most of the work, Clancy hasn't said boo to us since he threatened him.” All four pair of Brit eyes focused on Harry as Jonas recounted what Harry had told Clancy. Angelina actually went over to feel his forehead.

“Our Harry? The quiet little boy from Quidditch? Not ‘The Boy Who Lived!’” Harry just smirked at her.

“Yes Angelina, your Harry told Joseph Clancy not to screw around with us, and it does seem to have worked. I put up with Draco Malfoy for five years, I am not going to suffer his replacement if I can help it.” Fred and George had sent Draco half his allotment of Howlers, so they knew from where he spoke.

“You bet your red haired ass George.”

“One day I’m going to torture that info out of you, how you can tell us apart.”

“I told Ginny last year, all she has to do is promise me her first born child, and I’ll give up the secret.” The room exploded with laughter.

“You don’t want Ron’s?” Harry looked sick at that question.

“The love child of Ron and Hermione? Oh my goodness.” The next hour was spent picking over Ron and Hermione’s relationship, and what they all thought about it, and their future. The consensus was that it would last, but only because no one else would put up with them. Alicia and Angelina did not particularly care for Hermione especially, though it was easier now, since they rarely saw her. In response to some teasing from Harry, both couples said that marriage was not immediately in the offing, but to ask them again next Christmas.

The ten of them went to sleep a little while later, the non-Harry Brits had had an especially long day. Harry and Sophie shared one of the mattresses, their first time spending the night together, though none of the four couples were interested in having sex with this kind of audience, Harry and Sophie having not had sex period. Dobby and Winky woke them all the next day with the smell of pancakes and sausage, having used both Harry's trunk and the Weasley's trunk's kitchen to make that much food. Fred and George had to take off after brunch, as they had a lot to do at the shop, getting ready for the last few days of Christmas shopping. Harry walked out with them, and the three of them discussed a private matter for a few minutes. Angelina and Alicia stayed through dinner, not having any particular plans. They told the Americans a lot of Fred and George stories, and Harry, Jonas, and Warrick were shooed out of the beach area for awhile, so that the other five could enjoy some girl talk. They did some daylight exploration of the island, and collected some coconuts to bring back to the States.

The gang themselves also left after dinner, the three sets of parents not wanting them gone too long. Harry and Warrick went back to his house, and Harry was now closer in color to his friend than he had been before, much to Warrick's amusement. Warrick's parents got a full tour of the trunk that night before bed, and Harry demonstrated the trunk floo for them. They were still a little wary of it all, but accepted the guys' promises that they were very careful about it all. The Forresters had grown fond of Harry in the short time they had known him, and decided to go along with it all.

Likewise the Professors Aylesworth and Michael Steele, in consultation with the Forresters, decided to wait until a screw-up happened before they put any of their collective feet down. Michael judged it best not to discuss this with his wife, she had not been at the dinner, one never knew how she would take things. Karl Aylesworth in particular was intrigued by the idea of the trunks, and how Harry and the twins had deployed them. Floo travel was possible between the four schools and wizard homes, but it was strongly discouraged unless a serious emergency arose, and was never used at holiday times. The Kindred/Wizard v. Lycan war had not gone beyond the skirmish level, but it was possible that things could escalate any day now. Karl was more than a little tempted to invest in one of those trunks himself. It was the wizard equivalent of a muggle bomb shelter, and could prove quite useful, with little risk other than a drain on the bank account. He didn't say any of this to his wife Lisa though, he was still chewing on it for the time being.

Forrester House, Indianapolis

2:00 pm

Harry and Warrick got in the taxi that would be their ride to the mall, for some last minute Christmas shopping. Jonas was at work with his father, and the girls had specifically not been invited, since most of the shopping had to do with them. Warrick always did his shopping like this, saying that the pressure made him more creative. He had mainly goofed around at the mall in Milwaukee, and had only bought a couple of things for his parents, he still had the girls and one other to buy for. The Forrester family was so large that presents were done Secret Santa style, except for spouses and children. Harry, being a houseguest, was included too, and he had to buy, ironically, for Uncle Antonio, the only one in the family wealthier than he was. This was the one person he hadn't bought for yet, along with something else for Sophie.....and one other person.

"I thought you were all set with that plane ticket thing for Ron?"

"I was, and I've changed my mind. I don't want to spend that much money on someone who will just resent me for it later. Luna's and Neville's last letters both told me that he's been taking potshots at me again, and I'm tired of it." Hermione had failed to mention this, and Ginny wrote that she avoided Ron if at all possible, just seeing him at Quidditch and rogue DA practices.

"Yeah, I don't blame you really. It's sad to see how friends grow apart like that."

"It is what it is, but I agree it's sad. In a lot of ways Ron was under as much pressure as I was, he just didn't have the stuff inside to cope with it." This was as close as Harry would come to calling Ron a dimwit in front of Warrick, who was for all intents and purposes, Ron's replacement. Likewise Warrick was very careful not to rip Ron, who he had of course never met. This unofficial rule did not apply to Harry and Sophie, who had dissected Ron up and down through use of the pensive. It was something they did when they were bored and not in the mood for snogging.....which admittedly was not that often, but still.

“What about Hermione? Are you still going to give one to her?”

“I’m still chewing on that one. I might do it on the sly, since it would look a little strange for me to spend more on her than the others combined. Ron would be the only one who would care, but he would make a deal of it I think.”

They got to the mall in short order, paid the taxi driver, and started wandering around. Warrick was rarely ever home, and he had only been in there a few times, so he was no help of where to go. They saw a nice jewelry store right near their entrance, and looked at each other, eyebrows raised.

“Save it until the end mate?”

“Yeah, we both know we’re coming back for it.”

They went into an art store, and spent awhile looking at various prints. Warrick’s Secret Santa person was his Aunt Marie, the baby sister of his dad, and he wanted to get her a print of something, having liked the one Harry had bought Sophie in August. Harry saw a fascinating one hanging on the wall, and turned to his friend.

“You think Antonio would appreciate this one?” Warrick looked at him like he was on drugs.

“Not really, no.”

It was a poster print of Michael Jordan dunking on someone from the Pacers, though it wasn’t Antonio thank goodness. Even though the face was somewhat obscured, it was definitely a white fellow.

“Imagine having that print in a store in Indianapolis, sheesh, no civic pride I tell you.” They poked around some more, and Warrick found a Jackson Pollock print that he thought his aunt would like. Harry got a couple of items as well, for decorating the trunk, though he reluctantly passed on the Jordan print. He had lagged on decorating the trunk for so long that Sophie was threatening to do it for him, and while he liked her taste on the whole.....well one gets the idea. The aquarium was the first step, though he did not yet have any fish in it.

They window shopped for another hour, with Warrick getting Claudia a computer game that dealt with historical battles, and Sophie one of those Hot Wheels racetracks. Now it was Harry's turn to stare at him.

"Eh?"

"You're getting her the serious stuff, I'm getting her something fun."

"A toy racetrack!"

"She'll love it, I promise you."

"You mean that you and I will love it when we borrow it."

"That too, but trust me, she'll go for it."

"Oh sure, what 16 year old girl would not just die for a toy like that?" Harry actually thought it was an interesting idea, and was only ragging on Warrick to amuse himself. They left the store with the racetrack and a deck of Uno cards that Harry bought for Dobby and Winky, since Dobby was now the unofficial poker champion of Cortez House, and might want a new challenge. He also found his Ron present, a board game called Stratego. It had elements of chess in it, and Harry thought Ron might go for it. He also planned to throw in some muggle candy in the package, along with the calendar that he had gotten for each of them.

"What do you buy for a millionaire? I mean this is getting frustrating."

"Now you know how we feel."

“So I should buy him a CD then? I’m easy to please.” It was true, Christmas and his birthdays had been such a present free time for him growing up that practically anything was good enough for him. Except for Hagrid’s rock cakes. That likely wouldn’t be a problem this year, as the half-giant had been shunning him since his breach with Dumbledore. Harry was saddened a little by it, but didn’t blame Hagrid for his choice, the old man had been a much better father figure for him than he had been for Harry.

“Yes you are thank goodness, no one would ever guess you were worth that much money. Get him an audio book or something like that, I know he’s into thrillers and books like that..” There was a thought, it was a little unusual, but pro athletes did have a lot of time on their hands, and lots of plane rides. Harry thought it was worth a shot, so they went in the bookstore and got him an audio book of the latest John Grisham novel, and snagged a different one for himself, just for the hell of it.

Now there were only the girlfriends to buy for, and while Harry had already gotten Sophie some clothes a couple of weeks earlier, he wanted to do something else, something he actually picked out himself. They went back to that first jewelry store, the one by the entrance they had come in. Warrick checked his watch, his mom would be coming to pick them up in 25 minutes.

“Now I got her a necklace for her birthday, I guess a bracelet or something for this one.”

“Where did you get that necklace?”

“Out of a catalog that my mom sent me.” Harry looked around the smallish shop and pondered.

“How bout a nice engagement ring?” Harry was rather surprised when Warrick barely flinched at that salvo, which had been meant purely as a joke. Warrick was only 16, and Reiko barely 17.

“Not this year, maybe next year, if things keep on chugging.” Warrick and Reiko were so often seen teasing each other that it was not readily apparent that they had deep feelings for one another.

“Well you pick first, since I can’t get the same thing for Sophie that you get for Reiko.”

“How about you get the engagement ring?”

“I don’t move quite that fast there Warrick. Sophie is amazing, but we’ve only been together four and half months.”

“You sure didn’t spend much time browsing, that’s for sure.” Harry knew this, not that he cared.

“That doesn’t make me wrong. Since I met Sophie I’ve only found one other girl at Great Lakes that holds a candle to her, even remotely.” Warrick’s eyebrows shot way up, this was going to be good.

“Oh really? Who might she be?”

“The one you’re shopping for jethro.” Warrick started laughing, greatly amused. He wasn’t any more jealous of this than Harry would be if he had said the same about Sophie.

“Too bad for you then, she’s all mine. Claudia’s free though.”

“No thanks, I prefer her as a friend only.” And he did, Claudia just had too many hang-ups for him to think of her in that way, even if he didn’t have Sophie.

“I know what you mean. Anyway, what should I get her? Earrings maybe? She has a lot of holes to fill.” Indeed she did, as Reiko had four on each ear, and was constantly mixing and matching.

“I don’t know, that seems like a personal choice thing, unless you’re getting her diamond earrings or something like that.”

“Yeah, you’re right. You had it before, I’ll get her a bracelet, you get Sophie a necklace.” Harry nodded in agreement. The clock was still ticking, and Warrick, on impulse as always, picked the second one he looked at. It was silver, with a couple of beads hanging off it, and didn’t look like any of the bracelets that Reiko ever wore. Harry decided against the necklace option, Sophie already wore one that he thought looked great on her. He decided on a watch instead, and picked out a nice one, though not one that was incredibly expensive, as Sophie had ordered him not to spend too much on her. Harry’s interpretation of ‘too much’ might be a bit different from hers, but no matter. They made their purchases with a few minutes to spare, and were in the parking lot when Warrick’s mother pulled in, on her way home from work. Everyone was now purchased for, and there was no need to experience the madness of a day before Christmas shopping trip.

Forrester House, Indianapolis

Noon

Harry, Warrick, and Jonas were watching a college football bowl game on the TV, their fourth in the last two days, and Harry was finally getting the hang of the rules. He still didn’t like it as much as soccer, but it was a nice diversion considering he was in a country with very little soccer on television. The Dursleys, strangely enough, had actually encouraged him over the years to watch soccer, thinking it would make him more ‘normal’. It hadn’t worked, but Harry still liked his Crystal Palace squad, and had managed to keep track of their progress over the years. Warrick’s parents were both working, his mother at City Hall and his dad on a day trip to gather some materials for his wand cores. The three of them were debating on what to make for lunch when the floo fired, and Sophie came tumbling out, followed soon by Reiko and Claudia. Sophie, after getting the soot off herself, had a dumbfounded look on her face, and seemed to have been crying. She walked up to the boys and pulled an envelope out of her pocket. It was a Christmas card.

“They forwarded this from school this morning, it came there yesterday.” Harry’s heart leaped a little....well, a lot. He knew where this must have come from, and he was quickly praying that at least three names were on it. Harry got up and took the envelope from her, removing the card, which was a standard Hallmark Christmas card, with a note taped inside. Warrick got up to join him and looked over his friend’s shoulder.

Dearest Sophie,

I know this is long overdue, and I can’t apologize enough for that. I miss you honey, I’ve missed you for the last four years, but I haven’t had the courage to write you until now. Your friends’ visit was the kick in the pants I needed I guess. I’m sure they told you about your father and his revelation, and I hope it explained him at least. For myself, I have no such excuse, other than wanting to follow my husband, and I know that’s not good enough anymore, if it ever was.

I will continue to work on him Sophie, along with your brothers, who were so much more faithful to you than I was. I don’t know if they have phones at that school you go to, or the different one you apparently are staying at during the holidays, but if you can, please call, I would love to hear the sound of your voice, as would Jason and Ned. I will make this right Sophie, if you will give me a chance, and a little more time.

I liked your Harry and your friend Warrick by the way, they clearly care about you very much. I’ll talk to you soon honey.

Love,

Mom

The card was signed by her and the brothers, and Harry and Warrick both were getting a little misty eyed. They both went over and hugged her.

“Thank you guys, thank you.”

“Yeah, we neglected to mention that Harry gave her a card with the school’s mail drop on it.” Sophie’s happy sobs got a little louder.

“That’s right, she wouldn’t have known about Ned and Jason, that’s how I thought she got the address, since they know it.” The three of them pulled apart.

“No, we didn’t, as Jason put it, ‘give them up’ to your parents. We pretended that they weren’t in contact with you.” Sophie sat down, still taking it all in. Reiko patted both of the guys on the head.

“Okay, I was mad at first about what you guys did, but it paid off, and I’m mature enough to admit that.” Claudia was nodding.

“Same here, you two did well.” Warrick walked over and grabbed the cordless phone from its spot.

“No time like the present Sophie, do you still remember the number?”

“I do, but.....” Claudia stepped right into the breach.

“No, he’s right Sophie, you don’t want to think about it too much, just do it. Otherwise you’ll be on pins and needles until you do it.” That was true. Sophie’s father was a lawyer, and was the type to work on Christmas Eve, though he did not make a habit of staying late at the office, or so Sophie remembered.

“Okay, give me the phone.” Warrick handed it over, but then Sophie changed her mind a little.

“No, put it on speaker, I want you all to hear it. It will save me the trouble of telling you all about it.” That was good thinking, and Warrick brought the rest of the phone console over. He hit the speaker button, and Sophie dialed the number. It rang four times, and then a voice answered, a female voice.

“Hello?” It was Wendy Weir.

“Mom?”

“Sophie, is that you?” Harry and Warrick gave each other a look that clearly communicated the sarcastic remark: ‘how many other teenage girls call you Mom?’ Sophie didn’t see this though.

“It’s me Mom, I got your letter today.”

“I’m glad they have phones there at your friend’s parents’ school. How are you honey?”

“Oh I’m not there Mom, I’m at Warrick’s house in Indianapolis. It’s a muggle house with phones and everything.”

“Hang on honey, let me get Ned and Jason and I’ll put you on speaker.” She was away for about 20, agonizing for Sophie, seconds, and then came back with the brothers.

“Hi Sophie.”

“Hey there sis.”

“Hi guys, it’s so good to hear all your voices.”

“You too little sister, you doing ok?”

“I’m fine Jason, everything is great now.” Everyone knew what she meant by that, and they were all smiling.

“That’s one ballsy boyfriend you have, I thought he was going to deck Dad.” This was said by Jason with some amusement in his voice. Sophie looked at Harry, who held up his hands as if to say ‘not me’.

“Harry said that he didn’t threaten Dad.” Ned took over, he had noticed the same thing.

“Oh he didn’t, but when Dad went into his thing about not letting you back, this look came over your guy’s face for a half second, I would have taken a step back if I hadn’t been sitting down.”

“Don’t listen to them honey, your Harry was perfectly civil, even to your father. How is school? Ned and Jason say that you’re right up there at the top of your class?”

“Third Mom, my roommate Reiko is first, and another friend of mine is second.” This was Drew.

“You’re doing so well, you always did very well in school. What about college? Are you planning on that?”

“I am Mom, I take the SAT’s in March. They have scholarships available for people like me to go to muggle university, the government pays for it.”

“Where do you want to go?”

“I don’t know, right now I’m thinking somewhere in the Southeast, with no snow.....I’m getting kind of tired of it.” All smiles now, and the three on the other end could be heard chuckling as well.

“And your Harry? Is he college bound too.”

“No Mom, I don’t think so, not exactly. He’s got money, so he’ll either play Quidditch professionally or maybe be an Auror....that’s kind of a combination of police, Army, and the FBI for us. He’s smart though, he’s sixth in our class.” She privately thought that he would go right into WWW in point of fact, but the business was too complicated for a telephone call, or so she decided on the fly.

“It was interesting to meet him, and your friend Warrick too.” Jason put in now.

“Sis, I hope you don’t mind, but I let Mom look at your letters to me over the years.” Sophie started crying again, as Harry grabbed her hands and held them.

“You kept them?”

“Of course I did, they were my link to you. They were very well hidden, Ned’s were too. If Dad ever went looking, he never found them.” There was some mumbling on their end of the line between Wendy and Jason, which everyone at Warrick’s took to mean that there had indeed been some fruitless searching. Sophie wrote Jason only when he was at school, and had sent Ned his letters in care of Jason while the younger man was still living at home.

“It took me most of yesterday honey, while your father was at work, but I read them all. It sounds like you overcame your father’s and my idiocy and have done very well. I’m sorry we weren’t there to share it with you.”

“It’s okay Mom, you’re here now, that’s what matters.” They chatted for a couple of minutes about Wendy’s work, she was a high school teacher at the local parochial school.

“Hold on a second honey, there’s a call coming in on the other line.” The Weir’s apparently had call waiting, which Warrick whispered a quick explanation of to Harry, as the Dursleys had not had anything like it. Not that Harry was ever allowed use the phone mind you, but some things are just picked up by osmosis.

“Okay Mom.” The other end was silent for about 45 seconds, then they came back.

“That was your father, he’s just leaving the office now, he’ll be home in about five minutes. Sophie dear, you magical people have fast ways of traveling don’t you?”

“We can use the floo, yes. That’s how Harry and Warrick got there last week.”

“That’s right, I didn’t see them get into a car. Your father is off from work tomorrow and the next day, but he has a series of meetings Friday morning. Would it be possible for you to come by that morning? The boys and I would love to see you.” Sophie’s eyes lit up.

“That would be wonderful.....but what if someone saw? Wouldn’t they tell Dad?” Wendy’s answer came right away.

“Let them, I don’t need his permission to see my daughter.” As much as she appreciated this sentiment, Sophie went quiet for a few seconds, thinking about something.

“Well I don’t want you to get any static Mom, why don’t we meet in Champaign? That’s only about 80 miles from you, and I can floo in there just as easily. No one will know us there, and we don’t have to be constantly looking our shoulders.” Champaign-Urbana was the home of the University of Illinois, of which Ned Weir was a freshman student. He now spoke up.

“That’s a good idea little sis, there’s a nice café we can have lunch at, and I can show you around campus. Maybe I can convince you to join me there in a couple of years.”

“You can try. Mom, Jason? How does that sound?”

“Works for me Sophie, I agree with you about not provoking Dad just yet.”

“It’s a good idea sweetheart, say 9:00 am? Ned, you forgot something in your dorm room, and we have to go get it, right?”

“Right Mom, a computer disk that I need.” That was pretty fast, and Harry was fairly impressed by the smoothness of it.

“9:00 am works for me, I’ll find out where the nearest floo point is before then.”

“Meet us at the McDonalds across from the west end of campus Sophie, and we can go from there. I don’t suppose you have the internet over there? It would help with directions.” She looked at Warrick, who shook his head in the negative, the Forresters not owning a computer. The only time Sophie had ever used the internet was at Jonas’ house.

“No, but I’ll find it, don’t worry. I can’t wait to see you all.”

“We can’t either honey. Ah, your father is just pulling into the driveway now, he must have hit all the lights. We’ll see you at 9:00 am at that restaurant, I love you Sophie.”

“Love you baby sis.”

“Love you Sophie.”

“I love you guys too, see you on Friday.” She click the button to disconnect, the conversation had barely lasted five minutes, but Harry had never seen her look so drained. She was smiling though.

“Are you all right?”

“I’m fine, it’s just a lot to take in right now.” She was comfortable though, she had her friends surrounding her, supporting her. Inside, she knew that the call would have been much different without them. She thought back to the night she had been kicked out of the house, when she and Headmaster Rydell had returned to school. Reiko and Warrick had been there for her, talking to her, comforting the hurt. Reiko’s family had taken her in, treated her like one of their own, as had Warrick’s, and Jonas’ too when they became friends. Claudia had taken the place of her brothers, acting as the older sibling. And now there was Harry, who had taken the forever vacant spot he now occupied.

“Come here.” Harry brought Sophie into a hug, and she cried a little more, until there were no more tears remaining. After a couple of minutes, they broke apart, and the three ladies went to the bathroom so that Sophie could wash her face, and of course so that they could talk about what had happened. Jonas turned to Harry.

“Harry, that was some gamble you made, doing that visit.....how is it that you’re not better at poker?”

“Why gamble with money, when you can gamble with peoples’ lives?” That was a line from Primal Fear, which they had watched the night before the Christmas Dance, the week before.

“Thank you Richard Gere.”

“I’m kidding of course, I only gamble with my own life thank you very much. It seemed like a good idea at the time, and I’m glad it worked out for everyone. My goodness, could I have just sounded any more like a politician?” Warrick was all in agreement with that.

“It was pretty chilling if you want to know the truth.” Jonas cleared his throat.

“So how many of the three of us are going to follow them on Friday?” Harry and Warrick just stared at Jonas.

“And why would we want to do that?”

“Warrick, you don’t think that conversion was a little too easy? I mean, the woman disowns her for four and a half years, and then because you two show up on her front doorstep, she all of the sudden misses her daughter?” Harry was still staring, open mouthed.

“You know, I thought I was the suspicious one around here.”

“You’re rubbing off on me.”

“You really think this could be a scam? For what?”

“I read an article in the Chicago Sun-Times the other day about these camps where parents send their gay, or perhaps gay, kids to,

to be straightened out.” He hesitated, hoping one of the others would pick the ball up from there.

“And that has to do with this.....oh wait a minute, now I see where you’re going with this. Come on man, maybe Harry and I were just the impetus the woman needed to break from Mr. Wonderful’s power.”

“That’s so wonderfully Star Wars of you Warrick, and while I agree that your theory is likely going to be correct, I’m not totally convinced.” Reiko had silently walked up behind them during all this, though Sophie and Claudia were still nowhere to be seen.

“You guys really are conspiracy theorists aren’t you?” The three guys jolted in their seats.

“Would you mind not sneaking up on people there dearest?”

“Yes I would mind, and I figured on you paranoid freaks talking about something like this, which is why I came out first, just in case you bunch are as dumb as you look.” For someone who was deliberately not shouting, her words rang quite loudly.

“It’s so nice to be predictable.”

“Look, I agree that there is a slight chance on Mother Weir trying to pull something, but its very slight. Besides, we just agreed that I’ll be going along on the visit, and I will have my wand in my pocket, just in case.” Harry now felt better about the whole thing, as Jonas’ theory was beginning to grow on him.

“We? Whose idea was it?”

“Mine of course Jonas, and she readily agreed. I’ve been her best friend for over five years, she’s going to need someone there for her on the day. If this one goes well, you can go on the next one Harry, as the boyfriend. I’ll give you all a full report after it’s done, so make sure your pensieve is handy there Harry. But until then, not a word about this crap to Sophie, let's not feed into any fears that she might be having." Harry himself turned to Jonas.

"Reiko is on the case, I'm no longer worried." The other two guys laughed.

"Neither am I then."

"My girl will make sure nothing goes awry." Claudia and Sophie came out a minute later, and the topic was closed for the most part, as the six kids hung out for the rest of the day and night. Even Claudia and Jonas, perhaps due to the Christmas spirit, perhaps not, were back as close as ever. Of course it might have had something to do with Jonas telling all of them that Jane Aubrey and her conversational abilities would no longer be on his arm.....or any other part of him.

Christmas Day

5:45 am EDT

Dobby climbed silently out of the trunk, sometimes he avoided the 'pop' just to do something differently, and he had discovered that he liked climbing things. He looked at the clock on the wall for confirmation, and walked over and shook the sleeping form of Warrick.

Only to have nothing happen at first, so he shook him harder, though he resisted temptation to pinch his nostrils shut.

"Warrick, it is time for you to wake up. You have to wake up now." Warrick mumbled something in his sleep, and Dobby just shook his head, not understanding the words. He was more used to Harry, who while the lad talked in his sleep, did so more along the lines of monologues. He climbed up to the top bunk and started to shake Harry, who was a somewhat lighter sleeper than his friend was. He rubbed his eyes and leaned up on his elbow. He had only been asleep for about six hours.

“For the love of Merlin, is it time already?” This was said in ‘Yawnese’, but Dobby got the gist of it.

“Yes Harry, you must wake up Warrick now, he will not stir.” Even in his sleepy state, Harry was tempted to have the little guy just jump on Warrick, but that might not be too well received, and Warrick could probably throw Dobby pretty far. He rolled over and somehow managed to land feet first on the floor. He motioned to Dobby:

“You shake his feet.” Harry took the shoulders, and after a few seconds they woke him up.

“I’m up, I’m up, I heard Dobby the first time for crying out loud. Merry Christmas you two.” The greeting was returned to him, and he got out of bed, yawning so wide that Dobby could have put a foot in his mouth and not touch teeth. The little elf decided to forgo that pleasure though.

“You hit the shower first Harry.”

“No, you get this one, I’ll use the one in the trunk. We don’t have much time before the others get here.” That shower had gotten a lot of use during the island getaway, but Winky had cleaned out all the sand, leaves, and other things. Harry went down and up in about ten minutes, lingering for a little bit under the warm blanket of the hot water. When he returned to Warrick’s bedroom, he found his friend tying his shoes.

“I’m ready, let’s get this show on the road.” Both of them still yawning, they made it downstairs just in time to hear the floo firing, and Jonas doing a perfect John Woo roll out of the fireplace.

“One day I’m going to get you to teach me how to do that.”

“Your birthday is only seven short months away. Merry Christmas dudes.”

“Ha ha Jonas, right back at you.”

“The women not here yet?”

“Not yet, we just got downstairs ourselves. You ready to meet some strangers?”

“Sure thing, you’ve built them all up pretty big though.”

“You’ll love Molly and Arthur, and Bill and Charlie, I know that much. The others, well form your own opinions when you meet them.” He had asked them to refer any Ron issues to him. The floo was firing again, and the rest of the gang came out. Everyone was dressed casually, with no robes or anything, and winter coats. Merry Christmases were exchanged, hug and kisses given and received, and presents were being held off until they got back, them not being certain of the welcome they would be getting. The six of them went upstairs and into the trunk, where Dobby and Winky were waiting for final instructions.

“Give us about five minutes, and then go to The Burrow with the boxes of presents, then the food.”

“Yes Harry, five minutes.” The six of them entered the floo, one by one, and said:

“Let’s make it happen cap’n.” The twins’ floo address. Anyone with a special, Anthony Hook made, trunk could floo to another, but they had to have the personalized address, and Hook had advised them to make it as difficult to guess as possible. The emerged into the twins’ trunk, which was still mostly unfurnished and fixed up, as Fred and George still mostly used it for transportation. Harry tried the top door, but it would not move, indicating that the trunk was in someone’s pocket.

Flashback five minutes to The Burrow:

The house was bustling like crazy, as all the Weasleys were in one place for the first time since Percy's funeral. Joining them for the big meal would be Hermione and her parents, as well as Dean, whose family had Christmas dinner later in the day, as did the families of Angelina and Alicia, who had just gotten to the house. Fleur had just come in with Bill, who had had to put in a half day's work at Gringotts, the small concession the goblins made to their human employees. Likewise Arthur had gone into the office for a brief meeting, having just returned. All presents were to be opened during dinner, much to Ron's consternation and Ginny's irritation, in a rare united front for those two. The twins were waiting by the door for Bill and Charlie, having motioned them over to talk quietly.

"What's going on guys?" The twins grinned at their older brothers.

"We're about to have some unexpected guests in a few minutes." The grins meant that it was no one bad, and Charlie figured it out quickly.

"Harry's coming?"

"Right in one, along with his new Marauders. You remember Mum's letter to Harry? The one that got a Howler returned to her?" News had traveled fast in the Weasley grapevine, and Charlie in particular had been teasing his mother about it for weeks in his letters.

"How could we forget that?" The twins could laugh about it now of course.

"At least you didn't have to help deliver the Howler, however funny it wound up being. Anyhow, Mum's letter invited Harry and anyone else he wanted to bring, over for Christmas. The anyone else's and Harry are due in a minute."

"How are they getting here? Portkey?"

"Not exactly. Come with us." Fred led his brothers out the door, while George turned to the rest of them.

“Fred and I hid our presents outside, where certain nosy Hogwarts kids couldn’t find them. We’ll be back in a minute.” He shut the door behind him, muffling insults from Ron and Ginny, and hurried to catch up with the other three. Fred was explaining the trunk system to Bill and Charlie, who could barely believe it, as they hiked to a point out of sight of the house.

“So that’s how you guys have stayed so close to Harry all this time. It wasn’t just Dobby going back and forth, you guys were going back and forth!”

“You know, I don’t think they heard you in Diagon Alley Bill, why don’t you speak up a little?” Bill just looked exasperated at his brothers.

“When were you going to tell us?”

“Well leaving aside that we’re telling you right now, there wasn’t any need to before. Harry insisted that as few people as possible with access to the old man know about it. Now remember, the official word is that they came by portkey.” They got about half a kilometer away from The Burrow, and Fred did a quick scan to see if they had been followed, which they had not.

George took the trunk out of his pocket and enlarged it. He quickly explained the fingerprint feature, and then opened it up.

“Anyone alive in there?” He heard a corresponding shout.

“It’s about bloody time!” Harry soon scrambled up, followed by his friends. Soon the ten of them were standing in the snow.

“You guys need to get some furniture in there if you’re going to make us wait that long.”

“We had to get out of sight of the house you know, people are going to suspect stuff once they see you.”

“Let them suspect all they want.” Harry then proceeded to introduce everyone.

“Bill, Charlie Weasley, meet Warrick Forrester, Reiko Aylesworth, Claudia Cregg, Jonas Steele, and Sophie Weir.” Hands were shook all around, and Bill grinned at Harry.

“So this is the famous Sophie eh? The girl that sold a thousand copies of Witch Weekly.” Sophie blushed furiously, as Harry rejoined.

“But she only got 42 Howlers though, still eating my dust in that very important category.” That earned him a light swat.

“I notice that you didn’t introduce Fred and George here. Just how well do you lot know each other?”

“We’ve been to the States.....what? Five times maybe? They’ve been over to the shop once. Harry comes over once a week usually.”

“But I’ve never left the shop.” Not that he especially wanted to either, but that was beside the point wasn’t it. Bill certainly didn’t seem to think so.

“Who else knows about this thing?” Harry thought for a moment.

“Well aside from the guy who sold it to us, and Peter Tyson, whose idea it was.....Angelina and Alicia, and my Headmistress suspects something, though she hasn’t yet made an issue of it. Oh yeah, Dobby and Winky know about it of course.” Bill just shook his head, but he was impressed by the whole thing. George cleared his throat, getting everyone’s attention.

“Fred and I got up early this morning and swept the house for anything out of the ordinary, and all we found was a Listening Charm on Ron’s room. I guess Ginny had it placed somehow, I know we didn’t do it.” Bill coughed.

“I did that for her this summer. Ron was being a git about Dean and she wanted to know how much to warn Dean about it.”

“Figures, anyway, the rest of The Burrow is clean, and we checked everywhere. We also ‘overheard’ that the old man is planning to spend the entire day at Hogwarts, so the odds of you running into him are low.” Fred was now openly shivering, as none of the Weasley men were wearing coats.

“C’mon, let’s get inside, it’s bloody cold out here.” The group started off toward The Burrow, which was not yet under Fidelius, though that was being talked about more and more by Arthur and Molly. It had been made Unplottable though, and was not considered a prime target for the Death Eaters at the present time, them still wanting to keep Harry overseas if they could. They walked rather quickly, and were almost in sight of the house when Dobby and Winky popped into the kitchen, arms full of a biggish box each. Everyone had gathered in there, as the meal was only minutes away from being served.

“Merry Christmas Weasleys and friends.” Dobby and Winky were wearing matching little Santa outfits, including the hats, and Ginny and Hermione couldn’t help but start giggling. Even Ron and Dean, who got along very well now perversely enough, were smiling. Dobby snapped his fingers, and the two boxes enlarged to normal size, though the aquarium was still shrunken.

“These are presents from Harry, he wishes you all a Merry Christmas and Happy Holidays.” Winky was nodding in agreement, though she was somewhat shying away from Hermione, who she did not have pleasant memories of, with the knitted hats and everything. Molly came over and smiled at them.

“Thank you both, we have some things for Harry as well. Let me go get them.” She left the room and soon returned with a wizards bag chock full of wrapped presents. Dobby was fidgeting, trying to figure out how to delay, when the door mercifully opened, and Fred led his group inside.

“Look what we found outside in the snow, the prodigal son has returned.” Harry and the gang came inside, shaking snow off as Bill closed the door behind them.

“Merry Christmas everybody.” Molly and Arthur were nonplussed for a second, but recovered quickly.

“Harry dear, it’s so good to see you! I was hoping you would make it sometime during the holiday.” Molly hugged him and he squeezed back. He had to ask:

“I heard you liked my Howler?”

“You little rascal, I can’t believe you sent me a Howler!” She was laughing though, as they disengaged and he shook hands with Arthur.

“How did you folks get here? That’s a long portkey ride.” That was the official story for how they got here, and Fred and George had been asked to make sure that their girlfriends were told that they had technically never met the Americans.

“Yes it was, and I’m not looking forward to making the ride back on a full stomach. Let me introduce everyone. Brits, meet Warrick Forrester, Sophie Weir, Claudia Cregg, Jonas Steele, and Reiko Aylesworth.” The Americans waved nervously at everyone, and Molly and Arthur shook hands with them as well. Dobby and Winky quietly popped off to get the extra food.

“Gang, this is Arthur and Molly, the tall fellow over there is Ron, next to him is Dean Thomas, with his girlfriend Ginny sitting beside him, on her other side is Fleur Delacour, Bill’s girlfriend.....eyes front Jonas. Next to Ron is Hermione, and over there are my former Quidditch teammates Alicia Spinnet and Angelina Johnson, they somehow put with George and Fred, respectively.” Fred cracked a sarcastic grin, as Angelina and Alicia smiled at the Americans, not giving the game away.

“Yeah, somehow.” Only Molly’s presence stopped food being thrown at him.

“And over here we have two people who I’m betting are Hermione’s parents, they do look vaguely familiar.” The two adults were nodding their heads in agreement that they were who Harry had said they were.

Everyone was staring at the newcomers, and all expressions appeared friendly except for Ron’s and Dean’s. Ron had an enigmatic look on his face, while Dean was not eyeing Harry with any friendliness. Harry filed this away, but barreled on in spite of it.

“Molly, your invitation said I could bring guests, and I wanted all my friends to meet each other.” She had recovered now and waved her wand at the table, expanding to the entire length of the room.

“Well of course you’re all welcome, please sit down.”

“I haven’t left you high and dry with the food though, having six unexpected people show up. Dobby and Winky did a little early morning cooking, they’ll be back in a minute with some provisions.” The gang all sat down together, saving a place for Harry, as Ginny, Hermione, and Fleur all made their way over to say hello.

“Oh you didn’t have to do that Harry, I always make way more than necessary.”

“Then you’ll have just as many leftovers as usual. I know I should have provided some advance warning, but I wanted this to be a surprise.”

“And you did not want to risk Albus finding out?”

“I am getting way too predictable, but you make a good point.”

“Albus will not be coming over Harry dear, don’t worry.”

“I didn’t want to let that old fart stopping me from seeing you guys again.” Just then, Dobby and Winky came back with a couple more boxes, this time filled with foil covered pans.

“Here you go mother of Fred and George, Winky and I have prepared a few things for you all to eat.” The twins overheard this, and cracked up at how Dobby addressed their mother. He was the same way with Warrick’s and Reiko’s parents, addressing them as mother or father of ‘insert name here’. Harry had turned to Arthur, as he took his place next to Sophie.

“So how goes the Muggle Office? Have you met Queen Elizabeth yet?” Arthur smiled, he got asked this all the time.

“Not yet, though that’s in the offing. I deal mostly with the Home Secretary and the Prime Minister, when I talk to the muggles. Interesting chaps they are, though they are flummoxed by the whole idea of us.”

“I can imagine. Our friend Drew’s dad deals with his muggle counterparts every now and again, they’re always shaking their heads it seems.”

“He works in their government?”

“Yeah, he’s the Head Auror in Milwaukee. He’s Travis, if there were three other Travis’s. I’d have had Drew come, but they have a big family thing going on.” They were interrupted by Molly putting the first dishes on the table. Harry’s back was turned, but he could smell both ham and chicken, and he knew at least one turkey was coming. Warrick said what all six of them were thinking:

“This is going to be one nice breakfast, it smells wonderful Mrs. Weasley.”

“Thank you Warrick, we are all so glad to get a chance to meet you five.” Reiko, who was on the end of the gang, sitting next to Fleur, turned and pointed at Harry and Jonas.

“Now you two, remember, pace yourselves. You have two more dinners to eat today, don’t go overboard.” The Brits all looked confused, except for the island crew, so she explained.

“At Warrick’s house for Thanksgiving last month, these two ate enough to feed a small town.” Harry and Jonas looked at each other, and then slapped hands.

“Yeah, that was a good day wasn’t it Jonas.” His friend nodded happily.

“How many plates of stuffing did you have Harry?”

“I think the stuffing ran out after my fifth helping, though I would have had more. How many did you have?”

“Just one, I wasn’t going to fight you for it, I might have lost a finger in the melee. I had four plates of the yams and three of the cranberry sauce though.” As they gleefully reeled these facts off, even Ron was looking impressed, though every female at the table looked a bit nauseated.

“You two were practically comatose for half an hour!”

“You say that like it’s a bad thing.”

“It was disgusting.”

“Says you Claudia. Harry and I are athletes, we need to keep our strength up.” Claudia threw up her hands as most everyone laughed. Molly just patted Harry on the shoulder as she put more food on the table.. Dobby and Winky had been in an Italian mood that morning, as Harry had told them to make whatever they felt like. So there was lasagna, cannelloni, and both meat and cheese ravioli.

Everyone dug in, as 21 people started conversing almost simultaneously. Everyone seemed to like the Americans, or at least be polite to them, and Sophie and friends were doing their best to present the best possible impression. This whole thing had been an idea hatched by Harry while on the island. It was like he had told Molly, there was no reason that Dumbledore, or rather the threat of Dumbledore, should deny him seeing his friends and surrogate family. The other five had agreed readily enough, though there had been some debate on whether or not he should just take Sophie. Harry nixed that one after some discussion, he did not want Sophie to be subjected to all of that scrutiny by herself. Harry was on the other end of the gang, seated next to Charlie, and they swapped stories about dragons and America. It turned out that there were dragons in the U.S., their habitat was mostly in the Rocky Mountains.

Sophie and Claudia were talking across the table to Hermione, while Reiko, Fleur, and Bill were engaged in conversation on the other end of the gang. Warrick and Jonas, who faced across from Ron and Dean, weren't talking very much, concentrating on the ham and chicken, and feeling the negative vibe from across the table. Ginny was just listening to everyone, while Hermione's parents, Curtis and Anne, were just trying to take it all in. Anne in particular had her eyes wandering all over The Burrow, though this was not the first time she had been inside. Curtis kept one eye on Ron the entire time, though there was no funny business going on obviously, he just had a hard time trusting any teenage boy these days. He liked the idea of Harry that much better, since he was normally living across an ocean.

Harry was indeed pacing himself as it turned out, and only had three big plates of food.....well of regular food, desserts don't count. Jonas was doing the same, very reluctantly, as Molly's turkey was making him almost drool. After about an hour, Molly stood up.

"Dessert will be after the presents, Ron and Ginny look like they will not wait a minute longer." More solidarity, as both looked a little annoyed/embarrassed at being singled out like that.

"Hey, I could have waited until after dessert!" Hermione poked him hard in the ribs with her elbow, so that was all he got out. Ginny didn't say anything, though a look from Arthur might have quieted her there. He stood up, and led everyone into the now crowded living room.

“So who is first? Harry, since you are the prodigal son, as Fred called you, why don’t you give one out first?” Ron’s worst fears apparently were realized, from the look on his face, which generated another elbow poke. Even Harry looked a little uncomfortable, but he decided to take the ball and run with it.

“Just one for now?” Arthur nodded.

“Dobby, Winky, where are you?”

The elves came from inside the den, they had been exploring The Burrow. They would have a fascinating story to tell the gang about the ghoul in the attic, but that could wait until later.

“Yes Harry?”

“It’s presents time, and you’re first up.” At his signal, Fred and George stood up and walked over. Harry pulled an envelope out of his pocket.

“This is for you.” He handed the envelope over to Dobby, who opened it and found $200 in there. His eyes goggled more than normal as he pulled the notes out.

“That’s your Christmas bonus from WWW, you two have earned it. Dobby, Winky, I can honestly say that I would not have made it these last five months without you, and I thank you for being my staff.” They both ran over and hugged Harry, and then Fred and George. Dobby was so choked up that he couldn’t even muster a protest.

“Now I am ordering you two to spend that money on yourselves, nothing on me. Oh yeah, your pay is now raised to 65 galleons a month from 50. You’ve earned it.” Dobby beamed, as did Winky. They didn’t argue this, Harry had ‘reconditioned’ them well enough to forestall this. Hermione, though not wearing her S.P.E.W button, had a question.

“And days off? Vacations?” She was smiling though. Fred just shook his head.

“Dobby, how many hours a week would you say you work, for WWW and for Harry?” Dobby contemplated that for a moment.

“It is hard to say twin Fred, perhaps 25 hours a week. 30 at most.”

“Each?” Dobby shook head negatively.

“Combined.” All three WWW owners smiled mockingly at Hermione, and George bowed to her, as she looked rather surprised at how little Dobby and Winky actually toiled. S.P.E.W was clearly irrelevant for Dobby and Winky.

“There you have it Hermione, the laziest house elves in the world.” Everyone at the table laughed, and Hermione surprised them all by bowing back. Harry had one last shot to take.

“ Plus Dobby has his poker winnings, don’t forget that. Right Warrick?”

“I’m never going to be allowed to forget that am I?”

“It’ll be with us for awhile, yeah.” He explained how good Dobby was at poker, and how he never lacked for Bertie Bott’s Every Flavor Beans. Harry wasn’t much better at poker than Warrick, though he suspected that Dobby took a dive every once in awhile when it was just the two of them left in the hand. Harry had not forgotten about the UNO cards, he would give them those at the Forrester’s.

Arthur rose, he was next, as he walked over to the tree.

“Ron, Ginny, I regret to say that your mother and I have confiscated your brooms, and sold them.” Ginny immediately cottoned on to what he meant, but Ron looked like he was about ready to overturn the tree. His father forestalled this by his next words, though he drew it out a little, enjoying the reactions.

“We sold them, and used the proceeds to help us buy you both Nimbus 2004’s.” He reached behind the curtains and drew out the brooms, which were wrapped only with a bow on each. The Nimbus 2004 was just one step below the Firebolt series, and Harry’s own Firebolt was old enough at three years old, that Ron and Ginny could match him in broom power now. They hugged their parents, as Ginny good naturedly groused.

“I can’t believe I didn’t look behind there.” She and Ron couldn’t stop smiling though, Hufflepuff was in big trouble in the next Quidditch game.

“It wouldn’t have worked dear, your father only put them there this morning.”

“You really sold our old brooms? How did you get them?”

“A certain friend of yours purloined them for us Ron, I’m sure you can guess who.” It had been Hermione who had filched them.....no pun intended. Ron and Ginny were beyond happy though, and immediately started talking Quidditch as they went back to their spots, their first real non-rogue DA conversation in over a month.

Presents for the twins, Bill, and Charlie soon followed, all from various siblings. Angelina and Alicia were joining the American members of the gang in sitting out the presents, as they would be doing this with their own families, so the two of them sort of evolved into the organizers of it, remembering who went last and who was due for a present, though Harry had sent presents to their homes, after enjoying their company at the island. Eventually it got back to Harry, who had been evaluating wall space around the living room.

“Okay, for my next one, this is for Arthur and Molly. This present is one I liked so much, I got another just for myself.” He went over to one of his boxes, and extracted a smaller box, which he then blew up to normal size. He and Sophie had wrapped all the presents the night before the dance, though Harry had had to re-wrap some after changing his mind.

“Oh, I got some muggle calendars for everyone here, those are in addition to your main presents. Alicia, Angelina, yours will be waiting for you at home, I wasn’t sure if you would be here today. Here you go Molly, Arthur.” He used his wand to drag the box along the floor. Molly gingerly started to open it.

“It’s not going to explode on us is it? Is this a WWW product?” Harry happened to be standing next to the twins and they all looked at each other significantly, which stopped Molly’s unwrapping.

“That’s a chance you’ll just have to take my dear Molly. Threaten me with a Howler will you.” She backed off hesitantly as her grinning husband was game for a laugh, and took over. He quickly shucked off the paper and found the aquarium. Inside was a gift certificate to a pet store in muggle London, good for an initial supply of fish, and some food for them.

“Thank you Harry dear, this is wonderful. Where did you get it?”

“In muggle Milwaukee on our last school trip, it was the first present I saw for any of you English folk. I saw it and I immediately thought of The Burrow. I only decided to get mine on the way out of the mall. Once you get it up and running, I found a spell in one of my books that will keep the water in motion, you only have to re-cast it about once a week or so.” Arthur was trying to lift it.

“Do you have yours filled up yet?”

“Nope, that’s a project for tomorrow or the day after. There’s a pet store right down the road from Warrick’s house.....that’s where I’m staying for the holiday.” Said for everyone’s benefit, though Molly and Arthur had had a long debate/argument/fight over whether to insist that Harry stay with them over the holidays, Dumbledore be damned. Arthur finally prevailed though, reasoning that Harry didn’t need all the intrigue of a Burrow holiday.

The whole present process took well over an hour, and at the halfway point Molly just gave in and served dessert in the living room, as the present giving slowly but surely evolved into a polite free for all. Harry got a box of chocolate frogs from Ron, surprise surprise, and a Weasley sweater of course from Molly, he wouldn't not have been totally surprised if Ron had not gotten him anything at all . At about the ten minute mark, just after the twins got matching leather coats from their girlfriends, Reiko stood up, winking at Harry, who had put his sweater on over his other one.

"We have a present for Fred and George now, one that will make them work even harder than they do now." Everyone was intrigued, and turned to look at the Americans. Reiko took a slip of paper out of her pocket and handed it to George.

"I don't know how many of you are aware of this, but my parents live and teach at Tecumseh, another magical school in the States. Claudia, Sophie, and I stay there during the holidays, and during our second Thanksgiving dinner, as you heard earlier, Harry couldn't eat much, so he struck up a conversation with one of the other kids staying there during the holiday. Harry, if you will."

"His name is Steve Atwood, and he's a Fifth Year student there, or as we call it, a Transition student. Steve is an orphan like myself, and despite his scholarship money, has certain materialistic needs. So after I planted the seed in his head over Thanksgiving, Reiko closed the deal this week. He is prepared to be the exclusive WWW representative at Tecumseh, for a five percent commission, and a modest supply of free pranks." Fred and George had huge grins on their faces now, and surprised everyone by gathering Harry and Reiko into a group hug.

"Harry mate, thanks for leaving the country, it's the best thing that could have happened to the shop." Harry winked at Reiko, and she cuffed them both on the back of the head.

"Anything for my partners. We'll work out something for Salem and Pathfinder as well." Indeed, he had an idea for Salem pop into his head at that very moment, but it could wait.

"We'll get you some more catalogs before you go back to the States." The latest WWW catalog had prices for both the British and American markets listed in it, as with the first batch Harry had had to put up posters with the exchange rates on them. Ginny wandered up and was curious about something.

“Just how hard are you guys working now?” More than a couple of people were interested in the answer to this question, so Fred spoke to the masses.

“Harder than Dobby and Winky, that’s for sure. We probably spend about 25 hours each doing the manufacturing, and probably 20 or so experimenting with new pranks. Lee does most of the stuff upstairs in the shop, since it’s not too busy while the youngsters are at school, so we’re not up there much unless asked for. It’ll only get busier with this new American connection, but I don’t think we’re quite ready to take on any new full-time employees.” Not a few were surprised at how many hours the twins were putting in. Curtis Granger had a follow-up, the twins mixture of humor and business savvy intrigued him:

“How much of your business comes from the States? Are you thinking of opening a shop over there?” George took over.

“We haven’t done the totals for the year yet, but I’d say about 35-40 percent comes from Great Lakes, with the rest coming from Hogwarts, either through the catalog or direct sales at the shop. Harry’s Howler campaign really shot the sales up from there, which of course was the whole idea, right Harry? When Harry went over we figured on some sales, since he had mentioned he would promote us, but we weren’t expecting that level.” He had winked at Harry during the Howler comment, and Harry nodded his head, mock seriously.

“As for a shop, we’re not sure yet. Right now we’re doing so well just from the catalog that we don’t really need a building over there, at least until the youngster here graduates. We’re still checking into it though, after we meet with Jonas’ dad next week we’ll have a better idea of the pros and cons.” Jonas then explained what his father did for a living, as he went over to a couch and chatted about it with the Granger parents and Bill and Fleur.

“So your father works with the Gringotts over there?”

“He works with them Fleur, but he doesn’t work for them. The Wizard currency over there is the same as the muggle one, so he uses a few muggle banks in Chicago for his main money dealing.”

“Did he have to go to muggle university for all that?”

“He did Bill, but only for credibility purposes with the muggles he deals with. He went to The University of Chicago and got his degree in finance. He trained under my grandfather though during the summer, so he took his spot in the family business when he was 22.”

“Are you going to join him?”

“Eventually Mr. Granger, maybe, but not right away. I’ll play professional Quodpot for awhile after I graduate, then I’ll think about muggle university. I’d probably go part-time while I apprentice in the business.” Bill was curious about something.

“How much do professional Quidditch and Quodpot players make over there?”

“Well Quodpot makes more than Quidditch. The Quidditch League is only four teams, and not really that viable an option for most. Our best players come over here, or go to Australia to play it. I’ll likely be the top pick in the draft next year, and I’ll probably make around $400,000 my first year at least, with more to come. Not as much as Warrick’s uncle to be sure, but the muggles have a lot more people to go to their games, and to sponsor them.” He told them about Uncle Antonio.

“Let’s say Harry decides to play his Quidditch in the U.S., he can figure on $100,000 as the top pick in the draft, which he certainly would be, and that’s only because he’s so good.” Bill and Fleur were up on the exchange rates, and figured it to be about 1/3 of what Harry could make as the similar pick in Britain.

As their discussion continued, more presents were opened over the course of the next hour, as it stopped being like a game show. Harry got a counterfeit set of Hogwarts Quidditch robes from Ginny, and a complete paperback set of the Dune novels from Hermione, to go with a handwritten list of Bill's favorite tomb raiding charms, and a nice piece of dragon hide from Charlie. Speaking of Hermione, she loved the books Harry had gotten her, but was a wee bit confused over the poster.

"Where on earth did you get this? Why is he wearing a sports kit?"

"That's the point Hermione, its supposed to be funny. I got it in the same store that I got the aquariums, and a few other things. Malls are very convenient, we should have one in Diagon Alley." Hermione grimaced at hearing that, she could not have agreed less.

"It is funny, don't worry, I get it. I'll put it right above my bed, I'm sure Parvati and Lavender will be horrified by it. Was that part of the plan too?" Harry looked at Sophie and shrugged.

"Not really, though that is the theme of my presents to Ginny and Dean. Speaking of which, why is Dean glaring at me like he's been doing?" Hermione looked over at Dean, who was sitting with Ginny over by the tree.

"I'm not sure really." Harry didn't believe this.

"Uh huh, just like you haven't mentioned Ron taking verbal shots at me in in the last few weeks?" She immediately looked guilty, but Ron was looking like he was about to come over, as he had just unwrapped Harry's present.

"We'll talk later Hermione." She turned slightly and gave him a grateful look so Ron wouldn't see it as he got there. He wasn't smiling or frowning, but at least sounded halfway friendly.

"Thanks for the game Harry, and the candy. I'm guessing you've tried all this stuff?"

“I’ve sampled the candy, yeah, but I’ve not played Stratego yet. A couple of the people in my Wizard Chess club told me about it, so I thought you might like it.” This was news to both Ron and Hermione, Harry’s letters had not mentioned this.

“You? In a Wizard Chess Club?”

“Gee thanks Ron. Just because you stomped me all those times, doesn’t mean I don’t like to play, at least against someone I have a chance of winning against. We meet on Wednesday nights, and I usually get a couple games in. I’m not at your level yet, but I’m not half bad anymore. The first game I played back in September, my chessmen were asking where you were.” Ron now smiled at Harry for the first time, but it was brief.

“Anyway, thanks for the stuff.” He took Hermione’s hand and led her away, and she went somewhat willingly. Harry and Sophie just shrugged at each other.

“That went better than I’d have thought actually.”

“I know what you mean, based on what you’ve been saying, I half expected him to try and attack you.”

“Try is all he would have done, I’d have planted him in a wall.” She looked at him, and saw that he wasn’t kidding.

“Good thing you didn’t give him that plane ticket promise then.”

“I’m right on the money every once in awhile.”

“Everyone else seems to be getting along well enough.” And they were. Warrick and the twins were talking, and Claudia and Reiko were chatting with Molly and Arthur. Harry had been half afraid that his friends would just end up talking amongst themselves, but thankfully that was not to be. Still, this was not an experiment he was eager to repeat. The twins were one thing, but there were clearly lines being drawn. He squeezed her hand.

“How awkward is this for you?”

“It’s not that bad really, it’s only for a few hours. It is only a few hours, right?” She sounded hopeful voicing that last one.

“We’ll be at Warrick’s in time for dinner, don’t worry. I miss this place, but there’s too much tension here. The lot of us aren’t coming back anytime soon, maybe if Bill and Fleur get married, but it would have to be something big like that.”

“You’re not at home here anymore? Are you talking about this house or this country?” She was damn perceptive wasn’t she?”

“Choice C, all of the above. Anyway, let’s go get the Dean and Ginny thing over with. Just don’t leave me alone with the two of them.”

“Of course not, I reassure Dean and Ron that you’re not after either of their women.”

“You know, there are definite advantages to dating someone so smart.” They walked over to Ginny and Dean, who had just opened their Harry presents. Harry had gotten them each matching USA National Team soccer uniforms, plus a couple of MLS posters. Harry wasn’t sure if Ginny was actually a soccer fan, but he was trying to be non-threatening with Dean.....who was turning an about face a bit as Harry and Sophie approached.

“This is cool Harry, thanks.”

“You’re welcome Dean, I was hoping you two would go for it. Warrick plays soccer in a summer league and he helped me pick them out.”

“He plays with muggles?”

“Yeah, he’s the only one at school in the league. He tells them he’s staying with his grandparents at their summer place, I guess they believe him.” Dean was curious about something:

“I wouldn’t think there would be many black people up in that part of the country.”

“There aren’t many he says, but there are couple of other African-American fellows in the league with him, though none on the team he plays for. I snuck out one time and watched him play, he’s not half bad for an American. Hey Dean, I have to hit the bathroom, why don’t you come with me. That way Sophie and Ginny can get to know each other a little.” Dean looked a little confused, but just shrugged and got up, a little bit jolted at how quickly Harry had changed the subject.

“Sure, I have to go anyway. Be back in a minute Ginny.” Ginny and Sophie immediately started chatting right away, and as Harry and Dean walked upstairs, the talk seemed concentrated on what the two boyfriends had gotten them.

Once they were out of sight, Ginny changed the subject.

“Is he doing all right over there?” Sophie did her best to be reassuring.

“He’s doing great Ginny, you guys don’t have to worry about him.”

“We do though, though some of us more than others. I’m sure he’s having a comfortable conversation with Dean right about now.”

“I can only imagine, he’s probably trying to defuse the fire a little bit.”

“Dean just needs someone besides Hermione and me to say it: I’m not after Harry, not that I ever really was.” Sophie’s eyes goggled.

“Really?”

“I mean if he had asked me out, I would have said yes. But if I really was in love with him like everyone said, I’d have made the first move. I did with Michael, my first boyfriend, and I sort of did with Dean too.....well I dropped him enough hints anyway, and he took it from there.” Sophie was finding that she liked Ginny, and decided to share some insight.

“I think a lot of him didn’t want to deal with your family if you and he dated, then broke up.

“I don’t doubt it, and it was one reason I didn’t press the matter. Harry had gone so long without a real family, I didn’t want to risk him losing his surrogate one. Besides, I think most people expected him and Hermione to hook up.”

“He thinks they did too.”

“A lot of people at Hogwarts still do, they figure Harry will come back after graduation, sweep Hermione off her feet, with marriage and all that coming after.”

“Really?”

“Oh yeah, not that many people see Ron and Hermione as being too compatible, and Harry’s escape, if you want to call it that, was done so skillfully that it’s kind of highlighted his intelligence. And if Hermione prizes anything in a guy, it’s intelligence.”

“But everything I’ve heard about Ron.....” She didn’t finish the statement, but Ginny got the gist of it.

“Oh Ron’s no idiot, though he acts that way a lot of times. He’s just lazy that’s all. No, he isn’t as smart as Hermione or even as Harry, but he’s no dummy.” Sophie heard the footsteps coming down the stairs.

“Here they come.”

Flashback a few minutes:

The two boys got upstairs, did their business in turn, and Harry turned to Dean.

“Dean, mate.....can't you see that I'm no threat? I love Ginny, and Hermione for that matter, like sisters, but I wouldn't trade Sophie for either one. Think about it, would I have gone thousands of kilometers across the ocean if I had romantic feelings for either of them?”

“What about that offer you made to them?”

“It still stands, does that mean I have romantic feelings for Ron and Neville too? The offer included them.....it can include you too, if Ginny takes me up on it. The fees for Great Lakes that I'm paying are only 3,000 galleons a year, I could front that for you, no problem. I'm not saying you should do it, I'm not saying you shouldn't. I'm just making it clear to all of you that there is a lifeline available if you want to take it.” This offer was a momentary flash of inspiration, and it seemed to do the trick, though Harry meant it only if Ginny went as well. Dean appeared to come to an understanding with himself, and started nodding.

“Fair enough Harry, I believe you when you say that you don't think of her in 'that' way.” He did not seem too convinced that it went the other way though, and Harry supposed that he couldn't blame him, except for one thing.

“Mate, if she really had those feelings for me, she would have been on the first plane to Milwaukee after I made the offer, Sophie and her parents be damned. It's been almost three months, and she hasn't even mentioned it to me in a letter. She's over me Dean, and we're all better off for it.”

“I see what you mean, I know she rarely talks about it, you know, because it happened right before Percy.”

“How has she been with that?”

“It’s hard for all of us I imagine, I think about Percy a lot too.” He told Dean about how he had finally come to understand the man. He and Dean had never really talked this personally before, and Harry was relieved that it was going so well.

“So are we cool Dean?”

“We’re cool Harry.” They shook hands, and started back down the stairs.

“How much of your suspicion has been fed by our Ron?” Dean chuckled.

“Not as much as you might think, but he’s not your biggest fan at the moment. He was convinced you swooped in here with thousands of galleons of presents in an effort to buy his family off.....and no, he’s the only one who does not consider you to be part of the family.” Harry gave a light smack to the wall next to him.

“That boy is truly tiresome.” They got downstairs and made a beeline for Ginny and Sophie, who were still chatting away happily. The two seemed to have bonded rather well, which was a pleasant happening under the circumstances. Sophie looked them over for wounds.

“No punches thrown?”

“Everything’s fine thank you very much.”

“Of course it is, two mature boys like yourselves.”

“Funny Ginny, let me go take your presents back.” They all laughed, and Harry now felt comfortable enough to leave the three alone for a few minutes. Neville had written him that Luna and her father would be spending the day at the Longbottom's, and he wanted to quick see them before he and the gang went back to America.

"I'm going to call over to Neville's, so I can give him and Luna their presents. Be back in a minute." He squeezed Sophie's shoulder, collected the packages, and went over to the floo to fire it up.

"Longbottom Manor!"

In a few seconds, he saw the face of an older woman, who he guessed to be Neville's grandmother.

"Ah yes, Harry Potter, Neville's told me all about you.....but aren't you supposed to be across the pond right now?"

"Supposed to be, yes ma'am, but right now I'm at the Weasleys for a few hours. I'd like to thank you in person for suggesting Peter Tyson, he was invaluable."

"You're welcome Harry, he has a lot of good things to say about you as well."

"Are Neville and Luna about? I want to give them some presents."

"They're in the study right now, why don't you come over and give them their presents in person. I'll go get Neville and Luna."

"Thank you ma'am, I'll do just that." He hopped in the fireplace, and a few seconds later went tumbling out of the floo in Longbottom Manor, in Brighton. He looked around the area around the fireplace, which was in the entry way, the front door being a few feet away.

Neville and Luna came around the corner, smiling greatly, though Luna's wand was not behind her ear, to Harry's disappointment. Of course she couldn't use it during the holiday, but still. No butterbeer cap necklace either, she must have been wanting to make a good impression on Neville's family.

"Merry Christmas you two."

“Merry Christmas Harry.” They led him back into the study, where there was not another Longbottom to be found.

“You look good Harry, America clearly agrees with you.”

“Thanks Luna, it’s good to see you guys.” He handed over the presents, he had gotten Neville a similar selection of candy that he had Ron, and Luna that dress. She opened hers first, and loved it.

“Oh my Harry, this is the prettiest dress. Thank you.” Harry was going into hysterics on the inside, Sophie was going to love this.

“I wish I could take credit for it, but Sophie picked it out for you, I was just the money man.”

“This is some interesting looking candy Harry, is it Wizard American or muggle American?”

“It’s muggle American, but it’s not your real present. It’s this.” He took out a pair of ornate keys, and put them on the coffee table.

“In Sirius’ will I inherited an island in the Caribbean. There’s just a somewhat primitive cabin there, and nothing and no one else. These two keys are both round-trip portkeys for that island. Go whenever you want, just let the twins know ahead of time and they’ll arrange for Dobby or Winky to go there and show you the ropes on everything, and get you set up with food and other things.” Neville and Luna both just sat there for a moment, taking it all in.

“Wow, thank you Harry.”

“Yes Harry, this is very nice of you, thank you.”

“I only ask one thing in return, and I’ll give you two guesses on what it is, but you will only need one.”

“Mum’s the word, don’t worry about that Harry.”

“It’s more than that Neville, I’m talking about not telling Hermione, Ginny, or Ron either. I’m not doing this for any of them, and they can’t know about it.” Eyebrows raised, and Neville blurted out:

“Really? Why wouldn’t you? Not that I’m complaining mind you, this is a wonderful gift.”

“Well you know why with Ron, I just don’t want to do anything this nice for him, the way he’s been lately, and its not much better over there today I don’t mind telling you. The portkeys weren’t exactly cheap for me to get, and I don’t want to spend that kind of cash on him. Besides, its not totally out of the question that he might get pissed about some imagined slight and go blabbing to the old man to get me back. Giving one to Hermione means giving one to Ron. And Ginny, well giving one to Ginny means doing it for Dean, and while he and I just had a nice heart to heart a few minutes ago, I’m still not willing to let him in on that much, and that includes the island. You two are the only ones I trust completely, in couple form, so you’ll be the only ones there who know about the island.” Aside from Remus, he thought belatedly.

“Who else knows about the island away from Hogwarts?”

“Remus and Tonks know about it, but haven’t been there, they were at the will reading when I found out about it. My gang at Great Lakes and I have been there, last week, along with the twins and their girlfriends. I assume Dumbledore knows about its existence, but I’ve already bet my life that he doesn’t know where it is.”

“Well what I said earlier stands, this won’t go beyond Luna and I at Hogwarts, you can count on that.”

“I knew I could Neville. Look, I’d better get back to The Burrow, I brought my American friends over, and I don’t dare leave them there by themselves any longer than necessary. What are you guys doing Sunday? We can meet at the shop if you want, catch up on things better.” Neville looked at Luna, who was nodding happily.

“How about 4:00 pm instead, I’ll be coming from the States and I’ve already gotten up too early once this week.”

“Portkey?”

“Something like that, I’ll tell you more about it on Sunday. Oh yeah, just for the record, I got you some WWW stuff for Christmas Neville.” The other boy laughed, and nodded his head.

“We’ll be there Sunday, and I have some leftover shop stuff that I can say is from you.” They got up, and Neville led Harry back to the fireplace. Before he left though, Harry had one question:

“Tell me something Neville, you’re an objective observer here: Has Ron always been like this? Did I just not see it for all that time? Or have the last few months been that much of a burden on him?” Neville scratched his head for a moment, and looked a bit pensive.

“That’s not an easy question to answer Harry, since it’s kind of both, and no, I don’t think you saw it. You pegged it at the trial though, you were really loyal to Ron over those five years, too loyal maybe if you want to know the truth. It’s like you thought you wouldn’t have any friends if you split with him and Hermione, when in fact you might have had more. Ron’s always been more like Draco than he would care to admit, he just doesn’t hate muggleborns is all, there is not a whole lot of difference otherwise if you examine it the right way. I know I would like to have been better friends with you before last year, but there was only so much of Ron I was willing to put up with, I’m sure a lot of other people saw it the same way. I mean Hermione is no picnic either if you want the truth, but everyone knows that her heart is in the right place.”

“And the jealousy?”

“Well all three of us know that that’s just been bubbling beneath the surface for years. It erupted a little bit during the Tri-Wizard, but Hermione managed to stamp it down eventually. And now it erupted again, with you not telling him you were leaving, and seeing how Bill, Fred, and George have taken you in and defended you to the hilt. He probably thinks you're trying to steal his brothers, if not his entire family, and while I know you're not trying to, you can kind of see his view.....again, if you look at it just right. Mrs. Weasley wouldn't have laughed off a Howler from Ron, I know that much." Harry surprised Neville by chuckling.

"No she wouldn't have. I didn't even think about Ron when I sent it, I was just in a mood. Besides, I had the twins and Dobby there to soothe things. I don't know what to do here Neville, Luna, I really don't."

"Don't do anything Harry, let him make the moves. He'll either be conciliatory, or a wanker. If he's the first, then everything is golden. If the second? Well then your arse is covered with everyone else. There's no in between with Ron."

"No there isn't. Thanks Neville, you've given me a lot to think about, and I appreciate it."

"That's not all I've given you, some interesting plant seeds are on their way to you by owl. I wasn't sure if you were going to come back to the UK or not during the holiday, so I sent them to Great Lakes. They're from both of us, and I'm pretty sure you'll find them useful."

"Please tell me they don't need sunlight, I don't have windows in my dorm room."

"I remember you mentioning that in a letter, and no they don't, except for one, and that will grow in any climate. So either put it on your island, or the roof of school with a Disillusionment Charm."

"I can't wait to try them. Thanks in advance. Now I'd better get going." He shook Neville's hand and hugged Luna.

"Merry Christmas, see you Sunday. The Burrow!" He flooed away, and tumbled back out into The Burrow, almost ramming into Hermione, who had apparently been waiting for him.

“How are Neville and Luna?” He swept the soot from his sweater and jeans.

“They’re fine, it was good to see them. Obviously I didn’t stay long enough to get a full brief. So what’s wrong?”

“What do you mean?” That was not a terribly convincing answer.

“Why were you waiting by the floo, or is there someone else coming?” Harry had a realization, and went for his wand. Hermione was ready for this, and put both hand on his right arm as he pulled it out.

“No, he’s not coming Harry, at least as far as I know.” Harry’s wand, which was half aimed at the fireplace already, was reluctantly put back in his pocket. Hermione had been unwittingly shielding view of this from the others, so no one noticed.

“Then I repeat, what’s wrong Hermione?”

“Nothing’s wrong Harry, I just hoped we might have a chance to talk.”

“Sure, let me go get Sophie or Reiko.”

“Alone Harry, I would rather us talk alone.” Harry caught his girlfriend’s eye, and she started to walk over.

“I’m sorry Hermione, but that’s not happening, not today. If Ron gets the idea that something’s going on here, he’ll go crazy.”

“I thought you weren’t too concerned about that?” She said this as Sophie came up, linking her fingers with Harry’s. It was a good point, but.....

“Any other day but today and I wouldn’t be. But I won’t risk a scene for Molly’s sake. If Ron comes after me I’ll wind up hurting him, and while he would deserve it, Molly wouldn’t.”

“You’d use magic on him?”

“What other choice would I have? In case you haven’t noticed Hermione, I’m not the biggest fellow around, ten years of half starvation will do that to you. I wouldn’t stand a chance against Ron in a muggle fight, just as I’d butcher him in a magical one.” Hermione had no doubt about that last part, though Ron was no slouch. She had been ready for Harry’s quick draw, but still couldn’t stop it. And that was just the draw, she knew that if Harry threw down on Ron, her boyfriend would be in St. Mungo’s before his hand ever touched his pocket. Indeed, Ron was pointedly looking at the three of them even now.

“Yes, you would.”

“For the last bloody time, what’s wrong Hermione?”

“I told Ron I was reconsidering your Great Lakes offer.” Oh brother, thought both Harry and Sophie. The three of them walked into the kitchen, ostensibly to get some more dessert, but also where they could be alone. No one followed them, though a few people spotted them leaving.

“When was this?”

“A month ago, after we had a fight.” Harry hadn’t heard a Ron v. Hermione fight in months, though he occasionally was nostalgic for them. Now was not one of those times however.

“Yet you haven’t mentioned this to me before now.”

“I stopped reconsidering, and decided not to go.” Harry was becoming mildly irritated at having to drag this out of her, but decided to play her game for the time being.

“What was the fight about?”

“This, the holidays. Well this and Ginny. He said I was spending too much time around her, you know, since they don’t get along anymore.”

“He figured on me showing did he.” Not asked, but stated.

“He assumed it, yes, though he was thinking sometime later on in the holiday break, you caught him by surprise today. I know what you must be thinking Harry, and please don’t. He’s under a lot of strain, what with school, Quidditch, what to do after Hogwarts. The first two are going really for him, ironically. He’s never done better in class, he’s actually buttoning down and studying without me telling him to. And he never played better as Keeper than in the last game.”

“Well he doesn’t have me as an excuse to goof off any longer with studying.”

“Did you two need an excuse?”

“Not really, but let’s notice that my OWL’s were pretty good, and I’m doing quite well now at Great Lakes without him.”

“Yes, and don’t think that that hasn’t occurred to him.” Harry rolled his eyes.

“At least something’s going on up there, its not just spider webs. Anyway, the last one is the problem I’m guessing. What to do after Hogwarts.”

“Yes it is. He knows he’s not good enough yet for professional Quidditch, and the twins told him that he probably wouldn’t be able to work full time at the shop.” Harry raised his hands in protest.

“Now hang on there, I had nothing to do with that. The twins did it, they have full authority in the shop. Besides, I hadn’t even decamped when they had that chat with him.”

“I know that, and even Ron does to a point. But he’s worried Harry, and he sees you succeeding at everything so effortlessly.....yes, I know it isn’t really effortlessly, but that’s how he sees it.” Harry felt a hair stand up on his neck, so he whipped up his hand at the midpoint of the doorway.

“Repulsar.”

There was a gasp, as his pulse spell hit someone in the chest. That someone turned out to be a wheezing, no pun intended, Ginny. She came into the room, slightly doubled over, and it was best that she couldn’t do magic at the moment, or else Sophie would get to see her first Bat Bogey Hex.

“What the hell did you do that for?”

“Eavesdropping is not nice Ginny.”

“You’re talking about my git of a brother, I can listen if I want to....without getting a shot to the stomach thank you very much. Besides, it’s my house in case you’ve forgotten.” Hermione was just staring at Harry during the repartee.

“You can fight wandlessly? How did you even know she was there?”

“Just Repulsar for the offensive spells. I can’t do Reducto or Abrumpere yet, all I get is a little light, and no damage, but my shields are getting a lot better wandlessly. Ray says it’s all about focus, and that we’ll get there eventually.”

“Ray?”

“Professor Ray Kinsella, he tells us to call him Ray unless another teacher is present. As for how I knew she was there? I don’t know, I just sensed it somehow.” Harry had listed all his professors in his first letter, the one sent right after his Sorting, so the others got it after he said the full name. He turned to Sophie.

“Are the others okay out there?”

“Sure, Mr. and Mrs. Weasley, and Hermione’s parents are all looking after them.” Harry proceeded to throw a Silencing Charm at the door, as well as an Alarm Charm.

“Okay, first things first. Hermione, I did not make that offer so that you could throw it in Ron’s face during a fight, or any other time. I don’t blame him as much for being so pissy now.” Hermione immediately had a guilty look come over her face.

“I know, and I felt badly about it then, and I still do. That’s partly why I decided not to come, assuming the offer is still good.”

“Well it is up to a point, but only if done for the right reasons, I figured you of all people would understand that. Ginny, you’re aware that your mother has forbidden it?”

“So she and Dad said, she told me before she sent you that one letter.”

“Are you going to make an issue of it?”

“No I won’t. I was, and still am interested in it, but I won’t be a runaway. I won’t upset Mom that much.”

“Well as she pointed out in her letter, you don’t have a legal leg to stand on if she’s still opposed. Even Murray told me the day I met her that she took me because I wasn’t being pursued by a parent or guardian.” Ginny leaned back and looked at the ceiling.

“It just sounds so calm there, so like what a school should be. You know, someplace where kids are there to learn, and there’s no enemy within or without. No Voldemort, no Malfoy. You’ve built it up pretty well in your letters, you're quite the salesman, no wonder the twins sing your praises like they do."

"She's right Harry, that's what I was thinking too, when I was tempted. That's why you left isn't it?" Harry was so incredibly tired of having to explain himself on this score, over and over again to the same people.

"I didn't leave Hermione, I escaped. I mean how many more times can I stare death in the face before it grabs me? I'm fast Hermione, but I'm not that fast. They have a game in the muggle world, it's called Russian Roulette. You take a muggle gun, put one bullet in it, and spin the barrel. Then you put it to your head and pull the trigger. You have a one in six shot of blowing your brains out."

"I've heard of Russian Roulette. I don't know if you should call it a game Harry."

"What I'm saying Hermione, is that I've already clicked four barrels, and thank God they've all been empty so far. But the thing is: I was not the one pulling the trigger, Dumbledore was, and I wasn't exactly willing to be in the game. You five can be blasé about the guy to a point, since it's not your lives being risked. For me though? I'll be damaged by what he did for the rest of my life." Harry said this very matter-of-factly, as if it was something he had long just accepted as the cost of doing business.

"It's not like we love him Harry, or even like him anymore. We don't like what Hogwarts has become anymore than you did."

"Yet you're staying. I don't blame you of course, you both have families here that love you."

"So do you Harry, we're your family." Harry sighed mentally, it wasn't the same thing.

"True, but it wasn't enough. I had Dumbledore hanging over my head, and you don't." Ginny had now lost her grasp on the conversation.

“What does this have to do with Ron? I thought that’s what we were talking about?”

“It was, my thoughts kind of got away from me there. I was just saying that I didn’t leave Hogwarts because it’s become a shoddy school, though in fact it has been. I left because my life was in danger there on a daily basis. And look, I’m done with Ron, at least for the time being. I’m tired of his jealous act, and I’m tired of his resenting me for being rich, or being famous. Now I never wanted to be famous, and I mean NEVER. Rich I can handle, except for the small little details of losing my parents and Sirius to get it. Ron seems to forget that, he doesn’t seem to acknowledge that I sacrificed so much. He’s seeing the forest but not the trees.”

“You mean done as in friends too? I know you two aren’t exactly best mates right now, but c’mon.”

“No, we’re still friends, in a way. But no more contact, I’m not going to try anymore. The next letter that goes between us will be generated by him, not me. I have you two, and Neville and Luna, back there at that school to worry about, and that’s it.” Sophie nudged him and mouthed the word ‘Remus’.

“And Remus, I worry about him too. Ron can handle himself from now on as far as I’m concerned.” Just then the Alarm Charm chirped, Dean stuck his head through the doorway, and saw the four of them sitting around the table, which had been shrunk back down to normal size.

“Everything all right in here?” Ginny smiled, and leaned across the table and mussed up Harry’s hair, and then moved over to Dean, wrapping her arm around his waist.

“Everything’s fine Dean, we were just hashing some stuff out.” They left the room, again making the charm chirp. Hermione stared pointedly at Harry.

“Is everything fine Harry?”

“As far as I’m concerned it is Hermione. I care about you all a lot, and you especially will always be my sister.” She reached across and patted his hand.

“You’ll always be my little brother.” The three of them laughed, as the dates did match up, they could have been Irish twins. Harry looked at Sophie and patted his pocket, and she beat him to the punch. She reached into the pocket and pulled out a handwritten slip of paper, and slid it over to Hermione.

“What’s this?”

“Read it Hermione, that’s what happens when someone slips you a piece of paper.” Hermione gave him that long familiar look, and it brought a smile to his face.

“Sophie, could you do me a favor?”

“Sure Hermione, what is it?”

“Please beat the crap out of Harry, I imagine you’re the one person in the world he would let get away with it.” Sophie dissolved into laughter, but spared Harry a whupping just then. Hermione opened the paper, and it read as follows:

This piece of paper entitles Hermione Granger to one round-trip muggle plane ticket, from Heathrow Airport to the destination of her choice. The seat will be in first class, and can be redeemed anytime between December 25, 1996 and December 25, 2026. This coupon is non-transferable, and must be presented to Harry Potter or his heirs in order to be redeemed.

Harry Potter

“Is this for real?” It would sure be a cruel joke, both Harry and Sophie thought, seeds being planted for the future.

“Sure it is, I worked hard at making it sound so formal.”

“It is at that.....thank you, this is very sweet of you. One question though, why the 30 year time limit?”

“Whimsy.” Hermione had not had a whole lot of access to Harry’s escaped sense of humor, but she was rapidly getting used to it, and she was smiling.

“I’m sure I’ll use it before then.” Sophie had a suggestion.

“Pick the most expensive destination to go to, make him cough up big.”

“I’ll make it Australia or New Zealand then, during the busy season. I take it that I’m not to tell Ron about it?” One would think so from the conversation thus far, but Harry was shaking his head.

“That’s your decision Hermione, the present is yours, and you can tell whomever you like about it. Now I personally wouldn’t tell him, but that’s not my call to make, it’s yours.”

“Well I won’t be using it before graduation probably, so there’s plenty of time.....and I’m sure I’ll graduate in the next 30 years.” Left unsaid was the Ron issue, but Harry decided not to press her, she could make her own decisions.

“Oh yeah, I didn’t see before, what did Ron get you?”

“You didn’t see it, because he gave it to me a couple of months ago. I needed new dress robes for the Yule Ball, and he bought them for me. It took a decent amount of his summer money, but it was a sweet gift. I have some pictures of the whole thing at home, I’ll be sure to send you some copies.” So Ron didn’t botch the present after all, Harry thought, interesting.

Another chirp, as the twins came running through the door, followed by Warrick and Jonas.

“C’mon people, it’s snowball fight time. Mom won’t let us get at Quidditch game going, so we have to do this. Let’s go let’s go.” Harry leaped up, a Weasley snowball fight was always one of the highlights of Christmas for him, though he had been promised one at Warrick’s later on in the day.

“I’m game, let’s go.” More people were coming in and getting their coats and gloves on. Angelina and Alicia had flooded home by now, so there were 19 left, though Molly wouldn’t be playing, nor would Curtis and Anne. The three of them still wanted to watch though, and were going outside with the others.

“Come summer, we’re definitely getting a Quidditch game up though.” Harry wasn’t so sure about that, he was wondering if he would even be willing to come back for that long. This was actually only his third visit here, for all the buildup and supposed hominess of the place for him. The first being before second year and the whole Chamber of Secrets fiasco, and the second was last Christmas, when his visions started becoming most horrifying. Still, neither of those times had he ever felt as alien as he did now. It gave him a moment of pause, and only when Sophie and Reiko yanked him outside, did he come out of it. He looked at his watch, they had about two hours to go before dinner started in Indianapolis. He whispered to the two of them.

“After this snowball fight is over, we’re out of here okay?” Sophie and Reiko nodded, they had been waiting for Harry’s cue as to when to leave.

They all trooped outside to an open area where the family had always flown and played Quidditch, and the twins took charge. Fred got everyone’s attention.

“Now by my count we have 16 of us, so that’s eight on eight. The Americans and Harry will join George and I. On the other side will be Bill, Charlie, Ron, Ginny, Hermione, Fleur, Dean, and our senior citizen, Dad.” He got a mouthful of snow for that one.

“That’s the spirit Dad. We even divided the magic up equally too, four on our side against five on the other. Now Mum, give us about five minutes to get into places and some snowballs ready, then give us the go.” They split up into their sides, Ron and Dean, neither of whom could use magic, were both loudly speculating on which American could do magic. The twin side disappeared into the trees, as both Fred and George put up a Silencing Charm bubble around them. Harry looked them over, now fully into it.

“So how are we going to cheat?” Fred grinned evilly, and took out a small, shrunk, box from his pocket. He blew it up to proper size: It was a box of spell grenades. He handed them out to everyone, even the non-wanders.

“Just pack the snow around them, and then Harry, George, Reiko and I will load them up. These are a new model we’ve been testing, their set to explode on contact, not on a timer. Fire them at Bill and Charlie first, they’re the most unrelenting when it comes to these things. Trust me, George and I know from bitter experience.”

“Once those two are on the run.....” Harry didn’t finish the statement before at least three people broke in.

“Go after Ron!” Harry had his own evil smile.

“Let the record reflect that those words did not come out of my mouth.” The spell grenades were packed, and Harry and George did a duplicating spell on the regular snowballs, giving them a large supply. Harry walked over to Reiko.

“You remember the second mass duel? When we used the paper?”

“Sure, I guess we’re using snow this time?”

“I’m fresh out of paper.” Reiko was nodding now, she slipped over the edge of the tree line and looked over the opposition. She saw them gathering their own arsenal, and reported back.

“You and I will stand in front and blind them, while the other five nail them with the special snowballs. Once at least two of the wand users are down, then you and I cease the wall and go after Ron.” Fred had come up behind them.

“I couldn’t have said it better myself Reiko, clearly a kindred spirit you are. Leave Dad alone with the snowballs when you start firing though, he deserves a Christmas present.” Everyone was in agreement on that one.

Molly then called out:

“One minute!” Harry looked over at the twins.

“Please tell me we’re going to cheat by jumping the gun.” Fred and George looked at the others, everyone seemed game. The twins were moving the piles of snowballs closer to the treeline.

“Harry, Reiko, you may commence the artillery barrage.”

Harry and Reiko walked out of the woods, wands in their right hands, their left hands outstretched, palms out. They were 35 meters away from their prey.

FLABRA ORUM! FLABRA ORUM!

Aimed directly at the snow in front of the opposing side, who were bunched pretty well together. Bill and Charlie, unbelievably, were the ones on the ends, with Fleur, Arthur, Dean, Ron, and Hermione in the middle of the brothers, in that order. Reiko and Harry had jumped the gun by 30 seconds as the powerful wind spells threw a wash of snow right in the other side’s faces, shocking the living crap out of them, and blinding them to what would be coming next.

Warrick, Jonas, and Sophie stepped out from the woods and started throwing ‘enhanced’ snowballs at Charlie and Bill, while Fred and George were alternately duplicating snowballs, and firing snowballs themselves, also at their older brothers.

This had the effect of causing Bill and Charlie to bunch into the middle.....not that they had much time to do that, as they were each hit by multiple 'enhanced' snowballs that contained, among other things, Petrificus Totalus, Rictusempra, and the Jelly Legs jinx. Both of them went down after a few seconds, and Hermione, Fleur, and Arthur were too busy dodging other salvos to wake them up.....but the problem was, Harry and Reiko had pretty much blinded them, and it was hard to dodge snowballs when you had ¼ of a second's notice of their arrival. The Bill group had not really had a coherent plan at the start, thinking this was all just fun and games, and not imagining that the twins and company would take it so seriously. They barely got off two snowballs each among the eight of them.

After about 30 seconds though, they weren't thinking about much of anything, besides that only Ron and Hermione were left standing.....yes, Arthur had gotten in the way of some loaded snowballs. The wind barrage was halted, and everyone took a few seconds to see who was standing and who was down. Most of the special snowballs had been used, so Hermione was kept occupied by regular ones from the Americans, who weren't whipping them at her very hard or fast. Meanwhile Harry, Fred, and George advanced on Ron, with ill intent in their looks as they closed the distance, stopping every few seconds to grab more snow to throw at him. Ron was being himself, he was giving back as much as he could, that is until he took three right in the face in quick succession. He was a big guy though, and didn't go down immediately, though the aims of all three of his attackers were quite true.

While all of this was going on, Molly, Curtis, and Anne were watching with vast amusement. They saw how everyone was trying to take it easy on Hermione, and were chuckling at the cheating. However, Molly saw Ron being targeted by the three people least likely to take mercy on him, and decided to end this right now before someone got more than hurt feelings. She walked out into the middle of the playing area.

“All right, the game is over now, put down your snowballs.....” She had unfortunately stepped in Ron's line of fire, as the enraged redhead had not been looking too closely, and nailed her in the back of the head. She rounded on her youngest son.

“Ronald Weasley! Look where you are throwing!” Fred, George, and Harry had stopped their assault, wanting no part of even coming close to Molly with a snowball, or any other weapon.

That was not quite the right thing to say to Ron however, who was, correctly, feeling a little bit persecuted, again. He shot back.

“Then get out of my way! Stop shielding them!” Even Hermione, who had picked herself up and was waking up the rest of her team, was appalled.

“Oh shut up Ron, honestly. Can’t you see she was shielding YOU?”

Believe it or not, and no one really could at the time, but Ron shut up. That didn’t mean that he stopped moving though. He picked up another snowball and prepared to throw it right at Harry, but was thwarted by his newly awoken father, who grabbed his arm, stopping the throw.

“Enough Ron, don’t pick a fight you can’t win.” This was said kindly, even though Arthur hadn’t seen Ron take three snowballs in the chops a minute earlier. His son chose not to listen though, and stalked toward Harry and the twins. The Americans were a few strides behind their friends, and decided just to let it play out. Fred and George, knowing what Ron likely intended, pulled out their wands, and sort of aimed them in his direction, while Harry had his loosely in his hand. This slowed Ron down in his marching, but he didn’t quite stop.

“Don’t even think about it little brother. You got pasted, so take it like a man.”

“You cheated! Using magic, and those stupid spell balls!”

“Warfare is mostly cheating Ron, if you want fair play, go watch the muggle Olympics.” Harry turned to George after he said this.

“Actually George, I’m told that they cheat there too, strange potions and things like that..” His partner didn’t miss a beat.

“Well there you have it, fair play doesn’t exist in any kind of battle. So shut your pie hole and walk back to you girlfriend, while you still have one.” Ron was only five meters away by this point, and he seemed to cover the last bit of ground in a hurry as he launched himself at his brother. He managed a half decent American football tackle on him, taking him to the ground.

This was quite a big mistake in retrospect, as that action turned his back to Fred and Harry, who did not take kindly to Ron’s tackling of their twin/partner/mate. They swung their wands over to him as Hermione and Molly screamed at them to stop, afraid of what they might do.

Moblicorpus! Moblicorpus!

This earned mental sighs of relief from everyone else, aside from the Granger parents, as they were petrified that Ron was going to be hexed to London and back. Harry and Fred levitated Ron about 10 feet in the air, upside down. Since that’s all they appeared to be doing, no other wand user looked to interfere, though Arthur and Molly both looked uncomfortable.

“I believe you owe me an apology Ron.”

Ron’s reply can safely be called obscene, and his mother let him hear it.

“If I ever hear you use words like that again Ronald Weasley, every waking moment of next summer for you will be getting to know our gnomes!” There was no laughing by anyone though, all of the onlookers feeling that Ron was getting punished enough without any taunting being involved.

“You’re not coming down until you apologize for your temper little Ronniekins, so just take your medicine, swallow it, and pretend to like it. Harry and I can do this all day if we have to.”

“The truth is Ron, the gang and I have be going soon, so while you wouldn’t be up there all day.....” He trailed off, leaving his intent quite clear.

“All right, all right, I’m sorry for tackling you George! Is that what you want?” The twins and Harry looked at each other. Fred shot back.

“That rather lacked sincerity, oh immature one. Once more, with feeling.” Harry and Fred started a slow twirling of Ron, leading him toward the others as they walked that way.

“I’m sorry!” Ron was starting to panic now.

“Oh fine, I suppose that’s good enough. Fred, Harry, let the little brat down.” After a few seconds more twirling, they move him back to feet toward the ground, then took the spell off. He tumbled into the snow, in a heap. He was physically unhurt though, much to everyone’s relief. He managed to get up after a minute or so, though he was a bit dizzy. He looked around and saw mostly sympathetic faces around him, even Ginny looked more sorry for him than anything. But he easily noted that nobody was yelling at Harry and the twins.....who decided to add insult to insult, as George walked up to him.

“You ever touch me in anger again Ron, and we’ll do more than spin you around a few times.” He walked back in the direction of the house, and Fred followed him, with one last riposte:

“Oh by the way, you’re fired!” The biggest blow of all, as Ron’s summer pocket money would be shrunk more than Fred’s trunk in his pocket. Ginny was the main conduit for WWW sales at Hogwarts anyway, as she distributed the catalogs and answered any questions, the twins using regular owl post for the deliveries and payment. For this service, one not offered to Ron, she was paid 20 galleons a month with no commission. Likewise Fred and George contributed a similar amount towards Dobby’s salary, as Winky still refused to take any money except for art supplies. Ron had not protested the Ginny arrangement, as he hadn’t known about it, having been told she was doing it for some free pranks.

Ron stood there in snow, boiling with humiliation, as Hermione came up to him. She was no longer angry at him, and she gave a dark look to Harry.

“Come along Ron, let’s have some more pumpkin pie.” She took his hand, and he allowed himself to be led off. Harry walked back to his gang, who now fully understood the tensions within the Weasley family. He checked his watch, still set to Indiana time, it was now 9:30 am EST.

“Let’s get going, our time here is over.” Warrick stopped him for a moment.

“Why did he get so mad? Is he such a wuss that he can’t take a few snowballs?”

“He thinks we deliberately went after him.” Jonas stated the obvious for all of them:

“We did, that’s what people do in a snowball fight.”

“And Ron, in his infinite maturity, doesn’t think anyone should ever pick on him or criticize him for anything.” Arthur had come up behind Harry, though not unawares, as Harry had seen his shadow approaching.

“That’s all very true Harry, but he has his good points as well.” Harry didn’t turn around immediately.

“Yet somehow I’m struggling to remember them lately Arthur.”

“Teenagers are always a handful, and they always have rebellious stages.” He spoke from experience, and Harry acknowledged this, and beat his friend to the point.

“Yes, I’m aware that I’m not the easiest person to deal with at times.” Arthur smiled kindly.

“No you aren’t, and neither is Hermione for that matter, or Ginny, or Ron.” Harry was getting a little irritated here, though the Americans were marveling at how calm he was looking.

“It was a snowball fight Arthur, nothing more, nothing less. You got knocked on your butt almost immediately, yet I don’t hear you whining.” The older man shrugged.

“You lot did take it quite seriously.” Harry made a face.

“Oh serious schmere-ious, we were totally having fun. Just because we had a strategy doesn’t mean we weren’t enjoying ourselves.”

“The twins had those spell balls on them I take it? You didn’t send Dobby or Winky to go get them?”

“Dobby and Winky are at Warrick’s house right now, helping get dinner going, and they have been for the last hour.” This was true, however convenient it was for Harry’s side of the story. Arthur surprised all six of them, plus Ginny and Dean who had come up behind them, by chuckling.

“Fred and George, however much we love them, have always had a rivalry with the rest of the family. It’s mostly our fault, since it has been hard to take them seriously over the years, but it does flare up from time to time.” This had not gone unnoticed by Fred and George, and they had talked about it with Harry.

“Perhaps you lot should have believed in them maybe?” Arthur bridled at that.

“No one could have predicted the joke shop’s success Harry, not even the three of you. You funded them on a whim, whilst in a fit of depression. They did not want to take direction from anyone, and saw their joke shop as a way around that.”

“The end justifies the means Arthur. They’re beyond successful, and will only get more so.”

“With you helping them.”

“Why wouldn’t I? They’re two of my best mates, certainly the best mates I have left here in Britain.” Fortunately Hermione was still in the house, though Ginny’s and Dean’s eyebrows did go up a little.

“Would you have done the same for Ron? Given him 1000 galleons to fund a dream of his?”

“In a bloody heartbeat, hell I would do so now if he had a decent idea floating in that oversize head of his.” Arthur looked as though he believed him, but there was one problem.

“He doesn’t think so.” Harry scoffed, and the others saw his temper rising back up.

“He doesn’t think period. He had no problem with me giving them that money then.....oh that’s right, he wasn’t able to tell me what he thought then, because you and Molly wouldn’t let him write me and tell me.” Arthur was getting a little frustrated here too, but didn’t show it.

“That’s uncalled for Harry, no one besides the twins have backed you more with Albus than Molly and I have.” Harry kept his voice calm.....well, calm-ish.

“Only since the horse was stolen Arthur, only since then did you guard the barn. This is turning into a theme when I talk to you older folk over here, I had this same talk with Remus and Tonks. You all say that you fought Dumbledore for me, but you only acted after I did, after I showed you it was possible.”

“You were incredibly loyal to the man as well Harry.”

“I was a screwed up kid Arthur, after 10 years with the Dursleys I was loyal to anyone who was halfway nice to me!” This was the first time he had ever raised his voice to Arthur or Molly as an individual. His screaming at them on Snape Night was more a group thing. Arthur was, correspondingly, quiet in his reply.

“I know Harry.” It had the proper effect, and Harry had the grace to look ashamed.

“I’m sorry Arthur, I shouldn’t have yelled at you.”

“It’s okay Harry, just be easy with Ron for the time being. He’s still trying to find himself, and all this that’s going on in our world isn’t helping him.”

“Look Arthur, I’m leaving in a few minutes, and the earliest I’ll be back on this side of the pond will be summer, if even then. This trip over here was not the healing balm it was supposed to be. I’ve tried with him Arthur, I really have over these last few months, but as soon as the portkey finishes I’m going to clear my mind of Ron and his petty jealousies. The next move is his.” Arthur came up to him, and said quietly enough so that Ginny and Dean couldn’t hear.

“I’m asking you Harry, give him one more chance. I won’t beg, because I know you won’t respond to that, and it’s not really in my nature either. But I am asking all the same, don’t abandon my son. If you do it, then Hermione won’t be long after you, and there aren’t many bridges left for him.” Harry was very moved, but not that moved.

“If he reaches his hand out to me in friendship Arthur, I’ll shake it and let bygones be bygones. If he reaches it out in anger, as he did on another son of yours a few minutes ago, I’ll put him in St. Mungos and he won’t be leaving anytime soon.”

“I suppose I have to be satisfied with that.”

“It’s my best offer Arthur, I’m sorry. I won’t attack him first, I can promise you that, but Ron has to be reasonable too, if you expect it from me.” Harry left unsaid his feeling that this situation was getting dangerously close to Dumbledore/Snape territory, where Harry was always asked to be the conciliatory one, with little or no corresponding effort from the other person.

“I understand Harry, let’s go back to the house now, Molly will be wondering where we all are.” The nine of them trooped back to The Burrow, with Ginny sidling up to Harry briefly, as Arthur had started chatting with Dean.

“I thought what you guys did to him was brilliant, but don’t tell Mum or Dad I said that.” Harry took the opportunity to rub her head, like she had done his.

“Your secret’s safe with me.”

They got back to the house in short order, though for the gang it was only to collect whichever twin had the trunk on him. They did walk in on a surprise though, Hermione was talking intently with the twins, with Bill and Charlie, who had stayed totally out of the fray after the snowball fight, kibitzing. Ron and Molly were nowhere to be seen, and there was no shouting to be heard. Everyone looked up as Arthur led his group back in. Fred addressed them.

“Hermione here has prevailed upon us to reinstate Ron for his summer job, assuming he doesn’t do anything stupidly rash in the meantime. What do you think partner?” Harry looked at Arthur before replying.

“That’s fine with me.”

“ Good, its settled then, on a three to nothing vote. Satisfied Hermione?”

“Yes I am, thank you. You three won’t regret this.” George took a deep breath.

“Hermione, I’ll freely admit that I’ve always had some reservations about you for all these years, with your love of rules and of studying.....two things I find appalling on the whole. But you’re loyal,

I'll grant you that, and for the most part, you're the best thing that ever happened to Ron. I certainly hope he appreciates you."

"I do appreciate her, more than you could ever know." Ron had just walked into the room, followed by his mother. Hermione smiled softly at hearing that, and got up to put her arm around his waist. Ron addressed Harry and the twins.

"I guess I overreacted about the snowballs, it was just a game after all, and your strategy was pretty brilliant now that I've thought about it. For what it's worth, I'm sorry Fred, George, Harry." This sounded very humble and sincere, and the three WWW partners were inclined to take him up on it. The twins walked over and each of them lightly punched him on the arm.

"Accepted, and in case you didn't hear, you can come back to the shop next summer."

"Thanks guys, that's good to hear." Harry walked over next, and silently put out his right hand. Ron didn't hesitate in taking it.

"Be safe over there Harry, I promise that my letters will get longer and better."

"You too Ron, and make sure you nail Hufflepuff and Slytherin in Quidditch."

"We will, Ginny and I will knock them dead with our new brooms, won't we Ginny?" Ginny was looking at Ron like he was almost a stranger.

"We sure will Ron, the Quidditch Cup isn't out of our reach yet."

"Anyway, we should be going, we still have a long day ahead of us." Goodbyes were exchanged, and Harry promised to keep everyone abreast of how he was doing. The Americans were full of praise for Molly's food, and she invited them back for next year. Fred and George put on their coats back on as well.

“We have some shop business to discuss, so we’ll walk out to the portkey area with you.” The Burrow had anti-portkey wards surrounding it, so even if they had been traveling that way, they would have had to walk about 100 meters. Bill and Charlie announced that they were coming as well, having not spent much time with Harry during his visit.

They group hiked back over to the snowball fight area, one that Harry was becoming very familiar with today. Bill walked next to him.

“So are you and Ron fine now?”

“I guess so, but we’ll see how it lasts. It’s easy for him to apologize with your Mum behind him.”

“I was thinking the same thing, but what else was there to do but accept it.”

“There wasn’t, but I didn’t mind. I kind of feel sorry for him on the whole.”

“You got your anger out with that twirling I take it?”

“Well I wouldn’t have done it if he hadn’t tackled George, he deserved his impromptu flying.” They reached the open field, and the twins again scanned to make sure that they weren’t followed.

“So are you guys glad you came? At least you got some entertainment.” Sophie answered for all of them.

“We are Bill, it was nice to finally meet a lot of the people we hear about in Harry’s stories.”

“He has a lot to tell, that’s for sure. Hopefully you won’t ever have to meet the Dursleys, or any of our Death Eater friends. Meeting Dumbledore is inevitable, though try not to hex him right away if you ever do.” Hugs were exchanged, as George took the trunk out of his pocket and put it to normal size.

“The catalogs you need are on your desk in the trunk, there’s about 50 or so, which is all we have printed right now. We’ll get that fixed tomorrow and get you more if you need them. Obviously you can tell this Atwood guy that his terms are acceptable, and that the sooner he sells some pranks, the sooner he makes money.”

“Thanks Fred, this is going to be good for us.” The trunk was now ready, and the Americans were already climbing in.

“Merry Christmas mate, we’re glad you came.”

“Merry Christmas guys, I’ll see you Sunday.”

“Sunday?”

“Neville and Luna are coming by the shop at 4 o’clock……sorry, with all that was going on I forgot to tell you.”

“That’s cool, we’ll be sure to let them in. It’ll be fun listening to Luna again, beats the WWN any day.” Harry couldn’t agree more, he was already giggling inside.

“Are you two really fine with Ron now?” Both of them shrugged.

“Not really, but he’s family, and you have to forgive family more easily than you would anyone else.”

“Those were some nice things you said about Hermione.”

“They were true, I’m coming around on that girl, especially now that I don’t see her on a day to day basis. So you have you remember, from this summer.”

“I can admit when I’m wrong, and I was very wrong. Okay, I’m out of here. Take it easy guys.”

“Don’t eat too much at your other stops.”

“Oh I will, that’s one thing you can count on.” With that, Harry hopped back in the trunk, and disappeared. George shrunk the trunk back, and the four of them headed back to The Burrow.

End Chapter.

Author's Note: I said a couple of chapters ago that Uncle Antonio would have no dialogue in the story.....well I've changed my mind. In screw-up news I managed to spell Mobilicorpus twice in the same sentence if you can believe that. It's strange doing the typing on this story. I'm using Microsoft Works, and their spell checker ignores Dumbledore, but doesn't allow Weasley or Quidditch, so when I incorrectly spell an HP word that's usually why, there's already a redline under it and I just don't notice it. Oh, one more thing. I have a group of our players going around the U of Illinois in this chapter, I'm going to be particularly vague about locations, since I've only been there once. It was on a road trip, and I don't really remember much about it, given that it was over 14 years ago. I've used a map of that school, but I'm really just throwing darts in the semi-darkness. Any students or alumni of that school will please forgive me.

Christmas Day

Forrester House, Indianapolis

10:00 am EDT

Harry hopped down the ladder in one jump, finding the gang still down there waiting for him.

“Well that's over with anyway.” The others laughed, and Harry was relieved that they at least seemed to have had a good time.

“You guys are all right with having gone there?” Reiko shrugged.

“Hey, you're the one who attracted the controversy, not us. I liked them actually, well not Ron.....then again, he didn't have much to say to any of us.”

“He didn't talk to me at all.” Claudia.

“Me neither.” Jonas.

“He seemed a little standoffish.” Warrick.

“He said hello to me, saying again that he wasn’t the Witch Weekly source, but that was about it.” This was Sophie.

“Well it could have been much worse with Ron, so I’m rather grateful on the whole. He’s a git, apology notwithstanding, but sadly, it seems that I’m stuck with him. So nobody’s mad at me for asking you all to go?” Heads shook all around, and more than one compliment was made on Molly’s cooking, though Jonas had one point to make.

“Do you think that Dobby and Winky could make that cannelloni again soon? I loved it.” Laughs were the rule, and everyone went upstairs to Warrick’s room, and then on to the living room. Presents were scheduled to be done after the main meal, and the tree in the corner was almost half blocked by the mountain of wrapped gifts.

The living room was full of Forresters and other relatives, and everyone gave a ‘Norm’ style hello to the kids. Harry, who had literally met hundreds of new people in the last five months and had a surprisingly easy time remembering most of them, recognized most of the people, and was quickly introduced to those he hadn’t. Nick Forrester, Warrick’s father, wandered in from the kitchen, incongruously eating a popsicle. He approached the kids and took them aside, not wanting anyone else to hear where they had gone.

“So how did it go? The Brits nice to all of you?”

“We had a good time Dad, and I for one am glad we went. It’s good to be home though.”

“You’re not too full? Harry? Jonas? Karen will be disappointed if you don’t repeat your performance of last month.” Harry and Jonas exchanged mock grumpy looks, as Nick’s expression was one of bemusement.

“Why does everyone single us out?”

“Yeah, I mean I only had three plates of food, and one plate of dessert. And believe me, I wanted more.”

“I hear you Harry, eat yourself to near unconsciousness at one meal, and you never hear the end of it.” The women were looking disgusted again, though all were internally jealous beyond all measure at Harry’s metabolism, in particular, though he did work out with the Quidditch team twice a week. He had explained his metabolism to them this way once:

“If you starve, even for a little while, your body decides that food is to be treasured, and it will allow you as much food as you can possibly fit in it, with little or no ill effects. That’s not scientific by any stretch, but it’s my theory, and I’m sticking to it.” And Harry believed this, and perhaps a small part of him, subconsciously maybe, was afraid that all his wealth would be taken away, and he would be left to be hungry again.

That explanation made enough sense that he was only occasionally ragged on by the gang, usually when he demolished an entire pizza by himself. Jonas, on the other hand, was a workout nut, and could be found in the basement workout room at least five or six days a week, as he was right in between Warrick and Harry size wise, being 6’ tall and 175 pounds, as opposed to Harry being 5’7“, 150. So everyone knew how Jonas was able to eat all that and stay fit. Ironically Warrick, the largest of the three boys, ate the least. He was now 6’3” 200, and prided himself on a fit body, without being a workout warrior. He and Harry were certainly an interesting contrast, standing side by side.

“Okay boys, I believe you.....are we taking bets?” Harry and Jonas looked intrigued, and huddled together for a moment, whispering. Jonas was their spokesman.

“Name your terms Nick.”

“You each have to eat five full plates of food, and two each of dessert. A full plate of dessert constituting a regular size piece of whatever pie you like, and a full plate of food meaning that the plate has to be covered, except for the edges.” This wasn’t as easy at it sounded, though it was less than either had consumed at Thanksgiving, Harry had had five plates just of stuffing alone, and three pieces of pumpkin pie. The Weasley/Dobby/Winky food was now sitting a bit heavier though, as they had not had breakfast on Thanksgiving Day.

“And we get what if we win?”

“You two get to set the menu for Easter dinner, and I mean the whole thing. You can’t make it prohibitively expensive, no caviar or Dom Perignon, but all your whims will otherwise be covered.” This was too good to be true, both Harry and Jonas thought suspiciously.

“And if we lose?”

“You two do the dishes for today, by hand, for everyone. You’d have today and tomorrow to do it though, I’m no martinet, and I know you have Reiko’s thing tonight. And no Dobby and Winky helping either, no magic whatsoever. Do we have terms?” Harry was all for it, but saw Jonas still pondering, and to help give him time:

“Will Karen go along with this? I would think she’d object to two teenage vacuum cleaners controlling her menu for a day like that.”

“We talked about it last night, she’s fine with it, especially since we’ll win.” More huddling and whispering, and Harry had another question.

“Who decides what a full plate is? And how long do we have to do it? We don’t want you calling dinner over after 30 minutes.” Oh that was good, thought Nick, very clever. He knew he liked this kid with the funny accent, who was about half his son’s size, but probably ten times as dangerous, if one believed the press. He believed it all right, but thought that Harry was, on the whole, good for Warrick. He liked their running arguments, and the tales of pranking Joe Clancy back at school. The rearranging of the furniture was an especially nice touch he thought.

“What you ate at Thanksgiving is fine by me, those size portions.....and yes Harry, before you ask, there will be plenty of stuffing. You inhaled so much of it last month that Karen decided that everyone else should have a shot at it too.” The girls were snickering now as Harry went a little red.

“It was really, really great stuffing.” Nick looked wistful for a second.

“Yes, I remember it well, from years past. Karen was very flattered that you liked it so much, no need to wonder if you were faking liking her cooking. Your time limit will be two hours, down an hour from Thanksgiving because of the presents and things. I repeat, do we have terms.” Jonas and Harry simultaneously said:

“We have terms.”

“Good, I look forward to it.” He shook hands on the deal, then walked into the kitchen, presumably to tell his wife that the game was afoot.

“Why oh why did you two agree to that?” Jonas looked at her like any fool should be able to figure it out.

“We couldn’t back down Claudia, our manhood was at stake, right Harry?” Harry waved off that manhood stuff, he was secure enough in his. Sophie was a big help there of course.

“Whatever, I’m already planning the menu for Easter Sunday. Shrimp will be a highlight, and so will chimichangas, chicken of course. We’ll have Dr. Pepper to drink, and German Chocolate cake for dessert. Oh man, I’m getting gooey already.” Sophie just put her hand on the back of his head.....and started shaking it. He put a stop to that right away, and redirected her arms around his waist.

“Easy there darling, I need to digest some more of breakfast, giving me a headache won’t help.”

“I was hoping to shake you into your senses.”

“Too late, we shook on it. Look at the bright side, you get some more entertainment. It’s not a snowball fight or Fred and I tormenting Ron, but it’ll do.” He still thought of that last part as entertainment, as he was pretty well convinced that Molly had forced Ron into apologizing.

“Fair enough, at least we don’t have to do anything for it, and we’ll still get the benefit if you win.”

“Uh huh, right. Jonas and I won’t brook any editorial collaboration WHEN we win. Will we Jonas?”

“Oh no we won’t, I have plans for that day, and they include a nice antipasto. Come on Harry, let’s go out and shoot some hoops, get some exercise, we need to burn some breakfast off.” Harry agreed, and Warrick joined them in the empty driveway, as all of the guests had flooded over. The ladies decided that a little exercise wouldn’t do them any harm either, with two more big meals to go today, so they decided on a walk. Both groups rehashed the morning’s events, and all seemed to agree that, for the most part, it had been a successful experiment, though one that should not be repeated too often. Fred and George had predicted to Harry that wedding bells were imminent between Bill and Fleur, so there would be a Weasley wedding in the summertime to go to.

Harry had not played any basketball before, even during the Thanksgiving Holiday, and the three boys had a fun time having him learn. Warrick had been playing all his life of course, and Jonas had played in a junior league when he was still living at home. There was no place to fly in Indianapolis, a city which had very few Wizards for its size, around 45 or so, so while Harry and company had all brought their brooms, they were only able to fly them at Tecumseh, weather permitting. It wasn’t snow they were worried about, but the wind. Quidditch games in Oklahoma were crazy affairs, with Quodpot, and its need for precision accuracy even worse.

After 90 minutes of HORSE, and general goofing around, the dinner bell, so to speak, was rung. Reiko, Claudia, and Sophie were already inside as the boys trooped in, and found their places at the table. The group was about 35 total, though it did not include Michael and Barbara Steele, who were visiting her parents for the day. As Jonas couldn't stand most of his mother's side of the family, he was glad to be a regular guest here. Nor were Karl and Lisa Aylesworth in attendance, they were in charge of things at Tecumseh for the day, the Headmaster and his Deputy both being away, visiting family. The table, however, was not magically enlarged, though the room was. Rather, one of Karen's cousins, who was not here, owned a furniture manufacturing plant, and had the table custom designed for her. It had leaves in the middle, and could in theory accommodate 50 people, as it had during Thanksgiving 1995. The teenagers, along with four other children who were not yet Great Lakes eligible, were situated mostly in the middle of the group. It's not that Warrick was the only teenager in his generation in the family, it's just that the others went to different schools, and just didn't happen to be at this particular gathering. He was not especially close to any of them, and had told Harry that they were not viable candidates to market WWW products.

Much to Harry's and Jonas' consternation, Nick announced the bet right before grace was said. All eyes turned to the two boys, they were the only white male faces in the room, so they were easy to spot. Martin, Nick's father, was sitting near Jonas at one end of the table, and gave them the once over.

"That was less than these two ate last time if I recall, what's the catch?" Harry assumed that Nick would have a story ready for these types of questions, and was not disappointed.

"The boys had breakfast over in Harry's neck of the woods. Hopefully the portkey ride back made them just sick enough to lose the bet, not to mention how much they ate over there. Harry has been singing praises on his surrogate Aunt's cooking, I'm betting he and Jonas are pretty full right now." This was an obvious psychological ploy, made all the worse because it was working, though Jonas faked some bravado of his own.

“No such luck Nick, we’ll all be feasting on our chosen menu come Easter.” More than a couple of the family members looked dubious at that prospect, but withheld comment for the time being. Thomas Davis, Karen’s father, said grace, and everyone prepared to dig in.

For plate one, Harry chose Karen’s stuffing of course, and Jonas decided that he might as well get a plate of the stuffing before Harry cut him, and everyone else, off. While outside, they had pretty much decided to pace themselves for the first 90 minutes, then put on a burst at the end to finish off their bet commitments. Both of the guys were seated close enough to Nick and Karen that they could be watched for their progress, though both Harry and Jonas were confident enough that they made no plans to cheat.

Also in attendance was Antonio Davis, Karen’s baby brother, who was not often at these gatherings, due to his basketball schedule for the Indiana Pacers, and before that in college at UTEP, The University of Texas-El Paso. He had arrived just a few minutes before the gang got back inside, he somehow fit in the floo fireplace. The group seemed to make a point not to make too big a deal over him, which suited the soft spoken basketball player just fine. Harry was sitting across from him, and had a few questions for him.

“Just out of curiosity Antonio.....I’m not sure how to say this.....but can a broom hold you?” Harry had never encountered someone his size before, up close and personal, outside of a few sightings on the street in Little Whinging and Milwaukee. The tall man laughed, and the others in earshot smiled as well.

“I haven’t been on one since high school to tell you the truth Harry, but it was no problem then. Once I got to about 6’6” though I made a point of writing the Nike people to find out. Those things can hold sumo wrestlers, or so they tell me.”

“I would pay a few dollars to see that. Imagine an exhibition game between sumo wrestling Wizards, and maybe one of the school teams. All the proceeds to charity of course.....hmmmm.” He was brought out of his scheming by Sophie, who tapped him on the arm, and pointed her fork at his only half eaten plate. She had been somewhat less than supportive of the bet at the beginning, but now that there was no stopping it, she wanted her boyfriend and friend to win it.

“Yes dear.” Antonio, who was married, chuckled.

“She’s got you well trained already hasn’t she?”

“I’ve learned not to argue too often.” He got an elbow in the ribs for that, but he had said it affectionately.

“He’s learned not to argue at all.” That wasn’t quite true, but he was still saving up chits for the big battles that had not yet occurred. Harry knew he was lucky though, Sophie was not the argumentative type, but could smoothly talk him out of his more harebrained schemes. And smoothly did not just mean womanly charms. Harry had been so accustomed to Hermione running his life, that he had no real problem with Sophie doing the same.

He polished off his first plate of stuffing in short order, though technically speaking, he was not what one could call ‘hungry’ at any point in the meal. He looked over at Jonas, who was over halfway through his second plate, this time of mashed potatoes and gravy. Harry himself grabbed some more stuffing, and a small piece of turkey to go with it. He continued talking with Antonio about basketball, and was so clueless about the sport that the older man didn’t mind talking about his job. Basketball was not the only sport talked about between the two men though.

“So is Warrick going to be going pro with Quidditch? Does he have what it takes?” Warrick was further down the table, and was not listening to their conversation. Harry didn’t have a good answer for him though.

“I honestly couldn’t say Antonio, I’ve never seen a professional Quidditch match, so I don’t know what the caliber of play is.” This caught the tall man by surprise.

“You never saw one in the UK?”

“No, I was kind of under house arrest during the summertime the last few years. Other than the Quidditch World Cup two years ago, your game last week was the only professional game of any sort I’ve seen in person. I know that Warrick would have been a good player at Hogwarts, and probably a starter. He and John make for a good tandem.” As well they should have, having been a Beater tandem for almost six years now, which matched what the twins had done, or would have done if not for a certain Hag Grand Inquisitor.

“House arrest?”

“Yeah, Dumbledore wanted me to be ‘protected’ from any Dark Wizards or Witches out there who might want to have a little fun with Harry torture. So he stuck me with my totally horrible aunt, uncle, and cousin. Not the friendliest people you could ever want to meet, if you get my meaning.” He gave him the highpoints of life in Dursley-land, and the people in earshot no longer had any questions about how much food Harry packed in, or why.

By the time the story was done, he was on his third plate of stuffing, and his last, as he really did want others to get to taste it. He looked around and saw everyone happily chatting away, there were no loners in this family, or at least none were here. Nick always seemed to be eyeing either him or Jonas, and with little pleasure, as his friend was now slowly eating his fourth plate of food, this time it was some roast Karen had made, for those few who did not care for turkey. After a minute of people watching, Sophie, who was on his left, poked him in the side with her elbow.

“Penny for your thoughts?” He smiled, and squeezed her hand with his free one.

“Oh nothing much, just looking around. This is still hard to get used to.” She gave him a curious look.

“All this family stuff?”

“Yeah, this is not a Dursley Christmas, or a Hogwarts one for that matter. Other than last year, those are the only Christmases I’ve ever known.” She knew all this of course, but always found it interesting when Harry mused out loud like this. In a lot of ways, even after five months of dating, Sophie found Harry to be still quite fascinating in his view of the world, based on his experiences.

“This is better though.”

“You better believe it is.” The understatement of the afternoon, though Christmas at Hogwarts always had at least Ron there with him, and usually had Hermione as well.

“So what did you get me?” This was segued pretty smoothly, but not smoothly enough. Harry checked his watch, dinner still have 80 minutes to go, not to mention .

“You’ll find out in a little while.”

“A hint? I’ll give you one about yours.” She didn’t really care about the substance of the present, she just liked making his squirm like this, and she liked forcing him into verbal gymnastics.

“The trouble is, Sophie dearest: I don’t want a hint. I want to be totally surprised when I open the package, assuming it is in fact, a package. I like good surprises.”

“I know, and I don’t really want to know anyway.”

“You mean you acknowledge that I won’t tell you.”

“That too. How’s your stomach? You going to be able to do your bet duty?”

“I’m fine thank you, I’m about to finish my third plate, almost halfway through my bet commitment. Look at Jonas going for it though, he’s about to finish his fourth.”

“You’re way behind honey.”

“My only race is the clock dearest, and Jonas is a lot bigger than I am.” He took a huge bite to make his point, somehow gulping it down. At this point, he was mentally kicking himself for not building in a handicap for himself, maybe four plates of food and a piece and a half of pie. Oh well, that ship had now sailed.

“Competitive to the last. And to think that I always resisted the idea of being with an athlete.”

“I’m not an athlete, I’m a Quidditch player.” Though Harry did not exactly look much like John Kruk, whose famous line he had unknowingly paraphrased. She just smirked, and kissed him on the cheek.....a cheek that was stuffed with food, a strange sensation to be sure.

“Did you ever wind up sending a card to your cousin? I’ve been meaning to ask you about it.”

“No, I decided not to. It’s better just to cut them off completely. Dudley did a turnaround at the end there, but I can’t forgive all those years of abuse.” Indeed he couldn’t, though he did place Dudley one level below Petunia and Vernon, who were one level below Dumbledore and Snape. No need to wonder where Voldemort was on the chart.

“You’re going to leave them alone then? You’re not really going to hurt them?” He had told her of his daydreams about getting some payback, though he had never gone into great detail about it, some thoughts were just for himself. She didn’t like the idea at all though, even after he showed her some pensieve memories. Sophie had the attitude that it was a slippery slope, and was best avoided all together. Harry didn’t necessarily disagree, though both of them knew that he would do what he wanted. He wasn’t quite that whipped.....yet.

“I don’t think so, no. Not unless they somehow do something else to harm me.” Said in a bland tone of voice that could just have easily been used to order a cup of coffee at Starbucks. Harry didn’t see how they could harm him, Charlie had removed pretty much everything about his recent activities, including the names of those who had helped him. This was not a subject proper for someone who had to pack in a lot of food though, as Harry finished plate three, so he asked her for a change of conversation. Sophie was still working on her first plate, picking at it while she talked with Harry and Reiko, who was on her other side. Sophie and Reiko were both slim, and worked hard to stay that way, they would probably quit after this plate, and one of dessert.

“How are you boys doing down there? On your fifth plate already Jonas?”

“You bet Nick, your only hope is that my small friend here craps out on me.....but that’s not going to happen, right Harry?” The Harry in question gave his friend a semi-annoyed look, and said loudly.

“Well we have established one thing: If I have to puke before this bet is over, I’m not even going to bother trying for the bathroom.”

Nick actually spit out his food as he started laughing uproariously. The rest of the table heard that salvo too, and Harry and Jonas were living up to their billing as the entertainment portion of the meal.

“You didn’t really mean that did you?”

“He’ll make a nice target; don’t worry, I’ll make sure you don’t get any on you.”

“You’re such a gentleman.”

“I have my moments.”

Harry spooned some mashed potatoes and gravy onto his plate for round four, as Jonas, seemingly in a hurry, finished off plate five with a flourish. They were now at the 50 minute mark, with an hour and ten minutes still to go, dessert probably wouldn’t even be served for another 30 minutes.

“Nick, I don’t suppose we can amend the bet to let dessert plates be transferred to regular food plates? Harry’s leaving us all some stuffing, and I don’t want to wait 11 months to get some more.” Nick and Karen were sitting across from each other, and seemed to come to a silent acknowledgement that Jonas was going to hold up his end of the deal so easily, they might as well accommodate him. Karen answered him.

“That’s fine Jonas, grab some stuffing before Harry changes his mind. You’ll only owe one piece of pie after you finish it.” Harry heard this.

“Hey, I was trying to be nice you know, letting other people have a shot at it.” Never mind that Karen had made triple the recipe this time, factoring in 10 more guests and Harry into the equation.

“Yes you have Harry, and for that I’ll let you use the extra-strength dishwashing liquid tonight.”

“Yuck, yuck. Just so we’re clear, if I don’t make it, Jonas has to do dishes too, right?” Jonas turned to Harry, as if realizing something, and theatrically shook a finger at him.

“You’d better not tank on me buddy.” Harry winked at his friend.

“I will do my level best to win our bet.” He was about three bites away from finishing round four, and while his stomach was filling up pretty quickly, he wasn’t unduly worried. Nick answered Harry’s query, enjoying the byplay.

“Yes Harry, the bet means that both of you have to finish the plates, so you both win, or you both lose.”

Harry quickly finished off his mashed potatoes and gravy, and went right for some turkey for his final one. Jonas had polished off his stuffing in record time, and was just sitting back, sipping on his iced tea as he awaited dessert.

“Are you going to be able to eat anything at Tecumseh?” Just the word ‘eat’ made Harry’s stomach do a swan dive. The turkey was doing some damage, though in theory it tasted really good.

“Probably not, this is really starting to become uncomfortable.” Sophie checked her watch.

“You still have an hour to go, plenty of time.”

“Easy for you to say, you don’t have two pieces of pie to eat. Oh God.”

“Well if worse comes to worse, you have enough time to go to the bathroom and do some fiddling.” That was a nice way to say puking, but Harry had a feeling that Nick and Karen would consider that a violation of the rules, and make him either lose the bet, or eat a couple more plates as a penalty. Over the next 15 minutes he picked at his turkey enough to finish it, but he did spend a few minutes with his eyes closed, not looking at the food.

With 40 minutes to go, Karen and her sisters put the desserts on the table. They included pumpkin, apple, and blueberry pies, and a couple of chocolate cakes, with some puddings as well.....Martin Forrester loved pudding. Jonas quickly inhaled a piece of blueberry pie, his favorite, and soon went to work on some bonus pudding, his part in this was now complete.

“Jonas had fulfilled his part of the bet, with six plates of food and a plate of dessert. Congratulations Jonas, I didn’t think you had it in you.” Jonas grinned at him.

“Gee thanks Nick, a left handed compliment if I’ve ever heard one. Now how many plates have you had?” In addition to being 6’5”, Nick carried about 240 pounds on his 41 year old frame. A former college football player, he looked as though he could match Harry and Jonas by himself, but he didn’t try to.

“I had three plates, and I’ll partake of dessert. Good thing you didn’t want me to try and keep up with you, you would have lost. Back in the day, seven plates would have been a warm-up for me.” Martin, his father, just shook his head, as Nick’s mother gave him a funny stare as well.

“Don’t you boys listen to him, he never could match you Jonas, or even you Harry, not even as big as he is. Not even when he was your age. Now his little brother, however.” He trailed off, getting a little nostalgic. Richard Forrester had passed away seven years earlier in a car accident, while on his way to his wedding. He was the baby brother of four, the other two not being here, and stories were still told at every family gathering, including this one, though by this point they were told as to make others smile, not make them sad. Nick was the third brother, he and Karen had lost a baby of their own, three years after Warrick had been born. That was the reason they had had no other children, not every family was as procreative as the Weasleys, and many pureblood families only had one child.

Speaking of Warrick, he had stopped at two plates, and one piece of pie, and called down to his roommate.

“You all right there Harry? You gonna make it?” Harry gave him, and the room, an exasperated look.

“Why does everyone keep asking me that?”

“We need some amusement, Mom won’t let us have the TV on while we eat you know.” Harry had a quick comeback, and a veiled threat.

“I’m going to eat my very American apple pie, and then make the final dash to the finish line. Remember folks, every dig at me will make the Easter menu that much weirder.” Okay, it wasn’t so veiled after all, and those betting on Jonas and Harry, if only in their minds, got a bit quieter, though it was all in fun. Claudia, inquisitive that she was, just had to ask though:

“Like what?”

“Do any of you know what haggis are?” A few did, but for the others Harry gave a long, very detailed, description of the Scottish dish, which Oliver Wood had described to him in a similar manner over four years previous. He couldn’t finish his dinner then, and some were pushing back from the table now, if only a little bit.

“You wouldn’t.” Harry grinned evilly at Nick.

“Oh I would have Dobby or Winky make it specially.” He took a bite of his apple pie for emphasis, as to show how close he was to completion.

“Okay, fair enough. Shut up Warrick.” He gave Claudia a dirty look.

“Hey! Dad has been doing most of the taunting, not me.”

“Sure, but it’s his house, I can’t very well tell him to be quiet at his own table now can I?” Warrick looked at his father, who was nodding smugly.

“Point taken.” Nick wanted no part of haggis though, and quickly struck a deal with Harry, so the taunting ceased anyway.

The next half hour went back to normal, as Harry started on a piece of chocolate cake for his final plate. He ate slowly but surely, and crossed the finish line with no trouble, with 12 minutes to go.

“And my roommate has successfully finished his last plate of food, and the teenagers reign supreme!” Nick walked over and theatrically examined the plate.

“All right, Harry finishes with time to spare. You two are now in control of the Easter menu.” Harry stood up.

“Since you all stopped your mockery just in time, the menu will contain nothing strange, nor will it be hot dogs and hamburgers, or things like that. Right Jonas?”

“Absolutely, think Mexican and Italian for the themes. We’ll provide a written copy of our menu a month in advance, so you can decide whether it suits your taste buds or not.” This was very fair, and everyone thanked the two of them for the entertainment. Everyone started filing into the living room for the presents, as Karen and a few others cleared the table and started loading the dishwasher for the first of its many runs today, which would probably last all night to get that many dishes, pots, and pans done. Harry and Jonas made a point of helping, and the rest of the gang followed suit, ensuring that the process didn’t take too long. After about 15 minutes, everyone was ready for presents.

There was to be no game show, and after the young kids were done, it was more a free for all. The four young kids were not technically in the Secret Santa pool, and thus got the most presents, as was proper. They were the usual complements of toys and video games. Marty Coyle, one of Warrick’s cousins, was only nine months away from starting Great Lakes, and got his first broom as his main present. It was a Nike starter model, perfect for someone his age, and he was just as overjoyed as Ron and Ginny were by their more advanced brooms earlier in the day. Everyone took a lot of pleasure in the happiness of Ozzie, Marty, Keisha, and Elizabeth, and the kids were having the times of their lives.

After they were done, everyone else pitched in. The gang huddled together and did their present exchange. Harry first opened the CD’s.

“Oh man, The Eagles, The Long Run.....this is just what I wanted Warrick, thanks.”

“I had a hunch dude, don’t ask me how I knew it, but I had a hunch. And how did you know I wanted this Mingus Live CD? I mean this is uncanny.”

“I have special insight mate, I just sort of knew it in my mind that that’s what you wanted.”

“You two are like your own little comedy team. We really need to put you out on the road.”

“Yeah, because Harry could use the money, poor guy that he is.”

“It sucks doesn’t it? It brings me back to the halcyon days of 1991 when I thought I had no money at all, and I dreamed of being able to buy just one Mars bar whenever I felt like it.” He told this as a joke, and indeed everyone laughed, but it was the truth nonetheless. Another Dumbledore grievance, allowing him to grow up poor, though perversely in an upper middle class house. He opened the rest of his CD’s, and now his Eagles collection was complete, though he would wind up having to wait a few years for Hell to Freeze Over Again so he could see them in concert.

He opened his Reiko present and found a handwritten gift certificate for three hours of free typing for any paper or project that he wanted. Harry’s typing was still a little uneven, so he really valued something like this, and he thought it was great that she was willing to spend her time for him, rather than her money. He slung his arm around her and gave her half a hug.

“This is cool Reiko, thank you.”

“You’re welcome Harry, I thought you might find it useful.” Indeed he did, and three hours was really nice. This would take care of most of his next Muggle Studies term paper, and he felt it was only fair to warn her.

“Works for me, it’ll give me something new to learn. You think you’ll write it out by hand, or just sit next to me and dictate?”

“I don’t know, the last one in there I wrote while at the computer. I still have to pick the topic and everything, I’ll let you know the time frame in a couple of weeks.”

“Sounds good, thanks again for Risk and Shogun, these will be a lot of fun.” They were strategy board games, and were as close as Reiko would come to cracking a history book.

Speaking of history books, Claudia had just opened her history book, one that she had especially wanted for some time, and gave Harry a rare hug, as she wasn't big on affectionate displays like that. She had given Harry a set of regular chess pieces, thinking he might be interested in learning the game that way. It was an interesting gift, and Harry was intrigued by the idea of not having to con his pieces into moving where he wanted them to. It seemed that his pieces were always going to be dubious about his abilities, no matter how many times he yelled at them that Ron was not even on the continent and couldn't destroy them at his pleasure. There was only one problem with using the pieces right away: None of the gang knew how to play chess, besides him of course. He would have to wait for Drew to get back from his family's place in Denver, where both sets of grandparents lived.

Sophie had just opened the first of her three packages from Harry, and pulled out a dress.

"No wonder you talked me out of getting this Reiko." She reached over and kissed Harry thank you, liking the dress a great deal.

"It was very tricky there roommate, I almost had to fess up that Harry was buying it for you."

"I kind of suspected it to tell you the truth."

"Sure you did." This went on for a couple of minutes as they argued about it. Others continued to open presents while they did so, though everyone kept half an ear open just in case they said anything interesting. Claudia and Reiko had gone in together to get Jonas a subscription to the muggle Sports Illustrated, so he would not have to fight over copies in the library like he had been doing for six years. Sophie had gotten Warrick a copy of Quidditch Through the Ages, via Dobby, wanting to give him a better sense of the history of his Wizard sport. As Harry had told Antonio earlier, it wasn't out of the question that Warrick could play professionally, even if it was only in the four team American Quidditch League, which was the equivalent of Single A baseball compared to the British League.....well, maybe AA baseball. Correspondingly, Claudia gotten him a book about the history of the World Cup of soccer, a sport he definitely was not going to pro in, but loved to play anyway, which was the point of most high school sports if one really thinks about it.

While Reiko and Sophie were 'discussing' the dress, Sophie opened up another package, and found another outfit she had had her eye on back in October. She gazed over at Harry.

"You two planned this pretty well." Harry wasn't the least bit sorry about that either.

"She's right Sophie, you know you didn't suspect anything."

"Don't start Harry."

"Yes dear."

"Thank you Harry, they're both lovely." She kissed him heartily, and Harry was physically reminded that he hadn't had any 'playtime' in a couple of days. His stomach was full to the bursting, but it was not quite that full.

"You have one more, don't forget, but don't worry, it's not clothes in that one."

"What did I tell you about spending too much on me?"

"I heard you very clearly when you said it."

"But you ignored it didn't you?"

"Yep." Harry didn't even pretend to deny it.

"What am I going to do with you Harry?" Oh the possibilities for answering that question, as Harry got a sneaky grin on his face. He was about to say something when she clapped a hand over his mouth.

“Don’t say it Harry, you can think it but not say it.” Everyone laughed, as both Harry and Sophie both started blushing. Harry pried her hand off his mouth.

“Sophie, you’re dating a rich guy who likes giving presents to people, get used to it. I know you don’t like me for my money, which is all the more reason to get you nice things whenever I feel like it. You do not have to reciprocate in kind, so know that too.” He hadn’t opened her present yet, he was saving it until last, as she had wanted to open his first. She saved that last one, the small one, for a little while and opened up the Hot Wheels Racetrack that Warrick had gotten her.

“Oh this is cool, thanks Warrick.” Warrick gave Harry a triumphant look, matched by the amazed look Harry gave his girlfriend.

“I know, it’s pure Warrick, and I wouldn’t have it any other way. He’s been giving me presents like this ever since we were 11 years old.” Harry couldn’t help himself and started laughing.

“Fine, fine, I stand corrected Warrick, are you satisfied?”

“Quite satisfied thank you.”

“I mean good grief.” Dobby had come over, and Harry tossed him his other present.

“Where am I delivering this to Harry?”

“To yourself Dobby, a really short trip. It’s for you, I picked it up the other day for you.” Dobby opened up the UNO cards and looked delighted with the gift. He immediately opened up the little pamphlet with the rules and began studying it.

“Thank you very much Harry, we must get a game going, later tonight perhaps after your third feast of the day.” My God, thought

Harry, I'm even getting grief from Dobby of all people....err.....elves. He patted his major-domo on the back and grinned at him.

"You bet Dobby, I'm sure you'll slaughter all of us at this too." Dobby and Winky wandered off, with Dobby already shuffling the deck of cards in his tiny hands as they walked. Harry had a bad feeling about that, thank goodness they only played for candy, or he would wind up working for Dobby instead of the other way around.

"Oh this is lovely Harry, thank you." Sophie had unwrapped the watch, and immediately put it on her left wrist, replacing her old Swatch watch. At the same time, Reiko was putting on her new bracelet, and whispering many things to her boyfriend, with a big smile on her face. The basement here was where Nick did his wandmaking, so Harry had a feeling that he would either be loaning the trunk out tonight, or simply sleeping there himself, if Reiko could get away from her parents. Harry pried his ears away from the whispering.

"I'm glad you like it, it was the last thing I got for you." Claudia and Reiko pulled her arm over and had a look see at the watch.

"That looks really great Harry, you have good taste."

"I don't know Reiko, I suppose I do, I just liked the look of it is all. It's like art isn't it? You either like it or you don't, and sometimes it's hard to explain why." That was his theory, and he was sticking to it, though he liked the idea that he had good taste. He would take Reiko's word for it. He saw Antonio approaching, and quickly opened his Secret Santa present next, and found an Indiana Pacers home jersey and shorts, right in his size too.

"Oh man, this is cool Antonio, thanks."

"You're welcome, thanks for the audio book, how did you know I like John Grisham?" Harry looked at Warrick.

“I didn’t really, your smaller cousin told me you liked thrillers. I got one for myself too, though I haven’t had a chance to listen to it yet.” Antonio hesitated for a second.

“Which one did you get for yourself?”

“The Rainmaker, a cool name I thought.” Harry had gotten The Chamber for Antonio.

“I know how this is going to sound, but would you mind trading? I already have The Chamber, my wife got it for me last year, though I haven’t listened to it yet either.” Harry started laughing, though he was nodding his head while doing so.

“I’m not laughing at you Antonio, I just think its funny. Sure, we can trade, no problem. Dobby!” Dobby had been in the kitchen, and instead of popping, just walked the 15 feet over to Harry.

“Yes Harry?” Harry took the box from Antonio.

“Would you please go get from the trunk my audio book called The Rainmaker? It’s in a box just like this, and put this box where the other one was.” That was a nice set of verbal gymnastics, but Dobby got the drift. He was there and back in about 10 seconds, and the trade was made.

“Thanks for the sports kit mate, I’ll use it when I work out for Quidditch.”

“I heard you had fun learning how to shoot earlier.” It was fun, as incompetent as Harry turned out to be at it.

“I wasn’t terrible at it, but I lost at HORSE pretty badly.” Just then Ozzie Coyle, all of seven years old, came running over and demanded a piggy back ride from his huge uncle. Seconds later he was far in the air, as Antonio brought him back to his parents, threatening at all times to break into a run.

Harry slipped off his Weasley sweater, and put on the jersey part of the outfit, looking very hip hop.....no, not really. The jersey was number 99, and had Potter written on the back of it. He was very pleased that Antonio went to all that trouble, though he figured that the tall man had one of the team gofers take care of it.

He eyed his last present, a small box from Sophie. She was looking at him expectantly, though a little nervously. He opened it up, and found, ironically, a watch. It was a pocket watch though, silver on the outside, with a silver chain, and it did not look brand new. Harry's own wristwatch was a $30 thing he had found while in London during his hiding out time in July, so he really could appreciate this.

"Thanks Sophie, this is great." She still looked nervous.

"Open it up Harry." He hadn't done that yet, and did so. It turned out that it wasn't a watch at all, it was a watch/locket, and inside was a picture of the two of them at the dance, posing for one of Winky's photos. Then, as Harry stared at it, the picture changed to one of them cuddling on the couch, then to another one of them studying on the couch, and so on. It was a 20 picture slideshow of them as a couple, including a few that Harry hadn't even known were taken, the photos all moving of course, Wizard style. He reached out his hand while closing it up.

Accio Sophie!

The Sophie in question crashed into Harry, and they fell on the floor in a heap, Harry holding her tightly. He whispered in her ear:

"That is the best present you could have gotten me, thank you." Indeed Harry had been more than a little afraid that she would offer herself up as a Christmas present, and while Harry certainly wanted to explore that topic, he would have felt a little uncomfortable to have it offered as a present. As far as presents went, this ranked just a hair behind the photo album he had gotten from Hagrid, but was ahead of all the others.

“I was really hoping you would like it. I know that guys don’t like wearing locket, so I thought this would be a nice alternative.”

“Oh I love it Sophie, please have not one doubt on that score. There is only one decision to make now.” She looked at him curiously.

“What’s that?”

“Am I going to wear it on my right side or left?” She kissed him.

“We’ll do a private fitting later on, and figure it out.”

“Totally private I hope.” Little Harry was turning into Big Bad Harry James just at the thought, and he subtly shifted his position on the floor so that everyone staring at them wouldn’t notice.

“You can count on it Mr. Potter. Now let’s get off the floor before someone says something.” Too late, as the rest of the gang cat-called them quietly to get a room. Quietly, because a couple of the younger kids were within normal earshot. The two of them got to their feet, and Harry showed around his new keepsake, for lack of a better word to call it. The other two ladies knew all about it of course, but this was the first Warrick and Jonas had seen or heard of it.

“Where did you get it?”

“It’s a family heirloom actually. My grandfather gave it to me way back, not the one who turns out to be a Wizard, but my maternal grandfather. He gave it to me when I was eight, and said that I should only give it to a very special man. I didn’t really know what that meant at the time, but I figured it out eventually. The watch part stopped working a couple of years later, I can’t remember if it just stopped, or if I dropped it one time too many. But I’ve had it with me ever since, I made a point of taking it with me when I left for good. I was trying to think of what to get Harry when I hit on this, and a few charms later, the picture pocket watch was born.” Claudia looked right at Harry, who had a thoughtful look on his face, though not for the reason she thought.

“If you sell this kind of thing at WWW, she gets a cut.” They all laughed, and Harry shook his head.

“This is too classy to be a prank product, but if we ever diversify that much, I promise you royalties.” It wasn’t a half bad idea really, but again, not really in the milieu of WWW.

They just all sat there for a little while, relaxing in the atmosphere, until Ozzie came back over and asked if he could play with Sophie’s racetrack, he had been eying it from across the room for a good 10 minutes now. Her face split into a wide grin, as she grabbed the box with one hand, and Ozzie’s hand with her other one, and they went up to Warrick’s room to set it up. Warrick collected the rest of the kids, and they and the gang decided against a snowball fight in lieu of playing race cars, Harry and Jonas were more than a little relieved at that decision, the idea of sudden movement was still not a good one for Harry. Harry collected some drinks for everyone, and the ten of them had a fun hour with the racetrack, before Ozzie and Elizabeth, age five herself, had to go home. Marty and Keisha stuck around for a little while longer, and they were the first to try out Dobby’s new UNO game, as both kids knew how to play already. Keisha and Marty were both ten years old, the daughter and son of two of Karen Davis Forrester’s sisters, and both were due to start at Great Lakes the following year, as they had each shown enough signs of magic that it was widely assumed that their letters were coming in a few months.

Their UNO experience held them in good stead for a full 20 minutes, and then Dobby cracked the game, and things became more even. They had to leave just when he was about to start thrashing them, but a good time was had by all. Marty and Keisha were good kids, but kind of wild, and were quite thick as thieves, more like brother and sister than cousins, though they did live in the same city, Bloomington. After they went back downstairs, Reiko turned to Warrick.

“Next year is going to be nothing but trouble, with those two let loose on our sleepy little campus.”

“We’d better keep them in line too, otherwise Aunt Grace and Aunt Lina will make me sorry. Their little angels couldn’t possibly cause any problems.” He looked at Harry, who had his ‘scheming’ face on.

“What’s going on in that twisted mind of yours?”

“I’m trying to decide who will take over the WWW sales from me. Should I pick one of them, or split it between them?” Talking about Keisha and Marty.

“You only have over a year to decide that Harry. Besides, you know you’ll open a shop over here.”

“I’ll be too busy with Quidditch probably. Nah, both will be too young for that kind of responsibility. I’ll have to groom some Transition or Apprentice kid to take over until Marty and Keisha are old enough.”

“You’re assuming that they would be interested in the first place.” The subject had not come up during race track time.

“Every kid is interested in money Claudia, especially as easy a money as WWW is.”

“Like you? You don’t even take a cut of WWW sales at school.”

“Because I don’t have to, it’s really very little work, and a few hundred dollars a term is hardly going to make or break me. Beside, I owe Fred and George more than I can ever explain, though they’ll pooh pooh it.” And they did, more times than they could count. Fred and George, at Harry’s explicit direction, pumped all his share of the profits back into the business. They used it for rent, to pay Lee a nice wage, and for portkeys to certain places, to get materials. The twins certainly weren’t set for life yet, but they were well on their way to being pranking moguls. Zonko’s hadn’t made any counter-moves yet, but there were rumors floating about a takeover offer.

The six of them decided that it was a good time to go to Tecumseh, dinner there was less than an hour away. Harry went down in the trunk and grabbed the catalogs for Steve Atwood, as well as a ‘starter kit' for demonstrations and the like. They said their goodbyes, temporary for Warrick and Harry of course, and floored over to Oklahoma, which took about 15 of the craziest seconds of Harry's day. Floo travel was permitted to the school when it was during vacations, and even then only for the family members of a teacher.

They exited in Lisa's office, and Harry again had to resist the urge to poke around. He found teachers' offices fascinating, though only Josh Lyman would actually let him nose around.....and that was likely due to the fact that Harry wasn't taking his subject. Harry and Lyman had taken to meeting for breakfast on Sunday mornings, and continued their lively discussions from the summer, mostly about Britain. Other students were welcome at the table, Claudia always joined them, but the main focus was on the show being given by Harry and Lyman.

The Aylesworths' living quarters abutted their offices, and were quite spare, containing just a bedroom and a living area, in addition to the bathroom. Karl and Lisa were nowhere to be found though, but a note was placed on the door, directing them to the Dining Hall. They walked downstairs and found Karl and Lisa chatting with a couple of the other teachers, as well as some of the students. Fifteen were staying over this holiday, all of them with family situations similar to Sophie or Claudia.....plus Steve Atwood, who had no family period, his parents having died when he was nine years old. The parents saw them come in the door, and walked over to greet them.

"Merry Christmas you lot.....lot is what you say, right Harry?" For the most part Harry was amused when his British-isms got thrown back at him, but he decided to have a little fun here.

"No, you say 'lote'. Like tote, only with an 'L'" He could say Karl preparing to start practicing it, when his daughter rescued him.

"Don't listen to a word he says Daddy, Merry Christmas." She hugged her parents, they not having been awake when the three girls left. They were staying in one of the guest rooms upstairs, but had used the office floo to get to Warrick's.

“Merry Christmas Reiko, did you LOT have a good time over there?” Over there meant Britain, not the Forresters’, and Karl winked at Harry with the ‘lot’ emphasis.

“It was interesting Daddy, we’re glad we went.” The standard company line, and it worked.

“Glad to hear it, you boys are moving normally, didn’t have too much to eat?” Harry and Jonas both rolled their eyes.

“How many people do I have to hear about that from today?”

“Probably a few more, how does it feel to be a legend?” Everybody was a comedian.

“Dinner’s going to be a little early tonight, go get settled.” He and Lisa walked over to check on the kitchen. Harry saw Steve Atwood eying him, and motioned him over. Steve was a medium everything kind of guy looks-wise, and quite bright if put in the right circumstance. He was toward the top of his class, and already planned to be a stockbroker or a money manager when he got out of school. He looked at Harry excitedly.

“Well, did they go for it?”

“Your terms were acceptable. Their only message was: ‘The sooner you get selling, the sooner you make money.’ Congrats Steve, you are now the seventh human employee of Weasleys Wizarding Wheezes.” Seventh, after the twins, Harry, Lee, Ron, and Ginny.....though Ron’s employment would probably still be in flux for the next few months, Harry wouldn’t put it past Fred and George to fire him again soon. Harry shook Steve’s hand heartily.

“Cool, I can’t wait to start selling, this will be good experience for me. Oh yeah, I forgot to ask, what about an employee discount?” That was tricky, since technically there wasn't one. Harry got his stuff free, and Ginny wasn't really big on pranking, nor was Lee. Harry genuinely hadn't thought of it, but made up something on the spot.

"Get selling first, and I'll see what the twins will find acceptable. There will be some kind of oath to be sworn obviously, so you don't start selling your discounted stuff." Steve just waved that off.

"No problem, just gin something up and I'll sign or swear, whichever. Do I have a quota to meet?" More uncharted territory, as Harry and the twins hadn't spent 20 seconds discussing the situation.

"Not at first, since this is a new market for us. Ask me again in a couple of months. Now what will happen is this: You put up the posters and do some demonstrations, drop my name if you have to, I don't mind it being used to sell WWW stuff. Twice a week Dobby will come by and see if there are any orders, if so, make sure he gets them. He'll deliver the goods back to you, and you distribute it to your customers. Any questions between his visits, see one of the Professors Aylesworth, since my owl Hedwig shuttles letters back and forth between Reiko and them. Any questions?" Atwood couldn't think of any right off hand.

"Nope, we're good. Now do I take my commission right off the top? Or wait?"

"Take it right off the top, but provide strict accounting paperwork for us. We're using this as a test market for this kind of thing, and your input will be invaluable. If things go smooth, you'll have this job for 2 ½ years no problem. In about 18 months we'll ask you to start thinking about your replacement, and to start grooming him, her, or them."

"Works for me."

"Now Steve, you know that I have to say something like this, so I'll just say it: Any funny business, and you answer to your customers, and I will do everything I can to help them get you. Understood?"

Harry said this in a flat tone of voice, with only a hint of threat, but his young employee didn't take it personally.

"Understood dude, no worries, as our Australian friends say." Michael Steele, born in Melbourne, said it all the time, though since he left as a baby he had no accent.

"Now, you're my boss right?"

"I suppose so, though this will likely be the last time we see each other before summertime, unless I come back sometime in the next week and a half. You'll deal with Dobby for the most part, and he's quite clever and resourceful.....and dangerous, he's almost killed me a couple of times." He left that last sentence unexplained, and walked off with an intrigued Steve behind him, contemplating. Oh it was good to be thought of as dangerous sometimes, Harry thought gleefully.

Dinner was a usual school holiday dinner, so nothing new for Harry or the others, who had experienced quite a few of them. Harry and Jonas each had one plate of food and one of dessert, but somehow managed to eat them without incident. Talk revolved around the school, and Harry learned quite a bit about the dynamics of Tecumseh compared with Great Lakes. There was a lot of political maneuvering amongst the schools, as Sophie had alluded to during their tour in August, and Harry learned that being a senior teacher, as Karl and Lisa both were, meant getting hip deep in that sort of thing. It turned out that Tecumseh's Deputy Headmistress, a 56 year old witch named Nicole Dolezel, was talking about retiring soon, and Lisa was being urged by many to go after the job. Karl wanted no part of it himself, but was one of those in favor of his wife applying. There was not a strict ratio among the Heads and Deputy Heads, where one had to be male and one female, but it was hardly a coincidence that three of the schools had it that way. Only Pathfinder, with two newly hired Wizards, broke that trend.

The meal ended at about the hour mark, and the gang and parents went back to Aylesworth Corner, as everyone around school called it, they being the only married couple amongst the faculty. They played around with Reiko's new board games, as Reiko, Claudia, Karl, and Warrick played Shogun, with the others playing Risk. There were frequent interruptions by players of one game to kibitz the other, and a good time was had by all. Jonas took off a little early, the lure of having his large house to himself was too much to resist. As Harry and Warrick were about to leave an hour later, still having gotten no nookie from their women on the day, Karl stopped them, and asked for a word in private. Eyebrows raised, the two agreed readily, and the three of them walked out into the corridor. Karl first turned to Warrick.

"That was a nice present you gave Reiko, but the biggest one you give her is that you make her very happy. I know I'm supposed to be the protective father here, but I want you to know I'm in your corner. Same with you Harry, as I'm for all intents and purposes the adult male figure in Sophie's life, non-Great Lakes category. I'm glad you made your escape from over there, if only for Sophie's sake." Both boys were moved by this speech, and said so.

"Thank you Karl, I appreciate that."

"Me too Karl, you know I'll continue to treat your daughter right."

"You're welcome boys. Now I want to ask you about something Harry, how much did that trunk of yours cost?" It had been all he could do not to ask about it during the board games, but Lisa still didn't know how seriously he was contemplating a purchase. Karl and Lisa made the exact same salary, as they had the same seniority, they rotated the Advanced classes, and each had a private fund for frivolous spending. Karl was now trying to ascertain how much of his fund would need to be spent.

"The one I got for the island cost 1,400 galleons, which is roughly $10,000. Why? Are you thinking of buying one?"

"I am, though that's a little more than I had thought to pay. Anyone with a trunk like that can use that floo?"

“Yes, but only that kind of floo, they aren’t hooked into the regular floo system.”

“That’s too bad, but no matter.” Harry had a thought.

“You know, if you get one, you’re welcome to use the island whenever you want to.” Karl had thought of that, and had figured that Harry would make that kind of offer. It was still a nice gesture though.

“Thank you, I appreciate that Harry. Now how much hassle would it be to get a trunk if I decide to?”

“Not much hassle at all really, just let me know and I can have Dobby or one of the twins get it. I mean, assuming the time zones work, you could have it an hour after you get me the cash.” That was fast action.

“I’m going to talk to Reiko’s mother about it, and I’ll get back to you. I think something like that has a lot of value, and would be potentially very handy to have around.” He didn’t explain his ‘bomb shelter’ comparison, and was relieved when neither boy asked.

“Tell you what Karl, when do you relinquish acting Head duties?”

“Professor Dolezel is due back tomorrow, why?”

“Why don’t you and Lisa take a day on the island, just the two of you. Say, Friday, when Sophie and Reiko are off with mother Weir. All you have to do is floo over to Warrick’s, and we’ll get you situated from there.” Karl just held up a finger, and went back inside for a minute. He came out smiling.

“That’s a plan, we’ll take you up on it. Thanks, that’s very nice of you Harry.”

“You’re welcome, just come by whenever you want, and if Warrick and I aren’t there, Dobby and Winky will do the honors.” Karl nodded, and soon thereafter the two of them floored back to Indianapolis.

Warrick and Harry got their private time with Reiko and Sophie this day, as all six of them went to the island for a day in the sun. Harry/Sophie and Warrick/Reiko each staked out their own spots on the island, leaving Claudia and Jonas to their own devices for a few hours. Nothing amorous happened, but the two of them were now back to normal finally, with Claudia now able to tease Jonas about his witches of the day. This is not to say that Jonas did not get his Ray Elwood shots in, but they were soundly deflected. They resisted temptation to try to prank the couples, and were rewarded when Harry decided that life was too short, and quiet time with Sophie too precious, to prank them in this time and place.

Forrester House

8:30 am

Claudia tumbled out of the floo into an empty living room. She looked around, not seeing either Warrick or Harry, and not hearing any noise from the kitchen, headed upstairs, more on impulse than anything else. Warrick never locked his bedroom door, a pointless exercise in a world with Alohomora, and she walked in to find Warrick still asleep.....but the top bunk was empty. She shook Warrick awake inside a few seconds. To say that he was not pleased to see her was one of life's understatements.

“What the hell do you think you’re doing? I was in the middle of the best dream, Reiko and I were.....” He didn’t get a chance to finish before Claudia interrupted him, not wanting any graphic details.

“Where is Harry? He had better not be following Sophie.” Warrick rubbed the sleep from his eyes for a moment before answering, though it was not the answer that Claudia was expecting.

“Why the hell did you barge into my room uninvited? Have you heard of knocking?” Claudia was brought up short by Warrick going on the offensive like this, and on such short notice. Still, she gave both barrels back to him.

“Don’t change the subject, where’s Harry?” Warrick was still only half awake, and this was not the type of alarm clock to warm his heart.

“None of your damn business for the moment, now get downstairs and I’ll be with you in a minute. Unless you’d like to watch me pee?” In point of fact, Claudia did not want to witness this, so, red faced, she went downstairs and sat on the couch, fuming. Warrick took his sweet time in the bathroom, brushing his teeth as well, before putting on some shorts and a t-shirt, and slowly walking downstairs. He stood in front of his friend, arms folded, though on the inside he was chortling.

“Now in answer to your questions, Harry is not following Sophie right now.” Claudia waited for him to go into further detail, but he didn’t. She asked the obvious.

“Where is he then?”

“And how is that any of your business?” Warrick had spoken to her like this before, but not very often. Claudia’s leadership of the gang had been abrogated for the most part, though not necessarily to Harry. Harry was the leader when it came to pranks and out of town trips, but otherwise the group was now more or less without a head. Warrick and Jonas now felt a lot more free to do what they wished, and throw their input around, with Harry making the male/female ratio even. All of this had not escaped Claudia’s attention mind you, and she was adjusting accordingly, and without a whole lot of rancor. She softened her approach in this instance particularly, though she was getting suspicious for other reasons.

“Warrick, c’mon. What’s the big deal?” This succeeded somewhat, though Warrick had really just been busting her chops for her earlier entrance, and making a point or seven.

“He’s in Britain right now, he wanted to talk to that Travis Biller guy, the one who was in the med station that night. He, Jonas, and I promised Reiko that we wouldn’t try any funny business with Sophie’s visit, and believe or not, we’re men of our word.” Claudia, no dummy, caught the loophole in that statement, and proceeded to drive the proverbial truck through it.

“So whose tailing them then? Dobby? Winky?” Warrick started chuckling, Claudia was pretty quick, probably more savvy than Reiko and Sophie in a lot of ways.

“Both of them actually. They can walk around and not be seen, so we figured what’s the harm. They’ll only step in if it looks like something bad is going down, and they know that. Now tell me a downside to that?” Claudia, in point of fact, could not, and conceded the point.

“All right, all right, I can see why you guys would want to do that. Those two are very handy to have around. I think the rest of us need to find some offbeat house elves when we graduate. I’m sorry for getting in your face before.” The apology wasn’t perfunctory, so Warrick easily accepted it.

“No problem. Thank your lucky stars I wear pajamas though, or you would have gotten a show. Your first stop was the Steeles’?” The whole following thing had been Jonas’ idea in the first place, and Reiko surely would have told her this.

“It was, Jonas is in the office with his dad again. He’s been doing that a lot lately during the holiday, I wonder what’s up with that? He never showed much of an interest before.”

“I think one of his asshole cousins has got his eye on the business, thinking that Jonas is going to ignore everything and play Quodpot for 15 years. Our boy is just feeling a little proprietary is all. Plus, I think those twins have infected him. They’ve shown that you can run a business and have a good time simultaneously. I have to admit that they may be on to something.” Claudia nodded, and tried to steer the conversation back to Harry.

“So what did he want with Travis Biller?”

Flashback to the previous day.

Dear Travis,

Hello there, I hope this note finds you well, and that you had a peaceful Christmas. There is something I'd like to talk to you about, and I would prefer to do it face to face. It's nothing heinous or security related though, or anything of that nature. I was wondering if I could buy you lunch at The Leaky Cauldron and we could talk there. I can come in via portkey at the time of your choosing, just let me know when.

Thanks,

Harry Potter

Dear Harry,

Christmas was very quiet here, thanks for asking, I can hardly believe it myself. Your letter certainly was intriguing, and I'm happy to have a chat with you. I'm not free for lunch tomorrow, but I do have a thing at the Auror Academy in the early afternoon. Why don't you come with me and get a lay of the land, and we can talk there. There are few more secure places in our little corner of the world than there. If this is fine, just plan to meet me at WWW at 2:00 pm. If not, send Dobby back and we'll work out an alternate arrangement.

Looking forward to it,

Travis Biller

At a few minutes before the appointed time, a still sleepy eyed Harry came into the front of the shop. The twins weren't around, they were doing some buying of supplies, so Harry had a chat with Lee Jordan. Lee was in the know about the trunk system, so Harry didn't have to make up a story of how he got there. He was still dating the muggle woman that the twins had talked about during the island getaway, but was not any closer to telling her about his magic, wondering how and when to go about it. Harry had no advice to give on that score, he found it difficult to believe he could ever want to date a muggle now, especially given his experience with Sophie's father. The one downside to that attitude was that it greatly narrowed one's romantic choices, but there was a price to pay for everything really.

There weren't any customers in WWW at that moment, and Harry took a good look around at all the displays, finding it a bit odd to be here in the daytime, he usually came at night in the UK. He was pleased to note that the display for Harry Potter's DIY Howler Kit was nice and large, and prominently located. The twins had done a hard sell one Sunday night before the holiday, convincing him to put his name on it, but in the end he had acquiesced. He was rather proud that on at least one occasion he could provide creative ideas on what to sell, not just how to sell it. Lee informed him that the product was now the best selling one in the shop, and only the Talking Temporary Tattoos were even close, and that's only because the twins added a few that were X-rated, language wise. This appealed to the early 20's crowd, a relatively untapped market that WWW was now trying to reach.

At a minute past the hour, Travis entered the shop. He spotted the two of them at the counter, and walked over.

"Harry, good to see you." They shook hands.

"Likewise Travis, do you know Lee Jordan?" Both of the other men nodded greetings to each other.

"We've met, how goes the pranking business Lee?"

"Just great Travis, thanks. Our young friend here is a big help. He's opened up another American pipeline for us." Harry gave Travis the 30 second report on Steve Atwood. Biller chuckled out loud, but inside he was not too pleased, he really wanted Harry as an Auror when the time came, and the bigger WWW became, the less likely his hopes would be realized.

“You ready to go?”

“Sure, we going by portkey?”

“We are, it’s the only way to get there. There is no floo access to The Isle of Man, since all we have there is the Academy, and we need to keep it secure.” He took a length of bungee cord from his robe pocket and motioned Harry to grab on.

“Um, you guys might want to do that outside the shop, we have wards against portkeys and Apparition in here, you know, just in case.” The twins had told Harry about this, but it had slipped his mind this early in his American morning. They also had hidden Dark Detectors in every corner and on various spots on the ceiling, but that was privileged information that Biller didn’t really need to know about. Harry and Travis walked outside a couple of steps, and before anyone could spot Harry:

“Activate!”

They did the requisite spinning, and wound up outside a nondescript brick building, with a lovely view of the water though. There was a small hole in the wall, next to the one door, and Biller put his wand through it. The door gave off a glow, and Travis opened it.

“One of our security precautions, only someone from the DMLE or the faculty here can open it.”

“The students can’t?”

“ No they can’t, they’re not allowed outside without special permission, and even then always with a chaperone. The island is not that big compared to the mainland or Ireland, and we do rather stand out in a crowd. The rest of the island is all muggle of course.” Biller was wearing his Auror robes, while Harry had on his winter parka over his Weasley sweater and a pair of jeans. They walked inside, with Biller re-locking the door behind them.

“Why put it here then? Why not someplace in the Orkneys or somewhere like that?” Biller had no idea really, just a theory or two.

“Who can say? Some Minister of Magic or DMLE Head at some point in time must have been a Manxman perhaps, or liked coming here on holiday.” The building they were entering had a very high ceiling, though it was not apparent from the outside, it was done magically. It was so high, in fact, that Harry idly wondered if they taught flying combat in here. He had never heard of anything like that, it’s not something that Ripley had ever mentioned in class, though he had not gone into great detail about American Auror training. Harry did not know this yet, but the first day of Basic Combat as a Senior/Seventh Year was always a tour of the American Auror Academy and a lecture from its Auror in Charge.

“I know I should have asked before now, but what is it you have to do here today?” They walked down one of the hallways, toward what appeared to be a medium size conference room at the end. Harry could see a group of people in it, all wearing bright red robes.

“I have to give a talk about our Hogsmeade victory from last month. Did one of the twins show you a memory of it?”

“They did, a great victory for our side. I was sorry about Hestia and Daedulus though, I liked them.” He did not know the other two Order members who had died, both having been recent recruits. Travis looked thoughtful for a moment.

“I did my Academy work here with Hestia, she was a good Auror, and a good friend. Your boys both fought well though, Tonks was raving about them afterward.”

“They know what to do when the chips are down.”

“You’ve trained them well.” Harry waved that off.

“Everyone exaggerates that, including Fred and George, wait, especially Fred and George. I was better for them than any of our Defense teachers, I'll admit to that much, but that isn't saying a whole lot." Travis stopped outside the door, waiting before opening it.

"Harry, you don't seem to get it. You're an example. That's why you inspire people like you do. You don't rant and rave, you don't pontificate or make promises you either can't or won't keep.....you act, and you apparently don't realize how rare that is in our little world. That's why the twins and your other friends have followed you, that's why Rufus was so eager to get you in The League."

"Yet when all I did was act, I kept getting into one mess after another." True, but that was beside the point, thought Travis.

"Nobody said you were perfect Harry, but you are decisive, and that attracts followers. Look at the way you left the country. Now yes, I know that Peter Tyson advised you, and I'm sure Bill Weasley was involved too, but the decisions were ultimately yours, and it came off without a hitch. It got Snape put into a wall, then arrested for crying out loud, that alone would get you a hero's parade down the main drag of Diagon Alley if you had wanted it.. Yes, you got some flack for leaving, but not that much, and I bet half your Howlers were from crackpots who send one to Rufus every day. Now I don't have much use or respect for that Order of Dumbledore's, but I tell you this: if you had stuck around and formed a splinter faction, it would have been twice the size of Dumbledore's, not counting defections from him to you." This rocked Harry, coming from a neutral observer, and a professional Dark Wizard fighter to boot.

"You really think so?" Biller leaned close, and whispered, after making sure that no one inside the conference room was trying to listen in.

"I do, and that's why the old man is scared shitless of you, and I'm betting our friend Voldemort is as well, though both will pretend otherwise. Dumbledore kept you under tight wraps the last two summers because he was afraid of what's happening now, that his weapon would begin to think for himself." In all his anger/hate/resentment filled thinking about Dumbledore, it had never really occurred to him that the old man was scared of him. This would bear thinking about, if only for an avenue to torment Dumbledore, he didn't think the Howler assault had bothered his old Headmaster too much, if at all.

"Anyway, let's get inside, we are beginning to attract some undue attention to ourselves out here." Without further ado, he opened the door and walked in, with Harry following, closing the door behind him. There were about 25 men and women in red robes seated in the conference room, though all stood when Biller entered the room. There were two classes at the Academy, a first year group and a second year one, and the class sizes varied depending on the needs of the various governments: Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and Ireland. The course officially was two years plus, the plus being the trials. The trials were a set of tests, performances, and other duties that each trainee had to pass in order to become full fledged Aurors for their respective countries. The trials could be completed in as few as three weeks, or take up to a year, depending on the aptitude of the student, and sometimes on blind luck. The Auror-in-Charge of the Academy, and Governor of all this, was currently a 45 year old New Zealander named Craig Parker, and he re-introduced Biller to this class, the first year one.

"You all remember Travis Biller, the Head Auror for the British Department of Magical Law Enforcement. He's here to talk to you about the Battle of Hogsmeade Village that took place a few weeks ago."

"Sit down people, sit down. This is my friend Harry Potter, he'll be observing today." Everyone in the room knew who Harry was in some shape or manner, hence the simple introduction. Biller's lecture gave the background history of the war, and described how Fenrir Greyback's forces fit into the picture, and how they were allied and used by Voldemort. Harry found out some interesting facts about the aftermath, namely that the alliance between Voldemort and Greyback seemed to have disintegrated. It seemed that the werewolf was suspicious that the bad man had set him up for destruction, something heightened by Voldemort's refusal to part with the 50,000 galleons that the werewolf felt was owed him. The deal had been half upfront, and half upon completion of a successful attack.....and to call that attack successful, well it just couldn't be done.

How Biller knew all this was that the DMLE now had a mole in Greyback's organization, though he wouldn't admit that in front of the students, or even Harry. The mole was Castor Archer, the large werewolf who lost his sister in the attack. In fact his sister had been killed by one of his fellow lycans, and that had devastated him, forcing him to reevaluate his role in the fight. He made contact with Biller and, without any promise of payment, started funneling him information. Archer made it clear from jump though, that Remus Lupin was not to be told, nor was The Order of the Phoenix. Greyback had dropped so many hints about Lupin's potential loyalty problems that Archer had started to believe them, and everyone knew that the Order was probably infiltrated by Voldemort's people at the very least. Biller had still coerced Bones and Scrimgeour into coughing up some payment for his new informant, something that was relatively easy to facilitate, as the werewolves did not live together in one big commune, rather in individual homes. Dumbledore's vision of some big Greyback hideaway was mistaken, though the head werewolf did not mind the impression.

For the next part of his talk, Biller used a pensieve already delivered to show three different viewpoints of the battle. Used were his own memory, plus ones from Tonks and Auror Sanford Jenkins, who by chance had been the first Auror to make contact with the enemy. Harry was fascinated by all three memories, especially the part in Tonks' where she and the twins had nailed three Death Eaters at point blank range with the killing curse. He had a very visceral reaction when Edward Grant tore apart Hestia Jones, and cheered along with the others, involuntarily for most of them, when the Death Eaters went into full retreat. Biller ended the lecture by describing what the Ministry and its DMLE were doing at present to protect the populace. It turned out that a decision on Hogsmeade was still being debated in the still reduced Wizengamot, and all it's denizens and businesses had been transferred to London and Diagon Alley respectively. The total presentation lasted almost two hours, and Harry found it quite fascinating, Travis had a strong Scottish brogue that made Harry more than a little nostalgic. Biller took questions for another half hour, though Harry still kept silent during this time too, feeling that it was not his place. Even so, the two dozen plus students asked pretty much everything he would have wanted to anyway, and he could always ask Biller privately if he thought of something.

The meeting broke up at just after 4:30 pm GMT, and the students filed out of the room. The Hogwarts alumni, which numbered six in this class, all had a friendly word for Harry as they left, even though the younger man could only put names to four of them, and wasn't too familiar even with them. Soon it was just Travis, Harry, and Craig Parker in the room, as the two Aurors were finishing up some housekeeping details. After a couple of minutes, Parker shook Harry's hand and said his goodbyes, saying that he hoped he and Harry would meet again sometime, as his term at the Academy still had a little over two years left to run.

"So what did you think Harry?"

"Very interesting, seeing a battle like that from a memory. Now I understand why people were so quiet while I showed my memory in the hospital room. Very riveting, kind of like a snuff film." Obviously he did not mean riveting in a good way. Biller looked curiously at him.

"What's a snuff film?"

"I just heard the term recently myself, it's a muggle film of an actual murder, not one re-created with actors or anything. Snuffing someone out is another term for killing them."

"And they film that kind of thing? Those muggles really are barbarians sometimes." After watching the carnage in that memory, Harry thought no one in the Magical World should be even picking up a stone, much less throwing one, but he kept that sentiment to himself for the time being.

"I gather that they're pretty rare in any case, more an urban legend than anything."

"I would hope so. Anyway, sorry about the rush getting over here, this got moved up since I sent that letter to you. What did you want to talk with me about?" Travis was assuming something about the war, Rufus, or Dumbledore, or any combination of the three. What he was not expecting was Harry's reply.

"I was hoping that you could tell me about my parents." A shocked look appeared on Travis' face.

"About James and Lily?" Harry couldn't help but smile.

"Imagine my surprise if they are not one and the same. Yes, I would like you to, if you don't mind."

"Well I'll be glad to, of course, but I'm sure Remus Lupin could tell you much more than I ever could." Harry now stopped smiling, surprising Travis.

"I'm sure he could too, but he doesn't seem too willing. Either there's a skeleton there somewhere that he does not want to unearth, or he genuinely finds the subject to be too painful. Sirius Black was the same way, I could never get much more than vague generalities out of him, no matter how hard I pressed him about it, and there were a few times when I pressed really hard. When I say 'tell me about them', I'm not talking adventures, or even stories.....I mean, just what were they like as people? No one will tell me that kind of stuff Travis, and it's very frustrating. When you told me in the med station that they would have been proud of me, well that got me to thinking, and that's why we're here today. It's one of the few things that would have gotten to me to show my face in Wizard Britain this winter." That and the Weasleys, but that was private, not public, Harry thought.

"Well sure Harry, I guess I'm still a bit rocked that you don't know much about them. At least tell me that you have, or have seen, pictures of them."

"That is one thing I have of them, yes. After first year Hagrid put together a photo album for me."

"Not to change the subject for a second, but how have you and he been since the breach?"

“I’ve sent him a couple of letters, trying to explain things from my side, but nothing back from him. Neville writes that he won’t even say my name out loud.” Hermione rarely mentioned Hagrid in her letters, as she had declined to continue with Care of Magical Creatures. Said class had been Ron’s best OWL score, so he had carried on with it, as had Neville, though Ron’s letters averaged about five sentences each, so there wasn’t much space to talk about a whole lot beyond Quidditch and Hermione.

“He owes Dumbledore big time though Harry, so don’t be too hard on him, Dumbledore gave him a life.”

“I’m not hard on him Travis, don’t worry. Out of sight, out of mind.” And he was, outside of telling Hogwarts stories, Harry rarely thought about Hagrid anymore. A bit cold perhaps, but the gentle half-giant had been the one to cut things off, and Harry had no interest in begging.

“Fair enough, back to Lily and James. What were they like? I mean do you want something more specific?” Harry threw out the first thing that came to mind.

“Who was nicer?”

“Lily, and it’s not even close. That’s not saying James was a wanker, but no one was nicer than Lily. Even when she was a second year she was helping the firsties, way before she was ever made Prefect. I doubt I would have made it to class the first day if she hadn’t helped me.”

“So he wasn’t a wanker?”

“No he wasn’t.....well not as a whole anyway. Every teenage kid is a wanker at some point, even you are if you look at it right. Look, I’ve heard about that pensieve memory that Snape showed you, the Snivellus one, and that memory is not representative of James, at least on the whole. That’s how he was with Snape mind you, but if anyone deserved it, it’s Snape.”

“How did you know about that? How did you know that Snape had let me see that?”

“Dumbledore mentioned it right after you took off back in August. He was talking to Bones about it, and I happened to be there. I gather that Snape had confessed to him that he let you see it, hoping it would make you dislike James.”

“It did, for quite awhile.”

“Snape isn’t totally devoid of cleverness you know, of course the old man was an idiot letting you two be alone together for that long a time. I’m only surprised he didn’t let you see it earlier. Imagine letting Snape loose inside your mind, I swear Harry, when my kids are old enough, I’m not sending them to Hogwarts.”

“I know Dad wasn’t the git I saw in the memory, but it rocked me to see how cocky he was.”

“Well he was to Snape, but it was not at all one-sided. Snape and his cronies were just as nasty to Gryffindors and Hufflepuffs as well, even more so if you want one biased opinion. Snape was the worst though, because he was the leader. He corrupted a lot of Slytherins in his day, especially his last two or three years, more than a few turned out to be good soldiers for Voldemort.”

“So why did Dumbledore believe him when he said he turned?”

“Like I told you back in September Harry, because he really wanted to believe that Snape had turned. It was considered quite a triumph for our side, at least to those who knew about it.” Harry had often thought of that argument, but just couldn’t believe that Dumbledore was so naïve as to believe in hope, at least when it came to a hardcore Death Eater.

“So he wanted to be seen as Snape’s savior or something like that?”

“In a sense. Dumbledore, for all his myriad of faults, really does want the best for people. The thing is, his filter has gone faulty, and he has a hard time judging who’s playing him and who isn’t.”

“He sniffed out the Snape thing last month didn’t he?” Travis rolled his eyes.

“That was just Voldemort and Snape being careless, they thought they could pull anything they wanted on the old man. I wonder how bad Snape got tortured afterward?”

“I thought you had someone selling you information?”

“We do, but the bad man wouldn’t do that kind of thing in front of the other troops. Besides, we only buy specific pieces of intelligence, not Death Eater gossip.”

“That makes sense, only so much fat on the calf I guess.”

“Things are much better under Rufus, or at least more professional. Anyway, back to James and Lily.”

“How did Dad and Dumbledore get along?”

“Pretty well toward the end, especially after he and Lily got together. The Head Boy and Girl had a lot of clout back then, and the three of them all seemed to be pretty tight. Remember, Lily was hired as a teacher pretty quickly, after only one year out of school, so she and Dumbledore had to have gotten along really well in order for that to happen.”

“You said ‘toward the end’?”

“Well James and his buddies were hell raisers for a long time, and nearly set records for detentions. McGonagall in particular was hard on them, the guys being in her house.”

“I can certainly understand that.” Like most people, Travis had heard about the Howler campaign, and the McGonagall aspect of it in particular, and it brought a smile to his face to see Harry’s reaction to a mention of her.

“She didn’t like Snape either, don’t worry. He had to clean her classroom more times than I could count. I was amused when I heard that the old man hired him, forcing Snape to work with a faculty that all had loathed him as a student just a few years earlier.”

“How did Dumbledore and Snape get along when Greasy was a student?” Travis hesitated, as if unsure how much conjecture to put into his answer.

“They were somewhat diplomatic with each other, surprisingly enough. While under Snape’s influence, the nastier Slytherins didn’t take too many potshots at the old man, and Dumbledore recognized that he needed Snape to keep those people in line, so he took a hands off approach.” Oh my goodness, thought Harry. That explained so much.

“What about the head of Slytherin?” Biller started laughing sarcastically.

“Ah yes, Desmond Askew, the Potions Master.....oh brother. He tried very hard to act the part of a hardcore Slytherin, but he was kind of a joke. I also think that Askew was kind of afraid of Snape too, at least in the last couple of years, though Greasy did nominally defer to him. Because I wanted to be an Auror, I had to take Potions all the way through, so I sympathize with you putting up with Snape all those years. Askew wasn’t a half bad teacher mind you, I mean when he could be bothered, he knew what he was doing. Dumbledore wouldn’t put up with crappy teaching, not in that class. Defense yes, Potions no.”

“What wound up happening to him? Did Snivellus replace him?” He knew that this was one of those things that he should know already, but he had never actually read ‘Hogwarts: A History’, no matter how often Hermione had hectored him to. Maybe he should now, sometime during the break.

“Yes he did replace him, after Askew was killed.” Huh?

“Killed? How? Wasn’t the war over by then?”

“He was killed by a jealous husband Harry, he was putting his wand where it didn’t belong.” Harry was caught short for a second, then doubled over in laughter.

“You cannot be serious, really?”

“Oh my yes Harry, I was one of the arresting Aurors. I was in Rufus’ crew then, and we had to bring the husband, who shall remain nameless, as you’ve likely heard of him, to trial. He was acquitted of course, he hadn’t used anything more than Mobilicorpus...he flung him and the wife around the room. The wife survived, she was most willing to allow Desmond free reign, so to speak. Desmond didn’t though, and Snape was brought in a few days later, much to everyone’s horror of course.” Harry, though fascinated by the change of subject, brought things back around to his father.

“Was he a good Quidditch player? Dad I mean.”

“I was going to say, Snape didn’t know which end of a broom to get on.”

“I know, I know, I’ve gotten away from the original subject.”

“It’s okay, you have to deal with the idea of Snape and Dumbledore in your present, it’s only natural to want some insight into them. James was a great Quidditch player, he played professionally remember. He was our best Chaser for years, and on the team for six. I made the team my second year too, I played Beater.”

“What about Mom, did she ever fly?”

“She did for fun, but she never went out for Quidditch. She said that flying was great stress relief.” Sophie had said the same thing to Harry months earlier, though he only vaguely remembered it.

“Was she popular with the others?”

“Harry, everyone liked Lily Evans, trust me. Well the Slytherins didn’t, since she was muggleborn, but this was during a period of time when the faculty actually looked out for those kinds of students, so there were no incidents. The word ‘mudblood’ was guaranteed to get the user a detention.”

“Why isn’t it like that anymore?”

“Who knows? It’s a different world now from when I was in school. A different Hogwarts.”

“Not for the better I’m thinking.” Travis just shook his head sadly.

“No Harry, not for the better at all. I mean there are still some good teachers there, Flitwick, Sprout, even McGonagall is a good instructor, however her failings as an administrator.”

“I wonder what my mom was like as a teacher, I need to find someone who had her and visit them with a pensieve.”

“Look no further Harry, my wife had her in third year. I’ll see what I can do about getting you some memories of that.” It was all Harry could do not to start misting up at hearing that. Photos were one thing, but a memory was quite another.

“Thank you Travis.” The gratitude was palpable, and Biller had rarely felt more sorry for any kid than he did this one.

“Look Harry, I’m going to speak to Lupin about this, and at least find out why he’s been hiding this part of your life from you.”

“I just figured that Dumbledore told him to or something.”

“That’s no excuse, there is pressure I can bring against Lupin, so expect a heart to heart the next time you come back over here. I know he can’t go over there to see you.”

“He would only be tripping about two dozen wards and alarms.”

“That few?” Harry laughed.

“What were the four of them like? The Marauders?” Biller gave Harry a sad look.

“Go ahead Harry, ask it, it’s okay.” Harry went quiet, thinking.

“Yes, okay I will. Was there any hint that Pettigrew was turning Dark? Was there an inkling by anyone? On this subject I couldn’t get a syllable out of Sirius or Remus, much less a word.”

“Hindsight is always 20/20, as the muggle saying goes. Yes Harry, in retrospect there were things that might have looked suspicious if looked at in precisely the right way, and I’m sure that was one thing that drove Black almost suicidal while he was in Azkaban.....remember, he had a long time to work it out in his mind, being in there 12 years and all. Remus was probably similar, and I have no doubt that it contributed to his vagabond life.”

“What signs?”

“Harry, you have to understand something about Peter Pettigrew, and I’m in no way, shape, or form excusing what he did.....but he was the fifth wheel in that group, the least powerful Wizard in that crowd, at least compared with James, Sirius, Remus, and eventually Lily. In a way he’s a bit like your friend Neville.”

“Neville is probably more powerful than the others though, except for me.”

“But he never believed it, not until last year. Pettigrew was the same way, he always felt that he would be in their shadow. And unlike Neville, he did not have a strong family to give him guidance. Pettigrew’s family were minor Wizards, and a lot of their progeny turned out squibs. To come up with someone as smart and powerful as Peter.....well they weren’t prepared for it, and more or less left it to the Blacks and Potters to guide him. You know what the Blacks were like, and James’ family just had a hard time taking Pettigrew seriously.”

“So that’s all it is? A lack of guidance?”

“Think about yourself Harry, what would you be like right now if not for the Weasleys or Hermione Granger? Given all you had to deal with: Dursleys, Snape, Dumbledore, Voldemort. How would you have wound up? Perhaps not in Azkaban, or even in self-imposed exile, but you would not be the better for it. You might even be a more lethal version of Draco Malfoy.”

“No, I see your point. But didn’t Pettigrew have Dad and Sirius, and Remus?”

“Yes, but Remus turned out to have his own issues, and James and Sirius weren’t the protective sort. Oh Pettigrew was fully one of them, but they never really loved him, like they did each other.....not that kind of love of course, you know what I mean.”

“I do, don’t worry.”

“ Anyway, it was probably mostly in Pettigrew’s mind, some imagined slights, or maybe even real ones, I don’t know. I wasn’t around them enough to know what went on privately.”

“Was Pettigrew popular?”

“Because of the others, sure. He was a decent enough guy though, he wasn’t nasty to the younger years, and he was a good student. Look Harry, if your dad, Sirius, and Remus couldn’t figure it out, then no one could, I mean they made him Secret Keeper for crying out loud. Pettigrew hid his demons very, very skillfully. He may not have been the best brain of the five of them, really he was the least, but ultimately he proved to be the most clever and cunning..” Harry sat there for a minute and pondered that.

“Did you consider Dad to be a friend?”

“Oh sure, I was a guest at his and Lily’s wedding.”

“I’ll have to look through the pictures for you, I don’t use that album too much, it’s kind of hard to look at.” Biller smiled ruefully.

“I can only imagine Harry.”

“Do you have any children?”

“My wife is expecting our first, she’s due in about four more months.”

“What does she do?”

“She’s a Chaser for the Holyhead Harpies, or she was anyway. She’s on maternity leave now, but she’ll be back next season. Rebecca is a few years younger than me, and we wanted to wait until she was on the downside of her playing career before trying for a family.”

“I’m the only child of the Marauders, what a waste Travis. Arthur and Molly managed seven incredibly talented kids, even Ron, but all four Marauders, all of whom were much more powerful than those two, somehow came up with just me.”

“Who is more powerful than any two Weasleys, even factoring in Bill.” Bill was considered the most talented Weasley in many a generation.

“It’s just such a ridiculous waste, all of this.”

“Like your muggle Rodney King over there, ‘Can’t we all just get along?’” Lyman had told him about it, so Harry understood the reference.

“And he only got beaten half to death to learn that. Do we all need something like that?”

“I’d rather not be clubbed half to death, if it’s all the same to you. I see your point though. I’ll give the Yanks this much, they have their magical house in order. Their Dark Wizards are nothing but money grubbers, but better than what amounts to being racists, like Voldemort and the Malfoys. No wonder it was a European Wizard who headed up the SS in World War II.” That would be Grindewald, aka Heinrich Himmler.

They talked about James and Lily for another hour, before Harry belatedly looked at his watch and saw that he had better be getting back, he wanted to be there when Sophie arrived, so he could hear about her outing.

“Thank you for this Travis, this means a lot.”

“I’m glad I could help, I never imagined that you didn’t know any of this, otherwise I would have volunteered it before this.”

“Blame our mate Dumbledore.”

“I know you’re not his biggest booster, but a lot of people share your feelings. Just be patient, he’ll get his comeuppance eventually, though hopefully not from anyone Dark.” A very important qualifier, as the two got up and headed out the conference room door. They walked out to the front door to take the portkey back, and just as they stepped outside, they were almost run over by two new portkey arrivals:

Dumbledore and Moody.

Travis immediately got an 'oh no' look on his face, while Harry just kept his hands in his pockets, his right hand on his wand, and his left on a portkey that Travis didn't know about.

"Hello Harry, Travis." Dumbledore was smiling heartily, as though this was a grand surprise. Harry didn't believe that for a second, as dozens of people had passed by that conference room, any one of whom could have tipped the old man off. Travis responded politely, wary of what Harry might say.

"Albus, Alastor. What brings you by?" Harry just stood there with a neutral expression on his face, hands in his pockets, and mental shields fully powered up.

"Just visiting Travis, we want to see the progress being made with the students. I'm sorry that we missed your talk to the first intake."

"You didn't miss much, you were there for more of it than I was."

"It's always nice to see other perspectives. Harry, how was your Christmas?"

"It was fine Albus, thank you. Yours?" Everyone noted the Albus part of it, though Harry had used it responding to Dumbledore's reconciliation plea. The tone was polite, if a bit disinterested.

"Also fine, thank you for the book. I paged through it last night, very interesting reading." Both Moody and Travis were wondering what book, but neither asked. Harry wanted to start laughing, Dumbledore pretending to enjoy How to Win Friends and Influence People, but he didn't dare show any emotion here.

"I thought it appropriate. Anyway, nice to see you both. Good day." Harry's pocketed wand had detected no wards recently thrown up, and he knew that all he had to do was say the word and he was gone. Biller had casually pulled the rope portkey out of his pocket as well, though his wand still remained in his other hand, from when he had unlocked the door.

“Harry, if we may speak for a moment.”

“We just spoke Albus, we had a perfectly polite little exchange, please don’t ruin it.” This had a little condescension to it, and Moody grimaced, while Dumbledore did color just a bit, but did not show it in his next remarks.

“A little more speaking perhaps Harry, you have nothing to fear from me you know.” Harry now smiled, though it was not a smile designed to bring comfort to his foe.

“Of course I don’t, since one more wrong move by you will make you suffer incalculably.”

“And how is that Potter?” Moody’s first sally into the conversation, said with his habitual gruff suspicion.

“Because, in the remote event that Trelawney was actually right in her prediction, then I can always refuse to cooperate when the time comes.”

“You wouldn’t do that Harry.” Said with more confidence than the old man felt perhaps. Harry’s confidence was more show as well, he knew he couldn’t stay out of it if his friends were in danger, but his actions over the last months had hopefully given Dumbledore enough pause that the old man could believe him capable of taking his ball and going home.....which was a primary reason he had done them in the first place. Always mess with their minds.

“Watch me Albus.”

“You would never do that to your friends Harry, please don’t waste our time by bluffing.”

“My friends can take care of themselves, and they’re fine with it. You should worry more about that floundering school of yours than about what I might be up to.....you know, me not being a student under you anymore.....thank God.”

“You received a fine education at Hogwarts Harry, you got out of it what you put into it.” Harry just shook his head tiredly.

“You will go to your grave thinking Snape was a good teacher, that alone makes you pathetic. Leaving aside the Defense catastrophes, which you of course lay to bad luck.”

“Mistakes were made, by more people than just myself. In your own way Harry, you are as unforgiving as Severus.” There were few things more designed to enrage Harry than to be compared with Snape, but he did not hex Dumbledore into next week all the same. His face colored bright red though, and Travis raised his wand, perhaps to put a barrier between the two.

“I forgave you for years Albus, it was only after you told me that my life was one big lie that I decided that you had committed one too many crimes to forgive you. Now I’m going back home, my girlfriend will be needing me soon. So sod off Albus, I hope I never see your lying, betraying face ever again.”

Dumbledore then did something very risky: He put his hand on Harry’s arm.

“Wait Harry, this is not how I wanted this conversation to go at all.”

“No, you wanted me to fall on my knees and kiss your feet, begging for forgiveness. Well that will never, ever happen Albus. I’ll kill myself before I do that, and I’ll somehow make you watch while I do it. Now take your bloody hand off me.” Dumbledore was a little taken aback by the vehemence, and also by the look in Harry’s eyes, a look he had always thought reserved for Voldemort, or at most Severus. He slowly removed his hand from Harry’s arm, not noticing that Moody was now pointing his wand at Harry, just in case. Harry had been very subtly edging his way over to Biller, and before Dumbledore and Moody could react, Harry reached out and grabbed onto the rope, hoping that Biller was gripping it hard enough.

“Activate!”

The two of them disappeared right in front of the older mens' eyes. Other than McGonagall, no one in the Order was more loyal to Dumbledore than Moody was, but even he was looking at the old man with contempt.

"Well that was nicely handled."

"Young people are very touchy Alastor."

"And young people you compare to Snape are especially so. That was stupid Albus, why you deliberately wanted to piss him off defies all reason." He then surprised Dumbledore by Apparating away, leaving the old man standing there by himself. Moody would not speak to Dumbledore for the rest of the year, just glaring at him at Headquarters. For his part, Dumbledore merely thought he was giving Harry a taste of his own medicine, and refused to believe that he had done anything wrong.

Harry and Travis re-appeared in front of WWW, and initially didn't say anything, just waiting to see if they were followed at all. There were no tracking charms on them, they made a point of checking, but it wasn't out of the question that Dumbledore or Moody could guess that they would come here.

"I hope that doesn't get you in any kind of trouble Travis, me telling him off like that."

"Don't worry about it Harry, I can handle Dumbledore, and if I can't, then Bones and The Minister can. What was that about your girlfriend? Is she in trouble?"

"I sure hope not, she's meeting her mother and brothers right now.....her parents kicked her out after first year, wanting her to reject magic. I facilitated a reconciliation with the mother, this is the fruit."

"You, a diplomat?" Said with humor, and Harry had calmed down enough to chuckle.

“I was a bit heavy handed about it, but I didn’t threaten any violence.” Travis looked dubious at hearing that, but declined comment on it.

“No luck on the father though? I believe his name is Peter?” Harry’s jaw hung open.

“That’s hard to know information Travis.”

“It’s our job to keep tabs on you Harry, and your associates. Once the Witch Weekly article became known to us, we did a little digging.”

“The fascination with The Boy Who Lives never ceases does it?”

“Actually the digging was at Witch Weekly itself, I personally had the writer Obliviated and her records altered before publication. I talked to one of the Aurors monitoring the Listening Charms on that house, and I agree that the guy is not likely salvageable.” Harry didn’t really know what to say to this.

“Why did you have her Obliviated?”

“Because she was going to publish Sophie’s birthplace and parents’ names, and muggles like that are such easy targets we might as well have just kidnapped them ourselves and handed them over to Voldemort. It can still leak of course, but no reason to make it easy on them.”

“Thank you Travis, I really appreciate that, and so will Sophie.”

“No problem Harry. Now you’d better get going, and I should too, a pregnant wife is best not kept waiting.” They shook hands, and Biller Apparated away, choosing not to do his Auror recruitment pitch at this time. Harry went back in the shop, the twins had not returned from their buying trip yet, so after a few words with Lee, Harry flooed back to Warrick’s. He walked downstairs to find Claudia and Warrick watching television and eating spaghetti. He had walked so quietly, that they were startled when he spoke, spilling some food on the floor. He whipped out his wand and did a quick Scourgify.

“They not back yet?”

“You really shouldn’t sneak up on people like that Harry, geez.”

“Oh like you’re one to talk, trying to see me naked this morning. How did it go over there?”

“I got what I wanted, and I got to insult Dumbledore live and in person, so that was nice. But let’s get back to you scoping out a naked Warrick, dear Claudia.” Claudia was the target for the next 15 minutes, as a starving Harry made himself some pasta as well, his stomach finally back to normal. He was halfway through his plate when the floo fired, and Reiko and Sophie returned.

Flashback to 8:55 am EDT, Champaign-Urbana

Sophie and Reiko exited the floo station, and saw the golden arches of McDonalds off in the near distance, as they had a clear line of sight. There were floo stations, like this one, in every large city in The United States, as well as most college towns. They were situated mostly in Greyhound bus terminals, which were ubiquitous, and always had storage rooms used for this. It did help that Greyhound was owned by Wizards, indeed Jonas’ mother’s family held a small stake in the company.

They left the station and walked through the snow filled sidewalk to get to the restaurant. Sophie had been very nervous the night before, and had finally agreed to take a light sleeping potion at around midnight. It had done the trick, and she had slept like the proverbial baby. Reiko had gotten her up an hour before, and the two of them got ready in record time.

“You still nervous?” Sophie threw up her hands.

“Oh what do I have to be nervous about? I’m just seeing my mother for the first time in over four years, and my brothers too.” Well that would do it, thought Reiko.

“Relax Sophie, they want to see you, they’ve missed you. It’s not like Harry threatened them into coming.” Sophie did not like that topic to even be brought up.

“He wouldn’t do that.” Reiko believed that, to a point. She knew Harry would do anything to make Sophie happy, and would probably have few qualms about dropping some hints if he really had to. Reiko occasionally wondered at how Sophie and Harry had become so solid a couple so quickly. Warrick was right, Harry hadn’t browsed at all in looking for a girlfriend, and having gotten to know Harry as well as she had, Reiko marveled at how opposites really did attract, like immediately. Harry and Sophie were both shy on the outside, but Harry had a hardness on the inside that was only just beginning to melt away, though it was melting, Reiko acknowledged. This is not to say she was suspicious of Harry in any way, she thought he was a great guy, and she was glad Sophie was happy with him.

“Look, I saw the pensieve memory of what happened.....no, Warrick showed me, Harry doesn’t mind him using the pensieve when he wants to, it was weird extracting a memory that way let me tell you. Anyway, Harry clearly didn’t like your dad, but he was very polite and friendly to your mom and brothers, much more than my guy was, if truth be told. They’re here because they want to be.” Assuming they show up, Reiko thought darkly. She had outwardly dismissed Jonas’ theory about the parents, but had to admit that it had some credence. She had sent Claudia over to the Steeles’ and the Forresters’ to make sure that nothing idiotic would happen here, but Claudia was easily dealt with if the boys really were insistent on some kind of surveillance.

“I know they are, I should have thought of this with Ned and Jason years ago, meeting on the sly like this.” They got to the front doors of the restaurant, and hurried in, the cold outside not doing them any favors.

They were the first ones there, and each ordered a cup of coffee while they waited. The restaurant was not too busy at this time of day, with most of the students home for the holidays, so they saw when the Cadillac pulled into the sparsely filled parking lot. Sophie didn't recognize it, but knew that her parents and Jason were all driving different vehicles than when she had known them, Ned being 14 when she left. Sure enough, it was them, as the three of them piled out of the car, Ned having been the driver, this being his turf and all. They walked in and immediately spotted the girls. Sophie carefully placed her cup of coffee on the table, because of her shaking hands, and rose to greet her mother and brothers.

"Hi guys." Her voice was shaking too, as her mother gave her a hug.

"Oh Sophie, I'm so happy to see you. Let me have a look at you." She stepped back and looked at her daughter. Sophie had grown up in the four and a half years since Wendy Weir had seen her, she was no longer the little girl who had left them. Ned and Jason, for their parts, were a bit taken aback at how babe-like their little sister had become, this was worrisome. They stepped in and gave her a double hug.

"Good to see you sis, I'm guessing this is your friend Reiko." Reiko, who like Warrick, was a little ambivalent about seeing these people, stepped forward and shook hands with everyone, fixing a friendly smile on her face.

"That I am, Reiko Aylesworth, pleased to meet you all."

"It's good to meet you Reiko, I feel like I know all about you, from reading those letters." Reiko decided to break the ice a little, and amuse herself at the same time.

"All lies ma'am, Sophie is very delusional." Sophie took the ball and ran with it.

"I only brought her to look after her Mom, she's not right in the head." This did have the effect of loosening things up, and everyone relaxed a little.

“Did you girls have breakfast yet? Should we get something here? The boys and I just had some coffee and juice at home.” Sophie and Reiko looked at each other and nodded, they had so little access to fast food normally that it was quite a novelty for them.

“Sure, let’s eat her and talk some.” The five of them went back to the counter and placed their orders. A few minutes later, they were all seated at a large corner table, various breakfast sandwiches and things in front of them.

“How was your Christmas honey? Where did you celebrate it?” The girls looked at each other.

“We sort of had a three-pronged Christmas Mom. We had breakfast with Harry’s people in Great Britain, lunch with Warrick’s family in Indiana, and dinner at Tecumseh, where Reiko’s parents teach.”

“How on earth did you get to Great Britain and back like that? Did you take the Concorde?” Sophie took a second to debate on whether or not to explain the concept of a portkey to her family, and decided to give them the short version.

“Well we used magic Ned, we can.....well you remember Star Trek, and beaming up? Well we beam away, sort of.” A nice lay persons explanation, she would have to remember it to use again sometime.

“Wow, so you can go across oceans too? I mean you explained the floo thing in your letters, but I didn’t know you could go that far.” I didn’t either until a few months ago, thought Sophie amusedly, as did Reiko.

“It’s all in how you do it I guess. It’s very convenient though.” Jason could believe that.

“I bet. So how did you get along with Harry’s family? Wait, didn’t he say he was an orphan?”

“Well they’re more his surrogate family, his real one isn’t very nice from what he says, I’ve never met them obviously. The surrogate one is called the Weasleys, and he met four of the sons and the only daughter at school in Britain, their version of Great Lakes and Tecumseh, called Hogwarts.”

“Hogwarts? What a funny name, who would ever come up with something that strange to name a school?” Who indeed.

“And you liked them, these Weasleys?” Well aside from Ron, she had liked them all.

“We did, we had a very interesting time. Two of the brothers, along with Harry, own a joke shop. I’ve got some of their stuff here for you.” She pulled a few items out of her coat pocket. They included a couple of gravity reversing candies, a nose bleed nougat, and a few other things that didn’t need a wand to activate it, or reverse the effects, as she explained to them. She had dearly wanted to include a swamp, but that needed a wand to erase, and the American Ministry would not be too happy about having to come to the house to get rid of something like that. She had not actually gotten her mother a real Christmas present, she was not quite that forgiving. The boys had had theirs sent to their dorm rooms, and would be waiting for them when they returned.

“Fascinating, so that’s where Harry got his money? From this shop?”

“Oh no, he inherited it when his parents and godfather all died. The shop’s just a few months old. Remember, don’t use this stuff around other people.” She and Reiko gave what history about the shop that they knew from talking to the three owners. Sophie felt that this was nice, safe territory to be on, so she allowed it to continue while the group finished their breakfasts.

“So the other young man we met last week, Warrick, that was your boyfriend Reiko?”

“Yes ma’am, Warrick is stuck with me. He’s in our House at school, we’ve both known him since day one there, but he and I only started dating last year.”

“A House is like a dormitory then?” This was five year old information for Wendy, and she was a little rusty.

“More or less, there are about 85 of us in Cortez, including the two of us, Warrick, and Harry. Claudia is in another house called Shawnee, and Jonas and Drew, who we’ve recently become tight with, they’re roommates in still another one called Jefferson. The last one is Proctor, and none of our gang is in there.”

“I saw Lizzie Proctor speaking to the devil!” Sophie gave a mock annoyed look to her brother.

“Thanks Ned, like we’ve never heard hundreds of 11 year olds say that over the years.” She might even have said it herself, though she would never admit it now that she was older and more mature.

“One more won’t kill you.”

“I guess not, though it might kill you.”

“You can’t use magic sis, you’ve already told me the rules on that one.” Sophie mentally took a second to kick herself for that, but rallied quickly.

“Who said I would use magic?” She balled up her fist and tapped him on the nose with it. She really had missed this kind of teasing with her brothers. She did it with Warrick and Jonas, but this was different, she had really fond memories of playing with her brothers, from as far back as she could remember.

“Mom, make her stop that.” Wendy lovingly rubbed her daughter’s shoulder, it was hard for her to take her eyes off Sophie, after not having seen her for so long.

“Sorry no.” Everyone finished up their breakfasts, and started pulling on their coats.

“Where shall we go first?” Everyone seemed to be waiting for someone else to make a suggestion until Jason turned to his brother.

“Ned, this is your territory, where are we heading?”

“Let’s go look at my dorm.” There was general agreement on that, and the group headed off toward campus. The walk took about 20 minutes, and no one was in any hurry. They talked about Ned’s grades during his first semester, not a bad GPA at 3.50, the grades had been a nice Christmas Eve present for him. Ned lived in Snyder Hall, though it was not open during the holidays.

“Sorry I can’t show you my dorm room.”

“I’ve lived in a dorm for five and half years now Ned, I have the picture. Besides, I can only imagine what your room looks like.” Ned was a bit of a slob, and his room at Casa de Weir reflected that even now.

“No you really can’t, my roommate is a neat freak, so I clean my stuff up to keep him quiet.” Reiko had an idea, as they walked around the building.

“Ned, would anyone be inside right now?”

“I don’t know if anyone is in the manager’s office, but no students should be there, they have a designated hall for them to stay in. Why?” Reiko pulled out her wand.

“This is very good at unlocking doors, and unlike my young roommate, I’m legal to use it.” Reiko really did want to be nice and helpful, but felt that there was no real harm in showing them that she could use magic, just in case. Ned didn’t hesitate, he started walking back along the path they came from.

“C’mon, there’s a back door we can go to.” This would not be the first magic that the three muggles had ever seen. Former Headmaster Rydell, during his intervention, had done a little bit of magic, as had Josh Lyman, who had conducted the muggle orientation done with every muggleborn after they get their letter. Still, he was eager to see it again. They got to the door, and Reiko made them crowd around, as was the drill when in muggle territory.

“Alohomora”

The lock clicked, and the door swung open.....and Ned and Jason both had never felt more cheated in their lives, not being able to do this kind of thing themselves. Just seeing this trebled their sympathy for their father, though they still would never have kicked Sophie out, or so they told each other after this visit was all over.

They journeyed upstairs to Ned’s room on the second floor. He had not been bullshitting them, it was rather neat and tidy. It was a two person room, with a community bath down the hall. It was about one-third the size of a Great Lakes dorm room, with one bunk bed in a corner, rather than four beds each along a wall. Sophie told them these things, and agreed that it wasn’t too bad.

“I bet this is cleaner than your guys’ room over there.”

“You’d be right Ned, but only because Warrick’s kind of a pack rat. His room at home is pretty empty. I mean, there are no food wrappers or trash on the floor.” That was more due to Winky than anything, but that detail was a little too much to hit them with right now.

“And Harry?”

“He has a trunk that he keeps all his things in, except his clothes. He grew up poor, so he’s very careful with his stuff.” Sophie’s descriptions of Harry got more confusing every time she talked about him, or so her family thought.

“I thought he was rich?” Reiko stepped in.

“He is Mrs. Weir, but the aunt and uncle he grew up with didn’t know about the money, and they.....well they didn’t like the fact that he was magical, and so they tried to stamp it out of him.” She gave mental credit to Peter and Wendy Weir for at least not doing that.

“Yeah Mom, Harry’s story is a long one, I’ll have him tell it to you when you see him again.”

“Speaking of that honey, when do you have to go back to school?”

“Either a week from tomorrow or the day after, we’re still hashing it out.”

“Good, plenty of time for us to see each other again. Your father goes back to work Monday, he has a big trial coming up that he needs to prepare for.” Peter Weir was a very talented attorney, the bane of the Illinois Attorney General’s Office, who he was constantly taking on in case involving state law. Sophie smiled.

“That’s great, you can meet the others as well. Um Ned, where’s the bathroom? I think I had too much coffee.”

“Thanks, be right back.” Reiko went with her, and they waited until they were out of earshot to do any talking. While in adjacent stalls:

“So how do you think it’s going? Your family seems pretty nice.”

“They are.....it’s just so strange being around them again. They feel so.....I don’t know the word, so....”

“Foreign?”

“Something like that, yeah. Harry said the same thing the other day while we were at The Burrow, it was like he felt out of place there, even though he’d only been gone a few months. It’s been years for me, but I can relate.”

“I can understand that, I think every kid who goes to boarding school winds up feeling that way, I know I do. You just have to give it time, and everything will be back to normal-ish.”

“I hope so. I wonder if there’s any hope for Dad? I mean, you saw the way my mom came around.” Reiko badly wanted to ask if there was more to it than that, but couldn’t bring herself to say the words.

“I don’t know, give your mom some time to work on him. I mean he has to suspect something like this is going on, or will go on, but she’s still here, he didn’t stop her.” True, very true, thought Sophie in a rush. Jonas’ theories may have been paranoid, but they had occurred to Sophie as well. They finished their business, and went back to the Weirs, who had been pretty much doing the same thing, talking about Sophie and Reiko, though no urinating was involved.

They spent the next hour doing a lazy walk around campus, with Sophie being asked to fill in the blanks from her letters, that is, to expand on some of her stories. They heard all about Claudia and the three guys, and about her teachers, and some of the things that the two of them could do. Ned did some talking as well, though he had only been on campus for four months, he still had something to say about most every building or field that they passed. Sophie and Reiko found it to be a nice campus, but Ned’s selling job was going mostly into deaf ears. They both wanted sun and ocean for their college experiences, which of course they planned on doing together.

“How is your SAT work going?”

“I don’t know Mom, its hard to say. We’ve been studying the books we got for it, and we have a few Senior friends that we can quiz about it. We still have over two months, so I’m not too worried.”

“What’s your first choice right now for school?”

“We’re still debating that, we all want to go someplace together though, at least the four of us, so it will probably hinge on what our lowest collective score is.. Jonas and Harry will be professional athletes, but because of the floo they can live wherever they want.”

It was just before noon now, and Sophie decided to end the visit while things were still going well. Everyone was a bit tired, and irritableness was just around the corner, for Witches and muggles alike. They were back in front of the McDonalds where they had hooked up, the Greyhound station only a couple of blocks away.

“Reiko and I should be going Mom, when can we do this again?” Wendy Weir was thinking the same as her daughter, end it now while they were still getting along. Too much too soon would not be healthy for their still fragile relationship. As Alexis de Tocqueville said, a society is never more vulnerable than when it begins to change for the better. That was often true of people as well, and relationships especially.

“How about a week from today? Bring the others too, I want to get to know your Harry a bit better.”

“That’ll be fine, I’ll check with them when we get back. I’ll call you on Monday from Warrick’s to confirm and figure out where to go.”

“That sounds great honey. Now Ned, Jason, will you excuse us girls for a minute? We need to talk about one more thing.” The guys shrugged, and walked away out of earshot. Wendy looked at her daughter, unsure how to put this, though Reiko had a look on her face of mild amusement.

“Sophie honey, you and Harry.....you’re being careful, right? I mean, do you magic people have fool-proof ways of birth control?” Even though she knew something like this was going to be asked at some point during the visit, Sophie still blushed furiously.

“Mom!”

“I know it’s awkward to talk about, and I really have little right after all these years. But there are talks I never got to give you.” Lisa

Aylesworth had done that job for Sophie, including talks about birth control.

“Harry and I are not having sex Mom, and while that will change probably, pretty soon.....well yes, there are potions you can take for birth control.” Pretty soon was right, the day before on the beach was a close call in that regard. Sophie hadn’t stopped Harry, Harry hadn’t stopped Sophie, it was kind of a mutual thing. Sophie had always known that she wouldn’t be pressured by Harry though, ever since their talk that first day when he revealed that he had never taken advantage, with girls, of his fame.

“That’s good to know honey, and again, I’m sorry for bringing it up like that. You’re a smart girl, with a good head on your shoulders, and I trust you to do the right thing.” Left unsaid what the right thing was, but Sophie assumed that it meant no sex.

“I will Mom, if you’re a grandma in the next couple of years, it won’t be because of me.” That didn’t mean no sex though. Ned and Jason both had casual girlfriends, but both were new relationships not as far along, time wise, as Sophie and Harry, but accidents could happen. They didn’t have Kiplinger’s Fail Safe Potion though, and Sophie did. This declaration seemed to satisfy Wendy, and to Sophie’s relief, she said no more about the topic.

“Have a safe trip home honey, through a fireplace. A fireplace.” She shook her head as she waved Jason and Ned back over. The Weirs all had a group hug, and Wendy surprised them by drawing Reiko into a hug as well, whispering to her:

“Thank you for being there for Sophie.” Reiko smiled into Wendy’s hair.

“It’s been my pleasure ma’am, she’s the best friend I could ever ask for.” They parted, and the boys shook hands with Reiko as well, saying much the same things out loud that Wendy had whispered. They had been reading about her for years, and it was interesting to finally put a face to the name, as Sophie hadn’t sent any pictures with her letters.

Sophie and Reiko waited until the others drove off, before making their way to the floo station. They strode quickly, as it was getting even colder outside. Reiko waited a block before she said anything.

“Are you okay?”

“I’m fine Reiko, it really couldn’t have gone any better.” No it couldn’t have, and no one was more relieved about that than Reiko, who had been having visions of fighting off paid goons with her wand, in case Mr. Wonderful decided to try and stamp some magic out. She shook it off though, and returned to the important part of the conversation.

“Just so we’re clear, we are NOT going to school here.” That wasn’t a question, but a statement.

“That was clear before we ever got here buddy girl. Sunshine is only 21 months away for us. No more blizzards after next year, I can hardly wait.”

“I’m sure we can convince the boys.”

“Harry can always floo to wherever he has Quidditch practice, and Warrick will be going with us.” Indeed Warrick had finally cracked an SAT study book the night before, after they returned from the island. Now it seemed that only Harry, of the gang, would not at least be looking into muggle university. He was no dummy, but the idea of sitting in a classroom for four more years when he didn’t have to did not warm his heart.

They reached the station in short order, and floored back to Warrick’s house. They found Warrick, Claudia, and Harry all eating spaghetti and chatting in front of the TV. Everyone looked over at them with questions on their faces.

“Well?”

“It went really well guys, it was such a great present Harry, you shouldn’t have gotten me anything else, it was worth so much to me.”

Harry felt an almost smug pride that his great gamble had paid off like it had, almost. He hugged her tightly, and was very happy that she was so happy.

“You look happy.”

“I am, this has been a great year, especially the last five months.”

“Let me grab you two something to drink.....you want some pasta?”

“Sounds good.”

“Sure, I’d love some. I’ll come with you.”

“No, I’ll grab it, you’d done enough today.” He smooched her loudly, and went off into the kitchen, where he quietly called for Dobby.

“So how did it really go?”

“It was fine Harry, nothing untoward happened.”

“They all got along?”

“Yes they did, though I did notice something funny.”

“What’s that?”

“Reiko used her wand to open a door, to the younger brother’s dormitory.”

“So?”

“The brothers looked very jealous Harry. None of the others saw it, but you could almost feel the envy.”

“I can’t say I blame them, kind like Mom and Petunia.” Dobby was nodding vigorously as though he could believe that, he could believe anything badly of Petunia Dursley, though he would never admit as much to Harry, even in moments of extreme candor.

“If I may ask Harry, how did you own family adventure go?”

“It was very interesting Dobby, and most illuminating. When I show the others in the pensieve, I’ll make sure that you and Winky are there too.”

“Thank you Harry. I must say that becoming involved in your adventures has been most stimulating.”

“More than serving a Death Eater?”

“It is more calm, that is for certain.”

“Really?”

“Well, not by that much.” The two of them shared a look, and then burst out laughing, as they finished preparing the pasta for Reiko and Sophie. They walked into the living room, where Winky was already dealing the UNO cards. The New Year was only a few short days away, 1997 awaited.

End Chapter

Author's Note: No one has mentioned it in a review yet, but I'm figuring that most of you have cottoned on to the fact that Headmistress Joanne K. Murray is my tongue in cheek way of putting JK Rowling into my story, using her married name. I'm bringing this up now because we meet her husband and daughter in this chapter, and I'm messing with the real life timeline in a big way. In January 1997, when most of this chapter takes place, Jessica Rowling Arantes was three years old, not 14 as I have her here, and her real father is of course not Dr. Neil Murray, who was not yet married to JKR at that time, I'm not entirely sure that they had even met. Plus, I'm only vaguely describing her, because if you do a Google search for a photo of her, you come up empty handed, which on many levels I view as a good thing. She and Doctor Neil will likely be in future chapters as well, as recurring characters, so I wanted to include this disclaimer for you. One other thing: this isn't a travelogue, though I do keep sending the gang around the Midwest. This time it's Chicago, and please pardon me for the liberties I'm taking with the city and its businesses, as I've never been there.

WWW

4:00 pm GMT

The shop, as a rule, was usually closed on Sundays. That policy was not in effect during this Christmas break from Hogwarts, the twins feeling that every galleon should be grasped for, so the shop was open noon-6:00 pm. Lee had no problem with it, since his job was basically just to ring up orders and explain things to the customers, not exactly heavy lifting to earn his generous salary. Though the customers did need a lot of things explained to them. Frequent examples included:

"This won't kill anybody will it?" Said fearfully.

"This will piss off Filch, won't it?" Said hopefully.

Parents and out of school siblings were usually the ones saying both, as while they certainly didn't want anyone to get hurt with the pranks, they had none too fond memories of the irritable Caretaker. Great Lakes was a little different however. Their caretaker, 32 year old Riley Poole, was just as crabby as Filch was, but he was more amenable to WWW mayhem. Harry had not entirely told the truth when he said to Steve Atwood that he was the seventh human employee of WWW.....Riley Poole had been, as Harry put him on the payroll early on in the term, in exchange for a hands-off position regarding the stuff the shop sold, and his own behavior in general. It had also paid dividends before Christmas, as Harry had asked Poole to keep an eye out for any Sophie mail, and to get it to her post-haste. For a salary of $200 a month, Harry bought himself a little peace, and for less than he paid Dobby and Winky, whose 65 galleons a month translated into a little less than $500 a month. Most of the gang didn't know about it, though the twins did, as Harry didn't want to encourage anything flagrant. He had told Sophie, who had reluctantly agreed to keep it private, agreeing that Warrick and Jonas would probably exploit the situation.

Neville and Luna had arrived a few minutes early, and were poking around the store when Harry emerged from the back, or at least right at the door. His friends' backs were turned away from him, and he didn't want to attract anyone else's attention, so he got creative. Aiming at Neville, he put very little force behind the spell:

“Repulsar”

He used his wand so that he could do it silently, and was rewarded when Neville flinched, like someone had poked him in the shoulder. He turned around and saw Harry motioning to come to the back. They did, and only once they were through the door did they say anything.

“Hey there mates.”

“Hello Harry, you look so tan.” And he did, between frolicking he and Sophie had gotten some sun, both the day after Christmas, and the day before this, when it was just Harry and Sophie on the island for some relaxation, and a few other things.

“Island vacationing Luna, it has its advantages.” Luna was wearing the dress that Sophie had bought for her, and it looked hilarious. It looked good on her though, and she was wearing her butterbeer cap necklace, and some outlandish earrings. She looked around.

“Are your other friends here?”

“Not today, though they did want to meet you. We’ve all declared a quiet day kind of, where we’re just doing stuff on our own. We all spend a lot of time together, and sometimes it’s good to be apart.” They went to the back living area, where Fred and George were waiting with some food and drink. The five of them caught up on things for a little while, and then at Harry’s and the twins’ begging, a pensieve was fetched and Neville showed them the replay of his fight with Ron back in September. A sample highlight:

“What the hell are you doing to my things Ron?”

“Where’s the Marauder’s Map Neville! I know you have it, and I want it right now!”

“What the bloody hell are you talking about?”

“Give it over Neville, I deserve to have it if anyone here does. I won’t stop searching until I find it.” Ron resumed the ransacking, as Neville approached him.

WHAM! Right in the kisser, and Ron fell like he was poleaxed.

Harry and the twins watched the rest of the memory with vast amusement, though Neville hadn’t been present for Ron’s chewing out by McGonagall. Neville also treated them to the McGonagall Howler show, which had Harry smiling so wide his cheeks hurt the rest of the night. In return, they exhibited Ron’s aerial show after the snowball fight.

“So what’s he been like since then?” George made a face, but shrugged.

“We don’t really know Neville, we haven’t been back to The Burrow since then, and he hasn’t been here, though we wouldn’t kick him out if he tried to come in.”

“You didn’t have him or Ginny work here in the shop?” Fred shook his head.

“Nah, we’re taking a break from inventing, so we’re spending more time out front, helping Lee out. Ginny’s been going hard since beginning of term, so we wanted to give her a break, we just gave her some galleons for her Christmas present to make up for not working. Ron was not a consideration, even before his Christmas Day performance.” George suddenly had a thought.

“Would either of you like some summer work? Even if Ron behaves himself, we could still use some help around the shop during that time. Lee will want some time off I’m sure, and so will we for that matter. Merlin knows you two can be trusted not destroy anything.” Neville and Luna looked at each other blankly, neither had really considered something like that before.

“I could one or two days a week perhaps, I usually work with Daddy at The Quibbler the rest of the time.”

“I wouldn’t mind a shift or two, a chance to get out of the house a bit more. Professor Sprout and I have talked about doing some research this summer, but that wouldn’t be every day.”

“Terrific, you’re hired. We have six months to figure out your schedules, so no hurry. A lot will depend on the war, and on how much of a fool Ron’s being.”

“You really dislike him don’t you?” Fred closed his eyes.

“The problem with Ron, is that you don't know who you're getting from day to day, sometimes you get the good Ron, sometimes you get the bad one. At least Percy was consistent, and you could adjust accordingly to him. So in dealing with Ron, you have to be attuned to his moods, and there are a lot of times that it's just not worth it.” That summed things up so well, that George and Harry didn't feel the need to add anything.

The quintet chatted idly for awhile after that, avoiding the Ron subject. The twins left for a minute at 6:00, to help Lee close the shop up for the day.

“So just how did you get here Harry? If anyone used as many international portkeys as you've been doing, you'd be a candidate for St. Mungos right now.”

“I haven't come over that often, in public anyway. All right, you were going to find out about this when you went to the island anyway.” He proceeded to explain the trunk system to them, placing special emphasis on secrecy as always.

“You really do have things set up don't you? I think Dumbledore was right to be afraid of you.” Harry laughed, as Neville was smiling when he said it.

“Dumbledore is.....you know, I'm tired of thinking about Dumbledore. Just don't let the others know about the trunks either. As far as I'm concerned, the secret circle is closed now, with you two joining it.”

Neville couldn't help but marveled at how things had changed in just six months. Harry had all but cut Ron and Hermione out of his life, and most of it seemed to be because of Dumbledore, and Harry's hatred of the man. Neville reflected that Dumbledore had controlled Harry's life for over 15 years, and it was still ongoing, as Dumbledore was still forcing Harry into choices that he would have not made otherwise. He felt vastly sorry for Hermione, who was very steadfast for Harry, but was just watched too closely by Dumbledore for Harry's own peace of mind.

“What about after school? Will you start trusting them then?”

“That’s a long 18 months away Neville. I’m just going to focus on school for now. My grades have never been better, and we have Quidditch and the Olympics come Spring. It’ll be a good time.”

Luna then changed the direction of the discussion, as only she could.

“Now Harry, your new school is pretty far north right?”

“It is, very cold this time of year.”

“Now, have you checked the area for Crumple Horned Snorkaks?” This caught Harry off guard a little, and he exploded in laughter.

“Well no Luna, I haven’t. We’re technically not allowed off school grounds, though I do violate that from time to time.”

“ You should still go looking though, the Journal for Obscure Creatures would probably give you a feature article if you could find one, even more so if you get a photo.” Harry really regretted now that Luna had turned down the Great Lakes offer, he didn’t think listening to this kind of thing would ever get old.

“What’s that Harry?”

“I don’t know what one looks like.”

“Well nobody knows Harry, silly boy. But I’ve read that you’ll know one when you see it. Daddy and I spent two weeks in Scandinavia in August, but we couldn’t find one. Maybe you’ll have better luck.”

“I’ll see what I can do Luna, you can count on me. I’ll give the photos to The Quibbler before any journal though, don’t worry.” Harry figured it would make for a fun field trip for the gang one Saturday.

“Daddy would be really thrilled.” Luna, in her letters to Harry, described the main stories for her father’s publication, and Harry made a point to have Dobby pick him up a copy of it afterward. It made for nice entertaining reading for the gang, kind of a cross between the muggle paper The National Enquirer and Mad Magazine.

“I hope so, I owe your father one. Have you two thought about when you might go to the island?” Neville answered him.

“We thought during the Easter break, so we could have more than a day. I think McGonagall would get suspicious if I just disappeared for much longer than that.”

“Does she keep a watch on you?”

“There are Listening Charms all over our room, though they might have been put there when you still lived there.” That didn’t surprise Harry in the slightest.

“Luna, are you monitored like that?”

“There is one in my room as well, but it’s in the middle of the room. There might be such charms in all the rooms for all I know Harry.”

“Well I don’t blame him there, if it’s in all of them.”

“They do it with you in the room?”

“Every bloody night, and sometimes Dean or I have to provide the Silencing Charms when they forget to.”

“Not Ron?”

“I think he likes the show personally, I doubt he and Hermione are that active.” Harry had little trouble believing that. Hermione did not seem like that type, and even Ron was rather straitlaced in that regard.

“Rick and Terry, my other roommates don’t forget the Silencers thank goodness. Warrick goes to the basement, and I’ve resisted temptation to harass him so far.”

“How often do you use that Map Harry?”

“Not as often as we would like to Luna, Murray is kind of on to us so far about pranks and things.”

“She doesn’t mind?”

“As long as they amuse her, she’s cool with it.”

“Kind of like Dumbledore with the twins.” Harry didn’t see it that way, surprise surprise.

“Not really, he could be the grand old man, as long as he had McGonagall to do his dirty work. Heyman is kind of like that there, but he’s left us alone. Either he likes me, or Murray told him to lay off, I’m not sure.”

“Either way, it’s good for you.” Fred and George then came back with Lee, and the six of them shot the breeze for another hour before Neville and Luna took off. Harry and the twins went down to Frankenstein’s Workshop for a bit, as Fred and George showed him some of the things they were working on.

“That was a good idea, bringing them into the shop.”

“We thought it was something you might want, and since you never ask for much around here, it would be nice of us to try to anticipate things.” Harry looked at them with an exasperated expression.

“You guys are all heart.” They slapped him on the back and grinned.

“Well we’re assuming that Ron will go south on us, so it’s nice to have a backup plan.”

“At least you don’t have to worry about Hermione wanting a job, I thought she was going try and hex me the other day.” Fred started snickering.

“I offered her a job back in July, just to see what her reaction would be. She looked at me like I’d asked her to try out for the Chudley Cannons. I took that for a no and quickly ran in the other direction before she tried to hurt me.” That must have been something, Harry thought, very amused at the image. He was waiting for repercussions from Hermione for the Ron incident, though it was probably too soon to expect a letter from her under the best of circumstances, which these were not obviously. He was a bit sad that Hermione had so obviously chosen Ron over him, but he supposed that romantic love would always trump platonic affection.

Their meeting with Michael Steele had been set for Thursday, and they agreed to meet the night before to finalize their plans for it.

Steele and Family Investments

12:50 pm

It had been a working lunch of sorts, as the three partners of WWW had sat in Michael Steele’s office and talked with him about the long-term plans for the business, all over deli food that had been brought in by Michael’s assistant/gofer/sandwich fetcher, who was not a Wizard and thus not allowed in the meeting. Fred and George were wary of the expense of putting up or leasing buildings in all five of the Alleys in the United States: Milwaukee, Boston, New York, Tulsa, and San Francisco, as well as people to staff them. Growing up in a Voldemort/Death Eater heavy society, the twins weren’t the most trusting people around.

“What it all boils down to guys, is that you don’t really need to expand right this minute, not with your level of turnover, and the fact that you two are the only manufacturers. That part is what I see as your most pressing need right now, especially with new sales coming in from Oklahoma. Could this Lee Jordan person be drafted into the manufacturing process?” The twins had considered this of course, but always dismissed it until now.

“He could, for the simpler jobs we suppose. We have talked about it with him, but he just doesn’t seem to have the aptitude for it. He’s no moron, don’t get me wrong, but it’s a special kind of thing to be able to make this stuff.” Harry had a thought.

“Could Dobby or Winky do it?” That gave them all a moment of pause.

“Winky maybe, but Dobby is just too excitable. She’s pretty calm though.....hmmmm.”

“The truth is Michael, we had always kind of just been hoping to slowly build until Ginny could be brought in, but the young fellow here has dragged us into moving faster.” Harry made a face at Fred.

“It’s not my fault your stuff is so damn popular.” Fred looked right back at him.

“Yes it is, you’ve promoted the heck out of it.”

“I never heard you complain when I sent all that money in.” Fred put a hand on Harry’s shoulder, George was being uncharacteristically quiet, for him.

“You didn’t, and we’re not now, don’t get me wrong. It’s just moving faster than we had thought. We know we should hire some more help, but let’s see what Winky is capable of first. Maybe we could get Dean involved in it on a very part-time basis, give him some piece work.” Ginny had enough on her plate what with OWL’s, Quidditch, Prefect duties, and the limited work she already did for the shop, that she was stretched to her limits as it was. Dean had none of those responsibilities, and the twins wanted to reach out to him, acknowledging that they accepted his presence in Ginny's life.

Michael had heard all about these two from Jonas, and the hour long meeting had cemented his impression that these were three teenagers who had almost lucked into something potentially big, if handled just right. His businessman's mind was already doing some long-range planning for them, feeling that since he had an 'in' with Harry, that the account would be his very easily. The father in him just flat out liked the guys, and wanted to see them succeed.

"Have you thought about taking on another partner? Get an infusion of cash so you can expand?" The twins immediately shook their heads in the negative.

"No way, not anytime soon, if ever. We're just too much control freaks to deal with that. Junior here is the perfect partner, we do what we want and he eggs us on. That's why we didn't give Lee a piece of the business, we just want to run things ourselves."

"And the Zonko's rumors?"

"Let them stay rumors for all we care, we're not selling right now." Fred looked at the other two for agreement, and got it right away.

"For any price?"

"We'll listen to any offer, but it would take something outrageous to get us to sell." More nodding of the heads from Harry and George.

Just then, the intercom buzzed.

"Mr. Steele, your 1:00 appointment is here." Said appointment was a muggle pair, and Michael had asked that everyone be dressed in suits for the meeting, just so that the right impression was made. Harry just wore his Great Lakes uniform, which did not include robes, while Fred and George had indeed shown up presentable. They all stood up, and shook hands all around.

“Thanks for your time Michael, if nothing else you’ve got us thinking seriously about our future as a business.”

“Absolutely Michael, much appreciated. If we do take on another partner or investor, we’ll go through you to do it.” Michael smiled, mission accomplished. This would be a very good long-term association, especially when Jonas took over the business, as Michael knew he would someday. No hurry, as Michael himself was only three weeks past his birthday number 40.

“It was good to meet you guys, if you have any need for my services in the future, just let me know.” They nodded gratefully, and left the office, as Michael motioned for Harry to stick around.

“So you’re seeing Sophie’s family tomorrow?”

“All six of us are going this time, we’re meeting here in Chicago.”

“Be careful Harry, all of you. Make sure that the father isn’t having them followed.” That had certainly occurred to Harry, but it was intriguing coming from Michael.

“Do you know something I don’t Michael?” The older man shrugged, but he dealt with lawyers practically every day, and had a handle on how they operated.

“Probably not, having not met the man, while you have. But he’s a lawyer though, a high powered one to boot. I’m sure he has P.I.’s on the payroll or on retainer at his firm, and your visit had to make him wonder.”

“Thanks for the heads up. Reiko and I can use our wands if need be, and I’ll have Dobby and Winky following us too, just in case.”

“Jonas told me about that, a nice touch. Just be very careful what you do around muggles, the secret of our world is paramount.” He paused for a second.

“Sophie is a sweet and lovely girl, I’m glad that you look out for her like you do, with the parents and all. I had always hoped that my son might eventually go for her, but I don’t think he’s mature enough for someone like her quite yet.” That wasn’t said as criticism, but with a wry smile on his face, which made Harry chuckle.

“He just needs his own version of Sophie, that’s all. Anyway, I’m out of here. Will I see you at Easter?”

“You bet, I can’t wait to sample yours and Jonas’ menu. Ask the couple waiting out there to come in will you?”

“Sure thing Michael, take care.” They shook hands, and Harry walked to the waiting twins, as Michael’s next appointment went nervously into his office. Michael’s office did not have the floor fireplace in it, but rather it was in an anteroom that was always locked. That is, unless you could use Alohomora to open it. Fred did so, and the three of them flooded back to Warrick’s house. Warrick and Reiko were at the movies, while the other three were over at the Steele house doing something on the internet there.

“Harry, before we go back to the shop, there’s something we’d like to talk to you about.”

“What is it?” The twins looked at each other, and George took over.

“We would like to take you up on your Great Lakes offer.” Harry had rarely been more surprised lately, and that was saying something.

“Come again?”

“We figured it out, we each have 10 more weeks of schooling to go, plus NEWT’s, and we would like to do it at Great Lakes. If the offer was meant to include us, that is.” Harry was still shaking his head.

“Wow, words literally fail me. You two want to become students again.”

“Don’t let your jaw hang too open there Harry, flies will get in.”

“Yeah, it was Dad’s idea really, after telling us that Ginny wouldn’t be going. Actually, it was on the day you sent that Howler to Mum. That was a big day. We’ve been thinking about it off and on, and we’ve decided to go for it.” Harry had now recovered sufficiently to say something constructive.

“Well of course the offer includes you two, it just never occurred to me that it was something you would be interested in.”

“Well we would like to say that we are proper graduates, might mean something down the line with investors like Michael and his ilk.” Yes it would, and it made far more sense for Harry after talking with Jonas’ dad than it would have beforehand.

“You’re sure about this?”

“Yes we are, right Fred?”

“Right George. If this Murray woman says it’s okay, we’ll be there come April, with bells on.” Harry made a snap decision.

“Well there’s no time like the present.” He walked over to the floo and flung some powder into it.

“Headmistress Joanne Murray!” After a few seconds, a male face appeared in the floo.

“Yes?”

“Dr. Murray?” Harry had met the man a couple of times, a friendly sort of fellow who was a doctor at the hospital in Marquette, the nearest one to Great Lakes. From the rumors he had heard, the Doc was not much of a Wizard, power-wise, which is why he had chosen to go into medicine. Wanting to build his career on his own, he had eschewed the Doctor’s job here at Great Lakes, though he was available in a pinch, in theory.....one that had never been put to the test of course, as the gig was more a sinecure than anything..

“Oh hello Harry, Joanne stepped out for a moment, she’ll be right back. Something I can help you with?”

“I was wondering if a couple of my British friends and I might drop by for a few minutes, there’s some stuff I was hoping to talk with Professor Murray about.” Stuff meant plural, and the twins eyed Harry, wondering what else he had cooking.

“Sure thing, come on over.”

The three of them, one by one of course, hopped in the floo, and soon were there. They popped out in Murray’s office, which like the ones belonging to Karl and Lisa at Tecumseh, adjoined her living quarters. Neil Murray greeted them easily, as Harry vividly recalled his first night in here, right after his long plane ride. He had been back a few times, with the vampires and with Tonks and Bones most notably, but he always had a visceral reaction to this office, because of that night.

“Thanks Dr. Murray. How was your Christmas?”

“Very quiet, only about 20 or so students stuck around, so we had the run of the place. Yours?”

“The day itself was rather eventful, but before and after were all very relaxing. Oh, I’m sorry, where are my manners. Dr. Murray, meet Fred and George Weasley, my close friends and partners.” The three men shook hands warmly, the twins had been doing nothing but looking around the office as well.

“Partners? As in that joke shop I keep hearing about?”

“Yes sir, Harry gave us the start-up capital.....well a couple of years ago now, and we’ve been going ever since.”

“Our daughter Jessica will want to get some of your stuff to take back with her, my wife can’t stop laughing when she describes it.”

“No I can’t, it’s always good for a chuckle.” The lady herself had just walked into the office, followed by a teenage girl that Harry could only assume was the daughter, the much speculated on Jessica, who was in her fourth year at Salem. Harry introduced Fred and George to the new arrivals, and was introduced himself to Jessica Murray, a quiet type it seemed, though she had a friendly smile.

“Good to meet you both, I’ve heard much about you, and witnessed your inventions. What brings you by? Have you moved back into your dorm room already Harry?”

“No ma’am, that’s probably going to be Sunday morning. We were hoping for a word or two with you, if you don’t mind.” Murray was very curious now, and motioned for the Brits to follow her into the living room.

“This is nothing secret or anything, so nobody has to leave or anything.” Even more curiosity from Murray, as they all sat down on the couches, Brits on one, Murrays on the other.

“So what’s on your mind Harry?” He was unsure of how to start, so he decided to quickly get to the point and let the fallout happen afterward.

“Ma’am, do you remember back in the med station, when I told you that I had offered to pay the fees of any of my Hogwarts friends who wanted to come over here?” Murray looked from Harry to the twins, immediately figuring it out, but not believing it.

“I do remember, and you said that you would get back to me if any of them took you up on it.”

“Yes ma’am I did. Fred and George here told me a few minutes ago that they would like to do so.”

“Yes ma’am, if you give the go ahead, George and I would like to finish our schooling here.” Murray couldn’t help but smile.

“How much schooling do you have to finish? Professor Hill wrote me about your exit strategy from Hogwarts, very creative.”

“Ah Professor Hill, we didn’t really pay attention too much in class, but he’s a grand fellow.”

“Yeah, you see our father is muggle obsessed, so we didn’t have much choice really but to take Hill’s class. Ron and Ginny are the only ones not to take it, and they both had to do some de-noming in retribution.”

“Bill didn’t George, he did Runes and Arithmancy remember.”

“Oh yeah. Now ma’am, if we’re getting the dates right, you had our brother Percy during your year there, he would have been second year.”

“I do remember, very proper type of young man.” Just then she remembered that Percy was no longer with them.

“I was sorry to hear about his loss. He died a hero.”

“Thank you ma’am.”

“Thank you Professor.”

“That brings us back to how much time you have left in school.” George looked a little abashed.

“Oh right, sorry bout that. We figure its about 10 weeks or so, plus NEWTs, and we would be prepared to take them.” This astonished her, as everything she had heard about them seemed to point in the other direction, they certainly were going the extra mile in trying to persuade her.

“We should probably add, since you speak with Professor Hill and all, we do remember Harry mentioning that now that I think on it.....well, we will take this seriously, if you allow us in. I mean we’ll still be ourselves and all, but we won’t disrupt class or make a mess of the hallways or anything like that.” George was nodding in agreement.

“What he’s saying ma’am, is we will do our best to make sure that you don’t look bad for letting us in, or make it a waste of your time. The youngster here will keep us in line as well I’m sure.” Harry rolled his eyes theatrically.

“Oh like you’ll do anything I tell you.”

“Well your influence then, osmosis and all that.”

Murray sat there considering this for a minute. She had wondered before at becoming a halfway house for Hogwarts exiles, after Harry had told her about the offer, but this was different. She knew that there was no real harm in it, and the twins were hugely popular in absentia anyway because of WWW. She looked at Harry for a moment, and decided to confirm a suspicion.

“All right Fred, George. I have one question for you, and I need an honest answer.”

“Of course ma’am.”

“Fire away.”

“Now I’ll preface this by saying that no one will get in trouble, no matter how you answer. Honesty is the important thing here.”

“Go ahead, ask away.”

“Have either or both of you ever been in this school before today?”
Wham!

To their credit, Fred and George didn't hesitate, or even look at Harry as they answered.

"No ma'am we have not." Said simultaneously. Harry had told them numerous times of his suspicions that she knew of the trunk, or at least the idea of the trunk and a getaway. So it was that they were both prepared to answer this kind of question. The trunk secret remained paramount, and the twins had little trouble lying to their own mother if it suited the situation, so this stranger deserved no better.

"Fair enough. Harry, outside of that trial and Flackter Alley, have you ever left school grounds?"

"No ma'am, I have not. Well okay, I did once last summer to see Warrick play soccer, but that's it." Harry had never lied to Murray in the short time he had known her, but there was no hesitation on his part either, and afterward he thought his truth about the soccer game played pretty well overall.

"All right then. Am I right in assuming that your grades aren't stellar?"

"Yes ma'am. We'll get you copies as soon as we get back home. Peter Tyson's wife works in the Ministry Records Office, he has already told us that she'll get us our files if we need it. And for the record, we have been officially told that our official Hogwarts status is 'dropped out', rather than expelled." They clearly had been thinking about this for some time now, Harry thought, not a little impressed. He had been afraid it was just a whim after seeing Michael. Murray decided to see just how prepared they were.

"What classes would you want to take?"

"We can pick five or six, right?"

"You can."

"See Harry, we do pay attention when you tell us things. For instance ma'am, he explained the Advanced and Regular concept to us, and we would be eligible for Advanced Charms, as that's what we get our O's in. I know, we could hardly believe it either. We would also want to take Potions, Muggle Studies, Defense Against the Dark Arts, and Herbology." Not a bad curriculum, thought Murray, who like Harry was impressed that they had planned this out.

"What about your business?" George answered her.

"We can do that here ma'am, and have Dobby and Winky deliver the stuff back to the home store in Diagon Alley. We'll just place a moratorium on inventing and simply do the necessary manufacturing. There aren't that many customers to the shop when school is in session, so Lee Jordan, our friend and employee, can handle that part of it. Our parents have also volunteered to help out if need be, they're fully behind us in this."

"Harry, you're prepared to pick up their fees? I would say off the top of my head that 10 weeks for each of them would equal about what half of what you pay." Not being citizens of the U.S., the three Brits had, and would have, to pay tuition and room and board, just like at Hogwarts, though fees there were more or less on a need basis, with poor families, such as the Weasleys, paying less than the Malfoys, or even Harry himself in past years.

"Yes ma'am."

"Okay, I don't see why you shouldn't be allowed to finish up here. The Harry experiment has certainly worked out excellently. I won't even ask for a bribe of some free pranks for Jessica here." Said with a grin, as Fred and George looked both delighted and relieved. Harry leaned forward however.

"Funny you should mention that Professor Murray, I was going to send you an owl Jessica, but this works out much better." Everyone stared at him blankly, except for Jessica herself, who was a little red in the face.

"Really? What for?"

“I was hoping you might be interested in a little extra pocket money. You see, last week the guys and I hired a Transition student named Steve Atwood to be our point person at Tecumseh, I met him at Thanksgiving and Reiko and the others have known him for a few years now. I was trying to think of ways we could do this for the other two schools, and you are the only Salem student I have ever even heard of.”

“You want me to sell your stuff at school?”

“Well it doesn’t even really have to be sold exactly, I’ve found that here at Great Lakes, the products just kind of sell themselves, and I collect the money and have Dobby and Winky do the deliveries.” The girl looked confused.

“Who are Dobby and Winky?”

“Oh, they’re my two house elves, my staff as I like to call them. Dobby! Winky!” The two of them popped in, and were now wearing Indiana Pacers jerseys, kid’s size ones of the like that Harry had gotten for Christmas. So much for their loyalty to the Milwaukee Bucks, whose jerseys they had sported as recently as last week.

“You two are fair weather fans, you know that don’t you?”

“In point of fact we do Harry.”

“Guys, meet Dr. Murray and Jessica Murray.” Dobby and Winky smiled pleasantly at the two strangers, and at Professor Murray, who they had already won over.

“They work for both WWW and myself, and since they can just pop back and forth across the pond, they’re ideal for this kind of thing.”

“What would I have to do?” Harry gave her the two minute spiel, which does not need to be repeated here, as it does not differ at all from what he told Steve Atwood.

“Okay, I have to admit that I’m interested. Just out of curiosity, what do you plan to do for Pathfinder?” Harry hesitated, rather at a loss, and Professor Murray jumped into the breach with some advice.

“You know, Professor Lyman went to Pathfinder, I would imagine that he has some nieces or nephews who go there.” Murray had taken notice of the Sunday breakfast shows that Harry and Lyman had put on, and had even suspected Lyman of being a WWW customer himself, not that there was anything wrong with that. She didn’t know about Riley Poole though, fortunately for Harry, as she would likely take a dim view of bribery, even as benign a bribery as it was here.

“That’s not a half bad idea, Professor Lyman.....hmmmm.....” Indeed it hadn’t occurred to him, but he would make a point of talking about it with him when he got back on Sunday, as he was pretty sure that Lyman himself was traveling during the break.

“So what do you think Jessica? We don’t need to know right now of course, take all the time you need.” She was quiet for a moment.

“Mom? Dad? Any objections?” Her dad responded first.

“I have no problem with it, it would be a good way to earn some extra money. And your new bosses appear to be reputable.” That earned a collective chuckle.

“I don’t see any reason why not, unless Headmaster Shupe would have a problem with it. He’s got a sense of humor though, and I’ll talk to him about it if there is a problem.” Beau Shupe was the 47 year old Headmaster of Salem, and a former colleague of Murray’s from the American Auror Command, though it was purely a coincidence that two former Aurors were both Heads of their schools. Though they had never worked directly with each other in Auror Command, Murray and Shupe got along rather well, and better than either did with the Heads of both Pathfinder and Tecumseh, who were a former Muggle Studies teacher and Arithmancy teacher respectively.

“All right, I’ll give it a try then.” The three Brits rose and went over to shake her hand.

“Terrific, glad to have you on the team. We’ll have a set of catalogs, posters, and a demonstration kit delivered to you before you leave for school.....which is when by the way?”

“Saturday afternoon sometime, at least that’s the plan for now.”

“Good, that’s plenty of time. Dobby or Winky here will be back tomorrow afternoon with a care package for you. Harry here has to meet mother Weir, but we’ll take care of it.”

“Great, this sounds cool now that I think more about it. My friends should love this stuff.”

“We’re told that all Americans aren’t necessarily alike, but the students here love the stuff, so you shouldn’t have a problem. There’s no quota for you to sell, since we have no other options at your school, but do your best and we’ll be satisfied with that, no questions asked.” Jessica had heard all about Harry before this, even before her mother took him into the school, but it was kind of strange to be up close to the famous Harry Potter, and being hired by him a few minutes later no less.

“I should send you an owl if I have any questions?”

“Sure, and I’ll have Dobby or Winky bring back my reply, so it will be quicker. My owl is usually on the Michigan/Oklahoma run, in fact I can’t remember the last time she delivered a letter for me.” The twins scratched their heads.

“Sometime in July wasn’t it? Before the big move.”

“Something like that, yeah. I still visit her a few times a week, to let her know I haven’t forgotten her. My first pet.”

“The piranha you got certainly are a contrast.” Harry had stocked his aquarium on New Year’s Eve, and for once behaved totally like a teenage boy. He hadn’t yet given them any live prey, but was thinking about it for the future.

“Cliché I know, but I like the idea. I got myself an aquarium for Christmas, I bought one for some friends of mine back in Britain, and snagged one for myself at the same time.”

The six of them chatted for a few more minutes, before Fred and George volunteered to show the Americans a portable swamp, up close and personal. The group trooped outside, and after Dobby fetched a swamp, the twins deployed it right in front of the school. Jessica was fascinated, and mentally patted herself on the back for saying yes to the job. As she walked around the now arctic swamp:

“I don’t think Professor Shupe would want one of these used inside the building.”

“Well the only time I have is during the first day of Basic Combat. It certainly shocked the crap out of Drew. Professor Ripley told me later that the elves looked at getting rid of it as a challenge.” George looked at Harry.

“We never found out, how long did it take them to get rid of ours at Hogwarts?”

“Flitwick left it there until the hag was ousted, then a flick of the wand later, poof.”

“He’s the one we miss the most there, but it’ll be fine here.” Indeed, Harry had told them about how attractive Professor Maloney was. Girlfriends or not, Fred and George were looking forward to the contrast from the Hogwarts professors.

The twins were prevailed upon to do a few more demonstrations for the Americans, after which they took their leave, flooing back to Warrick’s house. Before they left, they solidified their plans with Professor Murray.

“I’ll send you your official acceptance letters as soon as I get copies of your Hogwarts files. Figure on showing up the second Saturday in April, that will give you a couple of days to acclimate yourselves before you begin classes.”

“What about a sorting, will you be wanting to do that for them?” She considered it for a moment.

“That depends, if you two plan to compete in the Olympics and Quidditch, then yes there probably will be one. If not, then I can slot you right into Cortez, which I’m assuming you would want.”

“Well, that’s a good question, see why we have this guy as our mate? Um.....well I’m probably for doing a sorting myself, just in case. I would love the chance to play Quidditch with Harry again, wouldn’t you Fred?”

“You bet. We wouldn’t take Warrick’s spot though, and Harry tells us that the team Captain is a Beater too.....so we would probably have to play Chaser.” That was an interesting idea.

“Good idea, other than Reiko they could use some more practice before getting in a game again.” Murray was half tempted to put them in Cortez just to see that, but knew that the others Houses would go crazy just at the suggestion of it.

“Fair enough, and in consideration, I’ll only put one of you in the chair, so you both can go into the same House.”

“Thank you ma’am, that’s very considerate of you.” The twins were being very polite and mannered today, and Harry had not really been sure that they could pull it off, not only with Murray but with Michael as well. He knew they would make a good impression, but running their own business had matured them it seemed. One last thing from Murray.

“Harry, did I hear Fred....or was it George, anyway, what did he mean about ‘mother Weir?’”

“The day after we left for break, Warrick and I paid a visit to the Weirs, to try and effect a reconciliation. You know that the brothers have been writing her all this time?”

“So I’ve been told, yes.”

“Well the mother is now on our side, and the father, well he is a squib, that’s why he kicked her out. Jealousy reared its ugly head I guess.” Murray looked contemplative.

“A squib eh? That would explain quite a lot. I know that the brothers aren’t magical, when former Headmaster Rydell left he told me about Sophie’s situation, and I made a point of checking into it. The father was bitter about it? Please tell me you didn’t threaten him.” Harry was more than a bit tired of getting that question, and it showed a little in his tone of voice.

“Why does everyone assume that I would threaten him?”

“Because of your feelings for Sophie, and the fact that Mr. Weir was not likely to treat you with much politeness, given the past history.”

“He was civil enough, and no I did not threaten him. Though I would have loved to beat him within an inch of his life.” Harry was not smiling when he said this.

“I can understand that feeling, you’re a very direct person Harry, and I can sympathize with that given your recent history back over there. I can only imagine what you would think if you ever meet Claudia’s family.”

“Why is that?” Murray didn’t respond verbally, she just touched the side of her nose and sniffed a few times, and Harry got the message.

“So that’s why they were Obliviated, that makes sense.” Claudia seldom talked about her parents, she told Harry that there was no point really, and he had not known about their chemical issues. She still loved them, but their addictions had rendered them all but useless, both to her and themselves. It was a blessing that their only child had proven to be magical, and thus able to go to an expensive boarding school, all paid for the government.

Once back at Forrester House, the three of them found that the place was still empty, as they had only been gone about 45 minutes on their trip to school. Fred and George stuck around for awhile, as they watched some TV and talked over some more WWW strategy. This was not the twins' first visit to a muggle house, or a muggle style house anyway, but they did do some exploring, and found that the house was much like The Burrow, just a bit smaller in some places, larger in others. There were only four bedrooms and three baths, so that was smaller. The rooms were bigger though, as Nick made a nice living with his wands, and they could afford such a large place, even though there were just the three of them at most, two of them usually.

Eventually Martin and Karen returned home, and were interested to meet the twins, who were invited to stay for dinner. Warrick and Reiko arrived right before the food was served, and Fred and George entertained everyone with Harry stories, which always made him grimace. That was the point though, and the twins had a fun time taking the piss out of him. Nick, still nursing his wounds after how badly he had lost the Christmas bet, egged them on, and dinner lasted long enough for Jonas, Sophie, and Claudia to stop by for dessert. They shared the results of their day, and everyone was a little agog at the idea of Fred and George joining them at school, even if only for a couple of months. The twins left after dessert, it had been a long day for them, as they had been up to open the shop. It was a big day tomorrow, and everyone hit the sack pretty early.

Chicago, Illinois

10:00 am EDT

The plan had been hashed out over the phone on Monday between Sophie and her mother. The plan was to meet in Chicago, a not unsubstantial 200 miles drive for the muggles, but it was Wendy Weir's idea and the magical folk saw no reason to argue, if they wanted to spend six hours in the car roundtrip, that was their lookout. Everyone met at the Steele house, and then flooded to the nearest Greyhound Station to where they were going to meet. The meet was to be in the lobby of the Sears Tower, a touristy place that was easily findable for both muggle and magical alike. The floo station was only about a mile from the Tower, and the gang made the walk through the snow packed sidewalks in a little over 20 minutes. The area was so filled with cars that neither Sophie nor Reiko bothered to try and find Wendy's car.

They walked through the huge doors into the lobby, and found that they had gotten there first. Wendy Weir had taken numerous classes on field trips to the Tower over the years, and had suggested the spot where they were to meet. The six of them milled around aimlessly, with Harry doing the most looking around, as he had been the only one of them not to have been here before.

After about ten minutes, Sophie started to get worried, as her family still hadn't gotten there. Against her better judgment, she had given her mother Warrick's phone number, just in case, figuring that her parents might now have Caller ID and have the number anyway. There had been no call to the Forresters, and Wendy Weir did have a cell phone, so if there had been a breakdown on the road she could notify them.

"Should we call them?" Claudia patted her on the arm.

"Relax Sophie, it's snowing pretty steadily out there, its probably just taking them longer to make the drive. If you call, you'll just get the answering machine." Or find out that they're not coming at all, everyone thought, but none of them said out loud. Sophie didn't have her mother's cell number, not thinking she would need it. There weren't phones at Great Lakes anyway, so it wouldn't do her any good beyond this vacation.

"That makes sense, it's been so long since I've been in a car that I forgot about that." In fact her ride with former Headmaster Rydell had been her most recent auto trip, in June 1992, as the girls walked during the few trips they made in muggle Milwaukee and muggle Tulsa. Meanwhile Harry had slipped off and had was exploring. One of the things they had talked about was going to the top of the building, and he was checking his camera as he wandered. Not paying attention, he had meandered toward a set of doors, and was startled when he almost ran into Wendy, Ned, and Jason Weir.

“Oh hello, sorry, I wasn’t paying attention.”

“Hello Harry, its nice to see you again.”

“You too Mrs. Weir. Ned, Jason.” He shook hands with the brothers, Dobby’s words about the envy filling the front of his mind, though he didn’t let it show.

“Good to see you again Harry.”

“Likewise guys. Glad you could make it, we were getting a little worried, with the weather out there and all.”

“The roads in Springfield were pretty bad, but once we got out onto the freeway it got a lot better. Where are the others?”

“At the meeting point, I’ll show you.” He led the three muggles toward the rest of the gang. Sophie’s face lit up when she saw them, and she walked over and hugged her mother.

“Hi mom, boys.” She stuck her tongue out at Ned and Jason.

“Ha ha my very little sister.” And she was, Ned and Jason were both over six feet tall, while Sophie had just about finished growing to make 5’4”.

“We were getting worried.”

“So Harry said, it was just a little hard to get out of Springfield is all.”

“Mom, Ned, Jason this is Claudia Cregg and Jonas Steele. You’ve met Warrick and Reiko, and Harry of course.” She pointed out each of the brothers, who strongly resembled each other, far more than any of the non-twin Weasleys did.

“Pleased to meet you all, we’ve heard a lot about you.” Claudia managed this with a straight face, though she was probably the most militant of the gang in their attitudes towards Wendy.

“Same here, good to meet you.” From Jonas, with a neutral tone of voice.

“It’s good to meet you both, we’ve read a lot about you in Sophie’s letters.” Then a few seconds of silence ensued, as everyone seemed to be waiting for someone else to speak. Harry decided to throw a pence in.

“How bout we go to the top like we talked about?” Everyone agreed that it was a good idea, and they went off to find an empty elevator for the nine of them, which they got after a short wait. It was a long ride to the top, and Harry, typical of his muggle experiences as a kid, had not been in too many elevators, and found it to be a little off-putting, the sensation. They reached the top of the building, and found that it was quite cold, though the snow was falling only intermittently. Sophie, Reiko, and Claudia were huddled with Wendy as they moved off to one of the sides, as there were only about ten other people up there at this time. That left the brothers, looking a bit nervous, to talk with Harry, Jonas, and Warrick. They gave the women their space, and moved to the other side of the observation platform. Harry started with a softball question, before getting to what he really wanted to know.

“So when do you guys go back to school?”

“Probably tomorrow, that’s when we can move back into our dorms. How bout you guys?”

“We’re thinking Sunday, there’s one other thing we have to do tomorrow.” That was a trip to the island, as Harry had more or less abandoned the idea of going there on the weekends, not wanting to have to explain any tans by the gang. Even though he had long assumed her suspicions, the questions by Murray the day before had rocked him a little, and he had resolved to be much more careful about leaving school in the future.

“We’ll have to get you out to one our schools during your spring break, I’m sure its different than your boarding school.” Which is how Jason tried to think of Great Lakes.

“Jason, Ned, I know it must have been hard on you, seeing Reiko use magic last week.” The two looked at each other, how did he know that? Jason took the lead, as usual.

“I was wondering if you were following us.” Harry looked straight at him.

“Why would I follow you?”

“Because of Dad, you would want to make sure nothing happened to Sophie. I suppose you guys have ways of being invisible.”

“We do, but no, I wasn’t there that day. I had my house elves follow you, for the reason that you said. I’m worried about your father and his hostility. Have you noticed any change in him since last week?” That got their attention so much that they didn’t even ask what a house elf was.

“No, and I’ve been looking. He’s a trial lawyer though Harry, he’s tough to read by definition.” Jonas, while interested in the byplay, decided that his scenario needed to be brought into the open.

“Is it possible that he might try to take Sophie out of school by force?” Ned and Jason both looked like that idea had indeed occurred to them.

“No, I honestly don’t think he could do that. I agree its plausible on the surface, but our dad has never even smacked any of us, I can’t see him orchestrating a snatch.” Ned didn’t say anything for a second, but what he asked next surprised his brother.

“Look, if he tries something today, you guys can protect her, right? I mean Sophie told us that you have to be 17 to use your sticks, and some of you can, right?”

“Reiko and I can, and I have a backup plan in place as well.” Named Dobby and Winky.

“You really think he would do that Ned?”

“I don’t know Jason, I don’t know how deep his bitterness goes, do you? I’m not worried so much about Sophie as I am about Mom.” The Weir marriage was considered a ‘traditional’ type of relationship, with a domineering father and loving mother, though Peter was not violent at all.

“She can handle him, don’t worry about that Ned.”

“Like she did with Sophie? She let him do that to her.” The three magicals, all only children, stood there more than a little uncomfortable, as they listened to the brothers hash this out in front of them.

“This is different Ned.” How different, he wasn’t able to explain just then, as the others came over.”

“What are you guys talking about?”

“Nothing important sis, just getting to know each other a little better. It’s freezing out here, can we safely say that we enjoyed the view?” Harry had turned to take a couple of pictures, and for a second had a dreamy look on his face. Sophie saw it, and poked him in the arm.

“What are you thinking about?”

“I’m thinking about a Wronski Feint from the top of this building, just me, my broom, and the rush of a power dive.” Indeed, he was half tempted to have Dobby go get his broom, secrecy be damned.

“I think the government would be a little displeased with that idea.”

“Governments are not about fun Sophie.” He took one more photo, and they joined the others near the elevators. Once in the lobby, talk turned to where to go next.

“Did you folks eat before you came up here? We could get a late breakfast or an early lunch somewhere?”

“Good idea Jonas, didn’t Sophie mention that you’re from Chicago? Why don’t you pick a place.” Jonas needed no further encouragement, and decided that they should all go to his favorite Italian restaurant, which was only about two miles away. A bit far to walk, but they caught a couple of cabs, which got them there just before the lunch rush ten minutes later. The manager was an acquaintance of Michael Steele, and they got a nice, large table in the corner. Talk soon turned to comparing regular muggle high school with Great Lakes, and even Ned and Jason soon loosened up about things, and traded some anecdotes. The lunch took two hours, and everyone was slowly getting used to each other. Just before dessert, Harry excused himself and motioned for Jonas and Warrick to come with him to the bathroom. They entered the thankfully empty room, and Harry called out quietly for Dobby, who popped in, looking relieved that Harry had finally called for him.

“Yes Harry?”

“Are we being tailed?”

“I am not sure Harry, there are two men in dark grey business suits here that were also in the tall building, but I do not know if it is connected to you and your friends.”

“How soon after we got here did they arrive?”

“About three minutes, they walked in just as you were being seated. There are at a table roughly five meters away from you. They do not appear to be trying to listen in to your conversations.”

“Are you sure that it is just those two?”

“I do not know Jonas, there could be more in the parking area.”

“Check it out Dobby, see if there’s anyone waiting in a car.” Dobby nodded, and then when it seemed that there were no further instructions, popped away.

“Maybe we’re just being paranoid here Harry, this is a popular place. It could just be a coincidence.”

“Could be Warrick, but let’s make sure. Winky.” She popped in.

“Winky, I want you to keep an eye on the men Dobby told us about. If they use a cell phone, lift it after they’re done talking and put it in my pocket. Got it?” She nodded, and went off.

“What would that prove?”

“We’ll check the numbers and see if they’ve called Papa Weir. One of the brothers will know his office and cell numbers. I wonder if a cell phone would work at school? We should find that out, be handy to have around.” Harry was getting a headache with all this plotting, but he had a bad feeling about how this was going, and did a few seconds of Occlumency exercises to calm his nerves.

“C’mon you two, the others will be wondering what we’re doing in here.” They washed their hands and took off back to the table. Harry spotted the men Dobby had told them about, and fortunately his place at the table allowed him to keep them somewhat in view.

Dessert was served, and they all shared a few pieces of tiramisu, and Harry and Sophie were both reminded that their first date had been an Italian restaurant, where the dessert was the same as today. She turned to him.

“Are you thinking what I’m thinking?”

“Mario’s on a warm August day?” That was the restaurant in Milwaukee.

“You betcha Mister.” They squeezed hands.

“We’ll go there on our next Flackter trip. Just the two of us.” They had whispered all of this, and the others pretended not to notice. When dessert was almost over, Harry felt a tugging on his shirt. He looked down and didn’t see anyone, so he assumed it was Winky. He reached into his coat pocket and felt around, sure enough, a cell phone was in there now. He waited until the check was paid, at Jonas’ insistence he picked it up, and motioned Jason to hang back as they left the restaurant, deciding on a walk to a nearby bookstore. They let the others get about 10 feet ahead of them before Jason started talking.

“What’s up?”

“Can you figure out this phone?” The only time he had ever used one was right after Thanksgiving at the Forresters’, when Michael had shown him his, and Harry had called a sports line just for the hell of it, though Michael had explained how to use one.

“Sure, I didn’t know you had one of these, it’s a nice one.” If only it was that simple.

“It’s not mine, it belongs to one of the men who may or may not be following us. Check the numbers called and received and see if you recognize any of them.

“Oh my God, are you serious? Wait a minute, you said something earlier about house elves, is that who you have shadowing us? Is that how you got this?”

“They’re very good, very effective, and 100 percent loyal to me. Surely Sophie must have written you about house elves.” Jason inwardly swore at this kid expecting him to remember every detail from 50 letters written by his teenage sister, but forgot that when something hit him.

“Is one of them named Dobby? She mentioned a Dobby, but I can’t remember if it was a friend or something else.”

“He works for me, or I work for him, it seems to fluctuate. Now check out those numbers before the others figure out what we’re doing.” Jason pushed some buttons on the phone and groaned when he saw the list scroll down.

“Oh shit. My dad’s cell phone number is on here, and one that I think is to his office. I haven’t called that one in a few years, so I’m not sure. It’s a Springfield prefix, I can tell you that much.”

“You know Ned and your mother, should we tell them right away or wait for a quiet spot.”

“This is one of the largest cities in the world Harry, where would a quiet spot be?”

“Mate, I have no way of knowing. This is your territory, not mine.”

“Just keep that stick ready, we’ll be fine once we get to the bookstore.” That was another 10 minutes of walking, as the two of them walked quickly to catch up. Warrick and Jonas turned to look at Harry, who just nodded at them, communicating his message. Warrick was walking next to Reiko as it happened, and his arm was already around her shoulders. He leaned way down and whispered into her ear.

“Make sure you have one hand on your wand baby, we’re being followed.” Reiko somehow kept her surprise in check, and did as he asked without comment or question. They reached the store, and Harry herded them all into the coffee area first, which Sophie immediately found suspicious, as Harry loathed coffee.

“What’s going on Harry?”

“At least two people in contact with your father are following us.” Wendy Weir quickly went pale.

“How do you know this?” Harry handed her the cell phone.

“Check the numbers Mrs. Weir.” She did, and went even more white, and this was a lady who was pale to begin with.

“How did you get this?” Enough with the stupid questions, Harry raged inside. What he wouldn’t give to have Fred and George standing next to him right now. They wouldn’t be asking useless questions.

“Magic. Now the question is, what to do about it.”

“Can’t you take care of them? Using your magic I mean.”

“That is an option, yes. Jason, those numbers were called recently?”

“Yeah, since we hooked up with you guys this morning.”

“Let’s huddle up a second, make a circle.” Confused, the muggles did as he asked, though the others recognized a magic hiding circle when they saw one. Once it was done:

“Dobby.” The little fellow popped in, nearly giving Wendy Weir and her two sons a collective stroke. Harry ignored this though:

“Are they in here?”

“Yes Harry, they are in the sports section of the store, and your group huddle is making them suspicious.” Well that was just too damn bad.

“Is it just the two of them?”

“So far as Winky and I can tell.”

“Well we have two options here: One, we can take care of them ourselves; Two, we can send for Drew’s father, he’ll be able to take care of them officially.”

“What do you mean ‘take care of’? You’ll kill them?” That was an option of course, but Harry was not quite so ruthless as to do that to people not trying to kill him first.

“I mean having their memories modified Ned. But if they make one false move, I’ll make them wish they’d never been born. And then I’ll visit your dad.” The temperature in the room dropped a few degrees with that statement. Sophie took advantage of the silence, and looked at Dobby.

“Dobby, please go get Drew’s dad, Mitchell Baylor. He’s at the Auror Headquarters in Flackter Alley.” Dobby looked at Harry, he wasn’t going to do anything here without Harry’s express permission.....he knew where his rice bowl was.

“Go ahead Dobby, please hurry. Bring him right back here.”

“Yes Harry.” He went off, and the huddle broke.

“Let’s split up until Mr. Baylor gets here.” They were just starting to break apart, when the man himself came striding quickly out of the bathroom area, followed by three other people that Harry assumed were his subordinates. They came up to the group, and Mitchell shook Harry’s hand.

“Harry, good to see you again. I understand you have some more spies for me to deal with.” Harry introduced Mitchell to the others, only Jonas had ever met him before.

“Yes sir. They are wearing dark grey suits and have been following us. They’re muggles in the employ of Sophie’s father, Dobby last saw them in the sports section.”

“I remember Drew saying that one of your friends has a problem father. Marcus, William, go fetch our new friends. Do it very quietly, but use Imperious if you have to.” Like Ripley had once told Harry and the rest of his Basic Combat class, some Unforgivables were in fact forgivable.

Mitchell’s other associate stayed behind, as Harry gave them the 30 second rundown, imparting information to them that the others hadn’t necessarily known about. By the time his spiel was over, Marcus Giles and William Miller had returned with their two prisoners, who both had glazed expressions on their faces.

“It went down without a fuss Mitchell, they’ve been very cooperative. Meet Robert Ryan and Terrence Benedict, they’re private detectives employed by one Peter Weir.” Wendy turned and ran into the bathroom, whereupon she became very sick. Sophie ran after her, followed closely by Reiko and Claudia. The men stood there, silent for a moment. Harry introduced Ned and Jason, and Mitchell sized up Jason as the one to deal with.

“Jason, I think once your mother returns, we need to discuss having your father Obliviated.....that’s having his memory modified to erase any knowledge of our world.”

“I don’t know what to say.” Ned had an easy question.

“What about us? Would we have our memories erased as well?”

“No, not unless you want it. We can do that for you, if it would make things easier for you.” Jason was back into it now.

“Dad’s parents are magical, he apparently grew up in a magical house. Could you do that much modification?” Mitchell hadn’t know that, as the Listening Charms and their cause were not part of his fief within the Midwest DMLE.

“Something clearly needs to be done here Jason, but let’s wait until your mother comes out. Patrick, go get a special car, we had best talk about this back at Headquarters.” The other man hurried off. After about five more minutes, Wendy and the girls came out of the bathroom.

“I’m sorry about that.” Mitchell was more or less a cop, and had more than a little practice at this kind of thing.

“Don’t worry about it Mrs. Weir, this must be a lot to take in.”

“Yes it is. What do we do now?”

“My associate Patrick is getting our transportation, and we’ll do this at our Headquarters.”

“And where is that?”

“Milwaukee, but don’t worry, we’ll go there magically. We’ll have you back here in no time at all.” Wendy looked at her watch, it was now 1:00 pm.

“We have a three hour drive back to Springfield, more probably in this weather.”

“We’ll save you the trip, we’ll transport you back to Springfield ourselves, I’ll have someone get your car down there for you. All you’ll have to do is drive it a mile home.” He said this nicely, but with such a sense of control that Wendy felt like she had little choice but to go along with it.

“All right.” Patrick returned a minute later, and gave the okay sign. Marcus and William led their guests out the front door, and Mitchell motioned for the others to follow. Once at the car, he turned to the magical kids.

“Harry, you and your friends may come if you like, or I can come see you afterward. It’s your choice, but you’re welcome if you want to come.” Sophie didn’t hesitate.

“We’re coming, I want to see this through.” The others nodded, and they all piled into the car, which somehow fit fifteen people into a Ford Explorer. They turned down an alley and then zipped off via the portkey. They wound up in a garage under the Flackter Alley Auror Headquarters. They journeyed up to a conference room, and the muggle detectives were placed into chairs. After some quiet haggling between Baylor and what appeared to be a doctor, the doctor administered Veritaserum to the one named Robert Ryan. Baylor waited a few minutes for the potion to sink in, reading a couple of files that he had been brought.

“What is your full name and age?”

“Robert Alexander Ryan, I’m 45 years old.”

“Where do you live?”

“2334 Euclid Street, Springfield, Illinois.”

“Who are you employed by?”

“No one, I run my own firm.”

“What were you doing today?”

“Following a woman named Wendy Weir.”

“Who hired you to do that?”

“Her husband Peter.”

“Did he say why?”

“He thought she was meeting their daughter behind his back.”

“Why would that be bad?”

“He wouldn’t say, and I’m not paid to ask questions like that.”

“Have you followed her before?”

“No, Terrence and I were hired on Monday.”

“What were your instructions?”

“Just to take pictures.”

“Did he give you any instructions about the daughter?”

“No, he said we were to leave her alone.” Harry heaved a loud sigh of relief.

“Have you contacted Peter Weir since you saw the daughter today?”

“Just once, as we were tailing them from the Sears Tower.”

“Are you aware that there is a magical world, hidden from your own?”

“I don’t know what you are talking about.”

Baylor had heard enough, and he cut off the interrogation. He motioned for his people to remove their guests. Once they were gone, Mitchell addressed Wendy.

“Mrs. Weir.”

“Please call me Wendy.”

“Mitchell. Wendy, we need to discuss having your husband’s memory modified.”

“I was thinking you would bring that up. Has it really come to that Mitchell?”

“I believe that it has Wendy. While our guests were being prepped, I read up on your situation. Your husband's attitude could expose our world, and having read his file, I'm surprised that he hasn't spilled before now.”

“I'm not trying to be antagonistic about this, but do I have any say in this?”

“We are consulting you Wendy, but we will do what we have to do. And there is Sophie to consider. Just because he did not authorize a kidnapping, it doesn't mean that he wouldn't in the future if you continued in contact.”

“I'm her mother, I only want what's best for her.” Well there was a little problem with that.

“You are no longer her guardian Wendy, you and your husband ceded those rights when you made her choose between yourselves and magic.” Wendy went quiet for a moment, as Jason asked the obvious.

“Then who is her guardian?”

“Professor Joanne Murray is the guardian for all those in Sophie's situation, which if I read correctly includes Miss Cregg here in its generalities. The appropriate alterations have been made in the muggle world as well, as Murray is also the head of the ghost boarding school that these kids, and my own son, are registered at.”

“How much will you have removed?”

“We will just remove the fact that Sophie is magical. His childhood can remain the way it is. All we will do is make sure that he thinks that your daughter is just as muggle as your sons here are, only she is much more gifted and goes to a different school.....yes Jason, Ned, I know that your IQ scores are similar to Sophie's, but that is the story that will be fabricated." One of Baylor's gifts was speed reading, and he had a near photographic memory to go with it, part of the reason that he had reached his position of Head Auror at the age of 30.

"Will this hurt him at all?"

"No Wendy, it is a totally painless procedure, akin to someone tapping him on the head lightly."

"Then do what you must, I won't object.....I can't." Baylor was rather surprised that she had agreed so readily, but he wasn't complaining. He would ask the Head Unspeakable, whose department ran the Listening Charms on problem families, to expand their coverage. This would bear having closer scrutiny, at least for the near future.

"Fair enough. I will order it done tonight. I suggest that you and your sons go out to dinner, and do not return home until at least 7:00 pm. After that, do not speak of this with your husband, not at all. Wendy, Jason, Ned, can you handle that?"

"We can, can't we boys?"

"Do what must be done."

"Yeah, I don't have a problem with it." Baylor got up and left the room, followed by his associates. The silence was thick in the air, until Wendy looked at Harry.

"You did the right thing Harry, having all of us followed like that. I don't know what I would have come home to if those two had been allowed to make their report. All this is for the best." Wendy indeed had been scared blind after she heard the confession from Robert Ryan, and was much, much calmer now.

“She’s right Harry, this has been building for years, maybe it will give Dad peace to have all this off his mind.”

“Jason’s right, if this relieves a burden from him, well then that’s a good thing.”

“I wish it didn’t have to be like this, I really do. I’m sorry.” Sophie hadn’t said a word in quite awhile, but looked right at her boyfriend.

“Everything happens for a reason Harry, you did nothing more than try to look out for me, like you have every day since we met. You didn’t make Dad do any of this. And if he had touched one hair on my head, or Mom’s.....I would have helped you take care of him, I swear to God.” Wendy looked at her daughter with no small amount of incredulity.

“You don’t mean that Sophie.”

“You better believe I do Mom, I’ve spent five years plus in exile because of his jealousy and immaturity, cut off from my family. Well by God I’m tired of having his whims dictate my life. This Obliviation better take, or my rich boyfriend here will bring someone over from Britain to do the job right. Do you hear me?” She shouted at what she assumed were Listening Charms inside the room. Only Reiko had heard this kind of rant before, and even then only a couple of times in the first year of exile. Harry in particular had never seen her this angry, and was a bit flummoxed as to how to handle it. Hermione and Ginny angry he was used to dealing with, but not someone he was snogging. Fortunately, Mitchell came back in.

“It will take Sophie, don’t worry about that. We’re very good at this kind of thing here. In fact, the team I dispatched is the same one that handled Claudia’s parents. No need for Harry’s people to come over here, as efficient as they must be in Britain at this sort of thing. Now Wendy, would you like to be taken back to Chicago? Or directly on to Springfield?” Wendy had already decided on that one.

“Chicago please, we need some time to come down from all of this, the drive back will help us do that.”

“Not a problem. The kids can floo back to the Forresters’, Steele’s, and Tecumseh from here. Now I’ll leave you to say goodbye, just give a yell when you’re ready to go, and we’ll get you back to your car.” He left again, and Wendy got up, going over to Sophie. She put her hand on her daughter’s shoulder.

“I understand why you said what you said Sophie, and I don’t really blame you. I’m going to talk to Peter’s parents and see what I can do from that score. We’ll see each other during your spring break, okay? If your father truly thinks you’re going to be a……a muggle? Is that what you call us?”

“Yes mom, its not a dirty word or anything, its just a term.”

“Well if he thinks you’re a muggle, then you can come to the house. We can be a family again, without any bitterness or hostility. If I had known how simple it would be, I would have asked your people to do this years ago.” Sophie got up and hugged her.

“I’ll be there Mom, I’ll write you in care of Ned or Jason.” Wendy nodded goodbye to the others and left the room.

“Be good little sister, we’ll see you in a few months.” Ned and Jason both gave her a quick hug, and followed their mother out. Claudia looked at Sophie.

“Is it really that simple?”

“No, because I’m a Witch, and they’re not. It will always be in the back of their minds, well except Dad’s.”

“Will you still go see them come spring?”

“That’s up to them, and I’ll even go along with pretending I’m a muggle if it keeps the peace. But that’s it, I’m done sacrificing. Now I say we go to the island today and tomorrow, we need some relaxation. All those in favor, raise your hands.” They all did, relieved that she was calming down. They left the room to go floo back to Warrick's, and Harry and Sophie went last through the fireplace.

"Are you going to be okay?"

"I'm okay now Harry, I'm with my family right now, and you guys always pull me through."

"I love you Sophie, I'll always be there for you."

"I love you too Harry, and I'm there for you too."

"Merlin knows I need you for that too." They both laughed and kissed for a good long time, though not long enough for someone to come back looking for them. They got back to Warrick's and everyone had their last 36 hours of fun at Isla de Marauder, getting nice and tan.....well not Warrick, he was tan enough already. They went over the events of Friday in detail, and not for the first time, agreed that Harry's hiring of Dobby and Winky was a masterstroke of epic proportions.

Great Lakes

10:30 am

Harry and Warrick took the portkey in that morning, getting there first of all the gang, the rest of whom wanted their sleep. They arrived in the Dining Hall at the end of breakfast, and the room was about half full with returning students who were either just returning, or eating, or both. Neither of them wanted anything to eat, so they slowly wandered up to their room. Once in the Cortez Lounge though, they were greeted by a strange sight:

Joe Clancy was pink.

Yes pink, all over, from the top of his head to the soles of his shoes, and everything in between, eyes and teeth included.

“There they are! They did this!” Two guesses who he was pointing at.

Standing next to Clancy was Professor Heyman, who had an enigmatic look on face, with all the onlookers going quiet now. Harry was looking up and down at Clancy.

“Why Joe, words fail me.” They didn’t fail Warrick however.

“That is so your color Joe, I mean it really suits you.” Heyman was neither smiling, nor frowning, and there seemed to be a battle ongoing within him on whether or not to show what he was really thinking. He turned his gaze on the new arrivals.

“Harry, Warrick, welcome back. Can you explain this?” Harry and Warrick looked at each other, and then gave into laughter. After he stopped heaving, Harry explained.

“Yes sir, we can. You see there was an incident before Christmas Break where Joe’s furniture allegedly got rearranged. We were there when he started yelling about it, and while he didn’t accuse us outright, you yourself know how he blames us for everything.”

“We were leery of a some payback, Joe here being that kind of guy you know. So Harry, Rick, Terry, and I arranged to have our dorm room door booby trapped. If someone who was not one of us, or a house elf, got through the door, he or she was to be magically expelled and made pink.”

“We would be more than happy to show you the combination of charms that we used, anytime you like.....in private of course sir, we don’t want to encourage any copycats.” Harry had found them in one of his obscure books, and the whole thing was a variation on what Dumbledore had done with the Age Line at the beginning of the Tri-Wizard Tournament, searching for it with an eye toward putting it on the trunk floo, just in case the whole secret of it unraveled. Rick and Terry had been all for it, they had no more love for Clancy than

Warrick did, and they took a chance that neither Murray nor Heyman would do a room inspection while they were gone.

“Joe, what do you say to that? Never mind, let’s go check the rooms out. Harry, how long is this going to last?”

“The door charms are indefinite, unless cancelled. Joe will be pink for a total of 12 hours, though I do know the reversal spell if need be.” The four of them walked to the boys’ doors. A pair of quick scans by Heyman revealed nothing on Clancy’s door or it’s environs, and a triple combination of charms that even Heyman, a former teacher of the subject, had never come across.

“Joe, I think you should say something here.” He had no other way out of this but to confess, though he did not go down willingly.

“Okay fine, I tried to get in there to do to them just what they did to me. They broke into my room, why shouldn’t I break into theirs?” It was a rhetorical question, but Harry answered it anyway.

“Well we didn’t break into your room Joe, you bloody moron. You yourself told Ed Lattimore that day that nothing was taken anyway. Professor Heyman, unless you and Professor Murray both specifically order me to, I will not undo his pinkness. An example needs to be made here.” The example being ‘I am not to be trifled with’, Harry had to restrain himself from saying, but the inference was noted by all.

“Furthermore sir, we demand that he be officially punished for trying to violate the sanctity of our room.” The two of them stared hard at the Deputy Headmaster, feeling hypocritically righteous, as they had provoked Clancy into his deed. Heyman suspected as much too, so he was happy to disappoint them.

“I would say that you have punished Joe sufficiently at this time. That said, I have no problem with the booby trap staying on your door, provided that you place Professor Murray and myself under the same immunity that yourselves, your roommates, and presumably your collective girlfriends all enjoy.” Harry had been ready to suggest just that anyway.

“All we need is a hair and some privacy from certain nosy criminals.” No way was he going to let this spell cocktail out for public use. Heyman had no objection.

“That’s fine, Joe, please go await me in the Lounge.” Clancy was near apoplectic, and thus did something very rash..

“Make him take this crap off me!” The Deputy Headmaster’s voice took a hard tone, as he took a step toward the boy.

“Yelling at me gets you nowhere positive Joe, don’t ever forget that.” Warrick almost peed in his pants at hearing that, something he had wanted to hear for many years now. Clancy, perhaps to his credit, saw the landscape change and reacted accordingly.

“Yes sir, but may I please wait for you in my room?”

“No, you will go into the Lounge. You will not be given a detention, but you need to understand that you do not have carte blanche to enter someone else’s room without their permission, however you think they may have wronged you. Now go.” Clancy walked slowly toward the Lounge door, and the other three remained silent until he was away.

“Was that a smokescreen, or do you really need a hair from me?”

“A drop of blood is what’s needed sir, either that or you hold on to someone who is protected already.” Heyman just shook his head.

“I would call you paranoid, but you’ve already been proven correct, so that won’t float, will it?” Harry just smiled politely, as Heyman did a quick Cutting Charm on his forearm. At Harry’s direction, he put a drop of blood on the doorknob, and Harry then pointed his wand at the knob and barely even whispered a six word incantation, done so that Heyman couldn’t hear it exactly. No glow or anything resulted, but it was done nonetheless.

“So that’s it? How will I know?”

“Well you could go through the door and not become pink, or you could take my word that I’ve done the exact same procedure with ten other people, myself included, and none of us changed colors.” Heyman chose the latter option.

“I’ll take your word for it. Now, off the record, why did you rearrange his furniture? Was it payback, or did he do something new?” Warrick took that one.

“Both sir. It was a kind of fun way to send him a message about his past behavior. And I did see him be really nasty to a Novice girl that week, about computer use or something like that, I didn’t hear the whole thing. I did hear her crying afterward though.” Heyman sighed. He had heard from Clancy all about Harry’s threat to him, and had noticed that the loner stayed as far away from the gang as he could get away with. Now it seemed that he was visiting his unpleasant demeanor on the younger kids, and that was not going to last long if Heyman had anything to say about it, and he did.

“All right, I suppose thanks are in order for sticking up for a younger student. One condition though: leave his room alone. It was funny once, but don’t do it again. Am I understood?”

“Yes sir.”

“Yes Professor Heyman.” They agreed too quickly for Heyman’s taste, but he let it lie.

“Now Harry, if you would do me a personal favor.” Harry anticipated what the favor was.

“I’ll undo the pink if that’s what you really want sir.”

“It is Harry, I think he has finally gotten the message not to trifle with you. Any further incidents of him harassing a younger student, bring them to my attention okay?”

“Yes sir. Let us get our trunks inside “ He and Warrick removed their trunks from their respective pockets and slid them over to their beds. They walked back out with Heyman, who had shown some stones and followed them into the room, not turning pink. They entered the Lounge, and saw that things were more or less back to normal, though everyone had one eye on Mr. Pink. Said young man was sitting on an easy chair in the corner, trying not to attract any more attention that he already was.

Heyman walked to the door, and stood there as Harry and Warrick hesitated for a second. Then Harry approached Clancy, ambling slowly, with a cruel smile on his face, for the total effect.

And whipped out his wand, quick draw style:

Finite Incantatem!

Clancy nearly had a heart attack, and only just managed to keep his bowels normal, as the pink slowly receded, and his body returned to normal. He looked at his arms and legs, and breathed a sigh of relief.

Once he could breathe again that is.

The other students were engaged in fits of silent laughter, as Harry twirled his wand through his fingers, and then pocketed it. He walked up to Heyman, Warrick following him.

“I did the charm cocktail myself, so reversing it was easier than it would have been with somebody else.” Clancy had not fled though, not wanting to give Harry and Warrick the satisfaction.

“ Very well Harry, Warrick, enjoy the remainder of your day.” Heyman walked out the door, and only then let the smile reach his face. He passed a few students on his way down to his office, and all of them wondered at what had caused it.

Sophie and the others arrived in the next couple of hours, and were completely outraged that they had missed the show, even more so when they learned that Winky had not taken any pictures of it.

“Hey, I didn’t think he would be stupid enough to try to break into our room.”

“He’s just that stupid, and you should have prepared for that.”

“Oh like it wouldn’t have been obvious if I had my house elf waiting with her camera. Subtlety Reiko, subtlety. We’re lucky that Heyman didn’t nail us as it was. No need to be seen gloating about it.” The latecomers conceded that point, and soon everyone split up. The guys went to grab some younger students for a snowball fight, no magic used this time. The women, after commenting on the sizes of the guys’ brainpans, did their unpacking slowly, and wound up watching a movie in the Shawnee Lounge.

Two days later Josh Lyman agreed to sound out some of nieces and nephews at Pathfinder, of which there were five in various stages of schooling, as to whether they were interested in becoming WWW representatives. A day later, Dobby returned with the first sets of orders from Tecumseh and Salem. Steve had been marketing his butt off, and had sold $1200 worth of product since Christmas Day, while Jessica had managed $350, as she was not as natural a hustler as Steve was. Harry and the twins were ecstatic at the results, and the twins again congratulated Harry on emigrating.. Winky had taken to doing a couple of hours of manufacturing per day, mostly with easy stuff, like the candies. Her products all passed muster, and relieved some of the load on Fred and George.

On Friday Hedwig returned with a note from Karl Aylesworth saying that he and Lisa had decided to buy a trunk come spring, but they wanted to wait for Harry to show them how to use it. They had a week off around Easter, and they said it could wait until then. Karl also wrote that he was talking to Michael about him buying one as well, so Harry was soon going to become trunk maker Anthony Hook’s new best friend.

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

Noon GMT

The inner core of the Death Eaters was gathered in the conference room, with Voldemort yet to make an appearance. Present were the unofficial department heads: Malfoy, Pettigrew, Nott, and Lestrage. Snape was not there for the session, as part of it would be spent discussing him. Greasy had not been treated any differently in the month since the Hogsmeade debacle, and he was not technically aware that he had been tortured. He knew something was amiss though, as his magical power and energy seemed to be reduced somewhat, and he was getting headaches more often than he had before, though those had come from some noxious Potions ingredients. There were potions that could alleviate some of his problem symptoms, but it did appear that his boss and his pet rat had been a little overzealous in their 'negative feedback'. Snape had not been allowed to leave Riddle Manor since his disciplinary session, and any shopping for Potions' ingredients had been done by flunkies.

Eventually Voldemort swept in, purposely keeping them waiting, to make a point one supposed. He sat down, and everyone came to attention in their seats, all the while praying that they wouldn't incur his dissatisfaction. Crucio had been handed out a little more often since the battle, though none in the room now had been hit with it since the Hogsmeade debacle.

"Let us begin. Wormtail, how have the recruitments gone?"

"We have fully replaced our numbers from the battle sir, and then some. In terms of raw numbers, we are roughly ten percent stronger than we were in December. In terms of magical power and ability, we are a little below par there, as our new recruits are not up to our usual standards. They are all eager to serve however, and will follow orders without question." Beggars couldn't be choosers after all.

“Good, every army needs shock troops, and cannon fodder. Malfoy, finances?”

“They’re looking fine my Lord, nothing new to report.”

“Nott.”

“I have found us a new Potions Master my Lord, if we are still looking at replacing the bungler.” None of the inner core had liked or trusted Snape in the first place, so the contempt for him was nothing new. Nott had been headhunting, so to speak, for the last three weeks, and had rarely been at Riddle Manor.

“Really, who is he?” It would be a he, since while Voldemort was not a true misogynist, he by and large preferred men for his important posts, Bella being the all important exception, but there were personal issues bonding the two of them.

“His name is Michael Parrish, he is 44 years old, and currently resides in Bodo, Norway.”

“Why have I heard that name before? He is not a Hogwarts graduate is he?” Voldemort’s encyclopedic memory had a mental file on all Hogwarts graduates of the last few decades, even the ones who matriculated while he was in exile.

“No sir, he attended Durmstrang, and taught there for ten years. The departure of the traitor Karakoff caused a shakeup there, and Parrish was eased out. He is Welsh/Norwegian by birth, and speaks perfect English. He has long been sympathetic to our cause, and with the right financial promises, he will come over here and take Snape’s spot.”

“I see that you said that the he would replace Snape. He is not willing to work with our man?”

“With him perhaps, as in Snape working for him. He won’t work under Snape, that was presented to me in no uncertain terms. He respects Snape as a fine scholar, but feels that his own talents far exceeds our friend's in most every way."

"Is he correct?"

"By and large, yes. Snape is such an unpleasant personality that he does not have as much respect in the international Potions community that he perhaps should, but even factoring that in, Parrish is one of the leading people in the field, and in my opinion, the most talented Dark Wizard or sympathizer in his chosen area."

"Did you make any approach to the new man at Hogwarts?"

"I did my Lord, I visited him a couple of weeks ago at his family home. Charles Shepherd is probably the apolitical man I have ever met. He listened politely, and told me bluntly that he really could not care less who won the war, or how. All he wants is to do his work in peace. He only took the Hogwarts job for the experience, and the opportunity to examine his profession from another angle."

"So he is no Dumbledore loyalist?"

"No, nor is he a detractor. The old fool leaves him alone, much as he did with Snape, and Shepherd makes no waves." Draco had told his Master much the same in his reports.

"So what are the chances that Dumbledore knows that we are replacing Snape?"

"At my request, Shepherd assured me that he would keep our meeting private, and I believed him my Lord." As much as he trusted anyone's rational judgment in this room, Voldemort trusted Nott's, the man was not prone to hyperbole.

"Back to Parrish, what is he currently doing in Norway?"

“Private research, and some illicit brewing on the side. He does not come from a wealthy family, but he is comfortable financially due to his black market activities.”

“When can he get here?”

“Within two days of getting our owl, he would need that much time to pack up his things. He also has a few long-term potions brewing as we speak, so he would need a series of portkeys to get back to Norway.”

“What are his financial demands?”

“He wants a base salary of 10,000 galleons a month, plus access to unlimited supplies for his other research.” That wasn’t bad, though it was much more than they were paying Snape, which is to say that they were not paying him anything, as Snape had family money, and was, in theory, a true believer to the cause. Malfoy put forth his opinion:

“It seems to me that we have two options: Kill Snape, or force him to work under the new man. I for one advise killing Snape, his ego would never allow him to work under someone else, at least in Potions.” Lestrangle was next, as the bad man had let Malfoy have his say.

“Why don’t we send him back to Dumbledore, under Imperius? I’m sure he could get close enough to the old man to kill him.” Voldemort shook his head, he had noticed Snape’s recent decline, and while it had not saddened him, it caused it’s own set of complications.

“Even in his weakened state, Snape is too strong mentally to put under that curse. There are a select few, including Potter, Dumbledore, and myself who can do it, and Snape is one of them. No, that is not an option here, as nice as it sounds. Wormtail, what is your view?” Pleased that Voldemort had asked for his counsel:

“Are we agreed that Parrish is going to be hired?” Voldemort nodded at him.

“Then for the next two days we do nothing at all, and then we isolate Snape for a week after that.” Malfoy looked confused.

“Why is that?”

“To make sure that Parrish works out as we want. No point in killing Snape, and that is my preference as well Malfoy, until we have his replacement firmly on board and assimilated. Remember, this Parrish fellow is a mercenary, not a true believer. We have to make sure.” His Master was nodding in agreement.

“A sound plan Wormtail. Bella, take your husband and go to Parrish’s and help him pack, feel him out. If he has any second thoughts, kill him immediately. Leave as soon as the meeting is over.”

“Yes Master, it will be done.”

“Wormtail, find a place to isolate Snape. Take as many of those sleeping draughts as you think you’ll need, and two or three troops. Keep him sedated, do not let him get coherent enough to start poking through your mind.”

“Yes sir. I know the perfect place.” Nott couldn’t resist.

“Where?”

“The Shrieking Shack in Hogsmeade. The village itself is now deserted, and the tunnel to the Whomping Willow has been sealed, presumably by the old fool. It’s the last place they would ever think to check.”

“Excellent, take a team there immediately and get it set up. But before you go, I want you do one little thing for me Wormtail.” Pettigrew had a bad feeling about this, but had no choice but to respond:

“Anything my Lord. What is your wish?”

“Set up a meeting for me with Greyback.” Eh?

“Yes my Lord. For what time and place?”

“Two weeks from today, in Hogsmeade, sometime after dark, pick the time yourself.” Pettigrew did not like the sound of this at all, but pressed on with his questions.

“As you wish Master. May I tell him the subject of the meeting?”

“Yes, tell him that I will personally deliver the 50,000 galleons that are owed him, and a bonus of a like amount, as pre-payment for a future operation.” Pettigrew couldn’t believe his ears, nor could Nott or Malfoy. Bella just smirked at them.

“You want to kill him personally Master?”

“Yes I do Bella, he and his pack of animals only managed to kill two Order members. Useless they are, incapable of beating amateur rabble like Dumbledore’s fools. Plus, they’re abnormal as it is. They need to be liquidated.” Left unsaid was that if Greyback’s troops had won their battle, this conversation would not be taking place.

“He won’t bring his entire pack with him, will he? Would he be that foolish?”

“It does not matter if he does. If so, then we will destroy them in place. If not, then it will be our collective pleasure to extract the information from him. That is why the two week delay Wormtail, I would not dream of denying you a part in the fun.” The smile he gave would have frozen an active volcano, but Wormtail basked in the compliment. First he would get to experiment on Snape, though that had been left unsaid by his boss, and soon thereafter on Greyback. This was going to be a good month he thought gleefully.

“Thank you Master, I will not let you down with Snape.”

“I know you won’t Wormtail.” Lucius never looked happy when Pettigrew was praised, and this was no different. He eyed his rival with distaste, which was returned in kind.

“I will decide on an appropriate end for Snape soon, one that everyone here can enjoy.” Nothing like entertainment for his troops.

He then dismissed them all but Malfoy, as Bella and Pettigrew readied for their excursions.

“Malfoy, how familiar is your wife with the area around the Order headquarters?”

“She was in and out of there during all of her childhood.”

“Good, put her with one of the troops who has any art ability, there must be one out of all of them. I want a detailed as possible schematic of the house and its environs.”

“Yes my Lord, I will get right on it. I should point out though, that no one currently resides there, with the werewolf being at Hogwarts.”

“All the better Lucius, since we are not going to destroy it. We are going to take it over, and make it our southern Headquarters. I have found a way around the Fidelius Charm in place there, and it would be a knife in the old man’s heart if we were to yank the Black seat of power away from him. It rightfully belongs to your wife and Bella anyway.” He left out Tonks’ mother for obvious reasons, as she had just as strong a claim on it as Bella and Narcissa.

“A timetable my Lord?”

“We will do it after we take care of Snape and Greyback, but the planning and preparation needs to start now.”

“And are we contemplating any actions against the Ministry?” He was walking on dangerous ground here, but was hoping for a little of their old dynamic. Voldemort gave him a 'don't press your luck Malfoy' look, but did answer the question.

"No, we need to deal with Greyback and Dumbledore first. Reduce our enemy list in turn."

"Is it possible that Greyback could make a deal with Dumbledore or Scrimgeour?"

"Not with our dear Minister, not after Hogsmeade, even Rufus has his limits. Dumbledore will make a deal with anyone, and that is what has me concerned." Malfoy could certainly believe that. Dumbledore likely still had hopes of converting Voldemort to the true faith, and Potter too.

"An approach through Lupin perhaps?"

"He is the logical choice, however complicated a history that the two animals may have. Best to nip that in the bud."

He waved Malfoy away, and the lesser man went off to floo his wife, who was still mostly in residence at Malfoy Manor, though she was under intermittent surveillance by The Ministry.

British Ministry of Magic, Office of the Minister

9:45 am GMT

Rufus and Amos Diggory were meeting this morning, to discuss the planned announcement of three Wizengamot seats to be filled, one of which was going to Arthur Weasley, though he had not yet been told. They were drafting the press release when there was a pounding at the door.

"Enter!"

An out of breath Travis Biller, along with an equally frantic Amelia Bones came shooting in.

“What the hell just happened? Are we under attack!” Then Rufus noted that the two newcomers were both grinning.

“Not quite Minister, though the news is big.”

“What is it?”

“The Australian Ministry has located Fudge, they sent a high-speed communication to us just a few minutes ago.” The floo was not designed for the kind of distance that there was between Great Britain and Australia, so the countries used the equivalent of the Pony Express, only with owls, for important, but secret messages. In a pinch though, they simply used a muggle telephone, something they had done with this. It was not considered very high security though, as they knew that the muggle American government alone was capable of intercepting any land-line phone traffic, and the secret of the magical world could not be risked.

“Oh my, oh my. Where is he?”

“A village called Flanders Park, in the Outback. It’s mostly made up of muggles, but rumor has it that there are some Wizards there.” The rumor was incorrect, but Biller didn’t know that.

“Are they sure that Fudge is there?”

“Yes they are, based on the photos we’ve transmitted to them. They haven’t gone in to get him yet, they wanted to wait to see if we wanted that privilege.” Rufus closed his eyes for a moment and thought about it. After about ten seconds he opened them again.

“I want both of you over there, take your old crew Travis, but have the Aussies go with you. I want this to be a joint operation. Amelia, ensure that our friends Down Under get their proper share of the reward for their help. They could also use the cash I’m sure.” Dark Wizard Davey Hando had taken control of the Wizard population on the smaller island of Tasmania, and was becoming almost as much of a factor in Australia as Voldemort was in Great Britain.

“Yes sir, leave right away?”

“Yes, start the portkey journey as soon as possible.” When traveling long distances by portkey, it was recommended that rest periods be taken for every few thousand miles of the trip, to let the magic inside the body recover sufficiently. This meant that a Great Britain to Australia transit would take about 90 minutes.

“Should we question him there, or wait until we make the return trip?”

“See what you can get there, at least as far as the money goes, and find out immediately if he is in communication with Voldemort, or this Hando character. You have official permission to question him as hard as you need to Travis, with or without Veritaserum.” A smile crept over Travis’ face, he knew just how to handle this.

“Yes sir. Amelia, I’ll meet you in the portkey area in five minutes.” He left, and Bones looked at her new boss, who was her immediate subordinate less than four months earlier. Bones had wanted no part of the scrutiny and complaining that came with the position/responsibility/lot in life of being Minister of Magic. Even when Fudge was in power, she had still done mostly as she pleased, except for a few Potter incidents, and troubles with Dumbledore.

“Are we going to inform Dumbledore? As Head of the Wizengamot he should be told.”

“Let’s wait until we have the buffoon first Amelia, and see what his information is. I don’t trust Dumbledore not to tell his Order people, and I don’t want Voldemort getting knowledge of this until we have Fudge secure.”

“You’re convinced that Voldemort has infiltrated the Order.”

“Hell Amelia, he’s got spies inside The Ministry, why not Dumbledore’s group? I mean anyone who trusts Snape deserves to be kept out of the initial loop. I trust the three of us and Travis, that’s enough for now.” It helped with Amos that he was fed Veritaserum in his morning coffee everyday, one could never be too careful. Bones was curious about something.

“Did Biller tell you about the Potter/Dumbledore meeting at the Academy?” She assumed that he had, Biller was Scrimgeour’s protégé from way back, and the two had a firm friendship. It was widely assumed that Rufus would be the godfather of Biller’s child, once it was born. Rufus did not disappoint her.

“He did, showed it to me via pensieve even. The kid actually said he would kill himself before reconciling with Dumbledore on the old man’s terms. I tell you this Amelia, I believed him.”

“Moody said the same thing, he was half convinced that Potter was going to try to kill Dumbledore right then and there. Shouldn’t we intervene in this somehow? This is in danger of spiraling out of control.”

“Yes it is, but strictly speaking this is a private matter. If Potter wants to hate him, that’s his business, though I don’t blame him. If he wants us to prosecute Dumbledore for putting him with those muggles, then I would certainly be willing to do that, but only if the kid makes a direct request for us to do so. Until then though, we will not interfere.”

“Yet you keep tabs on Potter’s movements in America. You must have some interest in him.”

“The interest is on Voldemort’s and Dumbledore’s sides Amelia, and it is in our best interests to keep an eye on Potter because of that, if nothing else. Now you had better get going. I’ll speak to you when you return.” It was a gentle dismissal, but a dismissal all the same.

“Yes Minister.” Bones walked quickly to the portkey area, where Biller had their set of keys, they literally were keys, jingling from a muggle key chain. Joining them were Sarah Westbrook, Rob Graham, and Edgar Stiles, a first year Auror who had completed his trials two days after the Malfoy trial disaster, and had been tabbed to replace Biller in the now Westbrook led crew.

“Are you all set Travis?”

“We are Amelia.” The two of them had a strange relationship, as did most DMLE Heads with their Head Aurors. Bones was technically Biller’s superior, but the younger man had the ear of The Minister, though Biller treated her with nothing but respect. He took out the first key, which would take them to Reykjavik, Iceland. From there it would be to Boston, then San Diego, Honolulu, and finally on to Canberra, where the Australian Ministry of Magic shared the capitol city with their muggle counterparts.

Time was not exactly of the essence, so the trip took a total of two hours, and the quintet arrived directly into the portkey area at the Ministry. They were immediately taken to the office of Head Auror Kieran Perkins, a former classmate of Biller’s at the Auror Academy. They shook hands heartily, with pats on the back that almost knocked the wind out of both of them.

“Travis, good to see you again cobber.”

“Likewise Kieran, how’s the family?”

“Fine, the oldest just started at Endeavor. I understand you have one on the way?” The Endeavor School was the Australia/New Zealand version of Hogwarts, though the governments were separate.

“Coming soon, about three months and change.” Biller introduced his colleagues to his former classmate.

“Good to meet you all. I gather you want to do the takedown?”

“In concert with your people. As far as the Minister is concerned, you folks get the full reward once we get him.”

“Very decent of you. I’ll grab a couple of our people and we’ll be on our way.” He walked to the door and hollered some unintelligible words out it.

“How far is this place from here?”

“About 1200 kilometers south by southwest. It’s a good thing you took a couple of hours to get here, we had to hand-make some portkeys to get us there.” Soon a couple of female Aurors came into Perkins’ office. He introduced them as Susan O’Neill and Petria Thomas, his assistants. O’Neill gave them the report.

“Your man is not aware that he has been spotted, at least as far as we know. We have one of our guys watching the place just in case. He’s living in a regular muggle house that’s been ‘enhanced’ a little bit. That’s how we found him. We were searching for one of Hando’s men, and there was a tip that he was hiding in Flanders Park. The tip turned out to be bogus, probably to throw us off the trail, but while examining the houses for magic, we came across your man Fudge.” She handed over a Wizard’s photo, and Biller and Bones needed barely a second to confirm that it was either Fudge, or his heretofore unknown twin brother. Bones made her first contribution to the conversation.

“Well we’re convinced, we can leave whenever you’re ready.”

“Petria, you have the portkey?”

“Right here Kieran.” She pulled two lengths of rope from her pocket, with so many people they would likely need more than one. Westbrook had a question first.

“If you didn’t have portkeys ready, how did your man get there?”

“He did his tour by broom, a lot cheaper than continuously making portkeys, and the floo doesn’t go out there. It wasn’t the first town that he searched.” The Australian Auror Command numbered less than half of the British troops, with a much wider area to deal with. Which is why they were both relieved and puzzled that Hando and his gang had settled on Tasmania, rather than set up shop somewhere in the vast Outback. Hando was ruthless in his counter-intelligence efforts, so they had not been able to place anyone inside his organization as of yet.

After a quick walk to the porkey staging area, the five Brits and three Aussies each grabbed on to part of the ropes, and at Perkins' command, they zipped off.

They reappeared, 15 seconds later, about 200 meters outside of a small village that could have passed for Ottery St. Catchpole, if any of them had ever been there. The village of Flanders Park, population 303, was about a half kilometer from a railroad crossing, though the octet made landfall on the other side. They started the walk towards town, as Perkins and Biller fell into step beside each other.

"How hard are you folks going to lean on him?"

"Probably not hard, I doubt our former Minister has much stomach for the idea of torture." Biller had rarely sounded so disappointed in front of his old friend, whom he had last seen three years earlier at an Auror conference in Dublin.

"You'd think he would pick a more populated spot to hide."

"Who knows what goes through that mind, half smart, half idiot. Quite the dichotomy. Did you ever meet him?"

"Once, when he visited the Academy that time. You remember? He gave one of those lectures on your man Voldemort."

"Ah yes, not a bad lecture. I always thought his ideal job would have been teaching History of Magic at Hogwarts." Both men chuckled at the thought.

"I doubt he has the money on him."

“I would think not, but we’ll make him pay a visit to whichever bank he has it stashed in. If there’s enough left, your Ministry’s reward will come out of it. We’re more interested in the closure than the cash.”

“And how is your old friend Scrimgeour working out as Minister?”

“Better than we could have possibly hoped for. I was praying that Dumbledore wouldn’t take the gig, I knew Amelia wouldn’t want it.”

“Fallen quite a ways, Dumbledore has, or so we’ve been reading. That Potter kid certainly put him in his place a few months ago didn’t he?”

“Harry’s a good kid, he just has some trust issues. We’ve gotten to be friends kind of, I like him.”

“Any shot of his joining us in the noble Auror ranks? Or do those trust issues include us?” Biller grimaced at the thought.

“Well not you and me Kieran, but he’s a suspicious little bastard, I don’t see him putting up with any political interference.”

They had reached the village now, and it was only another two minutes until they reached Auror Daniel Kowalski’s listening post, just about 10 meters from the Fudge abode. He appeared out of nowhere, and motioned for them to stop where they were.

“Any movement Daniel?” Kowalski, a 24 year old who had been part of the Hando hunting team for over year now, straightened up as he addressed his boss.

“Not since our last contact Kieran. I did a scan of the house, and he has a wide variety of charms and the like. Muggle Repelling, a few different Alarm Charms, and some magical enlargers.” The scan by itself would not set off the Alarm Charms.

“Sloppy, very sloppy. That many charms on a house just makes it scream magic. He should just have painted a target sign on the roof. How advanced are the Alarm Charms?”

“Pretty advanced Kieran. This is about as close as we can get without setting them off. They’re able to detect any magical being within 10 meters. How do you want to do this?” Perkins looked around, there was no one outside at the moment, but that could change very quickly this time of day. Ten meters was quite a distance if the defender was even halfway alert and ready.

“All right, we have to assume that there’s no floo system in there, but that he’ll have a portkey ready just in case, probably around his neck. We can try to place anti-portkey and anti-Apparition wards around the house, but from this distance they might not be too effective, depending on how much he’s enlarged the house.” He scanned the house himself, and found Fudge in the southeast corner, though he could not tell if the man was sleeping or not. It was 9:30 pm now in this part of Australia, nine and half hours ahead of London’s GMT.

“What do you think Travis?”

“Daniel, the Alarm Charms are only based on human presence?”

“Right sir, they won’t be activated by any wards we put up.”

“Just like Fudge, half measures. So much wasted time, confusing motion for accomplishment. Okay, I say we wait for a few hours until he’s asleep. Then when we rush him, it will give us a few seconds that would not have had otherwise.” Kieran was nodding in agreement.

“Good idea, let’s set up a tent just outside of town. Susan, Petria, take over for Daniel here. Daniel, come with us and you can get a nap in before the raid.” Kowalski looked relieved, it had been a hot day, and still wasn’t too cool, even at this time of night. After setting up a signal package with Thomas and O’Neill, they walked back out of the village, this time throwing Disillusionment Charms on themselves, so that any local passers-by would not wonder at the sight of seven strangers leaving their town. They got back to their entry point, and Perkins put up the tent, one similar to another tent owned by a Perkins, the Warlock that loaned Arthur his two and half years ago for the World Cup. They relaxed and swapped news, as Daniel got his kip in. Australian Minister of Magic Ian Thorpe had just assumed power and was prosecuting the conflict with Hando as hard as he could, though the Dark Wizard was not yet bold enough to meet the Aussie Aurors in full battle.

Hando, contrary to what many thought, was not in contact with Voldemort or Xiong Ni, the other main Dark Wizards on the rise, nor were Voldemort and Xiong communicating at all. There was no Axis or Tripartite Pact with Dark Wizards, and none of them could see any advantages in cooperating with each other.

At around midnight, the group hiked back into the village, and found the two Aurors right where they left them. Fudge had not left, and was now in a different spot in the house. They had a weak Listening Charm up, but it could not hear snoring, though the two women were able to confirm that the television was not on. Biller and Perkins quietly conferred for a couple of minutes and worked out a plan. Perkins assembled the troops and gave out their assignments, talking in a muted tone.

“Okay, here’s how we’re going to do it folks. We’re going to blast the wall in front of Fudge’s bed and Summon him over to us. Petria, Susan, you put a Soundless barrier all around the house, do any overlapping you feel is necessary, we can’t be waking up the muggles now can we? Daniel, you stand with us and keep firing anti-portkey wards right at Fudge as he’s flying to us. Amelia, do the same with anti-Apparition. Sarah, Rob, Edgar, you will do the blasting. Use Reducto, not Abrumpere, we don’t want to damage the man any more than necessary, for obvious financial reasons we would prefer that he remain alive. Travis and I will do the Summoning. Are there any questions?” No one seemed to have any, and O’Neill and Thomas took a couple of minutes to put the barriers up around the house. Once that was done, Bones and Kowalski began firing their wards right at the spot Fudge was in, followed by Westbrook, Graham, and Stiles taking aim at the wall.

REDUCTO! REDUCTO! REDUCTO!

Not with full intensity, but just enough to collapse the wall. Fudge leapt out of bed and indeed grabbed for a necklace around his neck as Bones and Kowalski now moved forward and hit him directly with the wards. Biller and Perkins drew a bead on Fudge and:

Accio Fudge! Accio Fudge!

The ex-Minister flew right to the two of them, landing right at their feet as they took the Summoning Spells off just at the right time. Bones and Kowalski quickly warded the immediate area around them, though Fudge was too shaken up to do much at the moment. He managed to clear the dust from his eyes, and looked up to see Travis smiling grimly at him.

“Well hello there Cornelius, long time no see.” He slammed his fist into Fudge’s face, knocking him out, and then conjured some magical ropes and bound the man from head to foot, confiscating his portkey necklace, if indeed that’s what it was. He cast a perfunctory stunner on his former boss, just in case. Meanwhile Perkins was motioning to his people.

“Susan, Petria, Daniel, go in there and tear that place apart. Find anything remotely of value and bring it back with you to the home office.” Bones was nodding.

“Sarah, you and Edgar go with them, there might be things you spot that they wouldn’t necessarily, confiscate any papers you come across, and anything that looks like it would be a portkey or a bank key. Rob, you will come back with us and assist Travis in the interrogation.” Rob Graham was almost two meters tall and very strong. He was not built too well for undercover work, without Polyjuice anyway, but just the sight of him advancing in anger scared a confession out of most.....though in reality he was a genial guy, and quite intelligent, as is the stereotype.

The five of them walked through the rubble, ignoring the Alarm Charms that were now going off inside the soundless barrier that the two women had created. Sarah repaired the damage to the wall as she went in, so any muggles wandering around at night would not see or hear anything amiss. After making sure that the others had a portkey to return to Canberra, Biller, Perkins, Bones, Graham, and Fudge made the journey back. They quickly hustled Fudge into an interrogation room, and managed to get him sat up, waiting on the others to return before administering any Veritaserum. It had been a few minutes since his knockout, and the older man was finally coming to.

“What is going on here? Where am I?” Bones answered him, this was something she had long wanted to see, in her hearts of hearts anyway.

“Where do you think you are Cornelius?”

“Ameila?” Fudge was shaking his head from side to side, about the only serious movement he was allowed by the ropes trussing him up.

“Well you seem to be alert. How have you been Cornelius? Enjoying your vacation Down Under?” Fudge was surprisingly calm, considering the pickle he was in.

“It’s been very relaxing, thank you. What are you going to do with me?”

“Well that depends doesn’t it? Where is the money? Three million galleons Cornelius, that will buy a lot of copies of The Daily Prophet.”

“What terms are you offering?” Bones looked at him like he was crazy.

“Veritaserum, Cornelius. Those are my terms, and that is being generous. I could always have Travis and Rob work on you for a little while, with or without wands. That would be at their discretion.”

“I don’t believe you Amelia, I was Minister of Magic, you wouldn’t let them torture me. Rufus would never condone that.”

“So you’re up on current events eh? Travis, what did The Minister say about our friend here?”

“That I have official permission to question you as hard as possible Fudge, with or without Veritaserum.” Bones smiled genially at her former boss.

“Does that satisfy you Cornelius?”

“What is this about? It’s only a little money, I earned it damn it!” Biller was now very happy at the intransigence, and it showed in his face.

“We’re just going to wait for a few minutes, until our colleagues get back from your little vacation home. Then we start the questioning, and God help you if you lie to us.”

“At least tell me how you found me.” Biller and Perkins looked at each other, no harm in that. Fudge wasn’t going to be let loose for a good long while.

“We were looking for one of Davey Hando’s men, and stumbled across your magical enhanced house. Pure accident. Should have lost yourself in Sydney or Melbourne. Too bad for you.”

“I hate big cities, I always loathed working in London.” It was that simple, just a preference for a rural life.....albeit one with millions of galleons at his disposal. They waited in silence for another ten minutes, with Biller smirking at his prey. This was having its intended effect of unnerving Fudge, who was now sweating, though the room had magical air conditioning running.

After that time had passed, the others returned. O’Neill made the report.

“We ransacked the house and found absolutely nothing, except this, and a couple of house elves.” She handed over a tiny key, that looked just like a Gringotts key.

“Where is the key to, Cornelius? Tell me now and I can guarantee that Travis won’t experiment on you.”

Fudge took one look at Travis Biller, and remembered all the times that he had authorized this man to do exactly what he was about to do now. Biller was no sadist, but Fudge knew how thorough he was, and how unemotional he got while doing it. He sighed and gave in.

“I’ve only spent 100,000 galleons of it, the rest is there.” That left 2,900,000 galleons remaining, of which half, plus 500,000, went to the Australian Wizard Government, who would not be having any budgetary issues for the coming year any longer. Bones took a pre-prepared piece of parchment out of her pocket and handed it to Sarah Westbrook. The paper told whichever bank in possession of the stolen money that the bearer was acting on behalf of the British Wizard Government, and was authorized to seize the money. Stapled to it was an arrest warrant for Fudge, and those two documents would be enough to get the goblins to hand over the cash.

“Take this and get our money back Sarah. 1,950,000 of it should be transferred to the government accounts here, and the rest to our accounts at Gringotts. If they give you any trouble, come back here and report to me, and I will go with you to resolve it. Edgar, go back to The Ministry and inform the Minister of our success. Tell him that we are recovering the money, and are in the process of questioning the traitor. This is too sensitive to allow on the telephone lines, our nosy American muggles could make sense out of it if we’re not careful enough. Both of you, go now.” Stiles and Westbrook departed immediately, talking hurriedly with each other as they went.

“All right now, Travis, you may begin your interrogation. Do you require any Veritaserum?” With a nod from her, Petria Thomas slipped out of the room to obtain a few vials of it.

“Not yet Amelia, let’s see what the man will tell us voluntarily.” He was interrupted by a knock on the door, followed by a very tall man in his early 50’s entering the room. It was the new Minister of Magic for Australia, Ian Thorpe.

“Kieran, I understand you caught your prey.”

“Yes Minister, with little trouble. This is Amelia Bones, Head of the British DMLE, Head Auror Travis Biller, and their colleague Rob Graham.” Bones walked over to shake hands.

“Pleased to meet you Minister.” Biller and Graham likewise greeted the newcomer.

“I thought that I would sit in while you question your prisoner. It will be your show, I’ll just be an observer.” Meaning that he wanted firsthand knowledge of any Hando intelligence that was gathered.

“Of course Minister, I would say be my guest, except that we are your guests.” Everyone but Fudge smiled at that, though he was relieved at Thorpe’s presence. It made it much more unlikely that Biller would torture him, at least that was his hope.

“Please, carry on.” Thorpe took a chair from the table and easily hoisted it, setting it down in the corner. Biller took this as his signal to begin. Susan O’Neill produced a Self-Writing Quill, and positioned just off to the left of Biller and Fudge.

“All right Fudge, I’m going to ask you some questions now, without any drugs. Then I’m going to ask you the same questions with the drugs. Any deviation and you get hurt, the amount of pain depending on the number of deviations. So it is in your best interest to tell me the truth from jump. Are we clear?”

“You couldn’t torture me Travis, you wouldn’t let him do it Amelia.” He couldn’t be more wrong about Biller, but Bones was no lover of this kind of thing actually, and had never done a ‘hard’ interrogation herself, preferring to use drugs. She looked at Fudge with a little sympathy.

“Unfortunately for us both Cornelius, you are wrong. Begin Travis.”

“All right Fudge, first up: When was the last time you spoke to Voldemort?”

“I never dealt with him, it was always Malfoy or Pettigrew.”

“When was the last one?”

“The day before the trial, from Pettigrew.”

“In person or by owl?”

“Both. First by owl, then a brief meeting in London.”

“And he told you when the assault would begin?”

“He told me about the werewolf diversion, and that was to be the signal.”

“You’re referring to the Hogwarts alarm?”

“Yes.”

“How much did they pay you? How long were you under their thumbs?”

“Half a million galleons for the year, for various services. I’ve been doing favors for them for the last three years.” That put it right around Black’s escape from Azkaban.

“And where is that money?”

"I spent it, there's none left." The most obvious point for a lie, and Travis made a mental note of it.

"Did they okay, or have advance warning, of Potter's emancipation."

"No they did not."

"Were they pleased or displeased?"

"Voldemort was not happy at first, but warmed to the idea. Pettigrew liked it from the start. Potter was already out of the country by the time I spoke with Pettigrew."

"So they found out about it via The Daily Prophet like everyone else?"

"So I gathered."

"When was the last time you had contact with anyone from Voldemort's organization?"

"The day of the trial."

"Pettigrew?" Fudge took a deep breath, and decided that he had to give them something right away, to put him in their good graces.

"Magdalena Edgecombe, she is their inside person now." Bones snapped her fingers at Graham, who rushed out, presumably to use the telephone.

"For how long?"

"I have no idea, years probably, she hates Dumbledore with a passion."

"What about you? Do you hate Dumbledore?"

“I’ve barely thought of the man for the last three months.”

“That doesn’t answer my question.” Fudge flared up briefly.

“Yes, I hate him, are you satisfied!”

“No, but let’s move on. Are you in contact with Davey Hando or any of his people?”

“No, I wanted nothing to do with Wizard politics anymore.”

“Are you sure? The drugs will make you tell me.”

“Of course I’m sure, you think I want to have you and Graham work me over? It’s not like anyone is going to come and rescue me damn it!” Travis just smiled at him, his one muggle vice was James Bond films.

“No Fudge, this is not a muggle film, and you are not the damsel in distress or the heroic spy, risking all for Queen and country.” This was hilarious in it’s irony, as Fudge knew Queen Elizabeth quite well, and loudly proclaimed his contempt for her whenever possible.

“How witty of you Travis.”

“So why Australia?”

“It’s out of the way, a place to get lost, yet not stand out as a stranger.” Fudge’s accent was more Australian now than English, part of his blending in.

“Why Flanders Park?”

“I told you, I like small towns. I could portkey to Sydney when I needed supplies. That’s where most of the Death Eater money went to, for a supply of portkeys.”

“How often do you venture out?”

“Once a week to Sydney, every day in town, they think I’m a muggle.”

“Well we won’t disabuse them of that, not that you’ll be going back there. Does anyone else know of your whereabouts?”

“No, I broke all contact with my family in Britain.” Fudge was divorced and had three adult children, but he had lost close contact with them upon being elected Minister.

“Who are those house elves? Recent hires, or longtime retainers?”

“The latter, Tranky and Krisby have been with me all my life.”

“Just out of curiosity, how long did you think you could run?”

“Forever Travis, I knew that this would happen if you ever caught up with me. I left civilization for a reason.” How noble, Travis was thinking.....though not really.

“You left with three million galleons of our money.”

“I needed a living, being Minister didn’t pay much. Ask Rufus, you’ll find that he probably has several lucrative ‘friendships’ just like I did. I’m sure Potter probably has him on the payroll by now.” Biller knew full well of the somewhat chilly relationship between Harry and Scrimgeour, but Harry had never spoken badly of The Minister to his hearing, or in public, and it was returned in kind. He thought it highly unlikely that there was a monetary relationship though, as Rufus seemed not to spend any money. He had no expensive hobbies, and spent little on things other than a nice house and Quidditch tickets, though even that was not a factor now that he was Minister.

“We’re not talking about Rufus, we’re talking about you. How did you do it? How did you siphon off that kind of money without anyone noticing?” Fudge spent the next five minutes detailing his plan, somehow done without any knowing accomplices if he was to be believed. During this monologue, Susan O'Neill had returned with the Veritaserum.

“Okay Fudge, we’ve detailed your embezzlement, your Voldemort and Pettigrew crimes, and now we’ve come to the big finale. Is there anything else we need to know before we drug you? Remember, your prison time becomes easier to bear with every truth you tell us.” Fudge looked Biller right in the eye:

“I know where Voldemort is.”

Conference Room D

Australian Ministry of Magic

12:30 am AST

"I know where Voldemort is." Biller heard this, but had a hard time believing his ears. Fudge held his gaze as Travis slowly advanced on him.

"You do eh?"

"Yes I do Travis, and I have no motive to lie, your Veritaserum will confirm it." Travis stopped a meter from his prisoner.

"Well where is he?"

"I want a guarantee of no Azkaban if he is found." Biller loved this man's audacity, and even cracked a wry smile.

"Oh is that all? Why don't we just put you back in your little muggle home in Flanders Park, with a bouquet of flowers every other day!"

"That would be lovely, but I know you won't do that. A Ministry holding cell will be fine. You know my information is worth it, even if I don't give it up voluntarily." Neither Bones or Biller had the authority to promise Fudge a thing, and everyone in the room knew it, but Bones nodded her head.

"If your information leads to us making contact with Voldemort, then I will do my best to keep you from Azkaban." She didn't mention capturing Voldemort, as she thought it unlikely that would ever happen. In order for him to be stopped, he would have to be killed, though both of them were skeptical of the Prophecy. She knew of Harry's disdain for the idea of it, and found it increasingly unlikely that the kid would cooperate even if it was true, unless the enemy turned stupid and tried to attack him at Great Lakes. Bones felt that in Harry's mind, going after Voldemort would be seen as doing what Dumbledore wanted, and it was not out of the realm that Harry would sit it out just to spite his former Headmaster.

"Very well Amelia, you are honorable, and I will take your word at face value. He is in Little Hangleton." Bones was dumbfounded, she knew where this was going, and it made no sense.

"You cannot be serious. Dumbledore tried to float that idea past us years ago, saying that Voldemort was really some half blood named Tom Riddle, from Little Hangleton. We checked the entire area and found nothing. You were there in The Ministry, you must know that." Fudge had rarely looked so smug.

"You were wrong, he is in Little Hangleton." Travis walked up to Bones.

"Amelia, a word." They walked out of the door and Biller closed it behind them.

"What is it Travis? Don't tell me you believe him?" Biller was ashen as he replied.

"Amelia, when I saw Harry's memory of the Ministry battle, I saw him talking to Voldemort. Amelia, Harry called him Tom, and Voldemort did not correct him." Bones aged a year in that second.

"Oh my God."

"How thorough a search did you people do of Little Hangleton last time?" Biller had been in the Academy when the war had ended, just about to graduate and join The Ministry. Bones had been a Senior Auror then, though she had not been on the Riddle investigation team.

"They searched up and down Travis, there was no magic on the Riddle house."

“And this Tom Riddle person? The name sounds familiar.” Probably because Travis had, in fact, read Hogwarts a History.

“A brilliant student at Hogwarts, Head Boy one year under Dippet. Dumbledore is convinced that he became Voldemort, though there is no evidence to support that theory.”

“And whatever happened to Riddle?”

“He disappeared after graduation, he was rumored to have settled in South Africa, but no one could confirm it.”

“Well we can use the Veritaserum on him, but if he sticks to that story, we have to go in again, and in force.” Bones was shaking her head.

“We can’t go in with force, if we lose another battle like in September we’re in big trouble. Voldemort can replace people much more easily than we can. We’re stretched thin with Aurors as it is, and The Minister won’t accept any outside help.”

“I thought that the whole point of The League was to rectify that? We have to send a force in there and at least find out. Use Dumbledore’s people as an auxiliary if we have to, whether the old man likes it or not. And if we allow French or German Aurors in, we would be establishing a bad precedent, and would look incredibly weak to those of our citizens sitting on the fence.” Amelia made a face.

“Politics.” Travis smiled faintly, cynically.

“Reality Amelia, we’re one more Ministry screw-up away from losing their hearts and minds, as our muggle friends are so fond of saying. All those years of Fudge have come back to haunt us.” She conceded the point.

“All right Travis, let’s find out what he really knows. Ask him how he found this information out, then we’ll go right to the Veritaserum.”

“Got it.” They went back into the room, to find a pleased Fudge, even with Perkins glowering at him.

“Have a nice chat?”

“Don’t press your luck Fudge. Now how did you come across this Little Hangleton information?”

“ Just give me the Veritaserum Travis, I’m done cooperating voluntarily. You have the money, you have Voldemort’s whereabouts, stop wasting everyone’s time.” Biller was no slouch at Wandless Magic, and decided to send a message.

“Rictusempra.” Fudge was caught off guard, and started twitching immediately, and with no hands free because of the ropes, was in a bind.....pun intended.

“I think you are forgetting your place here Fudge, our days as your subordinates are quite over.”

“Stop this! I’ve been cooperating damn you!”

“Make me Cornelius.” A bit childish, but Biller felt he was entitled to a little fun here.

“Please stop Travis!” Bones was doing nothing to interfere, and their Australian friends were staying out of it.

“ Finite Incantatem.” The jinx stopped, though Fudge twitched reflexively for a few more seconds. Biller took the vial from O’Neill and grasped his prisoner’s head hard, forcing a few drops down his throat.

“That was the one time today that I’ll do what you want Fudge, but only because it suits my purposes. We’ll wait a moment for the potion to take effect, and then we’ll talk.” Fudge was in the initial throes of the drug, and couldn’t respond. The room waited about three minutes, and then Biller rehashed the man's previous answers, and Fudge had told the truth on every one of them. Then he got back to the big questions:

"Where is Voldemort hiding?"

"In Little Hangleton."

"How do you know this?"

"I had an experimental tracker placed inside Rastaban Lestrangle while he was in Azkaban." Biller's head was now about to explode, and the others were not too far behind him.

"Say what!"

"One of the Unspeakables came up with it, it's a biological virus, detectable with magic, but its not magical itself. I used it to track him to Little Hangleton after the escape." Biller's temper, which was normally under complete control, went redline at hearing that.

"Do you mind telling me why the hell you never mentioned this?" Veritaserum makes the user talk in a monotone, so any desire for Fudge to be sarcastic was lost in the shuffle.

"If Voldemort was caught, that would give away that I was working for him, I didn't want that."

"Who was the Unspeakable you dealt with?"

"Robert Marr." Robert Marr was considered the genius of the Unspeakables, but that also came with the reputation of him being crazier than a shithouse rat. He was in and out of St. Mungos all the time, and currently was in residence there in the 'mental issues' ward. He was always allowed back at the job though, because of his brilliance. Travis was now seconds away from visiting violence upon this man, but took a few deep breaths.

“Figures. How many other people did you track like this?”

“Just him, Marr wouldn’t give me the formula, it’s somewhere inside that diseased mind of his. He never did like writing anything down.” No he did not, and Veritaserum was not as effective when used on the mentally ill, Wizard or muggle. Biller still knew that he would be paying Marr a visit in a few hours time.

“Can this biological agent still be detected in Lestrage?”

“No, it was only meant to last for six months initially. I had it put in Lestrage about three months before his breakout. Marr was working on expanding the parameters of it, but he kept getting sidetracked.”

“Why Rastaban?”

“No particular reason, it could have been any of them, it was just for testing.” If Fudge hadn’t been under Veritaserum, Biller never would have believed that.

“Did you know of the breakout ahead of time?”

“I was told that there would be one, but not the time or date.”

“How far in advance of the actual breakout were you told this?”

“Seven weeks.” Seven weeks, Biller took out his wand and put it right at Fudge’s cheek.

“Give me one good reason why I shouldn’t kill you right now Fudge.”

“Because I’m helpless Travis, you couldn’t kill me in cold blood.” This was true, Biller thought grudgingly, but it didn’t have to remain this way. He would revisit this with Rufus as soon as he got back home.

“Who else at The Ministry knew about your dealings with Marr?”

“No one, he reported to me alone about it.”

“Who else at The Ministry knew about your arrangement with Voldemort?”

“Only Edgecombe.”

“Harry Potter told me that he shared the contents of a Prophecy with you, one that dealt with he and Voldemort. Is this true?”

“Yes.”

“Who else have you told about it?”

“No one.”

“Why not?”

“I was saving it as a bargaining chip, if Voldemort or his people ever tracked me here.”

“Why didn’t you tell Voldemort in advance of Potter’s emancipation?”

“It was none of his business, our agreement only dealt with his specific requests, it wasn’t a catch-all for any information I came across.” Oh for crying out loud.

Biller looked at Bones, and she motioned him to leave the room again with her. Graham was just now returning from phoning home as they walked out.

“Did you contact The Ministry?”

“Yes ma’am, I spoke to the Minister himself, Edgecombe is probably in a holding cell right now.”

“You made no mention of magic I hope.” Graham was muggleborn and had been using phones all his life, so he might not be as cautious.

“No ma’am, the conversation took less than 30 seconds, I simply said that the ‘man’ implicated Edgecombe. Our American muggles won’t get a lot out of that conversation ma’am, I assure you.”

“Good Rob, you’ve done well today. Travis, any suggestions?”

“Ameila, how many people inside the Ministry know about this besides us?” She did the count in her head, one that he could just as easily have done himself.

“Seven. The five of us that were here, plus Amos and The Minister. Why?”

“What would be the public’s reaction if Fudge was revealed to have been Voldemort’s stooge for three years?”

“I don’t know Travis, what are you getting at?”

“I’m saying that this could totally destabilize our government if it got out. Confidence in our integrity would plummet, and Voldemort wouldn’t be able to process the totality of his new recruits.” Bones saw where this was heading, and didn’t like it at all.

“You want to take care of Fudge right here, don’t you?”

“I want to present it to The Minister yes.”

“We’re not assassins Travis.” That wasn’t what he had in mind necessarily, but he felt like arguing the point anyway.

“We’re not?” They looked at each other significantly, while Rob prayed mightily that neither would look at him for any answers. Biller continued.

“We’re just inexperienced is all Amelia, having gotten our asses kicked in every major engagement we fought in up until Hogsmeade, and even then we needed Dumbledore’s people to take care of the werewolves. Let’s face it, Harry Potter and the Weasley twins are responsible for more kills than any of us, you and I included. That’s one abused kid and two troublemaking maniacs being more battle ready than any our rank and file Aurors. Every government kills people Amelia, muggle and Wizard alike. That said, I don’t mean we have to kill Fudge.”

“Oh really? You want to set him free?”

“With a massive memory wipe, yes. Put him back in that house with the knowledge that he is a Wizard and not a whole lot else. Bring in Redgrave to do it.” Steven Redgrave was the top Obliviator in The Ministry, he had a talent for it as an art form almost. Relieved that Biller didn’t want to march back into the room and Avada Kedavra Fudge right in his chair, Bones thought for a moment.

“Only Redgrave could do it too. That’s not a bad idea actually. We would have to set up some kind of way for him to make a living.”

“His account at Gringotts was untouched, he has about 30,000 galleons in there. We augment it some to give him a pension of a sort. Enough to live decently, but not extravagantly. Our Aussie friends here owe us one, so we’ll place Listening Charms in his house, and they can monitor them.”

“You’ve clearly been thinking about this.” An understatement Bones thought as she said this. She suspected that Biller and Rufus had hashed this out behind her back, and she was not happy about it. Their friendship was one thing, but she was still the Head of the DMLE, not Travis.

“Not for a long time, but I thought we should have a contingency plan, just in case.”

“All right, let’s ask Perkins to keep Fudge here while we present this to The Minister.” They went back inside and did so, and Biller told Perkins and Thorpe his idea. They had no problem with it, and said that it had their endorsement, for what it was worth. Fudge of course heard every word, and voiced his strenuous objections, the drugs having worn off.

“You can’t do that to me! This is not right!” Travis looked at him with utmost contempt.

“Says a traitor, that’s rich. If I thought Minister Scrimgeour would let me, I’d gut you like a pig right here in this room. Count your blessings.” The look on his face made Fudge quail a bit, and he went silent. Biller had a quick inspiration, and winked at Bones behind Fudge’s back.

“You know Amelia, we could always release Fudge with his wand. Then I could kill him and no one could say he was defenseless. You do know how to fight with your wand, don’t you Cornelius?” Fudge opened his mouth and nothing came out but a squeak. Biller laughed and condescendingly patted the older man on the head, as even Minister Thorpe couldn’t help but smile.

“Just kidding Fudge, I don’t need the target practice quite that badly.” The Brits departed a few moments later, Sarah Westbrook not having made contact from the bank in San Francisco, so they assumed everything was fine on that front. Edgar Stiles was still en route back to the home office, and they started their journey a few minutes later, retracing their steps, so to speak.

It was now 5:30 back at the home office, but Rufus was still there, having been briefed by Stiles, a rather nervous young man, who nevertheless had gotten his superior caught up. Bones and Biller did the rest.

“Little Hangleton eh? Travis, send Jenkins and his crew up there on a scouting expedition, order them not to make contact if humanly possible. Have them do a sweep of the entire area for magic and magical residue.”

“You got it, Sanford is good at that sort of thing.” Biller left for a moment, and quickly returned. Rufus had gotten up and started pacing a little, which was his physical way of pondering. He stopped in front of his floo, and threw some powder in.

“Dr. Naveen Andrews!” Naveen Andrews was the head of St. Mungos, and he appeared seconds later.

“Minister, a pleasant surprise, what can I do for you?”

“I want you to find the Medi-Witch or Wizard that is in charge of Robert Marr, and get them and his complete file into my office right away. Marr is in the psychiatric ward if I’m not mistaken.”

“Yes Minister, I believe it’s Ian Cusick that handles Mr. Marr. He’ll be with you shortly sir.”

“Thank you Dr. Andrews, much appreciated.” The administrator’s head vanished.

“Travis, you know what must be done here.” Biller grimaced, but was nodding anyway.

“I figured as much, should I go over there tonight?”

“As soon as possible, that tracking agent could be incredibly useful to us.” Bones wondered about that.

“What if Marr mislead Fudge about its success? He could have told the idiot what he wanted to hear. It wouldn’t be the first time would it?” No it certainly wouldn’t, but Rufus wasn’t buying it this time.

“No Amelia, if Marr said it worked, then it worked. Travis, are you serious about wanting Fudge to be set loose?”

“Only with the caveat that his memory be severely modified. I think putting Fudge on trial would bring down this government and invite chaos. The only other palatable alternative is to throw him in Azkaban without a trial, and if that got out, we'd still be finished. My idea is the path of least resistance."

"Well let's see what happens in Little Hangleton. If it turns out to have any credibility, then I'll consider it. If not, then the three of us will personally throw Fudge into the darkest part of Azkaban."

"And if we get caught doing that?"

"Then it would be better not to be caught Amelia." They were interrupted by a knock on the door.

"Enter!" In came Ian Cusick, a young Medi-Wizard with long black hair, and a heavy Scottish accent. He held a thick file in his hand, and Biller's mood turned even darker.

"Minister, I'm here as ordered sir." Rufus rose to shake his hand, not having met the man before.

"I would like the 15 second tour of Robert Marr." Cusick went right into 'doctor filling in layman mode'.

"Marr suffers from paranoid delusions, that compounded with his own genius and creativity, makes him very unstable, though not especially violent."

"Is he a danger to anyone?"

"Not at the moment sir, he is on a regimen of potions, along with a couple of muggle drugs used for cases like this. Right now he is just on the north side of semi-catatonic Minister, and is likely to be that way for a little while yet. Marr's episodes generally last a couple of months, and he's been with us for six weeks now. I anticipate releasing him sometime the first week in February, give or take a few days."

"Can he be questioned?" Cusick immediately started shaking his head.

“With Veritaserum? You can try, but I wouldn’t advise it. The potion, in concert with his other medications, could cause a severe setback.”

“What are the odds of that happening?”

“If I was a betting man sir, I would bet for the setback. If it were anyone but you asking Minister, I would forbid it as his doctor, but in here I can only advise.” Or he could push it to The Wizengamot, but he didn’t know that Rufus wasn’t that eager for a showdown with Dumbledore over something like this.

“So it would be best to wait a few weeks to use the potion?”

“Yes sir, I took the liberty of making a copy of his file for your perusal sir. It has his complete history with us, all eight commitments.”

“Can we talk to him without drugs? Is he lucid enough for that?”

“I can give him a few stimulants if given an hour’s notice. He wouldn’t be ‘normal’, but you could get something out of him if you do it just right.” Gee, I wonder who that will be, Travis was mentally grumbling.

“Who visits him?”

“His wife and three children, I believe the oldest just started at Hogwarts. They’re nice people, and cope with Marr’s problems as well as can be expected.” Marr was 34 years old, and had never been Dark suspected, and as an Unspeakable he had been vetted more thoroughly than most.

“From now on Dr. Cusick, any visitors to him besides his wife and children are to be approved by either me or Madam Bones. Understood?”

“Yes sir, I’ll take care of it immediately upon my return.”

“Good, thank you for your time Dr. Cusick, if I have any further need of you, I’ll let you know. Please administer the stimulants tomorrow morning at 9:00 am, we will have someone there an hour later to talk with Marr.”

“Thank you Minister.” He walked quickly out of the office.

“Travis, go over there in the morning, without Veritaserum. See what you can glean from him in his condition.”

“It’s a shame really, he really is something when he’s in the groove.” Marr and Biller had attended Hogwarts at around the same time, though they had been in different Houses and different years.

“He will be welcomed back in a few weeks, and we’ll get as much out of him as we can, from all accounts he’s a fine man. Now Amelia, you don’t want Fudge in Azkaban, or us having him killed. What do you think we should do with him?”

“I think we can get away with a trial, I have more faith in our public than Travis apparently does. He’ll get his just desserts then.”

“Are you prepared to keep silent if we decide on another course of action?”

“Who is ‘we’ Minister? The three of us in this room? A troika where I will always be outvoted?” Rufus smiled as she said this, her tone of voice had been polite, but firm.

“Amelia, its precisely because we often disagree that I value your input, I have no interest in sycophants. Now who else would you suggest we allow inside on this? Who else can be trusted?”

“Why are you so suspicious of Amos?”

“I’m not, he is a fine administrator, but he has no political acumen, I mean none. I don’t want him in my inner circle because he would have little to contribute, and he would be another mouth I would have to worry about blabbing to the wrong person. Next you will ask about Dumbledore.”

“No, I know why you don’t trust him, and by and large I agree with you. But you cannot ignore his position as Head of the Wizengamot.”

“The Wizengamot does not have investigative powers Amelia, that is our bailiwick.” Another knock on the door, and at Rufus’ signal, Travis opened it. It was Sarah Westbrook, just returned from San Francisco.

“Minister, Madam Bones, Travis. I completed our business with the money, it should be deposited in the Ministry’s general fund within the next four hours.”

“No resistance from the goblins?”

“No sir, not after they read the affidavit that Madam Bones sent with me.”

“950,000 galleons will help, and our Australian friends will owe more than a couple of favors as well. Good work Sarah. Now I would like your view on Fudge, Travis advocates setting him loose back Down Under with a memory wipe, while Amelia wants him put on trial. What do you suggest?” The 30 year old Sarah was another of Rufus’ former protégés, having been the junior member of a Rufus/Travis crew for a number of years. She was not the youngest crew leader, but one of the brightest, and it was not out of the question that she might succeed Travis as Head Auror someday, especially if Rufus retained his own position. They did not exactly have a father/daughter relationship, but it wasn’t that far away from uncle/niece.

“Kill him immediately Minister, I doubt you would have any shortage of volunteers from Auror Command to do the wet work, or even if you just select from those of us who went to Australia....well maybe not Edgar.”

“An interesting position, justify it.” Sarah had not heard Fudge’s full confession, or even that he knew where Voldemort was.

“Just him denying Voldemort’s return for all that time justifies it, it cost a lot of lives. Did he admit to being on the Death Eater payroll?” Rufus smiled.

“He did, since right before Black escaped. He knew about the trial assault ahead of time as well.”

“Another reason that stands alone. He doesn’t deserve the publicity of a trial, but I feel that a former Minister, however pathetic, should not be put in Azkaban. Voldemort and his people might even break him out and set him up as their puppet Minister.” No one would put it past him, at least none in the room right then.

“Are you saying take him into a deserted part of the Outback and put a killing curse into him?”

“Yes I am Minister. I hate to be so cold about it, and if was anyone besides Fudge, I wouldn’t be advocating it. But he’s a traitor sir, he abused the public’s trust for years, and he does not deserve to get away with it. We can’t risk The Wizengamot going all weird on us like they did with Snape.” It was the feeling of the majority of the DMLE staff that Dumbledore had all but begged his colleagues not to put Snape in prison, though no one in the body itself would comment for the record. The only reason that there had not been more muttering was the pleasant idea of Snape being Banished into a wall at high speed. Harry had made a lot of friends in the Auror Command that day.

“A good point Sarah, thank you for your views. Before you leave, how is young Edgar progressing?”

“He’s a great investigator, he’s just nervous in front of authority. He’ll outgrow that in time, was he all right briefing you?”

“Once he stopped stuttering he was fine, he seems like a good kid.” Stiles was very smart actually, he ranked number two overall in the Hogwarts Class of 1994, with Percy being number one that year.

“Thank you Sarah, you can take off for the day. Report back at 9:00 am tomorrow morning, you, Rob, and Edgar will accompany Travis to St. Mungos.” She raised her eyebrows at her former crew leader, as she had not heard the Marr stuff.

“No I’m not being committed Sarah, you’re not that lucky.”

“Damn it, I’m going to lose my wager if you wait much longer. See you guys tomorrow.” She left, and there was a short silence.

“Minister, you can’t kill Fudge in cold blood. It’s morally wrong, no matter what he has done to deserve it.” The Minister surprised her by smiling and nodding.

“I agree Amelia, I never seriously considered it. I thought her argument was compelling though, and if it was someone who was a greater threat than Fudge.....” But it wasn’t, thought a very relieved Bones, who then anticipated the other shoe dropping.

“But you won’t put him on trial?”

“Sorry Amelia, but I agree that Travis’ path of least resistance theory is the safest play here. We’re in no hurry though, this isn’t something that needs to be done tomorrow. Does your friend Perkins know to keep this quiet Travis?”

“He does sir, the lot of us discussed it as we were waiting last night.....sorry, this afternoon. The new Minister is a former Auror as well, and we can count on his discretion.”

“Good, now nothing more shall be decided until we hear from Jenkins.”

“Are you thinking a full assault if Voldemort is there?”

“That’s the question isn’t it? I agree that we cannot afford to lose another battle like in September. Voldemort can hit and miss, we can’t miss anymore or we’re finished. No, I’m thinking more along the lines of a lightning raid, but not until we find out if we can use that Marr formula.”

“Are you thinking of capturing one, putting the virus in him, then letting him go?”

“Something like that Travis. I have an easier option though, one that does not yet involve capturing a fugitive Death Eater.” Bones looked a little confused, while Travis grinned.

“An option named Narcissa Malfoy?” Even Bones liked that idea.

“Very interesting, she is relatively isolated at home, we could slip a team in there and take care of it.”

“Travis, after you get back from St. Mungos tomorrow, set up a heavier surveillance on Narcissa. Make sure the floo is monitored, and put a portkey tracker on the place, so we’ll at least know when she leaves. If we had known about Marr’s formula, we could have implanted it in Snape and ended this business months ago, but the pumpkin juice is spilled on that one.”

“Speaking of the floo, what happened with Edgecombe?”

“She’s in a holding cell right now, I’m going to let her stew tonight, and then I’ll go in there myself tomorrow, I don’t think I’m too rusty. Amelia, I would like you to sit in on this with me.”

“She hasn’t confessed to anything?”

“She doesn’t have a Dark Mark on her, we know that much. She declined to answer any questions though, not that I’m surprised. I highly doubt she knows the location of any Death Eaters, though I would like to find out how she evaded our net from October, it will give us a lot of insight for counter-intelligence. She did not deny being a Death Eater or a Death Eater sympathizer, which seals it as far as I'm concerned."

"Do we need to line everyone up and have them take a vial of Veritaserum?"

"We might have to Travis, this is disturbing. On second thought, Travis, go to Hogwarts and inform Dumbledore that we have Edgecombe. Tell him it was an anonymous tip that smoked her out, and that we anticipate a full confession in the morning. Amelia and I will do it while you're chatting with Marr. It will give the old man the impression that he is still in the loop on things."

"Got it, go tonight?"

"Let's wait a little while and see if Jenkins sends some word back, but go after that. I know you've been wanting to talk to the werewolf about the kid, so you can kill two birds with one stone."

"Fudge thinks Harry's got you on the payroll already." The Minister got a nice laugh out of that one.

"Quite the opposite, I bought some of that joke stuff for my nieces and nephews, though I've heard that he doesn't take any profit sharing. I'm scheduled to go over there and talk with President Chabon and Prime Minister Crosby next month, I'll take a side trip to touch base with him."

The three of them moved on to other things for the next 30 minutes, getting some paperwork done and dealing with the vetting of Rufus' three nominees for The Wizengamot. He and Diggory had decided to announce them the following Monday. They were about to give up on any word from Jenkins, when the man himself appeared in the doorway. Rufus had just stood up to walk his subordinates out.

"Sanford, how did it go?"

“There is magical residue over certain parts of Little Hangleton, particularly the graveyard. It was made by more than one person, but we would need further testing to glean a more specific estimate.”

“And the house?”

“Perfectly clean Travis.....too clean if you ask me. It smacks of being sanitized. It seems unlikely that with all that residue around the village, that the big house would be untouched.”

“Did you enter the house?”

“No, we didn’t want to set off any booby traps that might be in there. We did our scans from the outside, and the three of us used enough power to get the job done. They’re either not there at all, they’ve burrowed underground, or they have wards up that we can’t penetrate. Any of those scenarios makes sense, but I wasn’t willing to try with just the three of us.”

“Did you detect any outside monitoring?”

“ No Minister, the immediate surrounding area seems to be abandoned. The village is a sleepy one, and we were not disturbed by any muggles, or magicals pretending to be muggles. My team put up some Listening Charms, and they took up positions in the graveyard.”

“Good, we will have Herbert’s team relieve them at midnight, I want round the clock surveillance on the house until we’re sure either way. Go back there and await them Sanford, and after you send the rest of your crew home, set up some more Listening Posts around the area. Use your discretion, and don’t attract any muggle attention if you can help it.”

“And if we encounter any Death Eaters?”

“Call it in and immediately go on the defensive, but try to remain in visual contact for as long as possible. We want to capture at least one if possible, but don't risk getting killed over it, your lives are more important than getting the information."

"Yes sir, it will be done. I'll go collect some provisions and be back to Julius and Karen."

"Good Sanford, I'll have you in for a briefing tomorrow afternoon, I want you to run point on this operation."

"Yes sir." Jenkins departed, and soon the other three went their separate ways. Bones and Scrimgeour went to their homes, while Travis had quick floo conversation with his wife before flooing over to Hogwarts from Rufus' office, one of the very few direct connections with the school.

Dumbledore was not in his office, and Biller decided to go to the Great Hall, not wanting to spend any more time here than necessary. Dinner was just breaking up as the Auror came up to the faculty entrance to the Great Hall. He greeted the teachers that he knew, and saw that Dumbledore, McGonagall, and Lupin were still seated and talking. He quietly walked over to them, his first up close and personal look at Dumbledore since that day at the Academy.

"Headmaster, Minerva, Remus." Dumbledore smiled, giving no indication that he held Harry's outburst against him.

"Hello Travis, to what do we owe the pleasure?" Biller looked over at the student tables, and saw that few were still there, none of them players in our story. He still kept his voice relatively low.

"We have uncovered a traitor within the Ministry." That information gave them a start.

"Who is it?"

"Magdalena Edgecombe, Head of the Floo Registry." Magdalena was a Department Head, one of fifteen, who in order of overall seniority at The Ministry, were the next ones in line to take over as Minister, after, currently, Dumbledore, Bones, Biller, and Diggory.

“She has confessed?”

“No Headmaster, nor has she denied anything. She’s sitting tight in a holding cell until the morning.”

“And you will then break her?” This was Lupin, who knew that such a task was Biller’s specialty.

“No Remus, I have another errand I must attend to. The Minister himself, and Madam Bones will do the honors. You can expect a short trial after her confession.”

“How did you discover her?”

“An anonymous tip Minerva. The Minister felt you should be informed right away Headmaster.” It wasn’t actually right away, but Dumbledore was still being told pretty quickly.

“Thank you Travis, I appreciate you keeping me up to date. May I ask why you will not be doing the interrogation? Surely no errand is more important than this.” That was a good question, not that Travis was interested in giving a straight answer.

“The Minister prefers to handle this himself, perhaps he is nostalgic for some of his old duties sir, I don’t know.” That was barely a vague answer, and everyone knew it, but none of the Hogwarts folk complained, to Biller’s relief.

“Very well, did the Minister have a suggestion on what or when to tell Magdalena’s daughter?” They hadn’t considered that, so Travis made up something on the spot.

“No Headmaster, he is leaving that up to your discretion. If I may make a suggestion, perhaps you should wait until after we have made sure tomorrow. It is not out of the realm that Edgecombe may be stonewalling for other reasons, and has committed other crimes that are not treasonous in nature.”

“I’ll do that Travis, thank you. Was there anything else?”

“I would like a word with Remus for a few moments if you don’t mind.” Remus was finished with his meal anyway, and stood up to follow Biller out.

“Let’s go toward our old Common Room shall we Remus?”

“Fine with me. You want to tell me what’s on your mind Travis?” He looked at his old schoolmate, and had a feeling that it had to do with Harry. Anything to do with his status here, or as a werewolf, would likely be handled by Bones.

“Did Dumbledore tell you about what happened at the Academy?”

“No, but Moody did. I heard that there was a confrontation, but no blows were struck.”

“Very true, though if anyone was looking to fire first it was Moody. That would have been fun, arresting a former Auror for assaulting The Boy Who Lived. That would be pattern making wouldn’t it?” Remus ignored the salvo.

“Why was Harry there with you at the Academy in the first place? I can’t imagine him asking for a guided tour after leaving the country like he did.” The two of them stopped, and Biller gave him a hard look.

“He wanted to ask me about Lily and James.” That wasn’t what Remus was expecting, he delayed for a moment.

“I’m sorry, what did you say?”

“You heard me Remus. Apparently Harry knows little more about them other than that they were named Lily and James, and went to school with you, Black, and the betrayer. Though at least Hagrid got him some pictures of them.”

“What did you tell him?”

“As much as I could in an hour’s time, I had never imagined that you would conspire with that old coot to keep that part of his family life from him. What the hell possessed you and Black to do that?”

“You weren’t there Travis, don’t presume to judge things you know nothing about.” He hadn’t raised his voice, as one never knew where the students would be walking, but there was steel in his voice as he said it. Biller resumed walking, and Remus was resigned to following him.

“I know more than you think Remus, I was friends with them too, Lily and James. And I know I’ve talked to Harry much more than you have in the last few months since he decamped for America.”

“Yes he did, which might explain why I haven’t had a chance to talk with him. I can’t exactly go traipsing around the Great Lakes campus now can I? I would be killed on sight just for tripping the wards!” True enough.

“You had three years Remus! Including one year, if I’m not mistaken, that you not only taught here, but took the time and energy to teach him how to cast a Patronus!” There was no defense to this, and to his credit, Remus did not bother to offer one.

“How mad is he?” Travis very readily told him.

“You’re right above Ron Weasley on his shit list.” Remus sighed, he had been afraid of that. He had thought he was in Harry’s good graces when the first issue of his Chronicle subscription arrived, but apparently not.

“That’s not a good place to be.”

“No it is not. Now you’re way better than Dumbledore on said list, but you need to have a chat with Harry this summer when he comes back to visit. A chat that lasts as long as he bloody wants, and answers every one of his considerable number of questions.” Remus did not like how this was being presented, and it showed in his response.

“Or else what Travis? Are you ordering me to do this? I wasn’t aware that I fell under your purview.”

“I am speaking not only for myself, but for Rufus Scrimgeour. We are strongly advising you to have this talk with Harry as soon as possible, which we fully acknowledge is not likely to be until summer.” Rufus didn’t really care one way or the other about this, but they had talked about it and he had no problem with Travis using his name to get what he wanted. Remus tried to poke a hole there.

“The Minister cares about a sixteen year old boy’s need for information about his parents?”

“At least somebody does Remus. You and your boss apparently don’t.” That hit home, very hard.

“It’s not like that Travis, it’s really not. May I ask you a question?”

“Shoot.”

“Why do you care so much?” This was asked in a tone of curiousness, not of sarcasm, and Biller answered it as such.

“Because the kid is being driven toward the Death Eaters with every one of Dumbledore’s mistakes. Because his whole life has been a lie. Because the people who should have looked out for him chose not to. Because he came to me and asked me for my help. Can you deny any of that Remus?”

“No I cannot.”

“Then why did you not tell him about his parents?”

“Dumbledore thought it would be too hard on him. He convinced Hagrid, myself, and the others to let the information out gradually, at a pace that Harry could handle . I don’t know what he said to Sirius when he was alive, Padfoot wouldn’t tell me, but he went along with it too. Molly and Arthur decided to break from that, but only after Harry left.” It took another few seconds, but the logic then slammed into place for Biller.

“I keep wondering why you went along with it. Wait a moment. Last week I checked out your file at The Ministry, and the only jobs you’ve held for more than a month in either the magical or muggle world have been right here. Dumbledore’s been supporting you, hasn’t he?”

“Yes he has. Until my inheritance he gave me a monthly stipend to live on, though I insisted it not be so much as to attract attention.”

“And the same for Hagrid, giving him a job here. That’s why he didn’t want Black out of Azkaban, he could easily have ordered him in for Veritaserum questioning, or even arranged for a jailbreak. Remus, what the hell have you people let him do?” They were almost at the Gryffindor Common Room, and the paintings were starting to perk up as they argued.

“Travis, you can disagree with Dumbledore, you can order him off the Dursley lawn and things like that because you have always had Rufus Scrimgeour to hide behind, ever since you left the Auror Academy. Sirius, Hagrid, and I, we have not had that luxury. I have a life because of Albus Dumbledore, a life that would have been denied me by the very people you work for. Now is the man right all of the time? Of course not. Was it a mistake to put Harry with those people? Yes it was, and Minerva and I both told him so more than once. But it’s done now, and we all have to deal with the situation as it is, not as how we wish it would have turned out.”

“You can handle him leaving Black for dead like that?”

“No, and that will be dealt with before my end, if God wills it. There’s the way things are, and there’s the way they ought to be Travis. My sole focuses are the students under my care and the defeat of Voldemort and his people. I'm sorry about what was done to Harry, and for my part in it, I really am. But I will not wear a hair-shirt or beg him for forgiveness. It's gone past that now, there have been too many mistakes to catalogue." It was said almost as a lament.

"What would Lily and James say if they could hear you now?" Remus now had tears in his eyes, but he managed to keep his voice steady.

"They would kill me Travis, and not waste any time doing so, I doubt they would say a word. And I agree that they would be right to do so. I did chose Dumbledore and myself over their son."

"And Harry?"

"I saw what happened at The Ministry. He's more ruthless than either of us, and then some. That's one reason I'm not eager to talk with him alone, I don't want that temper of his exploding on me, I don't think I could take him in single combat if that rage gets let loose." Travis was suddenly very cold, and if he didn't know better, he would swear that a Dementor was right around the corner.

"You're afraid of him?"

"Aren't you?"

"Not at all, because I've always been straight with him." Remus again sounded sardonic.

"Again, you've had that luxury." They were at the door now.

"Remus, are you refusing to talk to him as I've asked you to?"

"No, I would rather do it willingly than have you and Rufus threaten me into doing it. I know the problems you can cause me. Tell him that if he comes back during his Easter or Summer breaks, I will make as much time as he needs."

“It would be even better if you would do it.”

“All right. I can’t promise that he’ll like every answer though.”

“The truth will satisfy him Remus, and no, I will not provide him with Veritaserum to help things along.”

“I’m sure Fred and George have just as easy access to it as you do.” Biller smiled for the first time in the conversation, and Remus did likewise.

“No doubt. So tell me this: You said that Dumbledore gave you a life, but now you don’t need that assistance anymore. Why still follow him?”

“Who else would I follow? The Ministry won’t take me in, and Harry disdains the war, or at least he claims to. Since I won’t sit it out, that leaves only Dumbledore.” Very true, Biller thought, as most of the anti-werewolf laws were still in place.

“Things are changing over there, for the better.”

“I know they are. Do we have a purpose here at our old stomping grounds?”

“Not really, it was as good a place as any to come to.” Right then, the Fat Lady opened the door, and Ron and Hermione came out, laden down with books, on their way to the library.

“Oh hello Professor Lupin.”

“Hello Hermione, Ron. Off to study I see.”

“We are, loads of tests coming up. You’re Travis Biller aren’t you? I remember you from the Dursleys.” Biller remembered well, these were the best mates of Harry’s that he had to escort off the property before Harry started cursing people right and left. That would be a memory that would stick around for awhile.

“I am Ron, good memory. How is your term going so far?”

“Great, though it’s a long slog until summer now.”

“Keep up the studying, and make sure you take out Hufflepuff in the next game, got to break that losing streak against them.”

“You played?”

“I was a Beater like your brothers, my wife plays for the Harpies.” Ron perked up, and seemed like he wanted to take the conversation further, but Hermione gave him the look, and the two politely went on their way.

“Interesting that we ran into those two in particular.”

“Pure coincidence Remus, though it was good to get a look at them.” They did not go inside, and the two of them walked back to Dumbledore’s office, talking about how the various Defense classes were going. Aurors usually addressed the students in the NEWT years at least twice a term, and the next one was due in a few weeks. Travis would have done it himself, as he had a few times before in previous years, but his days were usually too busy now. As they got to Dumbledore’s front door.

“I’ll send an owl to the twins for Dobby to pick up.”

“Good enough. Just for the record Remus, I wish it didn’t have to happen like this. I don’t enjoy threatening people like that.”

“Me neither. I look forward to hearing what Edgecombe had to say.”

“You and me both Remus.” Though the transcript of that confession would be heavily sanitized. Biller was away a few moments later, home to his wife and his cold dinner. It had been a long day.

The next morning it took about twenty minutes of Veritaserum aided conversation for Edgecombe to spill the fact that she had been working not just for Voldemort recently, but for Lucius Malfoy for over ten years, being his inside contact, and arranging all sorts of illicit floo connections for him and his associates. The Aurors rolled up those connections and managed over a dozen arrests, though none of the men and women taken into custody had Dark Marks on their arms. After some drug assisted questioning, again led by Rufus himself, they all confessed to being members of Malfoy's intelligence and financial network. The Death Eaters were struck a minor blow, and Rufus considered it a job well done. The ten were given quick trials and thrown into Azkaban with 15 year terms apiece.

Travis spent an uncomfortable hour with Robert Marr, gently coaxing him into talking about his tracking virus, though they only got to that in the last few minutes. Marr, as Cusick had told them, was on the downward slope to recovery, and was somewhat verbose. He could not recall the exact formula, but was lucid enough to assure his old schoolmate that he would get right on it once he was back at work, as he had enough of it left in his mind that he felt sure that he could reconstruct it.

"How long do I still have to be here? I know they've told me, but I can't seem to remember."

"Cusick said a couple more weeks, and you'll be sprung from here."

"It's hard Travis, so hard. I know.....I know those visions aren't real, I just can't help it." Biller was a hard man most of the time, but this was slowly breaking him, and he stood up to leave.

"You're doing better Robert, everyone only wants what's best for you."

"I know, I know. I just don't think I can face coming back here again. I think I need to be Obliviated the next time you send me back." The 'you' meant The Ministry, and that could be arranged, though Evie Marr would have something to say about it.

“Good luck Robert, I’ll see you in a couple of weeks.”

“Thanks for coming Travis, I’m sorry I couldn’t be of more help.”

“It’s okay, we’ll get you all the help you need when you come back.” He patted Marr on the shoulder, and walked out. Sarah and her crew were waiting for him, having been briefed on the way upstairs. Travis leaned up against the wall and closed his eyes, the last two days had taken a lot out of him, and it wasn’t over yet.

“Are you okay Travis?”

“No I’m really not Sarah.” He walked away slowly, and the others had little option but to follow him.

Fudge would remain as a guest of the Australian Ministry for the rest of the month, as Travis sent Westbrook, Graham, and Stiles back Down Under to set up the wards on Fudge’s house. Sarah went with pages of questions, and spent time every day milking everything she could out of her former Minister.

Transfiguration Classroom A

10:30 am EDT

Harry concentrated as hard as he could, and pointed his wand at the feather in front of him.

“Commutatus Dispando”

The feather turned into a small throw pillow. The exercise was to take one element and expand on it and multiply it as much as possible, while also conjuring a container for it. Warrick had taken a few drops of water and turned them into a two liter of Coke, and drinkable, as they tested out right afterward.

“Turning water into Coke, you’re a genius Warrick.”

“And it wasn’t even New Coke.”

“What’s New Coke?” Harry had missed that little craze, and Warrick threw him a mock sigh..

“Don’t worry about it, I’ll explain it later. It’s like I’m your second Muggle Studies teacher here, though at least you pay attention, I’ll give you that much.” Harry ‘accidentally’ nudged Warrick, spilling some of the Coke.

“Oh quit your complaining, you’re doing better at this than I am aren’t you?” Harry’s pillow was really good though, and he made sure to take it with him after class. Still, Transfiguration was Warrick’s best subject, and he was currently ranked number one in the class, right ahead of Harry, in the race to be promoted to Advanced Charms the next year. Harry wasn’t too concerned with it though, he liked Washburn a lot, and knew that both of them were scheduled to stay for the summer session this year.

“I’m allowed to better at you in something you know.” He was just kidding, and had a smirk on his face when he said it, there were no Ron signs here.

“You stomped me in our Potions OWL didn’t you?”

“Okay, two things. Couldn’t my little cousins stomp you in Potions though?”

“I’ll ignore that.....and how about being a Beater, which I don’t do well, and playing football.....err, soccer, better at all those things.”

“Ok, Ok, you’ve massaged my ego enough for today thank you, never mind that you could kill me by flinching.”

“Not a talent that one uses every day unfortunately.”

“Too bad for you. Let’s switch, you make us some pop, and I’ll get a blanket going. I’ll take it and your pillow the next time I’m with Reiko.” Harry didn’t look at him, but deadpanned:

“In the basement.” Warrick gave him a sideways glance as he took aim at his feather.

“I knew that you knew, I guess I should thank you for not terrorizing us down there yet.”

“Don’t thank me, thank Sophie. I was all set to have fun with you two after the dance, that’s when I first bothered to find out where you sneak off to.”

“I’m sure Sophie distracted you quite well.” Harry resisted the urge to smile at Warrick’s tone of voice.

“She did, she showed me that there were more fun things to do than flood you and Reiko with cold water.”

“You wouldn’t.” No he wouldn’t really, but Warrick didn’t have to know that.

“Ice water my friend, think hypothermia.” He was making this up as he went along.

“I could get you too, I have access to the trunk just like you do.” Warrick and Harry were the only ones with total trunk access, in that they were the only ones who could easily enter their dorm room. The others could call out for Dobby or Winky to let them in, but if those two weren’t available, and they only popped immediately for Harry or the twins, then they had to wait.

“You can try, but if you interrupt us at anything important…….” Warrick had just turned his feather into what could charitably be called a napkin. Changing it back was much easier, and he gave it another go.

“How important might we be talking about?”

“Wouldn’t you and a ton of other gossip hounds like to know?” And they would, Harry and Sophie were much speculated on by those who enjoyed gossiping. Harry himself would throw out a few false leads for them, just for amusement purposes, and listen in delight as they took the Quaffle and ran with it. They still hadn’t figured it out though, and Harry’s stories were slowly building up in their outlandishness.

“So you two still aren’t having sex eh?” Harry had no trouble admitting this to Warrick or Jonas, and at least Drew hadn’t asked yet.

“I’m in no hurry mate, no need to apply pressure when it isn’t necessary.”

“You Brits, so gentlemanly.”

“The accent is what hooked her mate, don’t underestimate it.”

“I figured it had to be something off the wall. In heels she’s about as tall as you are, so it’s not your commanding presence.” Harry had somehow made Diet Coke from his thimble of water, though again it tasted like the real thing.

“Sophie doesn’t wear heels, I mean how long have you known her and you haven’t noticed this?”

“Whatever.”

“Just because you’re a foot taller than your girlfriend.”

“Hey, I’ve dated tall women before.”

“Like who?”

“You’ve seen Shannon, from Shawnee.”

“Claudia’s roommate?” Shannon Rutherford was indeed much taller than Reiko, and in fact did wear heels quite often.

“Yeah, I hadn’t had my growth spurt when I was with her, so I only had her by a couple of inches.”

“Oh really? How’d that work out for you?” Harry had managed Sprite this time, though it was a bit weak, soda fountain weak. Warrick had now turned his feather into a duster, he changed it back and decided to give it one more shot.

“Not too well, I don’t know how Claudia manages to put up with her. It was a long six weeks I don’t mind telling you.” Let’s see you take on Cho Chang, Harry thought with a grimace.

“She is very direct I’ve noticed.” Claudia was cordial with her roommates, but when she was not with the gang, she still did not turn to them for companionship very often. Harry got along with all three in the very limited time he was ever around them.

“You have no earthly idea Harry.”

“And I would just as soon keep it that way.” It was Dr. Pepper with this batch, and Harry was half annoyed that he couldn’t make Coke, and half impressed that he seemingly could make everything else. Warrick finally had a comforter, on his fifth try, with a nice plaid pattern to boot. Wash came over to check up on them.

“How’re you guys doing?” Warrick beamed at him.

“Good Professor, I’m getting the hang of this.” He showed off his comforter, and Wash sampled the Coke. Everyone in the room was doing different things, some were using pieces of wood to make furniture, something Palmer had painstakingly worked Harry through over the summer. Others were using metal or bits of plastic. The two Marauders were sticking to things that they would use.

“How about you Harry?”

“I’m getting there sir, I’ve got a nice pop machine going so far.” Wash took another sip.

“I do love Dr. Pepper. Any questions guys?”

“No sir.”

“Okay, you only have a few minutes left and you can take off. Remember your papers are due Wednesday.” Warrick was done with his, and Harry had resisted temptation to use his Reiko present, and was mostly done. He had the afternoon off though, and would do it then, it was always nice to start the week with an easy day, as Wash did not stretch them too much. As they left the classroom, Warrick looked over at his roommate.

“We need to prank someone soon, we’re letting the Map go to waste.” Harry was in agreement there, he had been talking with Sophie on who to target next.

“I’m always open to suggestions, as long as it isn’t Clancy.” Warrick was surprised.

“Are you that afraid of Heyman? He’s not protecting him anymore you know.”

“That’s what bothers me mate, if we go after Joe again it will just be six against one, and that’s.....well I just don’t like how that looks.” A belated response to be sure, as Warrick quickly pointed out.

“Easy for you to say, you didn’t have to deal with him for five years.” No he didn’t, and Harry was often very thankful for that. At least with Draco Malfoy he didn’t have to share a room with him.

“And thanks to me showing up, and the chairs, you’ve been spared his company for over four months.”

“I think I’ve been appropriately grateful.”

“Yes you have. You know, now that I think about it, I think we’re being set up.” Warrick looked at him in surprise.

“By who? Clancy?”

“No, Heyman. He took the pink thing way too well, and that whole backing us over Clancy thing smells just a little bit. I think he’s daring us to look like the bullies against Joe, but he’s making it so obvious that we would be sure to see it, and thus not do anything more to him as a result.” Warrick’s head was spinning at that convoluted logic, but after Harry repeated himself word for word, he got it.

“You need to become a lawyer dude.”

“It’s my Ravenclaw side coming out, but I think I’ll say no to seven more years of school.”

“You’re really not coming to college with us next year? Even Jonas is going to take a couple of classes now.” Jonas’ holdout had ended that morning, as he sent in his registration fee for the SAT, which was about two more months away. Harry himself felt so ill prepared for them that he was not even going to bother, though he was a little surprised that Sophie had not pushed him harder. He had a feeling that she had registered him for them anyway.

“Well not as a student anyway, I’ll rent us a house near whatever campus you guys pick out.” Warrick mentally figured that if Sophie couldn’t convince him into matriculating, then no one could.

“Anyway, back to pranking. We have to do something.”

“I’m with you, don’t worry. But who, that’s the question.”

“Maybe we should revisit Poole, like Reiko wants.” Harry didn’t like the direction this was heading, and quickly tried to quash it.

“No, we don’t want to do that. He’s harmless enough, I hardly ever see him.” Warrick looked at him, they had just gotten to the Lounge.

“Don’t tell me, you’ve made an arrangement with him, haven’t you?” Harry gave him a look that clearly said ‘not so bloody loud with that subject in front of other people you gump’.

“What makes you say that?”

“Because he hasn’t said boo to any of us since you got here, and he doesn’t exactly love Jonas and me. How much is he costing you? $100 a week?”

“$200 a month actually.” Warrick was half pissed, half amused.

“You bastard. For how long? When did you set this up?”

“About a week before the trial. You were.....where were you now that I think about it? Well I went down to his basement lair and we quickly struck a deal. He’s not a bad guy really.”

“I’m sure he loves your wallet.”

“Being rich has its advantages, for all of us.” Warrick couldn’t argue there, the trunks alone were proof of that.

“When were you going to tell me?”

“I didn’t want you and Jonas going ape with it, that’s why I’ve delayed. And I was going to tell you when serious talk of pranking him came up. So let’s scotch that, he’s an employee of WWW and thus is out of bounds.”

“Fair enough, I was never too hot on the idea anyway, not with Murray and Heyman onto us like they are. I take it we can’t prank either of them?”

“Well leaving aside that I’m not your boss and you can do whatever you wish.....I wouldn’t prank either of them with a ten foot pole, and you shouldn’t either. They both like me, protect me, and give some sage advice when called for.....I’m not risking that for a few giggles.”

“That still doesn’t alleviate our need for a target now does it? You keep eliminating all the good ones. I agree we can’t target individuals too much, but c’mon.”

“I’m much more cautious than I was as a younger man Warrick. How about Jonas’ other roommates?” Drew was not in the Map mix yet, though Harry was one more chess game away from telling his friend to start thinking about a nickname. There was a sense of sanity about Drew that Harry found incredibly refreshing. The other roommates were alright guys to most people, but resented both Jonas, for his Quodpot fame, and Drew, for being light years more gifted than they were. They had disliked Harry immediately for much the same reasons, though he had not considered them to be possible targets until now, preferring to deal with Clancy and his Hogwarts foes. Harry spent practically no time in the Jefferson Lounge or Jonas’ room, so he rarely saw them. Warrick didn’t like them on principle.

“That’s a thought, but won’t they suspect Jonas?”

“We’ll do another booby trap on his and Drew’s things, I’m sure the pink thing would work for trunks.”

“That was inspired yeah. Are you going to put Drew in the Map?”

“Where do you stand on that?”

“I’m fine with it, and so is Reiko, we talked about it the other night. What does Sophie think?”

“She’s cool with it too, I was going to wait until Chess Club to talk to him about it, but if we’re going to prank his roommates we should probably do it today.” They put their books away, and slowly started ambling toward the Dining Hall as they hashed this out. Harry had all day now, he was done with classes, and Warrick rarely ate much before Potions. Warrick had a thoughtful look on his face.

“What are we going to do though? It should be elegant, and non-destructive.”

“We should do something to the showerhead or the toilet. Then it looks like we’re pranking all four, and Drew and Jonas won’t be suspects.”

“Right, they can use our room to do that stuff, or the one off their Lounge. It can’t be pink though.” Harry addressed something that had been nagging at him for weeks.

“I know, I’m kind of mad that we wasted that on Clancy now that I think about it. It has a lot of potential if we do it right. I already mailed the charm cocktail recipe to Neville, so that Ron doesn’t go through his things again.” Neville had Dobby’d back that the charm cocktail was in place, but that he and Ron were starting to get along better, and it looked like it might not be needed.

“Make sure he gets pictures. We could make it so that it removes all their hair. Can you come up with something for that?”

“I’m sure I can find something. Mark and Lester bald, that does have some comedic possibilities.”

“I’m bald you know.”

“You wear it well though.”

“Lots of famous bald people out there you know.”

“Some of them even involuntarily too.”

“I’ll give you five bucks right now if you don’t ever start naming them where I can hear you.” Warrick started laughing, and mockingly put out his palm.

“Reiko likes how it looks, so that’s all I’m concerned about. What about you? You ever going to get a haircut?”

“Nah, too much like work, trying to figure a charm to keep it cut. My hair likes it the way things are thank you very much, and it doesn’t much care what I think. Hey, how bout instead of making them bald, we make it so that their hair grows like crazy.”

“Like that gum the twins put out?” Harry had forgotten about that for a moment, they needed at least some deniability.

“Yeah, damn it, we can’t do it then. Let’s stick with the bald thing. I’ll research it while you guys are at class, and after I get my Transfiguration paper finished.” They said little during lunch, not wanting to get anyone’s hopes up. Harry asked Drew to come by with the others after class, as there were some things he needed to show him.

After lunch Harry first went to the roof to visit his plants. Neville had sent him seeds for two different plants in his Christmas parcel. One was a plant whose extract was meant to help one’s eyesight. No it wasn’t carrots, but a magical plant found only in the Canary Islands, it produced a syrup that could be stirred in milk and drank. One of Neville’s uncles had come back with it, and it was supposed to be very effective. Despite its place of origin, it could grow in any non-polar climate, and the plants seemed to be thriving on the roof, even with the snow. Harry was used to his glasses after all these years, but the chance to ditch them was too good to pass up. The other plant was one from China, that was used for enhancing memory, and was diluted greatly and used in the muggle pills Ginkgo Biloba and Echinacea. This was the pure stuff though, and Neville said it was doing great things for him already. Harry had told Murray about the plants before he put them up, so she or any faculty members wouldn’t wonder what he was doing up on the roof a few times a week. He had them under multiple Notice-Me-Not charms, and also the Pink cocktail, so far they had not been disturbed. It would be another month or so before he could harvest anything from them, and he was only going to distribute it to his friends, no selling.

After completing his homework, it took Harry about half an hour in his library to find a Hair Removal Charm that would work how they wanted it to. He had been a little bit worried, as a few of his better Charms books were in Oklahoma with Karl and Lisa. Indeed Karl was doing some of his lectures out of one of them, all the other copies were in private collections like Harry's. He also found one that caused a person to give off certain odors, and even better, in the next book he paged through, there was a very intricate charm that could change the magical residue of spells, though not any major ones, it wasn't strong enough to do that. He was still engrossed in that same book when the other six came down the ladder. Sophie sat down next to him on the couch, with the others taking stock of the books he had been perusing, he looked up with a start. Sophie pulled the book in Harry's lap over so she could see it.

"So Mark and Lester are getting it huh?" Harry gave an irritated look at Warrick.

"I hope someone practiced some discretion when talking about stuff like that?"

"Keep your pants on boy, I know what I'm doing."

"I sure hope so. Anyway, I have what we need, but first things first. Accio Map." The Map was in its usual place on the desk, and flew right to his hand.

"I solemnly swear that I am up to no good." The Map revealed itself, and Drew, who was pretty quiet in the first place, didn't know quite what to say. He saw the names scrawl themselves on the top: Madmartigan, Prongs, Magician, Quicksilver, Cherlindrea, and Half Pint. He knew what most of the names meant in real life, though not who they were in regards to this.

“What the.....what is this?”

“It’s The Marauder’s Map II. Our little guide to Great Lakes. Take a look.” He did, and saw all the dots that represented people and where they were. He pointed his wand at the room they were in, and the dots of the seven of them enlarged.

“How long have you had this?”

“I started making it my first night here back in August. The original is for Hogwarts, and my Dad and his friends put it together almost 20 years ago. Fred and George wound up with it, and showed it to me about three years ago to help me sneak out of school, Neville has it now.” Drew, who had been in Colorado and Boston during the holiday, was the only one in the room who had not met the Brits.

“No wonder you haven’t had a detention since you got here. I’m guessing Murray and Heyman don’t know about this little toy of yours.”

“No they most certainly do not, and that’s how it’s going to stay. The six names on there belong to us, and we’ve decided that it’s time there was a seventh. So start thinking of a name, so we can add it to the list.” The week before, Harry had inoculated Drew against becoming pink, the other boy having already returned home before they did the door. Drew was examining the Map, and distractedly asked:

“What’s this about Mark and Lester?”

“Well I’m already re-thinking that. I want to hit your whole House.” Warrick goggled at him, and Drew was jerked out of his reverie, Warrick burst out:

“You want to make them all bald? That’s a big target.”

“The trick is, not to get everyone at once, so people can’t figure out what’s going on until it’s too late.”

“Are you getting all convoluted on us again dude?”

“Yes Warrick, I am. It’s called cleverness, and I’m doing it just to irritate you.”

“Well as long as there’s a good reason for it. What do you have in mind?”

“Jonas, Drew, how often would you say that the Lounge bathrooms are used?” Each Lounge had two, one for each sex, with a couple of toilets and a like number of sinks for those too lazy to go to their own rooms, or for visitors from other Houses. Jonas answered him.

“Beats me, there always seems to be someone in there though, at least when I use them. Drew?”

“The same, though I make a point not to use them, some of the younger kids aren’t too sanitary. What do you have in mind?”

“I want to load up the sinks and the toilet flush handles with our little charms. I found a masking spell that we can deploy too, so an initial inspection won’t give us away. The kids will touch the handles, and anytime they play with their hair.....presto. We’ll put a delaying charm on it as well, so it doesn’t act right away. I’ve also come up with a smell charm we can use on another House, using the same dispersal method. Debate?” They were all thinking about this, and Reiko thought of a problem.

“This hair loss thing, can it easily be fixed? With an anonymous donation of a particular charm?” Fixed? Where was the fun in that, Harry wondered.

“We could probably come up with something, why?”

“Valentine’s Day Harry. We can’t have dozens of bald Jefferson girls right before a big dance like that. Even if we did it today, that’s not a lot of time to grow long hair you know.” Harry genuinely had not thought of that.

“Duly noted, and I agree that we have to take that into account. Either that or just target the guys, we want to be comedians, not villains. Sophie, what do you think?”

“The smell thing works on the same principles? We would do it the same way? How long would it last?”

“It does work the same way, and we can make it last as long as we want to. I’m thinking make it last a couple of days, any longer would be overkill.”

“Then we should do that one right away, and wait until the day after Valentine’s Day to do the hair one. Doing that would show that we took it into account, and aren’t totally malicious.”

“Yes it would. Claudia?”

“I’m all for it, especially with the masking charm. Are we just doing Jefferson?”

“You want to include Shawnee? Or do it instead?”

“Well Proctor is out, since we don’t have ready access there, and I think it would be too obvious if Cortez was tagged.”

“Our man Ray won’t be cooperative?” Ray Elwood in fact had not been sniffing around since everyone got back from vacation, but Harry still liked giving Claudia the needle about it from time to time.

“Don’t start Harry.”

“Yes ma’am. Let’s do the smell thing for Jefferson, and then we’ll do the bald or something else for Shawnee. Drew?”

“Are we just keeping it between the seven of us?”

“Hopefully, why?”

“Then we have to be really careful about which one of the women here sneaks into the bathroom. Late at night would probably do the trick, and either Jonas or I could do the other one.”

“Couldn’t you sneak into the ladies’ room yourselves?” Drew shook his head.

“Not worth the risk if we got caught, there are often people in there even at 3:00 am. That’s a bad thing to get caught doing, the potential alone would get a detention from Heyman. He’s very proper about such things.” Harry started laughing:

“In other words, people have been caught doing the wild thing in there.” Everyone started laughing.

“Three times last term alone.” Everyone looked at Jonas, and even Drew was grinning.

“Hey now, don’t look at me like that, you’d have heard about it by now if I was that careless. Doing it in a bathroom, I have higher standards than that.”

“We’ll get a poll going on that one and get back to you. The smell thing it is then, any preferences on which one we do?” Reiko threw one out:

“I suppose a skunk would be too cliché?”

“Sometimes the old ones are the best ones. Claudia, you’ll be smelling it most, which one do you prefer?” She was shaking her head about one thing though:

“Claudia is going to be bunking with Reiko and Sophie thank you very much. Miranda’s bed is always empty anyway. I say we use the smell of feet, it should be easy to obtain, and will throw a lot of people off. How hard is this going to be to do?" Harry had that spell bookmarked, and slid the book to the middle of his coffee table. They crowded around it, except for Harry and Drew.

"Are you cool with this kind of thing mate? If not, it's no problem."

"I'm cool with it Harry, this kind of thing sounds like fun. Now just because you're letting me in on all this, doesn't mean I'll cut you a break at Wizard Chess."

"This summer I'm going to have you take on Ron, then you'll get a challenge. I'll stick to trying to beat Nan Mahon, I almost had her last week." Drew raised his eyebrows, Nan was worth having in more ways than one. Harry played her quite a lot, and had even solicited some tips for Sophie type things. They rarely interacted outside of the club, but were solid friends on Tuesday nights.

"Get your mind out of the gutter there buddy, she's a bit too young for any of us in here." Nan Mahon was a Sophomore, and was coming up on her 14th birthday. Harry didn't want to give Jonas any ideas though, she was that good looking, so he kept his voice low during that part of the conversation.

"I didn't say a thing. I don't know about this Ron thing though, he doesn't seem like the nicest guy from everything you guys have told me."

"Teenagers are at an awkward stage in life you know."

"Thank you Doctor Harry."

"Anytime Drew. So you got any ideas on a name yet?"

"Can I have more than four minutes to think of some? You've hit me with a lot here."

"I've gotten that before."

“I’m sure you have.” They rejoined the others, and Harry felt the need to say something else.

“I need to tell you all something, well most of you at least. Back in September, right before I left for the trial, I came to an agreement with Riley Poole and put him on the WWW payroll.” Jonas didn’t look a bit surprised, the opposite reaction of Claudia and Reiko. Nothing surprised Drew in here anymore. Claudia looked like she was going to be ill.

“Why did you do that? Poole of all people?”

“Has he hassled any of us since then?”

“Well.....no he hasn’t now that I think about it. I can’t believe I didn’t notice something.”

“Then it has been money well spent.”

“Still, bribing Poole.” Claudia was clearly torn between morals and convenience.

“I decided that it was best to cover my skinny little ass as much as possible. I did it to ensure a smooth road for pranks and anything we might be up to. He knows that if any of us do anything really heinous, or violent, then the deal is off and he can go sic one or more of the faculty on us.” Reiko looked at him and shook her head, now laughing.

“Did you do that with that Filch guy at Hogwarts?”

“No, and I could kick myself for not thinking of it years ago. I don’t know if he would have amenable to it, but I should have tried. I should have thrown some money around a long time ago, life would have been a lot simpler for me if I had. Now back to business. Ladies, who is our volunteer for Jefferson bathroom duty?” None of the three seemed eager to do it, but eventually Reiko nodded her head.

“I’ll do it, I’ll sneak over there sometime tonight. Who’s going to meet me? And when?”

“I’ll do it Reiko, I need to get some firsthand pranking experience if I’m going to be a Marauder. I’ve changed my tune about when as well, just come over tonight and we’ll all hang out in the Lounge, then it couldn’t possibly look like any of us are sneaking around.” Jonas had a thought.

“Well if we’re doing this in plain sight, I’ll be the one to do the bathroom stuff, since people know you don’t like to use them.”

“Good point. Let’s make copies for all of us of what the charms are, and in what order they need to be placed. Jonas, Drew, do you want the Pink cocktail put on your stuff, just in case?” Both of them shrugged. Jonas answered first.

“I wouldn’t mind it being put on my trunk, I doubt those two would try anything, but you can never be too careful. Drew?”

“I agree, but we should casually talk about it in front of them, just to make sure that there is no misunderstanding about it. They know what happened to Clancy, and I think they’re already worried that they’re the next targets.”

“They don’t like that we’ve finally become friends, I know that much.”

“That’s what they’re most worried about, they somehow have thought that they benefited from us not being close buddies. You know, the idea of getting them is more appealing by the minute.” Drew was not a vengeful person by nature, but he had seen the fun to be had after watching Harry’s Howler campaign, and the success of the Pink defense. He had, at Harry’s urging, contributed a Howler last November, and had come up with his own blistering tirade toward Zacharias Smith, who he only knew as a jerk in a few of Harry’s stories.

“Yeah, let’s see how they react when we talk about the Pink in front of them, and we can see how the land lies. At the very least we can use some of those cherry bombs from the Halloween Party, they can get dowsed in the toilet.” That certainly would be smelly. Reiko was scribbling down the Charms they needed to use, it wound up being four separate charms: two for the smelling part, one for the delay, and one for the masking.

“This is pretty complicated stuff.”

“Good thing we’re all Charms experts isn’t it? Are we all agreed to doing it tonight?”

“Works for me, how long do we want to set the delay for?” Reiko asked, and Drew threw his penny in.

“I’m thinking of at least a day, and none of us can be in the Lounge tomorrow night if we do it like that. Tomorrow night we’ll hang out in here or in Cortez.” Sophie had one thing to add.

“Harry, make sure that Dobby and Winky are somewhere else tomorrow as well. Heyman must know that we used them in Clancy’s room.”

“I’m sure he does, but suspecting and knowing are two different animals.” They all went up to dinner, which went smoothly until the end, when Murray stood up to make an announcement.

“I need your attention for a moment please.” The room settled down almost instantly, and the students all turned to look at her.

“This morning there was an official declaration of war by the Lycans against the Kindred and against the Magical world. This followed a skirmish last night in which five Lycans were killed in combat by Kindred Brujah clan enforcers in San Francisco. It was not the first skirmish between the two forces, but the Lycans apparently took this one more seriously. This will all be in The Chronicle tomorrow morning, but it was felt by the powers that be that you should be told now. It is important to understand that everything here will remain as it always has been. There are anti-Lycan wards covering every square inch of the building and the school grounds, so outside activities, when they resume anyway, will not be affected. One small thing: if any of you venture outside for a snowball fight or something of that nature, let a Senior in your House know ahead of time. You are not asking permission, just giving a heads up. If there are any questions, please see any of the faculty before or after class, or come talk to myself or Professor Heyman. Thanks for your attention, enjoy the rest of your evening.” She sat back down, and nonchalantly finished her dessert, her husband was making a relatively rare appearance, and now everyone understood why.

The room buzzed with conversation for the rest of the meal, as all the tables seemed to be talking about. Harry was thought by many students to be an expert on Lycans, since word had trickled out about his ‘friendship’ with Remus Lupin, which in reality was on and off, though currently back on since he received the letter that Biller had forced Remus to write. He always told those students the truth though: He didn’t know anymore about Lycans than they did, and probably a lot less, since they had grown up with the Lycan threat and he hadn’t. Harry had found out more about them from Josh Lyman than he had from Remus, though he would pick the man’s brain if their summertime talk went off as planned, and Harry doubted it would in truth. He knew that Biller had planned to talk to Remus about it, and suspected that some blatant coercion had gone on.

The gang hung out in the Jefferson Lounge that night, and endured a night of watching Hellraiser movies, as the Freshmen had their movie night that evening. The youngest three years got control of the three televisions for two nights each a month, with the older four rotating days otherwise. It was a somewhat complex system, run by the Seniors, but it had been refined enough over the last couple of decades, and few complained. Well not until the younger years picked some half-ass movies to watch that is. Hellraiser was the one that the gang could agree to watch, as the other two televisions had a Highlander marathon, and a volley of Disney movies, both of which had some objections from at least two gang members.

During the carnage, Jonas casually slipped off and loaded up the sinks and the toilet handles in the Lounge bathroom; thirty minutes later, Reiko did the same. They put a 36 hour time delay on the spells, and thankfully were not disturbed during their work, which took about five minutes apiece. The gang stayed through two movies, grimacing all the while, before Jonas and Drew decamped to their room to get some work done. As their 'sponsors' had now left, the other five went back to their own rooms. Harry and Sophie allowed Warrick and Reiko to use the trunk, as they genuinely did have some studying they wanted to do.

The time delay used meant that it was lunchtime on Wednesday before anyone noticed the effects, as Tuesday users of the infected bathrooms did not know how lucky they had it. It was a couple of Novices that got hit first, though they didn't seem to realize it until their afternoon class, when others made comments about their odor. Jonas and Reiko had talked for a few minutes right before the deed, and both put roughly the same amount of 'oomph' into the odor part of the spells, so that both boys and girls were equally affected. The cocktail only affected those who used the infected bathrooms, as more and more students by the end of Wednesday were starting to give off some ripeness. To the delight of the gang, a few non-Jefferson students were getting caught in the web, as they had friends in the infected House and were using it's facilities. By Thursday lunch, over 35 students were smelling rather badly, and the gang, now seven strong, had an impromptu meeting before the meal. Warrick led off:

"This is going too well to keep it limited, I say we hit the other Houses right now."

"And Proctor?"

"Harry, you really can't break into their Lounge? Can't Dobby just let one of us in?" Harry vehemently shook his head.

"I am not risking that Warrick, not only would it be foolhardy with the possibility that one of over 80 people might catch us, but the punishment far outweighs the reward. Claudia, I think you need to have a quick conversation with our man Ray. Evidence or not, every nitwit in this school is going to suspect us before too long, so its not like it'll be a scoop for him to find out." Claudia delayed for a beat.

"You see him as much as I do."

"I didn't have a date with him though, now did I? Or did it end on bad terms?" Claudia had shared no dirty details, though she and Ray had not been together when Harry and Sophie had looked at the Map that night. Claudia refused to address the subject directly.

"I still think you should do it Harry, use some of that WWW charm on him." That said everything as far as Harry was concerned. Ray was in Advanced Charms, and Harry decided to talk to him during class, if there happened to be any non-lecture time.

"Fine, then you pick a guy not named Harry and quick go load up Shawnee before lunch."

"Deal, c'mon Drew, you've never been in our Lounge before I'm betting." The look on Drew's face was priceless, but he allowed himself to be led back up the ladder. Warrick looked at Harry.

"Chicken."

"Hey, I have to do the Ray convincing don't I? It'll be good for Drew, put some hair on his chest. Warrick, you and Sophie go load up the sinks here. It'll look too suspicious if you and Reiko go together."

"And you're saving me for Proctor."

"Someone has to use the bathroom there." They broke up and headed back up to the Lounge. Ten minutes later, they were eating spaghetti in the Dining Hall, all Houses but Proctor done. Harry waited until Ray and his friends were about to leave the Dining Hall, and then called over to him.

"Hey Ray, a word?" The other boy nodded, and Harry walked over to meet him.

“So how’re things?” Ray smiled, knowing that Harry wanted something from him.

“Fine thanks Harry, what’s up?” Harry hesitated for a moment, allowing Ray’s friends to get a little further away.

“Well officially there is a screw-up in your latest WWW order, though not really.” Ray couldn’t help but laugh.

“And unofficially?”

“I would like your help with a project that we’re working on.” He looked at Harry curiously.

“Don’t tell me that the smelling like feet thing is your handiwork?”

“Is that a common suspicion?”

“Not really, the rumor going around my House is that it seems to be some Freshman in Jefferson with an older brother who taught him the trick. We’ve heard that someone was bragging about it anyway.” Harry was torn here: he wanted to go punch that Freshman out for taking credit for his idea, but on the other hand: deniability, deniability, deniability. One could never have too much of that.

“Well that’s interesting. Anyway, we would like you to assist us by doing a few minutes work in your House.”

“So you did do it.” Harry adopted an innocent look on his face.

“I admit to nothing, but we would like your help all the same. We don’t know anyone in your House better than we do you, and this kind of seems like it would be up your alley.” They were almost at their classroom now. Ray had already decided anyway, he knew that if he became an associate member of the gang, lot’s of cool and fun opportunities would flow his way.

“All right, I’m in. Get me the recipe you used and I’ll do it after class.”

“Terrific, Reiko will come with you back to Proctor, she has the cocktail.” Ray looked momentarily insulted.

“You trust me to do the gig, but not to see the charms?” Well yeah, but Harry figured it wouldn’t be a good idea to say that flat out, besides, he had a good reason anyway.

“Oh no, it’s because of where they’re placed, you need a guy and a girl.” It hit Ray just then.

“You’re using the bathrooms? That’s tricky dude.”

“I have my moments. You’re in?”

“You bet.” They went inside, and went through class without any difficulties, and with a non-stop interactive lecture by Professor Maloney, who did a thing on multiple-person Charms, where at least two people were needed to cast the spells properly. Harry found this so fascinating that he quite forgot about the Smell Project, and during pauses in the demonstration he was trying to think of which of his personal library books might have some spells like this on them. There just wasn’t enough time in the day, though he was very thankful that he only had five classes. After class, he hung around with a couple of other, non-gang, students and talked about the concept with Maloney for a little while. This gave him cover for the loading up of Proctor, though that didn’t occur to him until later.

After class, Ray and Reiko started animatedly talking about a Potions assignment they were going to help each other on, and they walked up to Proctor together to get Ray’s notes on it. The deed was done a few minutes later, and the two of them really did talk about Potions for a little while in the Lounge, as their paper was due the following week. Reiko soon reported back that their work was a success, though she had not been able to get anything out of Ray about Claudia. They all discussed the Jefferson rumors that Ray had mentioned, but neither Jonas nor Drew had heard them, though Jonas would do some checking at Quodpot practice that evening in the workout room. Claudia felt that she had no choice but ask Harry a certain question:

“Harry, did you arrange for that Freshman to start bragging like that?” He supposed he couldn’t blame her for asking.

“Nope, I don’t even know who it is. I’m glad it’s happening though, it’ll throw people off the trail.” She let it drop after that, satisfied that Harry would lie to them. He would withhold things though, and Claudia had decided to query him more if she felt the need. Drew had one more thing to add.

“I’ve been thinking about a name, and I have one: Kilroy.” Only Reiko ever heard the name before, as he dad liked that kind of music.

“From the Styx song?”

“It is, it’s obscure enough, but it sounds cool. Are we going to start signing our work?”

“Eventually, let’s get some experience first, we don’t want to get caught right away and lose our anonymity from the off.” Harry went right over to the Map and put Drew into it. It now read:

Messrs Madmartigan, Prongs, Magician, and Kilroy, in concert with Misses Quicksilver, Cherlindrea, and Half Pint present to you the Marauder’s Map II

That night, the tally was at around 45 or so, with most of the newbies being in the Houses just hit. It was easy to tell who was who, because the non-smelling folk wanted no part of eating with the infected ones, and a few magical barriers were being set up around the tables. Strangely, the faculty, who could certainly smell the offenders, were doing nothing about it. Their lectures, for the bigger classes anyway, put them far enough away that they couldn’t easily smell the kids. Likewise Murray and Heyman had not approached any of them. This made Harry in particular nervous.

After Chess Club, where a distracted Harry got stomped by Nan Mahon and beaten soundly by Drew, the gang met in the trunk. Jonas had an idea he wanted to discuss.

“Okay, first, I talked with some people on the team about the smelling. Our braggart is a kid named Dan Burton. It seems that he only told a couple of the Novices, trying to look cool, but they in turn told everyone who would listen.” Warrick was pacing around.

“What should we do about him?” Everyone looked at Harry, who was Prankster-in-Charge.

“Absolutely nothing, let him take the heat, if there is any heat. What we need to decide now is whether to stop the campaign or let it go on a little longer.”

“Why would we stop it? It’s working just like we wanted it to?”

“That’s the issue, it’s worked, and we haven’t gotten any heat for it for some reason. I think we should take the stuff off the bathrooms and revel in our victory while we still can. Plus, there’s one more thing.”

“What’s that?”

“Sophie, I’m really get sick of smelling feet. Even the barriers aren’t helping enough.” They all started laughing. Reiko looked at him.

“Well I’m with you there, but I say leave them up one more day, then cancel them. The ones in Proctor, with no delay mind you, have only been up a few hours, give them a chance to stretch their legs.....so to speak.”

“I’m with my girl Harry, at least one more day. In fact, we should leave one of the Houses up for longer, just to mess with them.” Harry started nodding at the first one, and then stopped.

“All right, but only if the House we leave up is Jefferson. I want to take advantage of this.....what was his name Jonas?”

“Dan Burton.”

“Right, I want to take advantage of his bragging. It would teach him a lesson if he got in trouble for it. But still, I want Cortez’ off right now, or I’m going to puke in the Lounge, and the house elves don’t like cleaning that up. I’m on their good side right now, I don’t want to mess that up.” Indeed, the house elf staff never had to go into Harry’s room because of Winky, and the gang’s table at meals got really good food every time because of it. All the girls started laughing especially.

“Fine, fine, just destroy my fun. Come on Warrick.” Reiko gave Harry a poke with her elbow, and the couple went upstairs and deprogrammed the bathrooms. They did Shawnee later that night, and somehow persuaded a perplexed Ray Elwood to do the same for Proctor. Harry had to make the pitch himself.

“Trust me Ray, we don’t want to go overboard here. There’s a free swamp in it for you either way, don’t worry.” That ended that debate, with a change of fee.

“I live in a muggle neighborhood at home Harry, could I have a couple of talking tattoos instead?” Harry was prepared to offer double that.

“Done. Our next thing will come after Valentine’s Day, if you’re interested.”

“I am, count me in.”

“Terrific. Now, if you don’t mind me asking.....”

“Nothing bad happened between Claudia and me dude. It just didn’t click is all, nothing to write home about.” Harry had a sneaking suspicion that Ray had only asked Claudia out as an entrée to the gang, but figured that she had had every opportunity to object, but she hadn't as of yet. They needed an in to Proctor, and Harry was mirroring his classmate's thinking about an 'associate' member of the gang.

"I won't ask for details mate, don't worry."

"I'm surprised you waited this long to ask."

"Well it technically is none of my business you know." They parted a few minutes later, and soon Jefferson was the only House. The smell lasted on 48 hours for each person, but inevitably there were people who got nailed more than once. Dan Burton, who was now denying anything to do with the prank, was getting more and more hard questions, by upperclassman, and now by teachers. The faculty had finally gotten tired of it, and after a hasty conference with Riley Poole informing him of this new development, Harry personally did the Jefferson boy's bathroom, while Sophie was fixing the other one.

The lack of questioning of the gang bothered Harry, though he was unaware that Murray and Heyman had their hands full with other, more important matters. This would come into play later on however, and he would understand then.

Hogwarts Quidditch Pitch

9:00 pm GMT

Two figures met underneath the north stands, both hiding their faces as they exchanged murmured greetings. Two people stood off in the middle of the field, guarding.

"Do you have the stuff I wanted?"

"Of course I do lad, it's all right here." He patted the satchel he carried.

“Here’s the money, and the information.” The younger man handed over a money pouch, and a rolled up piece of parchment. The older one hefted the bag.

“You don’t need to count it, it’s all there, just as we agreed.”

“I know son, your word has never been in doubt. I have a bonus item for you, at no cost. Let me pull it out.” He turned around, as the younger man looked nervously around, especially toward school. The older one had pulled a bottle out, and soaked a handkerchief with it.

“What’s that smell?”

“It’s called chloroform, it’s the latest thing.” He got close to his prey, and jammed the cloth against his face, holding it tightly for a few seconds during the struggle. The two figures out in the stadium couldn’t see what was going on, and did not notice right away that their friend had been taken away, it was only ten minutes later that they decided to investigate, for naught. They spent half an hour looking around, and after not finding any clue of where their friend went, ran back to the castle. They didn’t tell anyone where they had gone though, and did not share anything about where their missing friend might be.

Hogsmeade Village

10:00 pm GMT

Voldemort left the Shrieking Shack, Bella and Lucius at his side and they walked toward the main thoroughfare of the village, with Malfoy levitating a large chest beside him. The Shack had been their Scottish Headquarters for the last two weeks, as Pettigrew had taken Snape there, and Voldemort had been spending more time there than he had anticipated. His project for the time of Snape’s confinement had been a thorough memory search of Snape, taking great care to find out exactly what Snape knew about the Death Eaters, and what Greasy had shared with Dumbledore, and anyone else he might be in contact with. He had found enough inconsistencies to justify the torture he planned to visit upon the younger man, though none of them involved Dumbledore, Snape did not even have a miniscule amount of affection for the older man. The inconsistencies mostly involved Snape getting out of the war, with as much of the Death Eater money as he could, and there were errant whispers in Snape's mind about Scrimgeour, though they were mostly unformed. Pettigrew and his Master wondered if Snape had gotten the money idea from Fudge, though there was no hint of a connection between the two men.

Michael Parrish had arrived three days after the meeting that agreed to hire him, though it took a few trips to get all of his gear. He had set up shop in Snape's area, and immediately started throwing his weight around by correcting several of Greasy's formulas and current projects. Snape had no idea of this of course, as Pettigrew had simply walked into his room and stunned him, and had transported him to the Shrieking Shack, where he kept the man sedated constantly as planned. A steady diet of the Cruciatus Curse helped keep Snape under control, as Wormtail knew that his life wouldn't be worth a Knut if Greasy even tried to escape. As far as the rat could tell though, Snape was never mentally alert enough to cause trouble.

Snape had never hid his contempt for Pettigrew, both as children and as adults, and the rat spent a very enjoyable two weeks torturing his old nemesis. With Voldemort's acquiescence, Pettigrew told Snape that Potter was responsible for his plight. He explained in great detail that Potter had demanded Snape's torture as a show of good faith before Potter would join the Death Eater ranks. Snape wasn't often lucid enough to understand all this, but the word 'Potter' being spoken over and over certainly got his attention. It was usually followed by Cruciatus though, and Snape's tenuous hold on sanity slipped away more with every session.

Fortunately for this strategy, Parrish was working out very well, he was reasonably friendly to pretty much everyone, as well he should be with the kind of salary he was bringing down. He was subservient enough to Voldemort to get along with him, and otherwise did not get involved in tactical planning, except when they involved his area of expertise. His short-term work was passing muster very easily, and he had no problem with Bella as his escort back to Bodo every morning to check on his long-term potions, which were too fragile, or unstable, to be moved. Bella always reported back that nothing strange had happened, that Parrish went nowhere but his laboratory, and she had even learned a few things, as the teacher in Parrish had not totally gone away.

Greyback had agreed, via post, to the meeting without changes. Voldemort had deployed his Death Eaters around the village, all with either Invisibility Cloaks on or under Disillusionment Charms in place. Not even close to his full complement was here though, just in case Greyback was setting them up. The bad man still had his contacts within the Ministry though, even with Edgecombe now serving a life sentence in Azkaban.

Flashback to 10 days previous:

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

Wormtail rushed into the study, interrupting Voldemort and Bella, who were going over the tactical plan for the Greyback meeting. Voldemort did not like interruptions per se:

“Wormtail.” Said in a flat, angry voice, but without anything coming from his hands.....his wand being the third drawer of Harry’s desk at the moment.

“Master, Edgecombe was arrested yesterday afternoon.” All right, thought the bad man grudgingly, that constituted a necessary interruption.

“Details.”

“We don’t have many yet, except that most of Malfoy’s network was taken into custody as well this morning. They must have broken the information out of Magdalena, she was the only one not in residence here to know all of those names, since she set up their illicit floo connections.”

“Bella, go retrieve your brother-in-law.” She left without a word.

“Do your sources know how they found out about her activities?”

“No Master, all anyone is saying is that it was an anonymous tip.”

“What is your theory?” He only did this in private, asking for Pettigrew’s input like this, but the rat thought differently enough from him in style that it was often worthwhile. Pettigrew didn’t hesitate:

“I think they found Fudge. Biller, Bones, and Westbrook and company were gone all afternoon, and while we don’t know where they went, or even if they were together.....well my gut tells me that they were Down Under, where we heard Fudge was rumored to be. I have no facts to back that up with, except that Fudge knew about Edgecombe, and Biller would have broken him in seconds, with or without Veritaserum.” Voldemort let this roll around in his mind for a few seconds.

“Interesting, and very plausible. What is our exposure if they did get him? Beyond the ones already arrested.”

“None as far as I know Master, unless Fudge had turned one of our people before his exile.”

“No, that wouldn’t have happened, all that fool cared about was money, and keeping his own position. If he had anything to trade with Scrimgeour he would have done it already, for a guarantee of immunity from his past crimes.”

“I will have our people there keep a closer watch on that sort of thing.”

“Don’t expose them too much Wormtail, with Magdalena gone we must husband our resources there. Let them get comfortable, and we will do another Azkaban raid, now that they have enough of our sympathizers there.” Bella now returned with Malfoy. Voldemort had the rat fill him in, and Malfoy was aghast.

“How much does this harm us Lucius? How easy are those people to replace?”

“It does not cost us any cash my Lord, but as for intelligence purposes.....well no, they're not easy to replace. Our network is hurt, but I can assure you Master, it is not compromised, at least our safety here is not.”

“How much does your wife know?”

“My wife Master?”

“CRUCIO!” He held it for five seconds, and let the gasping man loose, it was an impressive feat considering that it was wandless, though Voldemort did have other wands at his disposal, even if none of them worked as well as the one Harry had captured.

“Your dear wife Narcissa you idiot, or do you have more than one? Does that blonde twit know of the rest of your network!” Malfoy composed his thoughts as quickly as he could, as Bella grinned at the description of her sister.

“No Master, I have always kept that from her, in case she is picked up.” Voldemort rolled his eyes.

“Somehow I don't believe you, tell her to pack what she needs and to move in here with you. I do not want her loose in our society, she's too tempting a target.”

“Yes Master. And my son?”

“Leave him where he is, and tell him to keep up his monitoring of Shepherd and Lupin, as well as Potter's former cohorts.”

“Yes Master, as you wish.”

“I want your woman here by this time tomorrow, Malfoy Manor is to be put in mothballs until our victory is complete, it is just too tempting a target for our Ministry friends, and for Dumbledore as well. Dismissed.” Malfoy looked as though he wanted to say something more, but the look on his Master’s face did not encourage this. Wormtail, at a nod from Voldemort, departed as well, with the bad man and Bella resuming their plotting.

End Flashback

Greyback was to meet them in the center of the village square, both sides were to just bring three people. No one on the Death Eater side had any illusions about Greyback keeping to that part of the deal, and they assumed he would think likewise about them. They were a few minutes early, and Bella looked around. The buildings were all empty, and the silence was deafening.

“Not the Hogsmeade I remember.” Voldemort allowed a smirk on his face, he had, after all, been the one to order the village’s destruction, twice. The second one didn’t work too well, but the village had still been abandoned, so he still won that part of the exercise.

“ It suits my purposes. We need Diagon Alley, but a Hogsmeade.....well they should have had a better defense plan.” Malfoy was very quiet, and had been ever since his brief Cruciatus ten days earlier. Bella kept her voice low.

“Will he show up?”

“Someone will, this is too tempting to pass up for those animals.” They had wards up all around town, preventing any magical departures by their prey, as they didn’t know how many Wizard/Werewolves there were. A minute later, a hooded figure walked out from behind Honeydukes. The figure stopped approximately five meters from the trio.

“Greyback?”

“Yes, you must be Voldemort.” The man, and it was a man, kept his hood on, and spoke with a deep, raspy voice. The hood didn’t matter either way, because none of the three had a clue of what Greyback looked like. Only Pettigrew did, and he was back at the Shrieking Shack preparing Snape for his final journey.

“I am, we finally meet.”

“Do you have my money?”

“I do, 100,000 galleons. Half for past services, the other half for a future raid.”

“A raid on where?”

“You will be told when the time comes.”

“I would like to know now, the last raid had a bit of an advance warning after all.”

“You did lose a lot of people, as did we.”

“United in failure we were then. I repeat, where am I raiding?”

“The Isle of Man, where the Auror Academy is located.” This was a lie of course, and was never a reasonable target for the Death Eaters, who wanted no part of the other governments represented at the Academy to become involved. And if they're best and brightest were attacked by werewolves, they would certainly become involved.

“First things first, levitate that money over to me. Don't come any closer.” Voldemort nodded at Malfoy, who used our old friend Wingardium Leviosa to levitate the chest over to the werewolf. He opened it, and poked through it with a finger, never taking his eyes off the three magicals, though it appeared on the surface that he was theirs to kill if they wanted to.

“When am I carrying out this raid?”

“I told you, I would tell you the details at another time.”

“Yes, but you are not my Lord and Master now are you? So I’ll ask the questions that I choose to. Give me an idea, in general.”

“March, sometime in March.”

“A killing raid, or a scaring raid?”

“A carnage raid. Any more questions?” This was said harshly, though Voldemort was never what one could call friendly. The man just chuckled.

“You really know how to romance someone Voldemort. Let’s just stand here for awhile shall we, get to know one another.”

“So we can fall into whatever simple trap you have planned for us? You’ll die long before we will if you betray us.”

“We’re going to stay to make sure this gold isn’t fake. What’s the term you Wizards use for it? Leprechaun gold?” Since that was exactly what it was, Malfoy gave a slight flinch, which the werewolf noticed. Voldemort, on the other hand, did not notice this, and chuckled sarcastically.

“So untrusting Greyback.”

“No I’m not Wizard, and neither are you, so who are you trying to fool.”

“Perhaps I should kill you now, and deal with your replacement.” Greyback started cackling.

“What makes you think I would be so easy to kill? Your overconfidence will be your undoing. Ask the Potter the kid.” The bad man took a few steps forward.

“Be very careful animal, you’re hanging by a thread.” Greyback was still kneeling in front the chest, and the three magicals, and they could not see his hands.

“Yet here you are, begging for my help, because your people aren't up to the job themselves.” Bella could not longer restrain herself.

“CRUCIO!”

Only to hit nothing but air, as Greyback dodged easily. Even though he was not in his ‘changed’ form, Greyback still had a lot of his werewolf reflexes. He stood there with a confident smile, they could see that much on his face.

“Enough Bella. Greyback, how long must we stand here before you are satisfied?” Greyback closed the trunk and stood up, hefting it in one hand.

“Oh I was satisfied from the off. I know the gold isn't real, but I'm not too worried about that. Your man Malfoy here will pay the 100,000 and much more.”

“You must be insane you filthy piece of shite, why would I pay you anything?”

“Gringott's numbered account 4234BD Malfoy. You'll pay if you want your son Draco back, and killing me now will not help that. I know you have men around the perimeter Voldemort, as you know I do as well. All it takes is me not returning tonight, and the best you can hope for is that young Draco becomes one of us. I don't need to tell you the worst, do I?” Bella now put her wand down, and Voldemort walked in front of Lucius, preventing him from doing anything.

“I would need proof that you have him.” Greyback took off his cloak, to reveal another tied around his waist. He undid it, and threw it over to them.

“This still has enough of his stink on it to prove it to you.” It was a Slytherin cloak, and Lucius knew at once that it was his son's.

“How much?” He croaked out.

“Half a million galleons, payable one week from now at the very latest.”

“We could torture his location out of you, very easily you filth.”

“Now now, name calling gets us nowhere. Besides, I don’t know where he is, and I won’t for a little while yet. I didn’t want to tempt you too much, I know how torture happy you arrogant people are. Just remember which of us fears the muggles more, your kind, or ours. Pay up Malfoy, or your clan will have lost its scion.” He started to back up, and slowly walked away.

“Give my regards to Pettigrew.” He suddenly changed form, and within a second, he was away, the Killing Curses hurled by Malfoy and Lestrange crashing into Honeydukes, but not coming close to a hit. Malfoy started to run after him, but Voldemort grabbed his arm.

“Don’t Lucius, you would never catch him, and we can’t risk you being killed.” You’re worth too much money, was the unspoken reason.

“That animal has my son!”

“Yes, thank you Lucius. It’s not like I wasn’t standing right next to you!” He didn’t curse the man though, even Voldemort wasn’t totally unsympathetic here. Bella grabbed her brother-in-law and pulled him away. She talked quietly with him, as Voldemort stood there and contemplated things.

“I’m sorry I yelled at you Master, please forgive me.” Voldemort surprised Lucius and Bella by absently patting the other man on the shoulder.

“I am not totally without compassion Lucius, we will get your son back. Now you can afford this easily, one payment transfer and this will all be over.”

“It will be that easy?”

“We can only hope, and even if it doesn’t, there is a way we can spin this to our advantage.” He saw the curious looks of his two henchpeople.

“We’ll simply blame Dumbledore.”

End Chapter

Hogsmeade Village

“We will simply blame Dumbledore.” Voldemort said it matter-of-factly, and Bella and Lucius were stunned into silence for a few moments, as their Master let out a piercing whistle, the signal for those Death Eaters on the perimeter to fall in. No red sparks that might be picked up by any watchers at the school. There were two dozen of them, and they came on a run. Voldemort pointed at a Lestranger brother.

“Rodolphus, go get Wormtail, and take his place guarding the bungler. Get him over here.” Lestranger didn’t say a word as he nodded his head, and took off toward the Shrieking Shack at a run. Wormtail arrived, panting from the exertion, about two minutes later, he really needed to lose a few pounds. Once there, Voldemort filled them in on the kidnapping. Narcissa was back at Riddle Manor, and everyone, Voldemort included, was rather happy about that. She may have been loyal to the cause, but a mother’s love was a mother’s love.

“How will we blame Dumbledore Master?”

“Lucius, our dear Headmaster has already let one prominent student slip through his fingers in recent months, to have another, his pet Potter’s nemesis to boot, taken out from under his nose. Well let us just say that that would be a little habit forming. Crabbe, go immediately to Diagon Alley and send a message to your son and find out exactly what happened. Instruct him to tell the old man and Shepherd absolutely nothing about what he and Goyle Jr. may or may not have done. Have him respond immediately. Go now.”

“Yes Master.” Crabbe Apparated away immediately.

“Nott, when we get back to Riddle Manor, comb the archives for anything with Dumbledore’s handwriting on it, there must be something in there. A letter would be best, a signature probably good enough. Once that is done, you and Wormtail will go into muggle London and find the best muggle handwriting forger in the underworld there. Bring him back to me and we will work what the ransom note will say. Promise the forger whatever money you have to, and a retainer if necessary, we might want to do this again in the future.”

“What if Greyback tells Dumbledore the truth?” Voldemort’s sympathy for his minion was rapidly running out with stupid questions like this coming from him.

“What if he does Lucius? That would give the old fool even less credibility in our world, being seen consorting with animals like that. Our public will forgive him Lupin, but not Greyback. Now you and I will deal with your wife. She must go back to Malfoy Manor and ‘receive’, so to speak, the ransom note.”

“The public will believe that Dumbledore would not only kidnap Draco, but try to ransom him as well? His star hasn’t fallen that far has it?” Bella asked that like she wanted to believe this plan was viable.

“It will after we release some more of Potter’s story to them. How he was abused by those muggles all those years, with Dumbledore’s tacit approval. Dolohov, leak some of that to the Daily Prophet tomorrow morning. You know who to deal with, paint Potter in the best possible light, and Dumbledore in the worst. But don’t let the story run for a couple of days, we want the old man and his faculty of fools to sweat a little.”

“Yes Master, first thing.”

“Good, now let us repair to the Shrieking Shack, we have to say our goodbyes to our close friend Severus.” The group walked the short distance to the Shack, to find Rodolphus and a few goons guarding an unconscious Snape.

“He hasn’t moved Master.”

“No matter if he has, he’ll never regain consciousness. Any of you wishing to perform a final Cruciatus, do so now.” The assembled needed no further invitation, as they poured in into their old colleague.

Only Nott really held back, he had directed a calm, but pertinent question to his boss a few days previous.

“Are we really ready to kill Snape over just that one misstep? Potions talents aside, doesn't he still have some Dumbledore/Potter value left in him?” Voldemort, respecting Nott's earnestness in regards to his duties, indulged him with a thoughtful answer, particularly since they were alone at the time.

“Perhaps, but Wormtail and I weakened him too much that night, and tests have shown that he will only decline. At best he would be a slightly improved version of Frank Longbottom, at worst a bowl of jelly that we would have to feed and such, all that probably within a couple of months. Besides, the old man will never believe him totally again. Rufus won't let him for one, I've heard that he keeps our friend on a very tight leash.” That was as close as the bad man would come to admitting that perhaps his overzealous desire for torture had gone a tad bit overboard. Nott accepted the explanation with a slight bow, and said no more, though he dearly wanted to.

The torture, if you want to call it that since Snape didn't technically feel any of it, lasted another 10 minutes. Voldemort then selected a team of Death Eaters to deliver Snape to his final destination. They were about to leave, when Nott, who had left early so that he could quickly complete his Dumbledore mission, returned.

“Master, there are Aurors outside Riddle Manor.” The room stopped dead immediately, and Rastaban Lestrage dropped his share of Snape's body. The boss didn't bat an eye.

“Are they readying for an attack?”

“No Master, they've set up at least one Listening Post. They're set up in the graveyard, and I detected at least three people.” That was all the manpower there was there, but Nott didn't know that.

“So you don't know for sure that they're Aurors.” That was Malfoy, and Nott turned to him with a look of scorn.

“Well I did not stop to introduce myself and check out their uniforms if that’s what you are asking.” Nott’s quiet contempt made Voldemort smile vaguely, as Malfoy, not having the best night anyway, walked away, burning.

“No Master, I do not know for sure, but who else could they be? Dumbledore does not have the manpower to set up that kind of surveillance.” He did, as Harry could attest, but Voldemort ignored that.

“When was the last time we checked the outer perimeter Bella?” She shrugged.

“Two weeks perhaps. None of us venture outside at all at the Manor, so we never really saw the need to do more scanning out there.”

“Well there’s no way they can penetrate our wards without tipping us off, I’m not worried. Bella, detail a couple of people to keep an eye on our watchers, and come up with a plan to strike them if I decide later on it’s necessary.” Inside their minds, every single one of them, Voldemort included, were wondering: How the hell did they get tipped off about Riddle Manor? This was not the time to talk about it though.

“Yes Master.” The group separated now. They delivered Snape to his not-so final resting place, and then departed for ‘home’. Later that night, after some clandestine snooping, they found five more Listening Charms, spread out over the area around the mansion. They were powerful Charms in and of themselves, and could detect anything leaving the house. There were no more Aurors though, and their position in the graveyard was marked, if Voldemort decided to move on them, they would be dead in seconds.

Office of the Headmaster, Hogwarts

4:00 pm GMT

There was a knock on the door, and Dumbledore looked up from the mountain of paperwork on his desk, the cross to bear for any administrator, muggle or magical.

“Enter!” He waited a few ticks, as he heard the footsteps coming up the stairs. It was Cho Chang and Michael Corner, still a couple after all these months.

“Miss Chang, Mr. Corner, to what do I owe the pleasure?” The two, who had been debating for the last five minutes straight on how to approach this, looked at each other. Finally, after a few seconds of silence, Michael took the bull by the horns.

“Sir, I think you should come with us. There’s something you need to see, and we’re not sure how to describe it.” Dumbledore now noted the pale look on Corner’s face, and the fact that Cho’s hands were shaking a little. He delayed a little with a question.

“Shouldn’t you be having Quidditch practice right now? I know Madam Hooch is under the weather, but surely she trusts you to monitor yourselves sufficiently?” Oh he wasn’t even close, they both thought.

“It’s not that sir, and we were about to have practice.....well you really should see this for yourself sir.” Dumbledore wasn’t unduly alarmed, but the looks on their faces made him very curious.

“Very well.” Dumbledore rose, and absentmindedly put a Warming Charm on himself in lieu of a cloak or a coat. They walked outside in silence, toward the Quidditch Pitch. Once they got close enough, they saw the Ravenclaw squad, twelve total with reserves, all gathered near the entrance. A few of the students had become sick, and were being held by the others. Dumbledore was at a loss, until Orla Quirke pointed out what had done this:

Snape was hanging, gallows style, from one of the Quaffle hoops. He was, thankfully, clothed, but there was a red stain all up and down his body.

Dumbledore had rarely been so shocked in his life, and that was saying something. He just stared at his old friend/student/protégé/enemy for a couple of minutes, as the students behind him started fidgeting. Cho, for lack of anything better to do, walked up to him and tapped him on the shoulder, bringing him back.

“Headmaster, what do you want to do? I mean.....we should get him down or something shouldn't we?”

“Yes Miss Chang, you are correct of course. Will you and Mr. Corner help me please. Miss Quirke, I will need to use your broom for a few minutes.”

“Of course sir.” Cho and Michael wanted nothing more than to say ‘hell no, we're not touching him’, but they had no choice here really. With the other students distracted by the specter of seeing Dumbledore flying, the three of them flew up to the hoop, and Dumbledore cut him down, with Cho and Michael carrying him to the ground. Before he left the hoop, the old man did a thorough Scourgify, no need for any forensic evidence to be collected. Once on the ground, Cho tried to get his attention, as his gaze seemed to be a little fogged over.

“Shall I go get Professor McGonagall sir? Or Professor Flitwick?” The Headmaster had no wish for Minerva's various facial tics, which would communicate quite clearly ‘I told you so.’ In spite of her reaction to Harry's Howlers, she had always loathed Snape, and made sure that Dumbledore was reminded of that fact periodically. Likewise Remus would most certainly dance a private jig, and his old enemy was now gone.....if in fact this was Snape, Dumbledore suddenly thought. He wouldn't put it past Voldemort to try a Polyjuice trick like this just to give him a heart attack.

“No Miss Chang, that won't be necessary. Instead, Miss Quirke, will you please go to Madam Pomfrey and inform her of what has happened. Tell her not to share this with anyone at all, and to have a section of the Infirmary cordoned off for when we get there. And don't tell anyone else about this either on your way Miss Quirke.”

“Yes sir.” She hopped on her broom and rocketed off toward the front doors.

“Kids, I also have to ask you not to tell anyone about this, not until I have had time to notify The Ministry and tell the rest of the faculty. I’m not going to threaten you with any punishment or anything like that, but if you would please do as I ask, I would very much appreciate it.” Cho gave everyone present a look, and they all nodded their heads.

“Of course sir.” He spoke only so Cho could hear him now.

“Thank you Miss Chang, and I compliment you on the way you did this, a very worthy choice for Head Girl you were.” He addressed the team.

“Kids, I’m afraid your practice is cancelled for the day. I will find a way for you to make it up before your game against Slytherin. Please come with me.” He levitated Snape’s body and started the slow walk back to the castle. Cho and Michael flanked him, with the others trailing along behind. Dumbledore’s thoughts were a jumble as he walked, as his mind raced alternately with memories of Snape, and thoughts of what to do now. He had given up on Snape’s spying services, believing him to be compromised, but still had hopes that the younger man had not been playing him along, or even just recently.

They got to the doors and the old man sent Michael ahead to clear the way to the Infirmary. Somehow they attracted no attention, and Dumbledore asked the team to stick around, not really trusting that they wouldn’t spill the beans before he was ready to do it himself. A few floo calls later, and most of the faculty had gathered, save the Divination teachers and Shepherd. Madam Pomfrey had been examining Snape for the last five minutes, and turned to Dumbledore and McGonagall, who had been watching her in mute fascination.

“How did he die Poppy?”

“From Cruciatus, a lot of it from what I can tell. The physical wounds were done post-mortem, and seemed to be done in muggle fashion.”

“Can you tell how long he has been dead?”

“Less than 24 hours, probably around 15 or so. They would have done the hanging like that at night.” No kidding, thought all of the assembled students. That wasn’t really the case though, 10:00 am would have been just as good, since only the Quidditch teams used the Pitch, and no practices were held during class times obviously. Dumbledore walked over to the floo, he had no choice with his next move.

“Minister Scrimgeour!”

Rufus happened to be in his office, to Dumbledore’s relief.

“Yes Albus?”

“Severus is dead, his body was found on our Quidditch Pitch.” So much for the polite niceties, and Rufus was left speechless for a few seconds.

“You have him with you?”

“I do Minister, what’s left of him.” It gave Dumbledore a small amount of pleasure to see him flinch, and the old man needed all the pleasure he could get right about now.

“All right, I’ll grab Amelia and we’ll be over in a couple of minutes.”

“Thank you Minister.” Rufus and Bones arrived five minutes later to a silent room, though most of the students looked curiously at The Minister, this being his first trip to Hogwarts since his ascension, at least that they knew about. Dumbledore and Cho filled him in on the events, and he gave Snape the once-over.

“So it hasn’t been the hour yet?” For Polyjuice, which was now on everyone’s mind.

“No Minister, there’s still about 25 minutes left according to my calculations.”

“No note left on the body or anything like that?”

“Nothing, it was the second thing I checked, after looking for a pulse.” Rufus grimaced at seeing the knife work done to Snape. He had barely known the man, and like most had a negative opinion of him, but this was still pretty gruesome. He decided on an easy move first.

“Amelia, send a team to Snape Manor and see if there’s a Dark Mark or anything like that over it.”

“Yes Minister.” She went over to the floo and gave out instructions. The Minister motioned Dumbledore over to him so they could have a private word.

“Is there anything you would like to tell me Albus?” Dumbledore had put up with a lot from this man over the last four months, but this was a little to much for his taste, and he let his anger show a little bit.

“What are you accusing me of Rufus?”

“I’m not accusing anyone of anything Albus, I just want to make sure it wasn’t your people who did this.” He didn’t really think so, but this was another step in his program of keeping Dumbledore in his place.

“Miss Chang will verify my stunned reaction when I came upon Severus. And I refuse to believe that anyone at Hogwarts or in The Order had anything to do with this.” That The Minister took this with a grain of salt was evident in the brief twist of his smile

“And Potter?”

“Harry is thousands of kilometers away.” That Harry might have done this had certainly occurred to Dumbledore, but the distance factor had rendered it unlikely.

“That doesn’t answer my question, but I too find it unlikely, though not impossible, that he snuck over here and killed Snape.” The floor fired, and Bones spoke to someone for a moment. She walked over to the two men.

“There is nothing strange at Snape Manor. We have some Listening Charms up, and they have not been disturbed by any human activity since he escaped his house arrest.”

“Thank you Amelia.” She stuck around, having taken in the looks Dumbledore and Rufus were giving each other.

“What do we do with him?” Dumbledore sighed.

“There are family members abroad that we can contact.”

“Contact them only Albus, The Ministry will take custody of the body and bury it. He was a fugitive after all, and does not in any way deserve the honor of a funeral.” Rufus, McGonagall, and Bones all looked in total agreement on that, and the odds of those three agreeing on a whole lot are pretty slim.

“I doubt they will object. Will you seize his property?” That was an option for something like this, one not always taken.

“No, but his heirs, whomever they may be, will have some taxes to pay. Or are you his heir Albus?”

“I have no idea Minister, I have a copy of his will on file, but it is sealed and I have never looked at it.” Sure you haven’t, Rufus’ facial expression communicated quite clearly, but he let it go.

“Well there’s no hurry, and there’s no need to keep this quiet really. We’ll send out a press release to The Daily Prophet, we’ll just say that unnamed students found him, though I’m sure some of them will talk about it, no matter what threats you made to them.” Dumbledore bristled at the idea that his students would so blithely disobey him, but re-focused himself for another question.

“What will be The Ministry’s official reaction?” More teachers had come up to them, and they were all quite curious as to what Rufus would say.

“We’ll butcher him like a prize hog of course. He was a Death Eater after all, and the most unpopular teacher Hogwarts has ever had.” He said it so blandly that Dumbledore was a little taken aback. The others were nodding though, and quite agreed with the strategy. McGonagall had been bothered about something for quite awhile, and finally used the silence to address it.

“Where is Professor Shepherd? He should have been here by now.” Indeed Shepherd wasn’t there, which was noteworthy in that he was Snape’s replacement in both his jobs, and along with McDowell, was the only teacher to have been a schoolmate of the man. Rufus looked like he could care less, but Dumbledore went to the floo and called for him.

“Professor Shepherd!” There was no answer, and Dumbledore was half tempted to send someone to look for him. All teachers were supposed to let him know if they left the castle, and he wondered what could have stopped him from responding to an all faculty summons. That thought process was stopped when Shepherd himself appeared in the Infirmary doorway, looking much as he always did, which is to say calm and detached. Shepherd was just under six feet tall and a little overweight, with none of Snape’s greasiness and little of his pale features. He approached them, and McGonagall rounded on him.

“You were expected 10 minutes ago Charles, the summons was not voluntary.” Shepherd was either not listening to her, or pretending not to.

“I’m sorry, did you say something Minerva?” She turned pink at that, and got even more angry as Shepherd turned his back on her and addressed Dumbledore, speaking so that the Ravenclaw students, still under velvet detention, could not hear him.

“Headmaster, one of my Slytherins has gone missing.”

“Who?”

“Draco Malfoy.” McGonagall, who didn’t have the sixth year NEWT class that day, was unclear about how he knew this.

“What makes you think he’s gone missing?” Shepherd answered her indirectly.

“Remus, was he in your class today?”

“Nope, Theo Nott told me that he was sick. I didn’t think anything of it really.” Shepherd looked back at Dumbledore, who was not liking the coincidence of Snape turning up dead and his protégé not turning up at all.

“Nor was he in my class, and Nott told me the same thing. I went to check on him, and he is nowhere to be found.”

“What did Messrs. Crabbe and Goyle say? They’re usually attached at the hip to him.”

“They had no idea Headmaster, other than that he was sick. Either Draco has left the castle, or he has a private bolt-hole somewhere that we don’t know about.” Remus had a thought about that, but kept it to himself for the time being. Nearly Headless Nick had floated through and was about two seconds from spotting Snape, when Dumbledore distracted him, for that and another reason.

“Sir Nicholas, if you would do me a favor?”

“Of course Headmaster, you must but name it.”

“Take as many of your fellow ghosts as you can and do a search for Draco Malfoy for me please. If you find him, tell him to see me in my office.”

“We shall find him straightaway Headmaster.” He floated through the west wall, not having seen the dead body. Remus decided to do likewise.

“Headmaster, I have an idea I would like to pursue, I’ll be back in 10 minutes.” He got a nod from Dumbledore, and a perplexed look from McGonagall. He left and walked quickly up to the Gryffindor Common Room, where thankfully his target was sitting by the fire with his girlfriend. He walked up to them, earning stares from everyone else in the room.

“Neville, I have a small favor to ask of you.”

“Sure Professor Lupin, what is it?” Remus lowered his voice to just above a whisper.

“I need a quick look at a certain Map you have.” Neville didn’t hesitate.

“Sure, if you don’t mind looking at it in some privacy.” Remus took that to mean Neville’s room, and answered by starting toward the stairs. Neville and Luna followed him, and they were soon in the sixth year boys’ room. Neville looked at Remus.

“If you wouldn’t mind stepping outside for a second sir, I would just as soon keep my hiding place secret.” Only he and Luna were inoculated against the Pink, though Ron and the others were aware of it, having been given fair warning.

“A Harry convert I see.”

“No sir, I just don’t want you to get tempted, and become pink.” He gave a quick explanation of the Pink defense, and Remus started chuckling.

“Lead me not into temptation eh? I’m now quite glad that I didn’t just pull a Ron and ransack your things.” He left the room, and 10 seconds later was back in. He opened up the Map and pored over it.

“Who are you looking for sir?”

“A missing student, I’m sorry I cannot say who right now. You’ll understand later I promise.” He went over all the likely and unlikely spots and there was no sign of Draco in Hogwarts Castle. After five minutes, he handed the Map back.

“Thank you Neville, I’ll see you two later.” He hurried back to the Infirmary, having taken nine minutes on this errand. Dumbledore and the others were still waiting for Nick to come back with a report, and McGonagall was trying to hector a thoroughly disinterested Shepherd. He didn’t sneer at her, he just ignored pretty much everything she said. Remus pulled Dumbledore aside.

“He’s not here Albus, I checked the Map.” Dumbledore knew all about the Map, but Remus had refused to divulge to him where it was, only that he could get to it on a few minutes’ notice.

“Are you sure Remus?”

“He’s not on the Map, and the Map is never wrong. We need to bring his bodyguards in and Veritaserum the information out of them.” Dumbledore usually resisted these types of things, but this was different.

“Very well. Charles?” Shepherd had been quietly talking with Hill.

“Yes?”

“Please go retrieve Crabbe and Goyle and put them in your office, and have some Veritaserum ready. Remus and I will need to talk with them.”

“Yes sir.” He ambled off, in no great hurry, as was his habit. All the students liked Shepherd, who played no favorites, but the contrast to Snape was often very jarring for them, particularly the older ones. He and Draco had gotten along fine, even if the Potions Master was no Dark ideologue, as Shepherd pretty much left Draco to do as he wanted. Dumbledore addressed the Ravenclaws.

“Kids, you may leave now. Again, please don’t mention this to anyone quite yet. Miss Chang, please ensure that this happens.” Cho left with them, and could be heard making some threats.

Rufus had been listening to all of this Draco talk without interjecting, but now he did.

“Draco is Lucius’ son I take it?”

“Yes, his only child.”

“I remember him from the trial, small and white haired. Keep me apprised of what’s happening with that. Amelia and I will off now, we’ll send some people to take custody of Snape, and we’ll have a press release ready. You can expect a Daily Prophet reporter on your floor in about an hour or so.”

“That will be more than enough time Minister. I have your leave to tell them the truth, or at least most of it?”

“You may tell them anything you wish, as long as it’s true, the amount is up to you. Anything else, check with me first.” Dumbledore took his instructions with more of a docile attitude than the rest of the teachers had ever seen before. Rufus gave some instructions to Madam Pomfrey, and he and Bones flooed back to The Ministry. Dumbledore dismissed the rest of the teachers aside from McGonagall and Remus. They walked quickly up to Shepherd’s office, where Crabbe and Goyle were sitting in chairs, talking nervously about their studies with their Head of House. Remus didn’t trust these two for a second, and quickly used Petrificus Totalus on both of them.

“Charles, please give them the Veritaserum.” Shepherd did, and Remus took the spells off them after about two minutes. Dumbledore handled the questioning.

“Where is Draco Malfoy?” He addressed Goyle with this question and all the others, which turned out to be a rather large mistake. Crabbe Jr., in his note from his father, had been expressly forbidden to share details of the note with Goyle, on the off chance that Dumbledore would assume that questioning one was questioning them both, and pick the wrong boy.....which is what happened, even Crabbe Sr. had his moments of inspiration.

“I don’t know.”

“When did you last see him?”

“Last night.”

“What time?”

“About 9:00 pm or so, I’m not sure when exactly.”

“Where did you last see him?”

“In the Quidditch Pitch, under the stands.” McGonagall went pale at hearing that, and Remus and Dumbledore looked at each other significantly.

“Why were you three under the stands?”

“Crabbe and I weren’t under them, Draco was.”

“Why was he under the stands?”

“He was buying something.”

“What was he buying?”

“Something called heroin, I don’t know what it does.” The teachers did though, and if Shepherd was to be candid, he could tell them that he had tried it once.

“How long has he been buying this heroin?”

“I don’t know, since summer at least. He didn’t buy it last year.”

“Who was he buying from?”

“I don’t know, he wouldn’t tell me.”

“How often does he purchase this heroin?”

“Once a month or so mostly, it was twice in November.”

“Have you ever seen him use it?”

“No, he won’t let us see.”

“So you two were keeping watch for him while he was making the purchase?”

“Yes, that’s what we always do.”

“When did you notice he was gone?”

“After about 15 minutes, it usually takes him a lot less time to do his business.”

“Did you search for him?”

“Yeah, but he wasn’t there.”

“What did you do then?”

“We came back here and went to bed.”

“Why didn’t you tell anyone that Draco had disappeared?”

“We didn’t want to get in trouble for leaving the castle.”

“Did he leave on his own, or was he taken?” That was first mention of kidnapping.

“I don’t know.”

“What do you think is more likely?”

“That he left on his own, Draco can take out anybody wanting to harm him.” Loyal to the last, that was Goyle. The adults didn’t disagree with him though, as Malfoy was the top Slytherin of any year in Defense, and undoubtedly had been well trained in Dark fighting by his father and associates. The adults walked into the hallway for a moment, though Remus conjured up some ropes and secured the two boys to their chairs. Shepherd leaned against the wall while eyeing his colleagues, he had his own ideas on how to handle this, but knew he would have to argue his way past the two old people.

“I think that all we can do is wait until morning, and see if he’s back by then.” McGonagall stared incredulously at him.

“One of our students.....one of your Slytherins has been taken!” There were no paintings nearby thankfully. Dumbledore, sensing a blasé insult coming from Charles, intervened.

“We don’t know that Minerva, young Draco could be anywhere. He could be on an errand for Voldemort, or wandering the Forbidden Forest in a drug induced haze. Charles, after we are done here, go search his belongings and see if there’s any trace of the drugs, or the implements to use them.”

“I know what to look for, don’t worry. And Crabbe and Goyle? What should we do with them?”

“Give them a couple of detentions for leaving the castle, but otherwise don't attract any attention to the situation. Remus, I want you and Hagrid to start combing the forest near the Quidditch Pitch. Give Fang something of Draco's and see if he can't pick up a scent.”

“Good idea, if he's in there, he can't have gone far if he's under the influence. How would he have gotten hold of muggle drugs like that? It must be a Wizard supplying him, but why?” Shepherd felt like he should say something here.

“I don't know if any of you have tried heroin before, but do it a couple of times, and you're almost sure to become addicted to it, it's probably the most powerful muggle narcotic there is.”

“I'm sure you would know all about that Charles.” Shepherd simply looked at McGonagall and winked salaciously at her.

“I'd be happy to tell you all about it over a nice glass of wine Minerva.” McGonagall, more than twice the age of her colleague, nearly had a heart attack, as Remus and Dumbledore were both fighting their own smiles. It was definitely something that Snape never would have tried, and it had the desired effect of shutting her up. Mission accomplished, Charles returned to business.

“Are we done with those two idiots in there?”

“Yes Charles, go back with them and make sure they understand to keep this to themselves. They have done a fine job of it so far, so it appears to be within their capabilities.” Crabbe and Goyle, astonishingly, were not among the smartest students of their year, but it took a lot to flunk out of Hogwarts, and they had done the bare minimum required to stay afloat in school.

Shepherd went back into his office, and soon returned with the two goons, giving them a quiet lecture as the three of them passed by on the way back down to the dungeons. Once they were out of earshot:

“Minerva, go and close the Owlery for the remainder of the day.”

“What will we do with young Malfoy once he returns?”

“We will put a Signature Tracking Charm on him the moment we locate him, in fact a series of them, done by all his teachers. You all will test him periodically to see if your markers are still there.” A Signature Tracking Charm was a normal tracker that gave off the magical signature of the one who cast it. Its advantage is that it cannot be taken off and put back on again by the one trying evade. Its disadvantage is that it let's the victim know who is tracking him or her. Aurors rarely used them, though Dumbledore had used them on Ron, Hermione, and Ginny when he was attempting to reel in Harry before he left for America, though they were off now.

“Should we place the castle in lockdown at night? It is all too easy for the students to sneak out.”

“No, the best thing to do now is find Draco before word gets out. We will worry about repercussion for him when the time comes.” The tone had a note of finality to it, and McGonagall and Remus split off to do their assigned tasks. Remus, Hagrid, and Fang spent three hours searching the area around the Quidditch Pitch, and found no evidence of much of anything. Shepherd found trace elements of heroin on the floor around Draco's bed, but did not find the lad's hiding place for his works or any leftover drugs he might have had in his room. Draco did not come back to the castle that night, and Dumbledore informed The Minister as such when the Aurors came to take Snape's body.

The Headmaster answered ten minutes of probing questions from a pair of Daily Prophet reporters, and neither praised Snape nor condemned him, ending the interview as quickly as he could get away with it. He pondered on what the public might think, how certain people might react. So far Remus had kept his emotions to himself, the search for Draco perhaps giving him an outlet. The old man wondered about Harry, and how he might take the news. Would he be happy, perhaps a celebration with his American friends at the death of his tormentor? Would he be reflective, perhaps now might be another avenue of rapprochement for the two of them, with the specter of Snape out of their way. He spent a fitful night, trying to sleep but not finding much luck with it. It turned out that he tossed and turned almost for nothing, as the shit would not truly hit the fan until Wednesday morning.

Mail Call

The story of Snape's murder was a front page story in The Chronicle, using an article reprinted from The Daily Prophet. Harry read his own name more than once, as many Snape incidents and anecdotes were written about, though only Dumbledore was quoted from the Hogwarts staff. The standard 'Potter was unavailable for comment' tagline was used for him, as if they had tried and failed to contact him. He sighed and passed the paper over to Claudia, he shared his Chronicle subscription with her.

"Dobby!" The small fellow popped in.

"Yes Harry." Harry pointed at the picture of Snape on the front page of the paper, and Dobby gulped twice, but otherwise did not look especially sad about the new situation. He anticipated what Harry wanted from him.

"You want the copy of The Daily Prophet?"

"A mind reader you certainly are Dobby. Please go get the twins' copy, and find out what they think."

"Right away." He popped off, and Harry closed his eyes for a moment.

"Winky!" She now popped in.

“Yes Harry?” He showed her the article as well, her eyes went very wide, but she did not comment.

“Please go to Gringotts and find Bill, ask him if there’s anything he can tell me that’s not in the Prophet.”

“Yes Harry.”

The other six members of the gang were staring intently at Harry as he gave his staff their instructions, but by no means were they the only ones. Students at other tables were looking his way as well, and Murray had made a point not to lose eye contact with him since she had seen the article. She did not immediately approach him however, though she badly wanted to. Sophie finally had to ask.

“What are you thinking Harry?” He turned to her, with a very opaque look to his face.

“I honestly could not begin to know how to answer that Sophie.” Dobby saved her from having to respond to that, he popped back in with a copy of The Daily Prophet. The paper did not have news of the Draco kidnapping yet, and surprisingly had more than just Snape being covered, though he dominated the front page. He quickly read through the articles and was amazed to find that he was not a suspect in the murder. That was why he had wanted the paper, he had just assumed that since he was Snape’s number one enemy.....

“So what did they have to say Dobby?”

“Twin George said that there were out of town all day yesterday and evening, so they found out this morning like the rest of the reading public. They were at a sunny place, if you get my meaning.” A ghost of a smile hit Harry’s face, as he thought of how happy Snape’s death would have made Sirius.

“I do indeed.”

“Twin Fred said that they contemplated waking you up to tell you, but decided that you are a growing boy and you need your sleep, or words to that effect. He said that there was nothing you could have done anyway, even if you had wanted to.”

“Gotcha.” Winky came back right then.

“Bill said that he did not know of this until he read it in the paper Harry. Dumbledore did not inform him or his parents of what happened.”

“So either they’re cut out of the Order decision making, or he just kept it very close to the vest on this one.”

“Bill thought that you would see it that way Harry, and his vote, as he put it, is with the second choice.”

“Thank you both.” They nodded and went back to doing what they had been doing.....Dobby had a sewing project going for Harry that was almost done, and Winky had been straightening up the dorm room. Harry didn’t say anything for a few moments, he just stared at Snape’s face on the newspaper.

“Harry?” A waterfall of emotions splayed out over Harry’s face for a few seconds, and the six could tell that he was doing battle with himself over what to say next.

“We’ll never know whose side he was really on. Who was he a spy for, and why. This must be driving Dumbledore crazy right now, which was the whole point I’m guessing.” He said it calmly, almost wistfully, as his eyes never left the picture of his former tormentor. While the idea of anyone driving Dumbledore crazy was certainly a pleasant one, Harry on the whole preferred that Voldemort not be the one doing it.

“I’m sure that that Voldemort guy wasn’t too happy over the battle they lost.”

“Yeah, Travis told me that they were being a little too careless, thinking that Dumbledore would buy anything they sold him. It probably got Tom thinking that he could do without Snape, or maybe Greasy just pissed him off, you never know with those people. Human life is pretty cheap when you’re in Death Eater camp I’m betting.” The meal was breaking up, as students began heading to their first classes. Harry and Jonas had Muggle Studies, and Professor Ziegler was walking toward them now.

“Harry, Professor Murray would like to see you in her office when you’re done eating. Don’t worry about class, it’s lecture day anyway. Take all the time you need.” Warrick, who barely knew Ziegler, just could not help himself any longer.

“All the time he needs? It’s not like a family member died or anything.” Ziegler, who did have a temper, just smiled.

“No, just a man who’s been very involved in his life for the last six years, and his father’s life before that. Don’t underestimate that Warrick, even someone you hate can become as close as family in their own way. Harry, I’ll see you next Tuesday in class.” He walked off, and Murray was soon out the door herself, with a nod toward Harry. Harry scooped up the last bite of his omelet and gulped it down. He kissed Sophie goodbye and left without a word. Murray was waiting for him and they walked to her office without saying anything. They go there and Murray made sure that the door was secure before turning to Harry, who had an enigmatic look on his face.

“Harry, what’s said in this office, stays in this office. Say it.” He felt the rage building in him quickly, and had no desire to hold it back any longer.

Harry then spoke the words that he didn’t dare share with his friends.....well his American friends anyway.

“It should have been me damn it! I should have been the one to kill him! I feel so cheated, like a little kid who drops his ice cream cone after only one lick.” Murray would have burst out laughing at that last line, but for the look on Harry’s face.

“I figured as much.” Harry started pacing around the office, vaguely noticing a new Dark Detector sitting on the desk that he hadn’t seen when he was there with Fred and George.

“I should have killed him back in July, but nooooooooo, I was too bent on humiliating him and Dumbledore. I should have killed him then Professor Murray and ended that business with one spell, no drama, no betrayals.....just what he deserved. I wouldn’t have had to use an Unforgivable, I had him tied up and everything, right where I wanted him.” Murray gave herself a mental pat on the back for having him say these things in front of her, a professional, rather than his friends. She could only imagine Sophie’s potential reaction to what he had just said.

“What if you had Harry? Where would you be now? Living as a muggle, with a reward bounty on your head? A 16 year old version of that fool Fudge.”

“I would have thought of something, he could have disappeared.” She had never heard Harry sounding so bitter.

“And how would you have felt afterwards?” Harry didn’t break stride and wasn’t facing her as he spoke.

“Totally and completely righteous, I hated that man, I hated him more than I could ever tell you. I would still be at Hogwarts right now if not for him and his desire to pay back my father for shit that happened 20 years ago! Five years he had at me every week in class, every day in the corridors and at meals. I couldn’t take any more of it! Every person has their limit Professor Murray, and I had reached mine. I’ll say this for Dumbledore, at least he pretended to have my best interests at heart most of the time, but that bastard Snape.....” He trailed off and was now looking at the pictures on the wall.

“He was not a good man, I agree with you.” Harry snorted at her understatement, and turned to face her.

“Oh come off it Professor Murray, I’ll give you a $20 bill right now if you can look me in the eye and tell me that you didn’t at least twice want to kill him yourself, and you only knew him for less than a year.” She smiled, it was a lot more than twice if she was to tell him the truth, but she understood that saying that probably wouldn’t help things here.

“You wouldn’t be paying me any money if I took you up on it Harry, no.”

“I’m only surprised that one of the Daily Prophet hacks didn’t accuse me of the murder.”

“Why would that be so bad? If you really hated him that much?” Harry started laughing, and seemed to have been brought out of his rage.

“Because if I’m getting the blame for something Professor Murray, then I want the pleasure or satisfaction of committing the offense.”

“Good point. Harry, you had your chance to kill Snape back in July, and you passed on it. You know why? Because you are not a murderer.”

“I’ve killed people since then.”

“In a battle Harry, one where your life hung in the balance.”

“It’s a fine line Professor.” Murray, who in younger years had taken the lives of more than one Lycan soldier, could easily relate.

“Yes it is Harry, but you knew where it was then, and you know where it is now.”

“In theory.”

“You had a chance to go after Dumbledore earlier this month.” Harry’s jaw hung open a little bit.

“How did you know about that?”

“He wrote me and told me about it, said that you had expressed feelings about suicide.” Harry’s temper shot through the roof.

“HE WHAT!” She held up both her hands as it looked like he was going to spontaneously combust any second now.

“Calm down Harry, if this was a big deal would I have waited this long to mention something about it?” Harry’s face still had more red than she had ever seen, but he seemed to be calming down a little.

“I then talked to Craig Parker at the Auror Academy, and he put me in touch with Travis Biller, who wrote me with what you really said. Our friend conveniently left out a couple of things that you said.”

“Yet another reason to show you why I left there.” She nodded her head.

“Yes.” Harry had actually been softening toward the old man in recent weeks, sensing that he had perhaps overreacted that day at the Academy. Not any longer though, and his voice took a decidedly cold tinge to it.

“One day I’m going to settle with Albus Dumbledore, one day not too far from now.” Murray never wanted that look directed at her, with or without her wand handy.

“Do you think you could take him?” Expecting Harry to self deprecate a little, she was surprised at his response.

“Right now? I don’t know. In a real duel.....yes, I believe I could, if I used some Dark Magic.”

“You would do that?” She had thought not, but didn’t know the extent of Harry’s private library, from which he sampled something most every afternoon or night.

“I would do whatever it took to kill my enemy, and Albus Dumbledore is my enemy.” There it was, the first time he had ever flat out stated it in front of anyone but Sophie or the twins. It gave him a small sense of relief to get that off his chest.

“It’s a good thing I said no to his proposed visit then. I then reported him to the International Confederation of Wizards for falsely accusing you like that, and trying to undermine your education here. He should be getting their censure in the mail post any day now.” That popped the balloon, and Harry started smiling now.

“Really? Or did you just say that so I wouldn’t destroy your office?”

“Both, as it happens.”

“I wouldn’t have destroyed your office ma’am, I have a little more self control than I did last year.”

“A ‘little’?”

“Okay, a lot. These are some nice things, I wouldn’t want to have to pay to replace them.”

“Funny Harry, very funny.” She was smiling though. Harry’s look was sheepish, but his tone was matter of fact and direct.

“I knew that with Dumbledore I could get away with it, since he needed me. You don’t need me at all, and could probably do without the hassle and drama that life with me brings.”

“On the contrary Harry, the school has benefited from having you around, trust me. And I’m not just talking the pranking either. No more feet though, or any smell for that matter, pranks should be funny, not unpleasant to be around.”

“I admit to nothing.”

“But you deny nothing as well.” Good point.

“That too.” He was trying to keep to just the one lie to her, the one about leaving school.

“Fair enough.”

“What did young Burton say?”

“He cracked under about two seconds of Professor Heyman staring at him.” Harry had still not figured out who Burton was exactly, and was still self-pledged not to go anywhere near the kid, for fear of starting collusion rumors.

“Young people have no fortitude do they?”

“Well young people are prone to bragging, except for you.” Which had not gone unnoticed by the faculty, as Harry only really made a point when he screwed something up in class, which wasn’t that often anyway. A few of the faculty had echoed Heyman in being a little dubious about having Harry come to school here, but they had all been turned around by his lack of braggadocio.

“I have no need for it ma’am, my ego is well fed enough without walking around trying to show off my muscles.” And he didn’t. The thing Harry liked best about the school was that he didn’t have to walk around trying to prove himself to anyone, he could concentrate on being likeable. WWW helped greatly of course, but it was fair to say that Harry was one of the more popular students in his class.

“You have to be wondering why I’m so easy on these pranks.” Harry finally sat down in front of her desk.

“The thought had crossed my mind, yes.”

“There are a lot of pressures on our students, both in the classroom and out. It’s like that with any boarding school, not just the magical ones, since the students are around each other 24 hours a day instead of seven or so hours. Sometimes you kids, and we teachers, need to let off some steam, have something to concentrate on besides our studies, and what to do with life.” Harry hadn’t expected this line of discussion to come up, but he figured he might as well get something out of it.

“So as long as they stay cute and funny, I can expect a hands-off approach?”

“Right in one, as you Brits like to say.” Oh the twins would love hearing this, suddenly Harry couldn’t wait for mid-April to come.

“We decided to leave Clancy alone anyway.” She smirked at him.

“David thought he got the message across.”

“It was as subtle as a chainsaw, we couldn’t really miss it.” Warrick had, but Harry didn’t want to give Heyman any more ammunition.

“That was the point. Sometimes all subtlety does is cloud the issue.” Harry was quick to throw a disclaimer in there.

“Our no Clancy policy is contingent on him doing the same of course, and leaving the younger kids alone.”

“I have no problem with that, I don’t approve of bullies.” The Cortez Seniors, the ones who should have been handling Clancy, had always been a little intimidated by Heyman’s support of him, and had pretty much left him alone. This didn’t go unnoticed by Clancy himself, and until Harry’s threats, had pretty much run amok.

Now that Harry had unofficial permission to prank to his heart’s content, within the rules, he wanted to get back to something Murray had mentioned earlier.

“Let’s backtrack a little here, now that I’ve calmed down, and talk about Dumbledore coming here.” She had been wondering when he would get back to that.

“He wanted to talk with me about you, and how to plan the rest of your time here.” Harry looked incredulous at the idea.

“And what on earth made him think that you would be receptive to something like that?”

“Beats me, I haven’t spoken or written to him since I left Hogwarts years ago, it’s not like I need him as a job reference. I guess he thought that the suicide accusation would sway me.”

“Does it go without saying that colluding with Dumbledore would be the best and fastest way to remove me from your school?” For the first time Murray showed a little exasperation with Harry.

“It does Harry. Remember, I don’t like him either, for reasons that have nothing to do with you.” He did remember, and that always gave him comfort whenever he thought of the old man.

“Yes ma’am, and I’m very grateful for that. And thanks for doing this, I’m sure you have loads of other things you’d rather be doing right now than counseling a homicidal student.”

“Yet we just established that you are not homicidal, Voldemort and his people excepted.”

“I think I might have to restart the Howler campaign though.”

“Not a bad idea, but perhaps it would be better just to send him a short note, telling him what I told you. It would let him know that you’re on to him, but not so much that it got under your skin.”

“But it did.”

“For a moment, sure. In a lot of ways Dumbledore is like a small child, he wants attention from those who would ignore him.” Harry liked that analogy.

“Good point ma’am. May I borrow a pen and a small piece of paper? Preferably one with Great Lakes letterhead on it.” She slid over a pad of scratch paper that had ‘From the desk of Joanne K. Murray’ on it.

“Of course.” She was very interested to have a first-hand look.

Harry quickly scrawled out a note and slid it over.

Dear Albus,

So I’m suicidal eh? You really are reaching.

H.J. Potter

Murray started chuckling, and handed it back.

“Nice, short and to the point.”

“Dobby!” He popped in.

“Yes Harry?”

“Please take this note to the Post Office in Diagon Alley and mail it to Dumbledore. Don’t bother waiting for a reply.” Dobby nodded, and was away.

“No Howlers to him then? I’m not trying to forbid you or anything, but I just think it’s a bad idea.”

“No Howlers ma’am, as of right now. If he tries any foolishness again though, I might revisit it.”

“He could make things hard on Fred and George though couldn’t he?”

“Perhaps, but Arthur seems to be moving into The Minister’s inner circle, and he’ll make sure Dumbledore doesn’t come down on them.

He just got appointed to The Wizengamot not long ago.” Harry had burst with pride at hearing the news.

“He sounds like a fine man from the way you’ve described him.”

“He is, the twins are more like him than you might think, you’ll find that out when they’re here.” Dobby now popped back in.

“All done Harry, the note is on it’s way. It was two sickles and four knuts, the Post Office in Diagon Alley had a price increase recently.” Harry wondered why Dobby would tell that to him now of all times.

“Well I can afford it. What’s on your mind Dobby?” Dobby looked between the two of them, and answered nervously.

“My sewing project is now completed Harry, I thought you might want to demonstrate it to the Professor.” That wasn’t a bad idea, Harry thought.

“Good idea Dobby, go get it.” Dobby left, and Murray looked at Harry quizzically.

“A sewing project that I would be interested in?”

“It’s right up your alley ma’am.....your former Auror alley that is.” Murray had looked briefly astonished, but then understood. Dobby came back with it:

It was a dragon’s hide vest, designed much in the style of a muggle Kevlar vest. It was designed that way after Harry saw one in a movie and decided he wanted a magical version for himself, using Charlie’s Christmas gift in part. He explained the concept to Murray.

“My foster brother Charlie Weasley gave me a piece of dragon hide for Christmas, he works in a dragon preserve in Romania. It wasn’t enough for a full vest, so Dobby has been making the rounds of black markets around the magical world to find a piece for the back. The sewing is what took the longest, there’s a specific way you have to go about it, and it's quite time consuming." Dobby handed it to him, and he hefted it on.

"Feels like it weighs about 15 kilos, not too bad." That was 33 pounds, and was about as much extra weight as the very slim Harry could pack without giving him back issues.

"You don't look too stooped, all that time in the workout room is paying off."

"I do fly a couple times a month, last week I went out in that blizzard, a lot of fun." Murray had heard about that, part of the reason people liked Harry is that they thought he was a little 'off', and flying inside a blizzard was certainly proof of that. She walked up and tapped the vest with her fist, very strong it was indeed.

"You want to test it out?"

"If you don't mind, a nice stunner would do I think." She took out her wand and aimed it Harry's chest.

"No pictures of this, I don't want Winky hiding in here somewhere like you did with Snape."

"No pictures.....Help, she's attacking me, help!" Dobby dissolved in a fit of giggles from his position standing on one of the easy chairs, and Murray couldn't help but laugh herself. She calmed herself after a few seconds and let it rip:

"STUPEFY!"

From five feet away it hit Harry like a sledgehammer and knocked him a few feet and onto his back. She hurried over and found one important fact.

The stunner had not stunned him. Knocked the wind out of him for sure, but was still very conscious.

"Harry, are you okay?"

“My head smacked the ground pretty hard, but I’m okay.” She helped him up, grimacing at the extra weight.

“Maybe I should have been a little further away when I did that. Still, five feet away and you’re still awake, and I put a lot of power into it.”

“I do believe it works.” Harry, though out of breath, managed a few cackles.

“You mind if I try it?” Murray, in bare feet, was about three inches shorter than Harry, and while the vest wouldn’t be a perfect fit, it would be close enough.

“Be my guest.” She pulled it over her head, and stood 10 feet away from Harry this time. Harry had his wand trained on her, and again she was dead grateful that there were no pictures being taken here.

“You ready ma’am?” She nodded, and put a series of Cushioning Charms on the floor behind her.

“Give me all you’ve got Harry.” If only this was Dumbledore, Harry thought ruefully. He would give up half his vault in Gringotts for a shot like this at the old man, though he probably would go a little nastier than Stupefy.

“STUPEFY!”

When the Headmistress reflected back on this, she was grateful for the Cushioning Charms and that she had placed them as thoroughly as she had. Murray hit the deck so fast she didn’t know what hit her, but not for one second did she lose consciousness. Harry helped her up, and just to get a laugh.

“You can come out now Winky!” Murray jumped a little as Winky popped in.

“Yes Harry?”

“You didn’t.” Harry doubled over.

“No, I really didn’t, I can’t communicate telepathically with these two.” Murray acknowledged that she had been nailed, as a confused Winky popped back to the dorm room.

“Thank heavens for small favors. This vest is great Harry, how much did the other piece wind up running you?”

“A little over $5,000 or so. Where did you wind up getting it Dobby?”

“In Singapore Harry, my tour of magical alleys was very educating.”

“That’s not a bad price, that kind of thing is difficult to find.” Indeed, Harry had been spending enough money that he was finally starting to get a little thrifty, with nothing but his interest from Gringotts coming in, financially speaking. He still had no intention of taking profits from WWW anytime soon, but was already planning on living on his Quidditch salary when the time came in 16 months.

“So I’m told, Charlie said he debated on giving it to me or Bill, but he told me that since I was the Weasley most likely to take a spell to the chest, I should get it. You’ll meet him at graduation next year I’m sure, he’s another great guy, the Weasleys are overflowing with them.” Hogwarts and Great Lakes graduations were a week apart, so lots of traveling for the adult Weasleys.

“Won’t he be coming to this years? Fred and George will be making the walk.” Harry made a face.

“I didn’t forget about them, let’s make sure they get through the ten weeks first.”

“Good point.” She checked her watch, it was now a little after 9:30, and she did have a thing or two to do before lunchtime.

“You can take the rest of the morning off if you want to Harry, go check on your plants or something.”

“Thanks, I’ll do that. I promise that I won’t Howler Dumbledore or any of his minions without telling you first.”

“Thank you Harry, let’s hope you don’t have to.” Harry didn’t comment on that part, tellingly.

“And thanks for this Professor Murray, it means a lot to me that I can come to you for sage advice.” In truth Murray liked Harry for being a nice kid, but also because his issues were always interesting, and provided some different experiences than she was used to with the other students.

“I’m available anytime Harry. Oh, one more question for you. How’s Jessica doing with her WWW work? All she says in her letters is that she’s doing ‘fine’, and that has a whole host of meanings.”

“She’s doing pretty well actually, she’s behind Steve Atwood by a decent margin, but from what I gather from Reiko’s parents, he’s using a lot of his free time to put up posters and go door to door. Jessica has no quota of course, but every time Dobby goes over there, she has at least a few orders to give him. Fred and George are very pleased with it, and are somehow managing to keep up with the orders.”

“Are they going to be ready to come over in April?”

“Yes ma’am, they say they’re looking forward to it. I hope they get into Cortez with me, but either way it will be great to have them around on a daily basis again. More than anyone, they’re my brothers.”

“Just between you and I Harry, I hope they get into Cortez too, even if you wipe out my Jeffersons at Quidditch.” Harry grinned at her.

“Oh we’ll do that anyway I’m sure, whatever Sally Jenkins might be capable of. If I might ask one last question of you: How is the war going?” Beyond what The Chronicle said, he didn’t have to mention.

“It’s proceeding sporadically, as all of ours seem to do. There have been a few small engagements between the Lycans and Kindred, mostly in San Francisco and environs, that’s a big Kindred area. Our Aurors are used mostly for intelligence gathering so far, they’ve not made any direct contact with the Lycan forces as of yet.”

“Are protective measures being increased around the schools and the Alleys?”

“Not any more than normal. We have anti-Lycan wards all over every magic-only area in America, and they stretch out to a quarter-mile radius in most instances.”

“Don’t they get tripped accidentally in the big cities?”

“No, pretty much every Lycan knows where our Alleys are, even if they can’t get inside them. There are no accidents in these cases Harry. Now run along and go relax, I’ll see you at lunch. Any further developments and I will let you know.”

“Have a good day ma’am.” He left the office a good deal calmer than when he had entered it.

Harry did take some time to check on his plants, and had a one sided conversation up there with Dobby, who supplied nothing more than some ‘yes Harry’, ‘you’re right Harry’, and ‘he was an evil man Harry’ type comments as Harry worked through some more of his Snape issues for about an hour. Dumbledore of course was mentioned, and even Dobby, whom Dumbledore had been very generous towards, had fully turned on the old man. At the hour mark, Harry found himself getting a bit hoarse, not to mention snowed upon, so he went back down to his trunk, where he did some plotting and planning.

The others joined him as their classes let out, and found Harry, as per usual, with some Dark Arts books open on his coffee table, and a Dictating Quill taking some notes for him. Sophie, Reiko, and Drew got there first, having had two hour Advanced classes that morning, and all looked at him closely. Sophie took the first question.

“Are you okay Harry? What did Professor Murray want to talk with you about?” Harry had been wondering how much to divulge from that talk, but ultimately decided that there was nothing to it but to do it.

“She wanted to give me a chance to vent, lest you all listen to me rue the day I didn’t kill him myself.” That didn’t go over quite as badly as he had feared, given who it was that they were talking about.

“You wish you had done it?”

“Yes Reiko, I do. God help me, but I wish I had killed Severus Snape before Voldemort did.” None of the three had ever had anything remotely like a Snape experience once, let alone for five unrelenting years. They had all, individually in the case of Drew, and collectively with Sophie and Reiko, decided months ago that Snape had earned the vast amount of hatred that Harry had for him, and deserved any punishment that he got, even if it was meted out by Harry himself.

“He’s gone now Harry, he can’t torment you anymore.”

“Yes he is, and I am happy about it, though it probably doesn’t show too much right now. It’s just a lot to process.” Sophie sat next to him and took his hand in hers. And then made the mistake of looking at the book that Harry had been studying. Turning it over so that she could read the cover of the rather slim volume, she read out loud:.

“ ‘ How to Turn Your Foes Inside Out: Literally’ By Jarvis Caton-Stanford. Oh my God.”

“Not a title you’ll find in too many bookstores around the world.”

“And you’re about to tell us that it’s good too, aren’t you?” Harry saw where this was heading and wanted no part of it, his day had been stressful enough.

“Not with that expression on your face I’m not.” Reiko and Drew turned their heads so that Sophie wouldn’t see them smiling. She saw them do it, and a slight grin attached itself to her face as well.

“Your five pages of notes seem to belie that.”

“I prefer the word ‘interesting’ to the word ‘good’ You can get a lot out of most any Curse text, it’s all about being prepared.”

“For what?”

“For any eventuality Sophie. I won’t have to use them here, but if I ever go back there, I am a prime target and need to prepare accordingly.” Drew had a question, he had been looking over Harry’s notes.

“Wouldn’t you get arrested if you used most of this stuff? Some of these curses are one level below the Unforgivables.”

“That’s why I have Voldemort’s wand all trained up for me. Just in case.” Indeed Harry rarely left school without it, aside from that day at the Weasleys, never knowing when Voldemort might snap and order a hit on him.. No one wanted to address that topic, so they waited until the other three arrived and then went to lunch. Harry, surprisingly to some, was willing to talk about Snape during the meal to those from other tables who were bold enough to ask. He certainly didn’t admit to wishing he could have done the killing himself.....but he did tell a few stories, and rehashed his one duel with Snape in detail. Defense was the next class, with a rare lecture-only period, using the one textbook they had. They had about one of these classes a month, with no wand use, and Ripley was a good enough lecturer to get by with it. There was another mass duel type exercise planned for later in the month, though the rules for it had not been officially decided on, or so Ripley told them.

After dinner the seven of them played with Harry new vest, and it held up very well. It was not foolproof, as proven when a drunk with satisfaction Harry had all six of his friends try to stun him.....it worked, but only with all six of them from within ten feet. He was out for a couple of seconds, and then came to by himself, which in itself was pretty impressive. The vest was wearable only by Harry, Drew, and the girls, as Jonas and Warrick were just too large to fit into it, as it had been made by Dobby with Harry's proportions in mind, with an inch of wiggle-room. Harry was still 5'7, so if he got to 5'9" one of the ladies would be getting a nice birthday or Christmas present.

He was fast asleep at 2:00 am when he felt Dobby tugging frantically on his shoulder. He reluctantly opened his eyes and saw a fairly panicked look on his major-domo's face. Harry stumbled out of bed and followed Dobby down into the trunk, where Fred was waiting for him with that day's copy of The Daily Prophet. The headline said it all.

“ Draco Malfoy missing from Hogwarts!” “Kidnapped student's mother accuses Dumbledore!”

Hogwarts Castle

8:00 am GMT

The faculty meeting room of Hogwarts was in turmoil as they read the Prophet stories. The owner of the paper, a closet Voldemort sympathizer, had printed his story before informing The Ministry of the situation, and Bones was expected any minute now. She, Rufus, and Travis were all aware that Malfoy wasn't there, but the paper printed the ransom note in full detail, and alleged that Dumbledore was the one who wrote it, though it of course was unsigned. Crabbe and Goyle had dutifully ignored Shepherd's instructions to keep quiet, and had given the paper an exclusive interview about their activities with Draco, though they had left out the heroin part. Dumbledore's various actions toward Harry were documented in painstaking detail, with heavy emphasis on the Dursleys. This had the added effect of showing that if Dumbledore could do these horrors to someone who by and large shared his views, what was he capable of doing to someone who hated his guts, as Draco certainly did. Dumbledore had rarely been so angry in recent memory, and had finally had enough of The Daily Prophet and its hatchet jobs on him. He quietly resolved to ban The Daily Prophet from the school after this mess was settled, he would clandestinely fund a rival newspaper if he had to, the Dumbledore fortune was easily large enough to do this. Perhaps he would have a talk with Luna's father Bruce about such a venture, it was worth thinking about surely.

Bones and Biller appeared just before the faculty usually went into breakfast, and Dumbledore sent Sprout, McDowell, and Vector only to the Great Hall, to make sure that the students did not act up too much. The rest stayed behind as Bones addressed them.

"Now what I am about to say is off the record. We all know that Malfoy fils has been gone since Sunday night, and that you, with our acquiescence, held off telling Narcissa Malfoy until we were sure that he was not coming back. These are the facts of the case, and they are undisputed." As Smilin' Jack Ross might have put it.

"Now of course Dumbledore here did not take Malfoy, or allow him to be taken.....though the handwriting is a good match for yours Albus. What we need to do is prove that Voldemort and his people have Draco, nothing else should be our concern right now." Everyone seemed to be in agreement with this, though the 'how' part seemed to puzzle most of them. Bones passed around a copy of the ransom note, a quick and to the point document, with Tuesday's date on it.

To Whom it May Concern,

We have your son, the foolish brat who wandered away from safety. If you want him returned to you, you will deposit 1,000,000 galleons into the account I designate, and you will also swear a Wizard's Oath that publicly repudiates He Who Must Not Be Named. You will do this within a week, or your son will suffer the punishment. If you agree to these terms, then put a Dark Mark above your home on Saturday evening at 9:00 pm. If such a Mark is not displayed, then you will never see your son again.

The note was not signed, and everyone agreed that it sure looked like Dumbledore's writing, with which they were all long familiar with. The man himself immediately figured out the forger part of it, and had to admire it as a job well done.

“What do you wish me to do Amelia?” The plan agreed on had been the result of an almost violent argument amongst Bones, Biller, Amos Diggory, and Rufus, but was the best that the four of them could come up with, in the ten minutes that they had had to work with.

“Albus, we need you to answer a few questions under Veritaserum. You will do so in front of a few key Wizengamot members, some Ministry Department Heads, and representatives of The Daily Prophet. I will ask the questions, and they will not delve too deeply, they simply bring out what we all know: that you do not have Draco Malfoy in custody, and do not know where he is.” Hill, the faculty member other than Shepherd who disliked Dumbledore the most, had a question.

“Are you sure that we should covering this up? It seems to me like the truth is best here: admit that we knew Malfoy was gone, but assumed that he was gone of his own volition and would come back. It may seem a little farfetched for some people, but better this than lying about it and getting caught.” McGonagall looked like she was going to respond heatedly, her color was up again, when Bones wisely interfered.

“That is exactly what we are going to do Professor Hill, eventually. Right now we need to take the focus off of Headmaster Dumbledore as a suspect, and poke a hole in Narcissa Malfoy’s story.”

“Why not just put her under Veritaserum? Her husband is a wanted man after all.”

“We will Minerva, though finding her might be a problem. If McCrae knows where she is, he’s not telling. She’s not at Malfoy Manor.” Augustus McCrae was the owner and publisher of The Daily Prophet, and was a not-so-distant cousin of both the Lestrangle brothers and Molly Weasley, proof of how close the pureblood mix was in Great Britain. His politics leaned much more toward the Dark side of his family tree, and he had had no trouble with the anti-Dumbledore and anti-Harry smear campaigns of the past. For his part. Dumbledore was extremely wary of being asked any questions under Veritaserum, but saw no other way out of this for the moment. The Howlers would be arriving any minute now, if they hadn't already.

"When would you like me to do this Amelia?"

"Now Albus, I would like you to return with us to The Ministry. The WWW will carry the announcement of our findings live on the air, once you pass the Veritaserum test. After that, we will use every pressure we can bring on McCrae to retract the accusations in tomorrow's paper." Dumbledore nodded at her, and addressed his teachers.

"All of you are to keep to your normal schedules for the day, no matter how much disruption this may cause outside of Hogwarts, our students need your full attention. I will be back within the hour, and Hogwarts will run just like it always has." He swept out of the room, Bones and Biller hurrying after him, surprised at the swiftness of his exit.

The rest of the teachers, led by Remus and Flitwick, commenced a long discussion on what to do about future security issues, up to and including a lockdown of the castle after Quidditch practices were completed every afternoon. McGonagall was given her say of course, but she had been muted somewhat by the accusations against Dumbledore, and by her own widening chasm with the rest of the faculty. Her staunch support of every Dumbledore policy, which Remus had acidly noted in August, was beginning to wear on the rest of the teachers, who were increasingly bypassing her and dealing with Flitwick when it came to matters usually under her purview. It was widely believed amongst the teachers that Dumbledore would retire as soon as the Voldemort situation was resolved, but the undercurrent held that McGonagall was no lock to take over, though she was reasonably popular with the Hogwarts Board of Governors, the majority of whom had no ingrained loyalty to Dumbledore, Rufus, or Voldemort.

The Dumbledore interview, if one wants to call it that, took less than fifteen minutes of actual questioning under the controlled conditions that Bones had promised him. He answered the questions in a way that exonerated him from suspicion, or so he and Bones thought. He admitted under the drug that he did not know where Draco was, and did not have any idea who might, other than Voldemort and his mother. Bones did not allow any questions from the observers, and even threw a Muting Charm at McCrae when he attempted to violate this part of the deal. Still, the dog and pony show seemed to satisfy most of the observers. Typical comments made afterward included:

“I knew you didn’t do it Albus.”

“Of course He Who Must Not Be Named has him.”

“The boy is just tormenting you Albus, punish him harshly when he comes back.”

Tellingly silent was McCrae, who left immediately, perhaps not noticing the multiple Tracking Charms that had been put on his person by practically every Ministry employee in the room. The room soon emptied of everyone but Bones and Dumbledore, with The Minister joining them a few seconds later.

“So you didn’t kidnap him after all Albus, that’s good to know.” Rufus was smiling, as if it was a joke, but Dumbledore had finally reached his limit.

“This whole thing is not funny Rufus!” The Minister just look at him calmly.

“Calm down Albus, you’ll give yourself a heart attack. You do understand why this was necessary don’t you? Look at that handwriting, I was becoming convinced myself.”

“Thank you for your vote of confidence, Mr. Minister.” Rufus simply smiled at the insulting tone of voice, liking very much that the old man was becoming so agitated.

“You’re welcome Albus, my door is always open to you. After young Malfoy is found, and of course he will reappear by the fake deadline, you and I will have to have a chat about your security at the castle. The fact that Malfoy and his bodyguards could slip out without detection so many times is cause for concern.” That Rufus was correct in no way made it easier for Dumbledore to digest.

“Where do you think he is Minister?”

“Oh with Voldemort and his people I’m sure. He’ll undoubtedly turn up with some bizarre story that still blames you, evidence or not.”

“So you’re not worried?”

“No I’m not, and you shouldn’t be either. This is Voldemort having some perverse fun with you, nothing more, nothing less. Now, if you will excuse me, I have an appointment to get to. I will see you tomorrow for our regular lunch meeting.” He left the room without waiting for an acknowledgement from Dumbledore, in something of a hurry since his meeting was in Australia, with Fudge. He was thinking so much on closing one controversial chapter that he barely gave this one any thought, since it appeared to be so cut and dried.

Dumbledore went back to his office and his paperwork, and awaited the storm of Howlers that he assumed he due for. The coverage given to the Howlers about Snape in July, and Harry’s campaign in November, had put the red envelopes back into vogue, not to mention the purple ones of Harry Potter’s DIY Howler Kit, which were all over the Great Hall and the various Common Rooms.

He was not disappointed, as roughly 75 Howlers greeted him before the day was over. He had them destroyed before listening to them of course, but was surprised to find their rate slowed to a trickle by the very next day. His total for the rest of the week did not equal that first day’s, and he began to relax a little, though he was still concerned that something may have happened to young Malfoy. He was still feeling that way on Saturday when Draco turned up.

Meanwhile, in Harry’s trunk at an ungodly hour:

“Oh please, this is the stupidest thing I’ve ever heard of, who could possibly believe it?” Harry was now fully awake, more from laughing than anything else.

“Who knows Harry, but he’s still gone. We talked to Neville last night via owl, and he mentioned that Malfoy’s been sick the last few days, and that nobody’s seen him around. He just wrote it in passing, didn’t seem like he knew about any kidnapping.”

“I didn’t know that you two wrote Neville.” Neville hadn’t offered that tidbit in the two letters he had written Harry since Christmas.

“We have been since that day he and Luna came to the shop. We figured that Ron’s needs an eye kept on him, even if from afar, so we have Neville giving us a weekly report on him.”

“You don’t trust Hermione to do it? I thought you had swung around on her?” Fred rolled his eyes.

“She’s not objective when it comes to Ron and you know it. We’re doing this for Mum anyway, not for ourselves, let the dolt hang himself I say.” Fred and George hadn’t quite gone into Percy territory with Ron yet, but had no intention of interacting with him for the remainder of the Hogwarts year, the last ten weeks of which they would be at Great Lakes anyway.

“Anyhow, we’re all agreed that Draco’s hiding on purpose?”

“It sure seems that way, I mean, the three of us are no lovers of Dumbledore, but there’s no way he had the ferret kidnapped.”

“Yeah mate, this is just another smear campaign by your old friends at The Daily Prophet. Look, go back to bed, we’ll come get you again if we find out anything more.”

“Thanks guys.” Harry went back upstairs and was asleep within minutes, Warrick and the others not having noticed that he had been gone. He got the same questions as the day before, since his name was mentioned in The Chronicle story as well. Harry gave the same bland answers, and affected a look of unconcerned nonchalance. It wasn't totally an act though, as he had spoken the truth at Lucius' trial: He really did not hate Draco Malfoy. He personally thought that the guy had just been raised badly, and if raised in a similar manner, Harry himself probably would have turned out the same way. As the week went on, he thought less and less about his erstwhile rival, and was only reminded when Draco turned up.

Knockturn Alley, London

4:05 pm GMT

Peter Pettigrew and Anton Dolohov paced around in front of Borgin and Burkes, hoods over their heads and Polyjuice at the ready, just in case. The true ransom note, from Fenrir Greyback, had specified that Pettigrew and only one other be stationed here immediately after the ransom money had been deposited. Voldemort had expressly forbid anyone related to Draco to be there at the meeting point, fearing an incident that might lead to capture. Death he didn't much care about, but he didn't want to have to ransom back any more of his troops. The 'fee' was still 500,000 galleons, and with a bank balance of over 8 million galleons, Lucius' net worth wouldn't be impacted too much. Malfoy had made the banking arrangements as ordered, earlier in the day, and the two Death Eaters waited for Greyback's people to make contact so that they could pick up Draco.

The meeting place itself told the Death Eaters something very important: The werewolves had at least one Wizard in their ranks, since no muggle werewolf could see The Leaky Cauldron, much less get inside Diagon Alley. They discounted Remus, even they didn't believe that he would ever turn on Potter and Dumbledore both, and while they had theorized about magical werewolves, they had never known for sure one way or the other.

"Where are they Pettigrew? They were supposed to be here five minutes ago."

“They’re just trying to make us squirm Dolohov, they’ll be here.”

“What if they’re stiffing us? Making us pay the ransom and keeping the kid?”

“Then they would have asked for a lot more if that was their plan. Be patient.” Dolohov began muttering to himself, though Wormtail could tell that it was not about him. They waited another 15 minutes before a figure approached them.

It was Edward Grant, Greyback’s second in command, and a graduate 20 years earlier of The Michael Collins School, Ireland’s version of Hogwarts. Greyback had turned him right after that, though it seemed like much longer to the thirty-something Grant.

“Hello there Death Eaters.” Pettigrew nodded at him, and dispensed with any other pleasantries.

“Where is Draco, we fulfilled our part of the bargain.” Grant had no interest in wasting time here either.

“He is now quite near where we found him.” Pettigrew couldn’t believe it, as Dolohov put his hand on his pocketed wand.

“You brought him back to the Quidditch Pitch?”

“Not exactly, we dropped him at the Hogwarts front door a couple of minutes ago. I’m sure Dumbledore will look after him nicely. Thank you for paying so promptly though, we needed the money.” With that last salvo, Grant ran about ten steps and then disappeared, foiling the anti-portkey and anti-apparition wards that Pettigrew had hastily thrown up before the meeting. Dolohov looked at Pettigrew, his superior in the chain of command.

“So what the hell do we do now?” Pettigrew had no clue.

“I’m not aware that we can do much of anything at the moment Dolohov.”

“Can’t you go over there as a rat and look around?”

“Not anymore, they have Animagus wards all over the place there, I can’t get within half a kilometer of that castle without tripping them. Even McGonagall has to watch where she steps when she goes outside. No, we need to return home and inform our Master of these developments.” They were away a few minutes later, bracing himself for Voldemort’s reaction..

Voldemort did not take kindly to the news that his well laid out scheme was about to blow up in his face due to some doubly backstabbing animals. He knew that young Malfoy would immediately be put under Veritaserum and Dumbledore would know where he really had been the last six days. He sent for Lucius and Narcissa and informed them of the news.

“Should I go over there Master?”

“No Narcissa, they might just arrest you for planting that ransom note. At the very least they will put you under Veritaserum questioning, and we cannot have that. Your sister will have to be the family point person with Draco, at least for the next few weeks until he reaches his majority.” Draco’s 17th birthday was on March 12th.

“You mean Andromeda would be his guardian?” Tonks’ mother she meant.

“She is his closest relative that can be produced, neither of you can do it, nor can Bella. I know what you think of your sister, and I happen to agree with you, but she is the only one available. Besides, Dumbledore will be making all the decisions anyway. Now go back to whatever it was that you were doing. If any news comes in, I will send for you.”

“Thank you Master, come along Narcissa.” Lucius pulled her by the arm, and they could be heard arguing in the hallway as they left. Voldemort cast a glance at Pettigrew, the only other person left in the room.

“We may have another situation to deal with soon Wormtail, begin making some preliminary plans.”

“Yes Master.”

Hogwarts Castle

The two werewolves, in their unnatural form, quickly dragged the unconscious body of Draco Malfoy up to the front door and deposited it there. They each pounded three times on the door, and then fled as fast as they could into the Forbidden Forest, where a few Centaurs on patrol came upon them and engaged them in battle, killing one and taking the other prisoner. Bane, the Centaur in command, declined a suggestion to inform the Wizards of their great victory. He was content with the non-interaction they had with Dumbledore and his people, particularly since the traitor Firenze was still in the old man's employ. Greyback never found out what happened to them, and had to change a lot of his long-term contingency plans, and his own base of operations, just in case.

Filch happened to be nearest to the door, and opened it to find young Malfoy laying there. Not daring to touch the lad, he yelled as loud as he could for help. Remus and Flitwick were nearest, walking together toward the library as they heard Filch's bellowing. They came at a run, and found Filch kneeling by the lad. Draco had bruises, cuts, and other marks all over his face and hands, he was wearing the same clothes as he had Sunday night. Filch had screwed up enough nerve to check his pulse, and found one.

“He's alive Professors, I don't know any more than that.”

“Mr. Filch, please go inform the Headmaster that we are taking him to the Infirmary.” The caretaker left at a run, as Flitwick levitated Draco and the two of them walked as quickly as possible to the Infirmary. Pomfrey reacted with a slight scream as she saw the damage, and after Draco was stripped, saw that the injuries were over his entire body. Dumbledore came in at a run, followed closely by McGonagall and Shepherd, who arrived separately seconds apart.

“What happened to him?” Remus motioned at the injuries.

“He was tortured Albus, I would think this is obvious.” Shepherd, with his flair for understatement, said what they were all thinking.

“This is not magical torture.” Pomfrey ignored them all as she shoved potion after potion down Draco’s throat, muttering out loud about which to use next, and how much. Remus was examining the body closely, disgusted by what he was looking at, but at the same time fascinated.

“It looks like they used a belt, some rope, and a muggle weapon called a taser, which emits an electrical charge, a soft version of Cruciatus. That’s just from what I can tell right off.”

“Voldemort would do that to him? The Malfoys are his most ardent supporters.” Dumbledore had a different idea.

“I don’t think Voldemort and his people did this Minerva, this was muggle damage done by muggles.” Shepherd again:

“Or werewolves perhaps? We did hear the rumors of the Death Eaters and Greyback falling out.” Silence filled the room, as the taser marks, or what Remus thought were taser marks, took on a new and deadly import. Pomfrey drew some blood from Malfoy, and went over to her work station to do some tests on it.

“Minerva, we will put the castle into lockdown at the start of dinner every day from now on. The Diagon Alley tripped planned for two weeks from now is cancelled except for the sixth and seventh year students, who will go heavily chaperoned.”

“We need to inform his mother.” Dumbledore and Voldemort were in agreement on this point, as Dumbledore tone of voice took an ugly turn.

“No, Narcissa Malfoy does not deserve that courtesy from us after the smear campaign she and McCrae initiated against me and our school. Inform Andromeda Tonks, she will act as Draco’s guardian while he is injured. If Narcissa does not like it, she can show her face here and explain why. Then we will have a little chat with her.” Dumbledore, as Head of the Wizengamot, had arrest powers in his portfolio. McGonagall went off to floo Andromeda, while the three men alternately watched Pomfrey and Draco. After about 10 minutes, and McGonagall’s return with Draco’s Aunt, Pomfrey returned with some preliminary results.

“His blood shows signs of massive infection, as well as narcotic withdrawal. I’m going to give him another potion that will keep him unconscious for a time, it will speed the healing process.”

“What about werewolf antibodies?”

“It is too soon to tell Remus, that test will take another hour or so. Given the marks I’ve seen, I would consider it likely that he has been turned.” Dumbledore turned to Shepherd.

“Charles, I think you should start making a double portion of Wolfsbane from now on.”

“Of course Headmaster, I usually make more than is necessary anyway, just in case. Draco will have enough for the next full moon.” Andromeda didn’t say a word the entire time, not really knowing how to react. This was the first time she had seen Draco up close in years, and was not at all prepared to be making any decisions about him. Add to that the likely retribution from her sisters.....well so far Andromeda and Ted Tonks had been protected of a sort from Death Eater machinations, but now?

Dumbledore left to inform The Ministry, and returned with Bones just in time to get the results from the latest blood tests.

“I’m sorry, but Draco is positive for the werewolf antibody. He is now a werewolf.” The room went very still as the implications of that hit them. Remus took the bull by the horns and addressed them all.

“Well, we have a repeat of what happened over 25 years ago, and a decision to make: What do we tell the rest of the students and the public? Do we protect him, as you did me all those years ago? Or do we attempt to educate them on the benefits of Wolfsbane and how it doesn’t pose a problem for them if he takes it?” No one had an immediate answer to that, though all of them, save Shepherd perhaps, privately thought that if this was any student but a hardcore Slytherin, the choice would easily be to hide his secret for another 17 months.

“That is the question of the moment Remus, but it is not one that we have to decide right this minute. Poppy, how long will you want to keep him unconscious?”

“At least a few days, perhaps much longer, he has over two dozen broken bones, and a number of contused organs. If this was a muggle teenager, the injuries would have been fatal long before they got so numerous.”

“Amelia?”

“I see no harm in waiting until he regains consciousness. Will you bring any discipline on him for his activities?”

“No Amelia, I think we can all agree that he has been punished enough, and learned lessons for a lifetime.” That was the final word, and Dumbledore went back to his office. The students were told at dinner time that night, but no visitors were allowed, and Draco was moved to a private room off of Dumbledore’s office. Andromeda was the only one to see him outside the staff, though she did not tell Dumbledore that she had been in communication with her sister, updating her on his condition, though not about the werewolf issue. There was nothing wrong with what she was doing, but the old man would not have appreciated it if he knew. Ironically, Draco now had a rather large fortune in his own right, as he was Snape’s only heir, and had inherited over a million galleons and Snape Manor from his former teacher.

Draco's injuries healed very slowly, and he was kept under for a total of three weeks. He missed being awake for the next full moon, but his body did not seem to care, and went through the change anyway. He had been force-fed Wolfsbane just in case, and the night went as well as could be expected. He would awake the day after Valentine's Day, his subconscious mind fighting through the sleeping potions. His reaction to his condition would be very telling.

The public reaction to the news was muted, and Draco turning up changed very few minds over who was to be blamed. The ones who hated Dumbledore thought it was a little too convenient that the young man had turned up where he did. Those who supported Dumbledore were vindicated as well, assuming that their hero had done something to get him back. Unfortunately the Centaurs did not read The Daily Prophet, or they could have cleared this up in a few moments. Tensions had subsided a little, but would likely flare up again once Draco told his story.

Great Lakes Outer Perimeter

1:30 pm EDT

Today was Drew's birthday, and before his parents arrived to have dinner with him and his friends, he, Harry, and Dobby and Winky went on a hike.

To look for Crumple Horned Snorkacks.

The others had begged off for various reasons: Warrick had to study; Reiko had to type Harry's Muggle Studies paper, which he had written out; Sophie had the flu, and wouldn't go outside with a wand to her head; Jonas and Claudia just flat out refused, saying that even they weren't that crazy. Still, Harry had promised Luna that he would give it a shot, and Dobby and Winky didn't mind, nor did Drew. With Murray's permission, the two young men set out, promising to be back before dinner. She didn't know about Dobby and Winky going though, so much for stealth if they came across anyone, even though the two small ones were instructed to disappear if any cars came by.

They were about a mile out, laden with coats and Warming Charms, when Drew looked over at Harry.

“What are we even looking for?” He had never even heard of them, not that anyone in the gang had besides Harry, and he only because of Luna.

“Hanged if I know Drew, you have to know Luna to appreciate it.”

“You make her sound pretty cool, we need someone like that here.” Yes they did, Harry sometimes reckoned that he himself was the closest person to mimicking Luna’s personality, at least among the students he was around most. He wondered if that was being English among a crowd of Americans. At present he was the only foreigner in the school, though Jessica had told him that there were a few at Salem, still considered the flagship American school.

“No one like that in Jefferson?”

“Not really, it would probably get stamped out early on. She and Neville are pretty tight?” Harry’s eyes went way up, this was a development.

“So far as I know.” That didn’t deter him.

“Well if that changes I wouldn’t mind a heads up, she sounds like someone I’d like to meet.” This would bear watching, as Harry planned to have at least Neville and Luna over for part of the summer. Drew didn’t stick around for the summer sessions, but that was easily arranged.

“No problem, she’s a really cool person, I wish I would have appreciated her friendship more last year when I had the chance.” While on the subject of Hogwarts females:

“Has Hermione written you yet? Is she still pissed about the spinning?” Harry had shown him the incident via pensieve.

“Once, it was four sentences, and if it wasn’t in her handwriting I would have sworn that Ron wrote it.”

“Maybe he did.” That thought had occurred to Harry upon reading the note. He conceded a minor point.

“We did kind of overdo it with the snowballs, and I said as much in my letter to her, sort of.” He had danced around the subject really, as he didn’t want Ron to start gloating about anything, but he had thought that Hermione would get the gist of it. Apparently not.

“Sounds like it, but it also sounds like she’s overreacting.”

“She’s sticking up for her boyfriend, I can’t blame her for that. Hermione is very loyal, and Ron and I made her choose, and she chose him.” It had always been like that, Harry had reflected. No matter how stupidly Ron behaved towards anyone, Hermione always had his back. Well, except for when Ron thought that Crookshanks had eaten Scabbers, there was always an exception.

They were now totally out of sight of the school, unless one used Harry’s Omnioculars, which he had on him. He didn’t really expect to find anything, but at least he could tell Luna that he gave it a shot. Besides, he figured that some fresh air wouldn’t kill him, hopefully, and he had never really gotten a good look at his surroundings, except from the air on his broom. With winds whipping around right now, a broom was not a good idea. The snow wasn’t too thick on the ground surprisingly enough, and they didn’t have to stick to the road.

“You really never dug her like that? Sounds like you suit her better than Ron does.”

“I might have felt that way eventually, who knows. I think someone needs maturity to fully appreciate Hermione in that way. And don’t say it, I agree that Ron isn’t mature, I think he just likes having his life run for him, and Hermione is more than willing to go along with that. I wouldn’t have been, at least not to that degree.”

“And you’re not like that with Sophie? That’s what Warrick keeps saying.”

“He’s one to talk, sheesh. Reiko is in charge there, trust me mate. And just because you don’t see Sophie and I argue, doesn’t mean that it never happens.”

“Very discreet, I can understand that.” Harry then asked something that he had long been curious about.

“Did you ever have a thing for Sophie? She seems like your type.” The quiet type he meant, though the sudden Luna interest was causing him to re-evaluate.

“Honestly?” Uh oh, Harry instantly regretted asking now.

“Yeah.”

“No.” Said so simply that both of them started laughing.

“Ah, so my girlfriend’s not good enough for you eh? Eh?” He was smiling as he said it, and Drew just shook his head and tried to put it as diplomatically as possible.

“Look, just because Jonas and I weren’t buddies all those years, doesn’t mean I didn’t hear things. I heard how she and Claudia were about boys, and I decided early on that it was just too much trouble.” That didn’t really answer the question very well, but it was good enough for Harry.

“I’ve heard that before from other people, including Claudia herself.” Drew flinched at hearing that, and attempted to head off trouble at the pass.

“Please don’t try to set me up with her.” Harry snickered.

“I thought about that for about 20 seconds last Fall, then abandoned it.”

“Thank you doesn’t seem to quite cover it.”

“She’s not that bad Drew.” The other lad couldn’t agree more.

“As a friend, not at all, as long as we’re in a group setting.” Harry could certainly relate to that, when he and Claudia were alone, which was pretty rare, they retreated into talks about History and the like, their common study interest.

“I hardly ever spend any time with her alone, so that’s the only situation where I see her.”

“So I’ve noticed, you have the trunk. Easy to have privacy if you want it.”

“Are you thinking of asking your parents for one for graduation?”

“They make good money Harry, but it’s not that good. Even if Mom gets to be President in a couple of years, we still won’t be wealthy.”

“What about you, are you still set on becoming an Auror?”

“It’s a nice fallback in case I don’t think of anything I’d like to do more. The idea of following in Dad’s footsteps is a little daunting though.”

“Is he next to take over from Jacobsen?” Mike Jacobsen was the American Head Auror that Harry had met after the trial battle.

“I don’t think so, Patrick O’Brian, who runs the San Francisco office, is next in line, or so the betting goes. Or they might ask Shupe back, he was pretty popular when he was there.” Salem Headmaster Beau Shupe had spent 25 years alternating between Auror duties and teaching.

“What about you? Something tells me that you won’t be joining me at the Academy.”

“Would they even take me? I’m not an American after all, and wouldn’t I need to be here for awhile to become a citizen?”

“They would let you in, since you graduated from an American school. And I think it’s six years to become a citizen, but I wouldn’t bet any money on it, could be a year more or less.”

“Well I think I’ll want the easy life of being a Quidditch star, at least for a couple of years.”

“Here or back in Britain?” Harry was quiet for a minute, as he tried to frame this.

“I don’t think I’ll be welcomed back in Britain Drew, at least not with too many open arms.”

“What do you mean?”

“I mean that I didn’t realize at the time, what taking off for here would mean for me over there. A lot of people took it as an affront, like I was saying that I was too good for Britain or something like that. Add that to the shots I’ve taken at Dumbledore and McGonagall, privately and publicly. They’ve more or less put up with them since they believe in the Prophecy, but afterwards? I don’t know really.”

“Yeah, but didn’t they deserve those shots?” They did, but Harry was shaking his head anyway.

“It’s not the same mate, it’s not because I was over here when I took them. If I had stayed there and done it, it would have looked a lot better.”

“You were under their power while you were at Hogwarts, you couldn’t afford to tell them what you thought.”

“Semantics Drew, at least to most of the public.”

“And if you take out Voldemort?” Harry laughed cynically.

“They’ll just bitch that I didn’t do it sooner.”

“So this exile is permanent?”

“It depends on what happens during the next 13 months. I had Fred and George check for me, and I have to declare for next year’s Quidditch Draft by March 31st of next year, with the draft being 90 days later. That’s when I have to decide, when I have to choose. Sophie will be a big factor there, I don’t dare take her back to Britain with me, assuming she would even be willing to go, and that is definitely not a safe assumption.” The subject had not really come up specifically, with Harry just assuming that she would resist it.

“They did send her a few Howlers didn’t they.”

“Oh that was to be expected, even if I had wound up with a British girl as my first girlfriend. Except Cho maybe, they would have been satisfied there I think, her being the female star of the school and all.”

“How did she like her Howlers?” Harry made a face.

“I was not happy when I found out about that let me tell you, and I told Sophie and Reiko as much. I wrote her and apologized for it, I think she believed me when I said that I had nothing to do with it. She wrote back as much, but it was a chilly letter to be sure.”

“Will no one rid me of this troublesome priest?” The famous line from Henry II, as seen by the boys in the movie Beckett.

“Yeah, I did let loose the dogs, I suppose I am to blame when they gore somebody.”

They stopped for some hot cocoa from their thermoses, and took some time to look around, with and without Omnioculars. They didn’t see much, just a few cars here and there, and a few planes overhead.

No people were visible, and certainly nothing that could qualify as a Snorkack.

“Why are we out here again?”

“You’re getting some fresh air, I’m keeping a promise to a friend. Dobby and Winky are just crazy.”

“If not for Warming Charms the fresh air wouldn’t be doing me much good.”

“Isn’t it nice to be a Wizard?”

“I wouldn’t trade places with most muggles, no.”

“Would you rather be a muggle billionaire or an average money earning Wizard?” This was a common debate amongst teenage Wizards.

“The billionaire probably. You could afford so many gadgets and toys that it almost makes up for not being able to do magic. I know this though, the billionaire would pick being a Wizard.” Harry laughed.

“I bet they would too. I would still be a Wizard I think, I can’t wait to be out of school and not have to worry about rules and things like that, and be able to do whatever magic I want to.”

“A lot of kids our age feel that way, I’m surprised as many of us go to muggle colleges as we do, with that attitude.”

“You’re not tempted to go?”

“No, I don’t especially want to work in the muggle world, and there’s no point in college if you don’t. And you?”

“I’m waiting to see if Sophie signed me up for the SAT’s or not. If she did, I’ll take them and explore my options, if not, then I won’t.”

Drew was looking around with the Omnioculars, and spotted something in the distance.

“What did you say these things looked like?” Harry was looking at his watch, mentally debating on how long he had to be out there to fulfill his promise to Luna.

“I have no idea.....hang on, did you see something?” Drew handed him the Omnioculars and pointed out a shape in the distance. Harry magnified them as much as he could, and saw something crawling across the ground about a mile away. He couldn’t make out exactly what it was, but he was no animal expert either way. He could tell that it wasn’t crawling very fast over the snow, but nothing should be outside in this weather should it?

“I’ll make you a deal Drew, we go find out what that thing is, then we go home.”

“I was about to suggest the same thing, let’s go.”

“Dobby, Winky, go pop next to whatever that is and make sure it doesn’t dive into any holes, okay?”

“Right Harry.” They went away, and Harry could see them in the distance with the Omnioculars. Harry and Drew quickened up the pace, and got there in about 15 minutes, not bad time considering that it was below zero degrees Fahrenheit outside. When they got there, they found Dobby and Winky excitedly chattering while following a slow moving turtle.

Except that it wasn’t a turtle, though it shared the same speed. It was about a foot long, half again as wide, and very furry, with 5 legs on each side, and it was black all over.....which was probably how Drew had been able to spot it against the white background. It was ignoring Dobby and Winky, who were a little too scared to try and touch it. Harry had never seen anything remotely like it, and judging by the look on Drew’s face, he hadn’t either.

“Um Harry, what is this?”

“I have no bloody idea Drew. Winky, if you will.” Winky took a roll of film on the creature, as the sucker was going about a two feet a minute in speed. She got it from all angles, and also had Dobby, Harry, and Drew squat around it for some photos. While Harry squatted down next to it, he did see what could be called horns on it’s head, though he couldn’t be sure.

“Luna said that we would know it when we saw it, but I just have a hard time believing that we found one this easily. This has got to be some muggle animal that our fifth grade muggle educations just never got around to explaining.” Drew just shook his head.

“I don’t know if this is muggle or magical, though it looks like something out of a movie. Maybe we should put a tracking charm on it, see where it goes. At this rate we can’t follow it home, we would be here the rest of the week.” Harry had changed his mind, for no good reason, about what it was.

“Agreed, the pictures alone should be enough for now. This thing has to be magical, it and the four of us are the only things crazy enough to be outside right now. And that doesn’t look like a ton of fur to keep it warm.”

“Either way this should make her happy.”

“Go ahead and do the Tracking Charm, your first magic outside of school.”

“Well not the first, I did some stuff over the summers, but only inside my dad’s building. But here goes:” He put the Tracking Charm on the creature, which they quickly decided to call a Snorkack, and watched it shuffle away, very slowly.

“You know if it was 20 degrees warmer I would be game to follow it for awhile.”

“How far out are we?”

“Probably four miles or so, it’s hard to tell. I recognize some of this from being in the air, thank goodness we have our footprints to guide us back.”

“That would be a fun thing to explain, why we were late.”

“Oh I would just have Dobby go get mine and Warrick’s brooms for us, and we could fly home.”

“And pray we didn’t run into any muggles along way?”

“Well there are hiccups in every situation Drew. Winky, Dobby, go ahead and get the film developed. Make three copies of each photo: One for us, one for Luna, and one for that Journal she told me about. Don’t go to her until we get back, I’ll want to write a note.....No, scratch that, both of you sneak into the castle and fill her in.” Dobby and Winky nodded vigorously and were about to take off when Harry stopped them, looking sideways at Drew.

“Hey, don’t tell her about Drew being interested in her, with my luck Neville will be sitting there.” The elves both started giggling and agreed that mum was indeed the word. They left, and the two boys started back for school. They spent the 90 minute walk talking about who to target next for pranking, though Harry still didn’t share their unofficial permission from Murray. He was worried that Claudia especially would think that he had come to some kind of arrangement with her, and he couldn’t be having that now could he?

They arrived back at school exhausted, but glad that they had gone. They stopped by Jefferson first to see if Drew’s parents were there yet, but they weren’t, so Drew shucked his coat and sweater off, and they went down the trunk to see the pictures. Sophie was asleep on the couch, her Transfiguration notebook having fallen to the floor.

Winky and Dobby were gone, but they had left a set of the photos behind as Harry had asked them to. They had turned out beautifully, and Harry couldn’t resist waking Sophie up to show her. After a few seconds resistance, she opened her eyes and sat up.

“You guys actually found something out there?”

“Something is the right word. Look.” A few yawns later, she had been asleep for about two hours, she looked over the pictures.

“I’ve never seen anything like this, what is it?”

“That’s the question of the day darling, we have no idea either. Hopefully Luna will, Dobby and Winky are over there right now.”

“Isn’t it pretty late in Scotland right now?”

“Nothing is too late for science, right Drew.” Drew nodded dutifully.

“Right, what he said.”

“Careful Drew, he’s pulling you into his web of insanity.”

“You were the first one snared by it dearest, it’s too late to complain now.”

“Have I ever complained? Don’t answer that.” Harry was about to make something up, but decided to let it be for now.

“Yes dear.” She patted him on the hand and turned to her other friend.

“So Drew, are you glad you went? Kind of a strange birthday present.” Somewhat strangely, Drew agreed that he was glad.

“It was fun Sophie, though a lot more fun than it would have been if we hadn’t found something.”

“Success compensates for a lot of hassles.”

“What fortune cookie did you find that little pearl of wisdom in?”

“Don’t start darling.”

“Give him his real present would you?”

“Oh sure, ruin the moment. Drew, the hike was not a present of course, the six of us went in together and got you some CD’s, imports I believe they call them, from back in Britain. I had Bill pick them out, he’s the one I know over there that’s most into muggle music.” He went over to his bookshelf and took the Disguising Charm off one of the volumes, to reveal a 10 CD box set, filled with the kind of alternative music that Drew was into, with 10 different bands being represented.

“Thanks guys, this is really great.” He shook Harry’s hand and gave Sophie a hug. His CD collection now cracked the 100 mark, Harry had made sure that Drew didn’t have any of the gifted discs.

Just then, the elves came back in, and both had large smiles on their faces.

“Well, was it a Crumple Horned Snorkack?”

“No Harry, she seemed quite certain that it was not a Crumple Horned Snorkack.” All three teenagers were waiting expectantly.

“Well what did she think it was?”

“She called it a Four Tooth Gimmerslammer.” Silence filled the room as Harry, Sophie, and Drew rolled that around in their heads. Drew was the first to find his voice.

“I’m sorry Dobby, could you repeat that please?”

“A Four Tooth Gimmerslammer.” It should go without saying that none of the three humans had ever heard of it.

“And is it totally rare or otherwise having some scientific value?”

“She said it was somewhat rare, found only in cold climates again, and that she would forward the photos and an essay about them to the Journal for Obscure Creatures. She said that you and Drew would get full photo credit and for the discovery.” Harry shook his head.

“Well you took the pictures Winky, you should get credit.” Her photos for The Daily Prophet with Snape had gone unaccredited, over Harry’s later objections to the paper.

“No Harry, it was your camera, you could just as easily have taken the photos yourself.” That was a long speech for Winky, even in front of people she was familiar with. She sounded resolute though, so Harry chose not to belabor the point.

“All right Winky, if you say so....and only because you say so.” She nodded furiously.

“What else did Luna say Dobby?”

“She is writing you all a letter, I am to pick it up during lunchtime there tomorrow afternoon. She remembered that Harry said to let The Quibbler have it first, and she will send an owl to her father about it. Oh, and she said that it was very sweet of us four to go out and look for the Crumple Horned Snorkack like we did, it means a lot to her.” Harry and Drew smiled, though probably for different reasons. Harry liked Luna a lot, mostly for entertainment value mind you, but also for that she was very loyal and asked for almost nothing in return. She technically hadn’t even asked him for the field trip, just to keep an eye out. There was nothing romantic between Harry and Luna, but it was notable that his letters to her were longer than any other, and likewise hers were the longest to him as well, especially now that Hermione was giving him the freeze.

Drew was thinking/hoping that Luna and Neville would hit a bad patch, or that Luna would see the light and accept Harry’s Great Lakes offer. The more he thought about it, the more he dug her, sight unseen, though Harry did have a couple of pictures of her in his photo album. Sophie was the only skeptic here, but only for a slight reason:

“A Four Tooth Gimmerslammer.....she made that up, c'mon.” Very little of Harry's library, housed in the first two of the four rooms of the trunk, dealt with magical creatures, so that probably would not be an option for verification.

“Who knows Sophie, either way, Drew and I will be featured in The Quibbler pretty soon.” Drew had always made a point to read Harry's copies of the paper, and both boys looked pretty pleased with the prospect.

“My parents will be very proud.”

“Your mom can use it when she campaigns, proof that her son is more than just a scholar.”

“Yes, Drew Baylor, future Auror and full-time adventurer.”

“Make sure that the words ‘Four Tooth Gimmerslammer’ appear somewhere in the campaign literature, it's an eye opener.” They all started giggling, though Sophie had to stop after it made her start coughing. They hung out for a little while longer, until Jonas hollered down that Mitchell and Hollie Baylor had arrived. They exited the trunk as Jonas was fully explaining the Pink to Drew's parents, who were both impressed, and also very careful to hang on to someone as they left the room.

The gang and the Baylor parents had an enjoyable time getting to know one another, as only Harry, Jonas, and Mitchell had ever met Mitchell, two and four times respectively. Hollie Baylor, mother of three and Congresswoman the past eight years, had gone to The Pathfinder School along with her husband, and they had been friends, though not sweethearts, while having nearly every class together over their seven years of school. They had met again a few years after graduation, and Cupid did his work quite quickly, with marriage, and eldest daughter Hannah coming within two years.

Hollie and Mitchell were very pleased that Drew had finally made some good friends at school, though Mitchell had done a thorough background check on Harry when Drew had first mentioned him in a letter, back in September. They didn't have a birthday present per se for their son, but said that this year's and next year's present would be rolled into one after graduation: They would get him a car, any nice one with a reasonable price tag is how they put it. Neither of them owned one, both using government cars during the rare times they needed them for work. Drew was very pleased, and was already thinking of places to go around Boston, where the American Auror Academy was located.

The Baylors left a couple of hours later, content that their son seemed so happy. They promised to return, as they did every year, for The Olympics in May. Drew had scored the third most points of anyone in the last one, regardless of year, and was a favorite to take the overall title this time, though Harry was the wildcard.

Over the next two weeks little happened of note for our American based players. Classes were attended; Sophie's flu was helpfully passed on to all but Jonas, who never seemed to get sick; Harry's vest was tested a few more times, using combinations of spells by multiple users, the vest passing every test it was given; and a few light pranks were accomplished, most notably a stunt whereby the floor surface of the fourth floor was made very slick with a nice Polishing Charm that Harry had found in one of his more tame books. He had also laid down Cushioning Charms all over the floor too, so students would slip and slide, but be bounced right up, unhurt. Why the fourth floor was chosen was never established publicly, but it marked the first time that any of the Marauders signed their work: Prongs, Madmartigan, and Half Pint did the honors, in easily removable paint along one of the walls. Riley Poole put on a huge show of complaining about it, but Harry had in fact gotten his advice on what kind of paint to use. Murray was suitably amused, and her hands-off policy continued unabated.

Valentine's Day

Charms Classroom C

3:45 pm EDT

“Okay, ladies, given that you have some serious dance preparation to do, go ahead and take off. Guys, do some more practicing until 4:00 pm.” Maloney had hinted ahead of time that she would do something like this, and none of the guys seemed too upset by it. Harry, Jonas, and Drew were working on the multiple person Charms that had been discussed the previous month, and were now concentrating on putting up a solid shield, with Jonas taking as many shots at it as he could. They vaguely heard her instructions, and didn’t notice Sophie and Reiko leave.

It took Jonas five shots with Reducto to the same spot on the shield to even put a crack in the all metal shield, a much stronger shield than any of them had been able to put up individually. Harry usually didn’t spend much time with solid shields, but now with the Lycan war going strong he did more work with metal and composite shields, which could deflect thrown objects and some bullets. Apparently Tyson had been wrong about that, though perhaps he had been speaking metaphorically. After Drew took a turn, needing four Reductos to show a crack, Harry took aim, from ten feet away.

“Give it all you have Harry.” He focused for a second, as everyone stopped to watch:

“REDUCTO!”

The light flashed and slammed into the inch thick steel shield, moving Drew and Jonas back a few feet as they absorbed the shockwave. At first nothing seemed to happen, but upon inspection, a hairline crack was right there where Harry’s spell had struck it. It was a smaller crack than Drew’s, but done much earlier. Maloney came over to look at it.

“That is very impressive Harry, I can’t wait to see what you can do in the Olympics.” Jonas, who had always had a crush on Maloney, put his two cents in.

“Care to have a try Professor?” She raised her eyebrows at him.

“A dare huh? Well I don’t see why not. Harry, you join them to conjure up the strongest shield you can.” He did so, and with all the boys watching, Maloney lazily put up her wand:

“Reducto!”

Not as loud as Harry, but just as effective. The crack was a little bigger than his, with a stronger shield that she had hit.

“Wow, are you sure that Defense was only your second best subject ma’am?” She smiled at him, it was quite a smile and Harry was half tempted to throw his Occlumency shields up to protect him from it. All the teachers had their favorites, and Harry appeared to be Maloney’s. Sophie didn’t seem to mind, so Harry found it kind of nice in all, though Jonas good naturedly groused about it on occasion.

“A close second Harry. Now off with you all, I want you all looking your best for the dance.” They departed, with Harry peeling off to Cortez, Jonas and Drew to Jefferson. Warrick, Rick, and Terry weren’t getting ready, but were talking about getting ready. Harry was going to wear his electric green robes, having won an agreement from Sophie that he should express his individuality. A hard won agreement of course, but Harry finally called in a few chits just for the hell of it. The big chit was Sophie insisting that he not buy her anything, saying that her birthday was soon enough, and that he had bought too much at Christmas. Harry agreed, candy only, if she put up no more fuss about his robes. Sensing that she was being swindled somehow, a reluctant Sophie agreed.

“You’re really wearing those things?” From Warrick, as Harry pulled them out of the first compartment of his trunk.

“For the 54th and final time, why shouldn’t I?”

“Because they look hideous, that’s not enough?”

“Says you, every once in a blue moon I like to please myself thank you very much.....not that kind of pleasing Rick, don’t even go there.”

“Uh huh, right.”

“Hey, just because I’m not public about it, like some people we might mention.” That kept Rick and Terry quiet about that subject. Clancy was only cooperative about such matters under threat, the one threat he was intimidated by, and Rick and Terry had quickly been apprised that Harry didn’t care a whit what they did behind the privacy of their bed curtains, so their girlfriends were pretty much there every night. They also appreciated the Winky cleaning touch, the great food sent to their table was a very nice perk to having Harry as a roommate.

Everyone besides Harry was dressed as they were for the Christmas Dance, which of course was less than two months previous. Harry resisted temptation to dye his hair red, in honor the ‘holiday’, he decided that Sophie was being tested enough for one month. Sophie and Reiko looked very much as they did at the last Dance as well, and Harry really, really wanted to skip the festivities and snog his brains out with his lovely girlfriend. She insisted on putting in an appearance though, and won the discussion.

Winky took her pictures, and the Cortez foursome went to Shawnee in search of Claudia, who again had not told them who her date was, only that she had one. They arrived there to find Claudia waiting for them with Jeff Weaver, a Junior on the Quodpot team that had lost so easily to Jefferson back in October. Warrick and Harry, not knowing Weaver that well, didn’t give any business like they did Ray Elwood, but were friendly enough not to earn them any glares. Jefferson was next, as Drew was again going with Kristy Penman, his date from the Christmas Dance. They were not a couple, but were more like convenient dates to these kinds of things, with a few benefits thrown in, or so Drew had implied to the other guys. Jonas had decided to give Jane Aubrey another chance, and she did seem more chatty than she had before. More pictures were taken by Winky, who was the official photographer of the event, and the gang and dates were off.

The Valentine's Day Dance was not as well attended as the Christmas Dance had been, the younger boys perhaps thinking that this one 'meant' more romantically, one never knows. The dance floor was less crowded, and Harry had taken a moment at the beginning to assure Murray that the Marauders, not that she knew that name, were taking the night off. Fun was had by all, and things were very romantic for our four couples.....and even Claudia and Jeff Weaver were dancing pretty closely, the stone heart might be a little frail after all. Sophie and Harry stuck it out for a couple of hours before leaving. During their last dance:

"This is our last dance for awhile, in public anyway."

"You're a lot better at it than you used to be, all you needed was some practice."

"I just needed a terrific partner that's all."

"Poor Parvati, she missed out."

"Seamus gives her what she wants I'm sure." Sophie giggled.

"Can he dance though?"

"I have no idea, Seamus' dancing ability is not something I've given a lot of thought to."

"That's good to hear. Are we ready to skate out of this party?"

"I thought you'd never ask darling." They said goodbye to their friends, and repaired to the trunk, where they did not make love for the first time. They had talked about this beforehand, and decided that they were not cliché enough to make their first time on Valentine's Day. Sophie's birthday was the final day in March, and it was looking like rounding third and going for home was going to happen on that day. They still had a lot of frolicking fun, and both were more than a little tired by the end.

During halftime, they checked the Map for the others, with only information in mind, not pranking. Sure enough, Jonas and Jane were in his room, Drew and Kristy had somehow gained access to one of the spare rooms in Jefferson and were doing who knows what. Claudia and Jeff were still together, though in full view in the Shawnee Lounge, and Reiko and Warrick were in the basement. All of the couples would separate eventually and return to their own beds. This would prove fortunate in a few hours times, as events overtook them.

Great Lakes Outer Perimeter, 415 meters from the building

3:50 am EDT

The three vans stopped right at the fluorescent marker sprayed on the roadside. Twenty men piled out, joining the five who had walked there from their own arrival point. They unloaded their gear and met for final instructions. Their leader for this operation was Michael Sheen, who was one of the pack Chieftains in the overall hierarchy of the Lycans. This was one of eight groups nationwide that were gathering around targets at this time: at every school, three Alleys, and the Government Headquarters in Boston.

“Remember what we have trained for men, keep your minds sharp and your focus clear. Missile team, stay within your set parameters, and meet at the school only after all of your ordnance has been exhausted. Attack team, stay out of the missiles’ firing solutions and keep within those lines. Keep your targets in mind, any adults, kill them immediately. Any child, render them unconscious and take them hostage. Destroy everything you can, this will send them a message that perhaps neutrality is in their best interests after all. Now Tony and I will get you set up, that is no farm that you are looking at.”

Michael Sheen and Tony Almeida were American equivalents of Edward Grant in Britain, Lyan Wizards who were totally on the Lyan side of their war. Each of the eight groups had men like these in them, to spot targets that only they could amongst the Lyan forces. Sheen and Almeida were both graduates of Great Lakes, and had been drilling their team on the sightlines for over a month now, since this operation had been authorized. They spread out the missile team, ten strong, all along the perimeter, placing them just so. Watches had been synchronized for this one moment, when all of the kids and faculty, and others, would be asleep.

When the clock ticked down, Sheen let out a whistle, that meant 10 seconds left. All ten Lycans made the final count in their heads, and then pressed their buttons at targets that they were not able to see.

Ten Stinger Heat Seeking Missiles shot straight toward the large heat source known as The Great Lakes Magical Institute.

End Chapter

Author's Note: You know what's coming in this chapter, and I'm going to try to make what's happening as clear as possible. There will be multiple locations for the battles, as I hinted in the cliffhanger in Chapter Seventeen, so expect a lot of jump cutting and flashbacking so as to keep things organized. One thing: this is not the last chapter in the story, so while the style may have some similarities with the final battle in Straw, the consequences and overall place in the story will not be similar. One final detail: The two uppermost floors of the Great Lakes building are set up like this: Four corridors of roughly 40-50 feet, set in a square pattern. The two Houses on each floor are on opposite ends of the square from each other. The faculty offices on the third floor are all along one corridor, with offices and living quarters on each side. I've made this fuzzily clear in the action below, but I wanted to lay it out better so you know what you're getting into. Enjoy the show.

Great Lakes Outer Perimeter

4:00 am EDT

Michael Sheen watched through his Omnioculars as the ten missiles streaked toward the unsuspecting school, impacting a second later on the north, east, and west portions of the building.

KABOOM!!!!

Times ten.

Only the south wall was spared, it being the part of the school facing the currently empty Creatures paddock and the Quidditch/Quodpot stadium, both of which extended the anti-Lycan wards past the comfort of Sheen and his troops. The front doors were on the west side of the building, though there were now a few more entrances to the building than there were previously.

The Lycans, other than Sheen and Almeida, couldn't see this with the naked eye of course, not from the distance that they were firing from, but that would soon change. The missile team quickly reloaded their launchers and let loose a second salvo, directly at the same places as before, and a close observer would notice that the Muggle Repelling Charms were rippling. Sheen, using Omnioculars, confirmed the damage and without taking his eyes off the prize, shouted orders to his assault force.

“CHARGE!”

The 14 man assault force, led by the 44 year old Tony Almeida, headed straight for the very middle of the blast openings, Almeida using his wand and Abrumpere to expand that opening. None of the Lycans had changed as of yet, which was the key here, as they exposed two very wide holes in the Great Lakes defenses, which had never been put to a real test anyway. This was the first time Great Lakes, or any other Wizard school in America had ever been attacked in any way. In fact the last recorded full fledged assault on a Wizard school was at Beauxbaton during the French Revolution, where no one was safe anywhere, magical or muggle. During previous iterations of the Lycan/Kindred/Wizard conflicts, children had always been considered off limits. The Kindred had no children, and the Lycans very few, due to the nature of their 'change', but they had always rigidly respected this. Until now.

There were, at present, 21 anti-Lycan wards placed along the perimeter and inside the building, with varying degrees of length, width, and power. The ones on the perimeter were the more sensitive, and were based solely on detection, the ones inside based on prevention. The detection based wards could identify a Lycan in any form, but the prevention wards only impacted Lycans who had made the change, and even then, those prevention wards did not extend above the first floor, the school elders not thinking that the Lycans could get past the ones on that level.

These Lycans had not made the change.

They were sprinting the quarter-mile toward Great Lakes while in their human form, with M-16 assault rifles at the ready, and a dozen clips of ammunition covering each of their torsos, and some of them carried other, heavier, weapons as well. The third and fourth salvos of Stingers streaked past them and hit areas of the wall a few feet to the left of their previous hits, widening the gaps, but keeping Almeida and his people out of the line of fire. They reached their entry point just over 90 seconds after the initial launch of the missiles.

The other wide hole, is that the defenses never anticipated a Wizard doing the attacking.

Almeida blew the front doors off with a few well placed Explosion Hexes, and the assault force entered the building. The Muggle Repelling Charms, weakening as they were, were now rendered moot as the Lycans got inside, much as they had been for Kindred Clan Leaders Mark Frankel and Channon Roe back in September. There were three stairwells leading to the upper floors, and the Lycans split into three teams, one for each of the three uppermost floors. Almeida led his team to the fifth floor, which housed Shawnee and Jefferson, though not before loosing a few Abrumpere spells at the Dining Hall, just for the hell of it Brian Herbert led his unit up the fourth floor, home to Cortez and Proctor. Kevin Anderson was the leader of the last group, and they had the smaller, but more dangerous, job of taking on the faculty members who lived on campus on the third floor. Michael Sheen saw this from his vantage point, and ordered two of the missile team to drop their launchers and take up their secondary weapons:

Mortars, aimed right for the rooftops.

Flashback two minutes:

Harry, and a few hundred other students and faculty, were awoken by the multiple explosions that rocked the building hard. Harry was the lightest sleeper of his room and jerked out of a sound sleep.

“What the hell was that?!” The second salvo hit and Harry, though not an expert, became convinced that an earthquake had just hit. They didn’t have those in Michigan did they? Then he heard the voice booming throughout the school, a sort of magical computer voice that he had never heard before, one that was extremely loud, but not shouting.

“Lycan Ward 4 has been breached.”

“Lycan Ward 15 has been breached.”

The voice, a female one that did not resemble Murray’s, kept repeating the names of Lycan wards being breached, as Warrick, Rick, and Terry all popped out of bed, along with Nicole and Laurie, their new girlfriends of the last month. Harry popped open the doorway as students were streaming into the hallway, most of them seeming to think that this was some kind of drill. Within seconds, Murray’s voice was heard, via Magis Sonorus:

“Attention all students and faculty, Lycans have entered the building, stay in your Lounges and do not leave for any reason! I repeat, Lycans have entered the building, do not leave your Lounges! You are authorized to use whatever force necessary to defend yourselves, up to and including Avada Kedavra.” The voice was relatively calm, but with a tinge of something else mixed in with it. She did not say this was a drill, and that was all Harry needed to hear, or not hear as the case may be. He acted quickly, opened his trunk and reached out both hands:

“Accio Wand! Accio Vest!”

This summoned Voldemort’s wand, and his new dragon hide vest. His regular wand was already nearby, as he kept it under his pillow, fortunately his pajamas had pockets. He put the vest on, the others weren’t looking, and thus did not realize what he was doing until it was too late. Warrick noticed first.

“Oh no dude, you are so not going out there, Murray told us to stay put.” Harry stared hard at his roommate, who in spite of his words, moved from the doorway to let Harry pass, not wanting the battle to kick off right then and there. Rick and Terry had never seen that look on Harry’s face before, and both of them flinched noticeably.

“Yes she did, and you should follow those orders.” He then left the room, bare feet and all, and raced into the Lounge, which was rapidly filling up with curious students, most of whom were still totally convinced that this was a drill, despite Murray not mentioning that detail. The drill theory was losing credibility with every explosion heard, and now they were coming on the roof as well, and though these kids were one floor down from it, they could feel the vibrations. Sophie and Reiko came running out, looking for their boyfriends, only to be brought up short by the sight of Harry with his vest on and a wand in each hand.

“Where the hell do you think you’re going Mister!?” Harry, not really in the mood for this at 4:00 in the morning with explosions doing the waking, shot back immediately as he walked to the door.

“Only four people in this school have combat experience, and I’m one of them.” Murray and Defense teachers Tom Ripley and Dick Greenleaf being the others. All three of his friends ran over to the door, and before they could say anything, Harry spoke so that only they could hear him.

“If they breach the doors, get into the trunk and floo to the shop and wait for Dobby to come get you, the twins will make sure nothing happens to you. Herd as many people into our room as you can, the Pink should protect them somewhat.” He had never imagined needing the Pink to combat Lycans, but there you go.

“Harry, you can’t go out there, the Aurors will be here soon.” Harry looked at his roommate like he was a little slow.

“Oh I’m sure that this is the only place they’re attacking Warrick.” This conversation had drawn some interest, and Harry quickly put a wand to his throat.

“Everyone listen up! All of you below the level of Junior get back to your rooms now and close your doors, wands at the ready! Anyone but Murray and Heyman comes through those doors, kill them!” Murray and Heyman being the only ones who could open every door in the school without having to resort to gunfire. Harry continued, to the rapt attention of everyone in Cortez House.

“Juniors and Seniors, half of you are to patrol the dorm room hallways, the other half to remain in here in case the doors are breached! You heard Murray, you may use Avada Kedavra against any Lycan that comes in here. No one is to leave this room, am I understood?!” Harry didn’t think it was a bad plan, considering that he had made it up as he went along. The faint sound of gunfire could now be heard outside the Lounge doors, as the younger kids all ran back to their rooms, the two eldest years quietly debating on who was to stay in the Lounge and who was to go, not one of them questioning Harry’s orders, all of them assuming that he knew what he was doing. Harry was about to open the door, when Sophie grabbed his arm.

“Harry, please don’t go, we need you in here.” Yes they ‘might’ need him, Harry thought, but the faculty outside definitely needed his help. He had a brief flash of wonderment that he always seemed to find himself in situations like these. Trouble certainly knew just where was living didn’t it?

“Winky!” Winky, who knew exactly what was going on, popped in.

“Winky, don’t leave Sophie’s side until this is all over. If she tries to leave here before then, restrain her.” Harry opened the door, and everyone could see smoke wafting through the hallway, with the gunfire sounds becoming louder and louder. He looked back at his friends, and saw Clancy of all people in the background, wand in hand and worried look on his face, but he was not running anywhere and looked resolute enough. Harry gave a final glance at his girlfriend.

“I love you Sophie, see you soon.” Harry turned toward a sound in the hallway and pointed one wand at the door, the other at an unseen target. To the door:

“Signum!”

To the Lycan:

“Tergum Fundo!”

Just as the offensive spell left his hand, a fusillade of M-16 rounds hit Harry full in the chest as the door slammed shut, to the soundtrack of Sophie’s screams.

Flashback to the beginning of the attack:

Midwest Auror Headquarters, Milwaukee

The alarms were clanging all over the building, which was the Headquarters for all of the Wizard Government in the Midwest. There was a skeleton crew of two Aurors at the this time of night, comprised of one fresh-faced Academy graduate, and one old time Auror looking to serve out the string. Fortunately, they lived in an age of floo travel, and within four minutes, all of the very sleepy Aurors in the Midwest Command had assembled. The older Auror, Isaac Jaffee, gave them a quick brief while they put their gear on, time being of the essence.

“Less than five minutes ago, the anti-Lycan alarms went off in both Flackter Alley and Great Lakes, there were multiple disturbances and they haven’t stopped ringing since.” Mitchell Baylor, who was only an hour away from getting up anyway, quickly separated his Pods, speaking in a calm, but hurried voice.

“Pods 1-5, go right to Flackter Alley, use all force necessary to kill or capture. Pods 8-15, head for Great Lakes immediately. The rest of you, you’re the reserve, and to be here in case they strike a third position. Go now.”

Fifteen Aurors Apparated into Flackter Alley, and immediately joined the merchants doing battle with the Lycans, who were primarily using machine guns, set in a kind of Western Circle, to cover all the fields of fire. The Lycans weren’t trying to capture anyone in this, or the other two Alley battles, they were only bent on killing and destruction.....and tying down as many Aurors as possible of course, to distract them from the school assaults. The Aurors, led by Brian McCann, of the Goyle Sr. arrest, took to the rooftops in order to get defilades and good firing positions. The Lycans down below seemed content to keep the Aurors busy, and to cause intermittent damage as much as they could. At the bank, the goblins had barricaded themselves inside and would not come out for anything, despite McCann's Sonorus entreaties. Similar strategies were employed at Corrinus Alley and Chrokar Alley, the Lycans were trying to pin down as many Aurors as possible, while hopefully killing a Wizard or 20. Destruction was also the order of the day, as the Lycan leadership wanted to raise the financial cost of the war for the Wizards, and give them some pause.

Forty Aurors, plus Baylor himself, took the portkey and floo rides to Great Lakes, the majority of them arriving on the outer edge of the campus, to be met by Sheen and five of his missile men, using M-30's and a lot of ammunition at the ready. They were quickly pinned down, as Sheen had put up a series of barriers and shields, just in case. Baylor sent a third of his men around to flank Sheen, only to have them met by mortar and machine gun fire from a camouflaged position that they had not seen. The ten Aurors who took the floo to Murray's office, met with a different set of challenges.

Meanwhile, at The Salem Witches Institute in Massachusetts:

Lycan soldiers had used a slightly different strategy and had not made a full scale invasion of the school, content to lob rockets and mortars at the school, destroying it piece by piece until the Aurors came, not getting within reach of the wards. Salem Headmaster Beau Shupe, a former Auror Pod leader, quickly galvanized his teachers and they started taking long range potshots at their attackers, safe in the knowledge that their students were not in immediate jeopardy. They were having little luck, until about 20 Aurors came in behind the Lycans, and the battle took a turn. Shupe and his Defense and Charms teachers slowly eased forward, throwing up metal shields that just barely deflected the machine gun bullets streaming toward them, while the Aurors quickly attempted to envelop them in a pincer maneuver. This seemed to be working, until the Lycan attackers disappeared into thin air.....and reappeared on the other side of the school, their own Wizards having used portkeys to good effect.

At The Pathfinder School in California:

This was the hardest target for the Lycans to assault, since the school was literally built into the mountains, the campus basically being a multi-million dollar treehouse. The group rappelled up the north side of mountain, and used their Stingers from below, attempting to collapse the mountain underneath the school, and bring it all down like Humpty Dumpty. Like with the other three school assaults, the Pathfinder Lycan team was led by two Lycan Wizards who were graduates of the school and knew the surroundings, and while this would prove to have some benefit, the attack would ultimately prove fruitless. The Pathfinder defenders had one huge advantage: Because of the nature of the school's location, there were floo furnaces in every Lounge and a few dotted all over the building besides, since that was the only sane way to reach the 'campus'. Even the Quidditch stadium, located 25 miles away, had to be reached via floo and portkey. The teachers immediately ordered the students to be evacuated, while half the faculty poured Incendio fire down on the relatively defenseless Lycans, melting over half of them in the first 10 minutes of the defense. The students were flooed to the Pacific Auror Headquarters, which like it's Wisconsin counterpart, only had a thin reserve of Aurors left there, the rest being involved in the pitched battle that was Corrinus Alley just a hundred meters away.

At Tecumseh in Oklahoma:

Karl Aylesworth was the teacher on duty, one always was patrolling the halls, just in case, and thus was the first to act as the alarms went haywire. Tecumseh did not have a single neighbor within five miles, and there could be no doubt of what was happening, no one stumbled upon Tecumseh by mistake. Karl heard the first explosions, and instinctively ran toward them. He surprised the first echelon of the Lycans and dropped one with a well placed Reducto to the head. That surprised the trailers enough so that their first M-16 shots went a little wild, and Karl was able to Apparate back to his office and his no longer sleeping wife, teachers being able to Apparate at all American Wizard Schools, though that privilege was about to end, as anti-Apparition wards slammed into place exactly one minute after the Lycan wards were violated. The Headmaster, Robert Clary, was not skilled in any way in Defense, so he left the quick planning of the defense to Defense teachers Henry Hill and James Burke. Burke and Hill immediately dispatched faculty members to the various Houses, to organize the students and help protect them. They, along with the Aylesworths, would attempt to harass and delay the Lycans until the Aurors arrived.

Back to Great Lakes, and fourth floor Cortez:

Harry's spell sealed the door shut as Sophie screamed out:

“NOOO!!!”

She immediately tried to open it, only to find that Harry's Sealing Spell had all but super-glued the door closed, and she used all her weight to try to turn the knob, but it wouldn't budge. She took out her wand and took aim at the door, only to have Reiko and Warrick grab both arms and pull her back. They tried to calm her down as she struggled to break free, all of them aware that little Winky had no intention of disobeying Harry's orders, so any struggle by Sophie was rather pointless.

“Sophie, don't. He has that vest on and I'll bet my life that it can stop bullets.” He said this with a confidence that he didn't really feel.

“He's right Sophie, Harry needs to focus on the Lycans right now, he can't be worrying about whether you're taking any fire or not.” That logic was lost on Sophie as she seemed to be about to raise her wand at her best friends. Ed Lattimore had been listening to them and came up to lead Sophie away from the door, gently.

“C'mon Sophie, we need to get things set up in here, just in case.”

“We can't leave him out there!”

“He knows what he's doing Sophie, the guy has been fighting off people trying to kill him for over six years, he can do this.” Harry and Lattimore had swapped a few stories over the months, both of them recognizing that cooperation would be to their mutual benefit. The older boy, who was just a hair under Warrick's size, liked Harry, but on the whole was somewhat afraid of him, feeling that Harry's Dursley/Hogwarts experiences had made him very hard and somewhat unforgiving. It was well known among the older Cortez students that Harry was not to be screwed with under most any circumstance, Joe Clancy being a reminder of why, though no one else as yet had challenged him.

Sophie reluctantly agreed, before having a sudden inspiration:

“Winky, if I promise not to go near that door, will you please go get an Extendable Ear for me? I swear I won’t try to leave the Lounge.” Winky didn’t like this, but it seemed to be a reasonable request on the surface. She popped to the trunk and back within five seconds, and noted with relief that Sophie did not appear to have moved an inch. Sophie took the Ear and moved toward the wall between the doors and the girls’ bathroom. She used a little known drilling spell that Harry had taught her, with an eye toward this type of thing, and bored a small hole in the wall, just enough for an Extendable Ear to get through. What she heard:

Harry’s offensive spell had been a borderline Dark spell that melted the skin of the target. It glanced off the right shin of the Lycan attacker and started him screaming as it removed a piece of his pants and the skin of that shin at the same time. Lycans are tough by design, but the surprise and the damage combined to drop him to the ground.

Harry himself had been slammed back about a body length by the seven bullets that slammed into his chest, but the bullets themselves bounced off harmlessly, the distance of 30 feet being too great to penetrate the vest. He had seen them coming almost slow motion, as time almost seemed to stop. He felt the impact they made on him, and felt almost amazed that they weren’t going through the vest. All that happened in a split second, before he snapped back into play and addressed the changed situation. He knew immediately that he had some cracked ribs, but no holes in him that weren’t there already. He quickly rolled to his right and let loose an Incendio spell right at the Lycan’s feet, and it made contact with the damaged portion of the man’s leg, dropping him like a rock as he had just gotten back to his feet again, being set on fire will do that to a person. Harry scrambled to his feet, and charged the Lycan, firing stunners as fast as he could with both wands, connecting multiple times, the Lycan being too busy focusing on putting the fire on his clothes out.

Harry wound up doing that for him, and putting some magical ropes around him as tightly as he could before he woke him up. Sophie had just put the Ear through the hole in the wall when she heard Harry start questioning his adversary, and while she was relieved beyond measure that Harry was all right, what she heard put a chill into her, the Ear being just sensitive enough to pick it up:

“How many of you are there?” The Lycan sneered through the pain.

“Go to hell Wizard.” Harry pointed his own wand at the Lycan’s injured leg and let loose, keeping the other at his foe’s left temple:

“REPULSAR!”

The Lycan screamed again as the punch like spell slammed into his charred leg, Harry had put as much power as he could into it. He was frantically looking around and trying to hear if anybody else was coming. Nobody seemed to be, and that worried him more than anything.

“I repeat, how many of you are there?! I can do this all day buddy.” This Lycan, a barely out of his teens youngster named Jeff Krupp, had a little bravado left, enough for one last jab.

“We’re going to slaughter all of you little Wizards, you’ll be on your knees begging us to turn you before the hour is up.” A grim smile flashed over Harry’s face, as he mentally superimposed Snape’s face over this one’s.

“Way wrong answer mate.” Harry hit him with a series of Pulse spells that knocked him unconscious, though without revealing any information. Harry wasn’t used to this questioning business yet, though he would learn soon enough. Sophie was giving a play by play of this to Reiko and Warrick, as Harry called out:

“Dobby!” Dobby came in, very pale.

“Yes Harry?”

“Get me a bag full of swamps and some spell grenades, then go to Murray and find out what the bloody hell is going on.” Dobby nodded and came back a few seconds later with Harry’s requested supplies, then popped off to see what Murray was doing. Harry deployed a swamp right in front of the Cortez door, and slowly headed toward the hallway corner, wincing as he got used to his damaged ribs.

However, before Harry had summoned his major-domo, Dobby had taken one little detour: To WWW. He popped right in the middle of the twins’ inventing time, which was always mid-morning when they were both awake and at their most energetic. He quickly explained the situation to the startled Fred and George, who wasted little time in hopping in the trunk and flooing overseas, right as Dobby got his summons from Harry. As they scrambled up the ladder, Fred looked at his twin.

“Boy that portkey ride was wild, right George?”

“Right Fred, we’ll have headaches the rest of the day.” The understanding came to, they exited the trunk to an empty room. This had been planned however, just in case, as Harry had obtained, at considerable cost, a pair of portkeys that would take the twins from London to Michigan, so that they could be truthful in theory if the twins needed to be here quickly for an emergency. Add to that a counter-ward that Harry had found in his library, and a portkey could work, in a very limited section of the room. Fred and George hesitantly approached the door, though they were not in danger while leaving the room however. Harry had, on the sly, inoculated them to the Pink, for future reference and just in case, as it worked both ways, entering and leaving. They had never been in this part of Cortez before, there had been only one brief visit in October to see Harry’s room, but they immediately saw one of the patrolling students and asked her.

“Which way is the Lounge?” The student, Junior Marie Ford, noticing the red hair and the English accents, looked dumbfounded at them, seemingly trying to decide if they were Lycans, or some sort of hallucination. Neither twin had time for this crap, and George addressed her harshly.

“Out with it girl! Do we look like bloody werewolves?! Where is the Lounge?!” She pointed to the left, which is where they had thought it might be anyway, given the noise. They strode as quickly as they could without jogging until they reached the Lounge, which had about 18 students in it, including Warrick, Reiko, and Sophie, who had just started listening at the wall. Most of the students were arranging barricades and otherwise making plans for when the Lycans got there, as they assumed they would. The twins saw their friends and stalked over to them, not caring about the sudden stops in conversation as everyone wondered at who they were and how they had gotten in. Their accents dispelled most of the questions for the moment, as the twins did not see their partner.

“Where is he!?” The trio all gave a start at seeing the twins, but none had to ask how they got there or who had told them.....at least none were dumb enough to do so out loud. Warrick pointed to the hallway.

“He’s out there, he left about a minute ago.” Shit, they both thought, they had been afraid of this, as Warrick didn’t have the heart to tell them that Harry had probably taken half a clip of ammo right in the chest.

“Did he at least have the vest on and his spare wand with him?”

“Yes to both.” Well at least he had that going for him, they had field tested the vest as well, and were plotting on how to con Charlie into coming up with four pieces of dragon hide just for them, now that Dobby had gotten the hang of sewing the stuff.

“Thank Merlin for small favors. Now out of the way, our baby brother needs us.” The three of them parted, though a few of the bolder students came forward as if to join them, and neither twin wanted any part of that, especially Warrick or any other gang member. George addressed them briefly.

“Don’t even think about it children. Tell you what, anyone in this room that has actually killed someone before, can come with us. No? Just sit tight then.” Fred grabbed the door and found that Harry had sealed it.

“I knew we shouldn’t have taught him how to do that.” He put the counter to it while George had a word with Reiko.

“Pink every door in there, it’ll slow them down enough if they get past us. Go now.” Reiko grabbed Sophie and they sprinted back to the dorm rooms, Winky hurrying behind, as Fred got the Lounge doors open. They found a swamp right in front of it, and both of them sighed, though not unhappily as it proved that Harry was still alive somewhere. They saw a body lying on the ground in the distance, but couldn’t tell if it was Harry or a Lycan, or somebody else.

“Well at least he’s thinking. Fred, levitate me to the other side, I’ll get you over then after you seal the door back up.” His brother used Moblicorpus to get him over the swamp, and George did the same. They approached the body as it seemed to be waking up, Harry was about 20 feet ahead at the corner, peering around it, the Lounge being exactly halfway down the corridor from each corner. Suddenly the Lycan made the change, which burst the magical ropes, and he leaped up and charged Harry. Our man, who had just spied the twins out of the corner of his eye, had the same idea as his surrogate brothers and whipped up both wands, as they did the same.

“Abrumpere!” “Abrumpere!” “Abrumpere!” “Abrumpere!”

It probably took all four of them to bring Krupp down, and it helped greatly that all four shots hit him in the torso, destroying his spine and most of his ribs. Add that to Harry’s earlier spell work and interrogation techniques, and Krupp was now a former living person. Harry grinned at the twins as they came up to him, poking the body with his foot, just in case.

“What took you guys so long?” Humorous to the last.

“Funny little bugger aren’t you? Are you all right?” The shell casings had been absorbed by the swamp, so they couldn’t have known.

“Well I got shot by a muggle assault rifle, but the vest handled itself just fine. Just a couple of cracked ribs, the usual.” This was one time that the twins reacted differently: Fred was rendered speechless at the idea of his little brother taking seven in the chest, while George just saw that Harry was undamaged and moved on.

“Not much more than a stubbed toe given your history. What did you do to his leg?”

“Just some homemade plastic surgery.”

“How many more are there?”

“Merlin only knows. I sent Dobby to find out from Murray, though he made a detour first I take it.” It had actually been the other way around, but the twins didn’t know this. They heard more gunfire from around the corner, which seemed to be coming from the direction of the Proctor Lounge door, though in fact it was coming from one floor down.

Meanwhile, on the third floor:

Murray, alone in her room with Doctor Neil being on hospital duty until noon, had sprung out of bed upon hearing the first explosion. Great Lakes was not as isolated as Tecumseh was, but there was nothing out there that should have caused that kind of noise save a plane crash. As soon as the first Lycan alarm went off, she gave the Magis Sonorus message as described earlier, using a reasonably well rehearsed plan that had been updated in recent weeks. She did it not knowing if the Lycans had actually gotten inside, but felt that every second the students could use to hide would be to their benefit. Great Lakes had long resisted floor fireplaces in the Lounges, feeling that the kids needed a clean break from their home lives, and not wanting to encourage parents to check up on their offspring five times a day, as often happened with muggle boarding schools.....but Joanne

Murray was having huge split second thoughts about that policy right about now.

She quickly got dressed and grabbed her wand as she poked her head outside her office door....and almost lost her head, literally, to gunfire from down the hall, as the Lycans had established a machine gun post. She snapped back in, but barely batted an eye as Heyman flooded into her office, quickly warding the door as much as she could as Heyman collected himself. Indeed the Deputy looked very flustered, not having ever thought this would come to pass.

“What do we do Joanne? Are you sure this isn’t some sort of drill by the Aurors?” She knew this was coming, but it still irritated her.

“Only Lycans can set off those wards David, and they would have at least warned me in advance if it was a drill. Get on the floo and call to the faculty, every one of them, we need them here now. Go back to your office though, any Aurors coming will need my floo.” A shade less than half of the faculty lived on campus, and neither of the Defense teachers. As Heyman left he had a question.

“Any Aurors that come? You think they’re attacking elsewhere?”

“It would stand to reason, now go.” Heyman disappeared, just in time as Lyman and Maloney came through one by one.

“What’s going on? What the hell are those explosions for? Are those idiot Aurors running a drill without telling us?”

“The Lycans are here Josh, they just shot at me.” You could hear a pin drop now, as Dobby now popped in, startling more than a couple of them.

“Professor Murray ma’am, Harry sent me to ask you what’s going on.” Murray was about to explode, her ‘unique’ relationship with Harry notwithstanding, she didn’t need to update him personally.....uh oh. Lyman got there first though:

“He left the Lounge, didn’t he?”

“He is in the fourth floor hall, one werewolf has been taken down. I took the liberty of sending for the twins ma’am, Harry fights much better with them at his side.” Murray took this news much better than she was under any obligation to, as teachers started coming through the floor.

“I don’t want to know how they got around the anti-portkey wards, do I?” Dobby didn’t like the idea of lying to this woman, but after years with the Malfoys, he was a very accomplished actor.

“Harry voided them only for use in emergencies, and this is an emergency ma’am.” Which was sort of true, in a sense.

“All right I suppose, tell the three of them to wait for the Aurors if possible, but not to take too many chances if they go on the offensive.” Dobby nodded at her, and popped away.

“Joanne, he’s an asset, 16 year old kid or not.” She turned to the assembled faculty, conceding the point.

“I know Josh. All right listen up! I want all of you back in your offices and to open your doors one by one. They have a machine gun post set up at the junction, but they cannot have unlimited bullets, so let’s waste as many of them as we can. Do not step outside under any circumstances! We will wait to see how much Auror support we will receive.” This was the conservative approach, and did not go over well with some of the teachers, all of whom had assembled in the tightly packed office.

“What about the kids? They’re going to need our help any second now.” Murray was thinking more like an Auror than an educator.

“We can’t help them if we’re dead before we leave the floor, we have to know what’s out there. There is only one way into the Lounges, and the upperclassmen will be ready for them.” Said with a sense of hope that was not universally shared within the room. Tom Ripley didn’t waste any time talking or complaining, he strode to the door and popped it open.

A barrage of bullets greeted him, and he jerked back his arm, but let loose a few minor jinxes down to the right, where the fire had come from. That stopped the firing for a moment, and Ripley took the opportunity to peer down the hall. He ducked back inside, closing the door. None of the teachers had left yet, wanting to see what he was doing. He calmly told them.

“There are two of them manning the machine gun, they have assault rifles over their backs as well. I couldn’t tell how much spare ammunition they had or if they were toting any grenades.....speaking of grenades Josh, of your Potter pranks, did you buy any of those spell grenade balls they sell?” The Lyman/Harry friendship had not gone unnoticed, not that Lyman cared, but he knew what Tom intended here.

“I have about four or five left, I’ll go get them.” He left, and Murray told the faculty, save Heyman, Greenleaf, and Ripley to get going to their offices. It took a couple of minutes to get them all out, and by then Lyman was back. Ripley took command, with Murray’s agreement.

“All right, once the door opening gambit is completed, load these things up with Petrificus Totalus, Harry told me that this is about the most advanced spell they can handle. Are these the timer or the impact variety?” He and Harry had had a chat once about the potential defense uses for some of the twins’ creations.

“Impact.”

“All the better.” He opened the door back up and got fewer bullets hitting it than before, as the former Auror heard Murray’s ‘open door’ strategy start to take effect.

Meanwhile, on the Fifth floor:

This assault team was led by Tony Almeida, and was aided by the impact that the mortar rounds were having on the roof. The roof was extra strength, due to the weather demands placed on it most of the year, but nothing could hold back the explosives for very long. The rounds were quickly dialed in and collapsed major portions of the roof in both Jefferson and Shawnee Lounges, as well as the hallways. In Shawnee Lounge Claudia had begun organizing the students into a sort of defensive layer inside the Lounge, while unknowingly aping Harry in ordering the younger years to their dorm rooms. The older students spent a lot of time dodging falling bits of the ceiling, and it was rapidly getting very cold as more and more of the ceiling was transformed into a sunroof. All the students put Warming Charms on themselves, but all were shivering with the anticipation of what might be coming through the doors at any moment.

In Jefferson, everyone looked to Drew for leadership, even the Seniors. He was calm by nature, and seemed even more cool under pressure as he quietly gave out instructions. He picked out the top Senior in Defense, Hayley Lewis, and the two of them did a quick recon out of the door. The Lycans had not reached the top floor as of yet, and he and Lewis silently padded toward the stairs. They swung the door open and listened.

What they heard was the Almeida team doing something to the walls on the stairwell between the fourth and fifth floors, though Drew and Hayley could not tell what it was. They did see that the adult looking types were no one that they knew, and the two stole back to their Lounge and filled everyone in. Drew personally put the Pink on the door area, and in contrast to the other Houses, he had all the students deploy back to the dorm room hallway, after putting more layers of Pink on the bathrooms, and the entrance to the dorm hallway. They buckled down in said hallway, as Drew looked at Jonas.

“We’re going to be fine, Dad and his guys will be here any minute now.” Jonas brought up the obvious.

“What if they’re hitting other places?”

That brought out a question long debated amongst the Wizards during these kinds of wars: How many Lycans were there in circulation? The Wizards took a census every September, mostly for taxation and Congressional representation purposes, so they had a very good idea of their numbers. Likewise The Kindred were extraordinarily disciplined when it came to adding new members, most of whom were very willing adults, and had their own population estimate accurate within a dozen or so. By contrast, the Lycans had no idea, as they were not thought to have the control over their members that the other two non-muggle factions did. The Lycans had only come up on the short end of the last few wars because they were not as powerful as the Wizards, or as rich as The Kindred, the vampires living upwards of 200 years unless dying in battle or by subterfuge. Without those advantages for the Wizards and The Kindred, the wars would have gone much differently, the Lycans being better hand to hand fighters than their adversaries.

“There are enough Aurors Jonas, we’ve always handled them before, this should be no different.” This had a somewhat calming effect on Jonas and the others, as everyone with friends in other Houses were worried about what might be happening elsewhere. What if Jefferson was last to be hit?

Fourth Floor:

Harry, Fred, and George inched forward to look around the corner, but saw nothing. There was nothing in this corridor, the Proctor Lounge was on the other side. Fred said what they were all thinking:

“I have a hard time believing that they just sent one guy.” Harry privately suspected that at least one Remus type Lycan was involved in the assault, but he doubted that they were so well informed about Wizard affairs that they knew just where to find him personally.

“Once more into the breach then?”

“You lead on mate, this is your turf.” They walked forward, somewhat slowly, all four wands in front of them.

“So what did you do to that werewolf?”

“I used a Skin Melting Spell that I read about. Seemed to work pretty well, given that I barely got him with it.” George grimaced.

“Remind me not to make an enemy of you anytime soon.”

“I get that a lot.”

“No doubt.....so how do you do the spell? Might come in handy, you know, any second now.”

“Tergum Fundo, but it takes a fair amount of power, so you can’t just throw it off.”

“Duly noted, and that pulse thing you keep bragging about?”

“Repulsar.” George looked a bit abashed.

“Oh right, should have figured that one out.” They were coming up on the next corner, their murmuring having not attracted any undue attention. Harry was nominated to do the next looking, as he was far more familiar with muggle weapons than the twins, both by being muggle raised and by his movie watching experience. What he saw were two Lycans approaching the Proctor door, in something of a hurry, but lugging what looked to be some explosive charges. Harry idly wondered what the hell had taken them so long, the alarms must have gone off almost five minutes ago. He himself had gotten half dressed, argued with Sophie, captured, interrogated, and killed a Lycan, and had a few lines of witty repartee with Fred and George, yet the two groups seemed to have arrived at the same time. He would learn the answer to that soon enough.

The two Lycans were not looking in his direction as they loaded up the door with their explosives, and Harry spotted another two down the hall with a machine gun setup. If Harry had known that there were five attackers, he would have now accounted for them all, but with his current information, there could be 100 more for all he could be sure of. He reported the situation back to the twins, and they all looked at each other as if ‘well what now?’

George was carrying the spell grenade bag, while Fred had the swamp container, Harry not having a free hand since he had both of his wands out. Fred took out a swamp.

“Who’s the most accurate spell caster from a distance here? We can throw one of these near the door and activate it, it should slow them down at least.” Harry thought about it for half a second.

“I’ll do it, I nailed one pretty good during our first mass duel, from further away. I’ll just treat it like a Snitch. Fred, you throw it, George load up a couple of spell grenades and distract those two.”

“What about the two at the other end?” You know, the ones with the machine gun, he didn’t have to say.

“We’ll just hope that they have bad aim. On three.” They got ready, as George put Petrificus Totalus on two spell grenades.

“One.”

“Two.”

“Three!”

Fred whipped around the corner and pitched the swamp right at the feet of the two Lycans, who had just finished setting the charges and were preparing to blow the door. They looked over with a start, and desperately tried to get their weapons from over their backs. Harry swung around and fired with both wands.

“Activate!” “Activate!” “Activate!” “Activate!”

Only one of the four shots hit the swamp, but that’s all they needed as the swamp sprung up around the two Lycans.....who were in the way of their colleagues down at the other end, so no immediate fire came the Brits’ way. One of George’s spell grenades found it’s target, and the Lycan, they were all males by the way, was dropped face first into the muck. His colleague, though, was the one holding the detonator, and he managed to squeeze it before a barrage of Pulse Spells hit him, via Fred and Harry.

KABOOM!!

The Proctor door blasted inward like a cannon shot, catching two of the students full in the body, killing one of them instantly and putting the other in a week-long coma. With one of their comrades down, the machine gun opened fire and the Brits had to duck back behind the corner.

“When they change ammo belts we’ll have a few seconds, swing around and start firing Repulsar, it will barely sap you and it can travel a long way, I’ll aim for the other one by the door.” The twins both nodded, but Harry was not needed for his part of the gambit, as the detonating Lycan had foolishly tried to advance inside the Proctor Lounge only to be met with a hail of Reducto Spells that pretty much turned his torso into powder. The ammo belt was being changed now and the Brits came around just in time to see the untimely demise of another Lycan. Fred and George fired their Pulse spells down the hall, hitting only a couple of times but forcing a delay in rearming. Harry put his wand to his throat and used Sonorus.

“Attention Proctor House, this is Harry Potter, stay in your Lounge! I repeat, do not come out until I give you an all clear!” There was no immediate confirmation from Proctor, but no one disobeyed his ‘directive’.

The twins’ Pulse barrage, given the distance and their unfamiliarity with the casting of it, was only so effective, and the Lycans managed to get a new belt in, and they opened back up, forcing the Brits to retreat again. The Lycan that George had hit with the spell grenade had just died, since he was frozen and could not move, he choked on the muck and died of asphyxiation.

Third Floor:

The Aurors had finally arrived, three Pods worth, as they came through Murray’s floo, Through the relatively thin ceiling above, they all heard the door explosion, and Harry's directive to Proctor. Murray looked at Ripley, who even in retirement, was looked at by his newly arrived former Auror colleagues as the person in charge.

"Well he seems to be in control up there." Ripley smiled faintly.

"Josh did tell us so. Okay, Josh and Dick, I want you to load up those spell grenades and see if you can ricochet one or more to hit them. Even if you miss it might even give them a moment of pause to see a few racquetballs coming down the hall toward them, I know it would me. The rest of you, after they do that, I want as many wands wrapped around that door as possible to lay down some cover fire, literally, I want you to use Incendio. Joanne, you and I are going to go in the opposite direction and see what obstacles they have in place at the other end. Questions?" There were no questions, and Lyman and Greenleaf loaded up their spell grenades, and on Ripley's signal, threw them down the hall.....unfortunately, neither of them were in danger of being drafted by the muggle Detroit Tigers, and they did not hit living things, though one made contact with an ammunition belt.

The Aurors all reached around and started in with their Incendio part of the play. This had a lot more success, as the Kevin Anderson led machine gun crew was forced to hastily pick up their gun and retreat to the stairwell door. Murray and Ripley stole out of the office and started down the hallway, only to be met by fire from another machine gun that quickly swung around that corner. The two Lycans had been waiting patiently for the Wizards to make that kind of mistake, using regular mirrors to keep tabs on the situation.

Ripley went down immediately with bullets in both legs and his stomach, Murray was grazed on the hip and her right arm, and hit the deck more from instinct than anything else. Two very alert Aurors summoned both of them back to Murray's office, as there were at least three Aurors pouring Incendio down the other way, to keep that machine gun at bay. Once inside, Murray quickly put bandages on her slight wounds, and then took a look at Ripley. He was conscious, but in a bad way with his stomach wound, and Lyman quickly got on the floo and summoned Dr. Carter. Carter had been sent by the Salem people to keep watch at Great Lakes, since the battle at the other school had not yet reached the students.

Carter came in a flash of floo powder, and took five seconds to examine Ripley. There was no exit wound, so the bullet was still inside his belly. Carter looked at the Defense teacher, whom he barely knew other than to say hello.

“Tom, I’m going to need to get you down to the med station to get the bullets out. It sounds like walking down there is out of the question, from the noise and explosions. Can you handle a floo trip?” That would be very painful with a trio of open wounds, but there really was no other choice. Ripley’s next statement said as much.

Carter and one of the Aurors helped him to the floo, and Ripley got himself down to the med station without passing out. Carter quickly followed and worked on him, with Nurse Meryl Burbank assisting, and got the four bullets out, it turned out that he took two of them in the right leg. The medical attention happened quickly enough that Ripley had not lost very much blood at all, and within a few minutes he was demanding to be allowed back into the fight. Carter and Burbank, shockingly, were opposed to the motion. Ripley threatened the loudest though, and won the point. He floored back to the office to find that that strategic situation had not changed much.

“Did you get any of them?”

“No, they’ve adjusted their fire enough that we can’t get a good shot at them.”

“We really need a floo to the other floors, so we can flank them.” Lyman, listening in, had an idea. Before Murray could stop him, he put his wand to his throat and called out:

“Harry Potter! Harry Potter! Send Dobby down to Professor Murray’s office! Send Dobby down to Professor Murray’s office!” It must have worked, because five seconds later, Dobby popped in. Presumably the Lycans would not know who Dobby was, though Tony Almeida might guess it because of the name.

“Yes Professor Josh?”

“What’s going on up there?”

“There are three werewolves down, and at least two more with a big gun. Harry and Twin Fred and Twin George are taking long shots at them, but otherwise are still debating on what to do. Right now their main focus is on keeping the werewolves away from Proctor House.” Ripley took over, chiding himself for not thinking of Dobby, or any of the other House Elves for that matter, before. They couldn’t be drafted into the fight itself, but they would make for good messengers and scouts.

“What was that explosion?”

“The Proctor door being blown off sir. I was sent in to check, and there is one student unconscious.....and one student is not alive.” The room, quiet before, was now funereal, as the first confirmed death was acknowledged.

“Tell Harry to get past those two as quickly as possible, we’re pinned down in here. Once he deals with them, come back here and tell us his route. Oh, and if you would please Dobby, check on the fifth floor situation.”

“Yes sir, I will tell them.” He disappeared. One of the Aurors looked at Murray.

“Who are these twins the elf was talking about? Can they fight?”

“George and Fred Weasley, Harry’s friends from Hogwarts. They’re 18 and they most certainly can fight, they were side by side with him at that trial fiasco back in September, as well as the Hogsmeade battle in December, against their own Lycans. Harry got them in here despite our wards, they run that joke shop that’s so popular.” More Aurors were nodding, perhaps Mitchell Baylor, still outside trying to advance on Michael Sheen, had told them about the joke shop. They kept up their Incendio diversion, growing more and more frustrated at the stalemate, but confident that things could be much worse.

On the fifth floor:

The Lycans had all but abandoned the fifth floor, after booby trapping both the Jefferson and Shawnee doors, content to allow the mortar fire from outside to inflict any casualties, and not wanting to take any of their own from the mortar fire, which was somewhat indiscriminate. There had been no serious injuries so far, as the pieces falling had not been big enough, though some of the larger ones that had fallen caused some bruises and cuts. The Shawnee students were still waiting in their defensive positions for a charge that would never come, though they had heard the scratching on the door when the Lycans were setting the booby traps. The Jefferson students were a little more restless, and Jim Bouton, a Senior and one of Jonas' Quodpot teammates, had a very rash idea that he tried to sell to Drew.

"Drew, there's a big enough hole in the ceiling, some of us could get on our brooms and go outside. There's no way that kind of weapon can target us on our brooms, we can go take it out, and see what's going on outside." They had heard faint sounds of gunfire, but could not tell if it was coming from outside or downstairs.....it was both, but again, it was hard to tell. Drew chewed on it for a second, and looked up. Indeed the hole was big enough, and the Lycans would never think of a diversion from there. It was just rash enough that they probably wouldn't be expecting it.

"Okay, do it. Jim, Art, Ryan, you go, I need Jonas here. Take your wands and see what the situation is." Bouton, Art Hailey, and Ryan Chappelle, the best of the Senior flyers, sprinted to their rooms to retrieve their gear, and their coats. Just after another mortar round hit, Drew had them go up through the hole that had just been increased. They got outside in half a second, and what they saw almost made them fall off their brooms.

Back to the fourth floor, a few minutes earlier:

Dobby came back and gave the Brits their instructions. Harry looked at the twins with a bit of exasperation.

“They don’t want much do they?”

“You have a reputation to uphold I suppose. I guess we need to act fast.”

“We could always backtrack and go down another stairwell.”

“No, that would leave Proctor totally vulnerable, with no door to protect them. We have to do a rush of some kind.”

“Do you still have the Invisibility Cloak?” Harry hadn’t even looked at it in months, and it had totally slipped his mind, he having not really needed here at Great Lakes. Dobby was still there, and Harry had barely opened his mouth when the little guy was there and back with it. Harry gave it to Fred to put on.

“Stay to the right side of the hallway, George and I will walk our spells down the middle and the left if they start firing. If they don’t fire, all the better and you can get down there a lot more quickly and with more stealth. If you get hit, yell out something and we’ll Summon you back. Here, take this.” He took off the vest and gave it to Fred as well. Fred wasn’t too pleased about this, but rationalized that it would be better to have three wands firing down the hall than the two that would be if Harry was under the cloak.

“If it gets too hot for you, just duck into Proctor as quickly as you can, and ask for Ray Elwood, he’s our guy in there for pranks and things.” Fred nodded, and slipped both the vest, which just fit him, and the cloak, which would no longer house any two or three of them as it had used to. He looked down at his feet, and saw a bare shadow in the harsh overhead lights, but knocking out the lights in the corridor would have been too obvious. He inched out into the line of fire, but nothing happened, as the Lycans, unbeknownst to the Brits, had run below half on their ammo and were conserving it until they saw something.

Fred moved as quickly as he dared, but the 50 feet seemed to take forever rather than 40 seconds. All the while he was debating with himself on what to do, hoping that George and Harry would remember where he was, and be ready for when he did something. The closer he got, the slower he walked, trying desperately not to make any noise. He stole a look at the space formerly occupied by the Proctor door, and saw a cluster of kids with shaking wands, trying to be ready just in case, but scared blind all the same. He got to within 10 feet of the gun and the two Lycans and saw that they were totally fixated on the corner of the hallway that Harry and George were hiding at, which also gave them a clear line of sight on the Proctor door, in case the kids were foolhardy enough to try and leave.....the Lycans had heard Harry's instructions just as clearly as the kids had.

Once he got within that 10 feet he stopped, fearful of the shadow revealing him. The Lycans were on the left side of the space, which was not too great for him, given that both twins were right handed. Now he was debating the curse to use. Harry had told him of Murray's 'use whatever force necessary' statement, but he was unclear about whether or not it applied to he and his brother, the only two Wizards who were in the fight voluntarily. Harry had gotten him more attached to the Explosion Hex, Abrumpere, which was nothing more than a souped up version of Reducto, but effective without being Dark. He decided to use that, and counted to five in his mind, aiming at the one on the right, hoping that Harry and George would take the hint..

He threw the cloak off violently with his left arm, his right arm already raised. As soon as the cloak cleared:

“ABRUMPERE!” Fred, despite almost two years of NEWT Charms, could not do Silent Magic very well at all.

The Hex was aimed right at the face of the Lycan holding the spare ammunition, and it connected perfectly, killing him instantly.

Harry and George had indeed taken the hint, and had opened fire from the distance, with Repulsar. Given that they were prepared and not dodging fire, they hit their target with multiple hexes and knocked him back, which gave Fred just enough time to redirect his wand and hit him with another Abrumpere, to the chest. It didn't kill the Lycan, but hurt him pretty badly to the point of unconsciousness. He eyed the M-30 with a lot of distaste as he looked around that corner for more Lycans. He didn't find any, and waved the others over, they could see even from 50 feet away that he didn't want to make a lot of noise. George ran up to him while Harry took a detour into Proctor. He had known, via Dobby, of the fatality, but seeing the body rocked him a little, it was a Junior named Ross Karver. Harry had Transfiguration and Muggle Studies with him, though they had never talked. Injured was Transition Jeannie Baum, though she would eventually live.

“Everyone okay in here? We seem to have cleared the floor.” Ray was up front and answered him.

“We're still here, thanks to you and your guys. What do we do now?”

“Well the twins and I are going to try and help the faculty. The rest of you besides Ray are going to do precisely nothing, at least no more than you have. I don't want anyone to leave until the building is safe. Ray, I want you to go around to Cortez for a second and tell them that the floor is clear. Sophie bored a hole in the wall so she could listen, so you don't have to knock on the door. Just get to the edge of the swamp and tell them they can relax about an ounce, but they're not to come out either.....if they can, the twins sealed the door back up after they left.”

“And after I get back?”

“Barricade with every couch and piece of furniture you can in front of that opening. Anyone tries to come in, mass your fire at them, you should have enough advance warning to do some serious damage. Otherwise do NOT leave this Lounge, we can't cover every entrance ourselves, and some might slip past us. Now I gotta go, good luck.” He called for Dobby and had the little guy go fill in the teachers and Aurors. He then handed Ray a swamp and quickly jogged up to the twins, while Ray did his business with Cortez. The twins were at the stairwell and looked at him darkly, Fred addressing him.

“We may have a problem Harry.”

“What the hell else can go wrong?”

“That stairwell is booby trapped to high heaven.”

Meanwhile, in the air above Great Lakes:

Jim Bouton, Art Hailey, and Ryan Chappelle sped out of the building as quickly as they could without hitting anything, and saw four ground-based groups firing at each other. Even from a height of a couple hundred feet like they were flying at, they could tell the difference between the flashing lights that were bullets and the lights that were magical in nature. That was all they could see though, as Sheen had long since put Disillusionment Charms on all of his troops. That meant that the Aurors could only focus on the muzzle blasts from the machine guns to set their targets. So they could only get a good shot when they were already being fired upon. Not a good thing really.

The mortars, still just two of them fifteen feet apart, had not moved, and they watched as more rounds came crashing down on the top of the building, one just missing Harry's plants, though they of course didn't know anything about that. They pinpointed the location, and after a group huddle, decided on a power dive to take them out. Bouton and Hailey would go down first, with Chappelle in reserve, using Reducto as their main weapon. They flew up another hundred feet, and on a count of ten, Bouton and Hailey went straight down at the enemy, in a kind of Wronski Feint maneuver, though they didn't call it that, not needing it in Quodpot. The two Seniors, the best flyers in the Senior class in any House, screamed down, and began walking their fire into the mortars at about 50 feet. It was a textbook dive bomber assault, and one that would become a popular chapter in the next update of the Auror Training Manuals for both America and Great Britain and friends.

“REDUCTO!” “REDUCTO!”

They got off about five shots each before they had to pull out of the dive, and then Chappelle had his turn.....though it was not as successful, as he did not pull out in time and crashed into the left side mortar and it's user, which had only been dealt glancing blows by Hailey's run. Both of them, Chappelle and the Lycan, were killed by the harshness of the impact, and the mortar was damaged enough to be taken out of action. The other mortar had not been hit by Bouton's run, but he had managed to kill the Lycan manning it, seriously damaging the enemy forces opposing Mitchell Baylor and his troops.

Sheen, down to nine people including himself, cursed obscenely at the sight, having assumed that the mortars were doing much more damage than they were, and that he was losing a major asset instead of an annoyance. He turned to his partner:

“Hold off the Aurors, I need to deal with their Air Force.” Indeed Bouton and Hailey, while horrified at the sight of their friend dying, were enraged enough to want to keep going, and seemed to be preparing another dive. Sheen Summoned one of the Stinger launchers, and in the next breath two of the missiles. He quickly loaded one and aimed in the general direction of one of the flyers, which turned out to be Hailey. He pulled the trigger and the missile shot out of the launcher, locking on to the young man almost instantly.

Hailey had been looking in the general direction of Sheen to begin with, and saw the missile within a second of it being fired at him. He rocketed off as fast as he could, doing zero to 100 miles per hour at a rate that a Ferrari manufacturer would have been satisfied with. It was to no avail though, as the missile had only Hailey and Bouton as heat sources available, and Hailey was enough. The missile exploded less than a foot behind him, destroying him and his broom. Bouton, about fifty feet higher in the air, watched this unfold and immediately hurled himself at Sheen, who was frantically reloading the launcher as Bouton fired hex after hex at him from the air. The Lycan hadn't achieved the level of chieftain by being panicky though, and he managed to pull the trigger on the launcher and dodge Bouton's hexes simultaneously. The missile shot into the air as Bouton, who had seen enough movies about this kind of thing and who had learned a dear lesson from his best friend's death, immediately shot toward the Athletic Field, which was about 300 meters away. The missile, finding nothing but Bouton to follow, swung around in pursuit and quickly ate up the ground.

Bouton pushed his Nike Air Trafficker broom as hard as he could as he ate up the meters toward the stadium in what seemed like hours, but in reality were only about ten seconds. The missile was almost on him when he reached the west stands, and he abruptly pulled up and somehow did a 90 degree upward turn and shot straight into the air. Mr. Stinger was agile, but not that agile, as it plowed into the west stands, destroying a good bit of them. Bouton thought about landing for a minute to catch his breath, but knew that he couldn't really afford to do that. Instead, he flew up higher than before and flew in a long arc until he reached the Auror main position. The Lycans had picked their fields of fire very well, and while they had only killed one Auror, they had only lost the two troops of their own to the dive bombing attack, none to the Aurors, who were very wary of approaching the machine gun positions.

After landing, Bouton was led to Mitchell Baylor, and after assuring him that his son was not only safe, but had assumed the battle leadership of his House, filled the Head Auror in on what he knew of the situation inside, which wasn't much. He knew that the faculty were not involved in the action above their own floor, and that Harry seemed to be in control of the fourth floor, but that was it. Baylor and all the others around him were full of quiet, but sincere praise for the handiwork of Bouton and his deceased friends, saying that their efforts were some of the bravest that they had ever seen. Jim appreciated the praise, but soon enough the deaths of Art and Ryan hit him, and he was all but inconsolable, and played no further part in the rest of the engagement.

Fourth Floor:

“Booby trapped to high heaven eh? Please tell me that you’re joking with me inappropriately.”

“Nothing would give me more pleasure little brother, but I’m not. See for yourself, but for the love of Merlin don’t touch anything.” Harry did so, peering through the open doors, and seeing various packs of plastic explosives and claymore mines dotted along the walls, as well as tripwires criss-crossing the paths up and down. This was the work of Almeida and his three man crew, two of whom had explosives experience with the muggle Army, and who were now on the first and second floors doing who knows what.

“This is just wonderful, a contortionist would have trouble getting through that maze.” George had a suggestion:

“I say we question our friend here and see what we can get.”

“I’m really hoping that you have some Veritaserum stashed away in the shop.” Torture would probably take time that they didn’t have, with no guarantees of success or verification of success.

“Your hope is restored my good man. Dobby!” He popped in.

“Yes Twin George?” Unbeknownst to the twins, Dobby had marked both of them so that he and Winky could tell them apart, though it was a mark that only elves could see.

“In the third drawer of the black file cabinet in our bedroom is a vial of Veritaserum. Please fetch it for us.”

“Right away.” Dobby took about 20 seconds for his trip, and was back with the vial. After telling Dobby to stick around for a bit, Harry walked over the Lycan and woke him up. All three Brits had their wands in his face when he came to, and Harry addressed him.

“Rise and shine, as you Americans are fond of saying. Now here’s the deal: We want to ask you a few questions, and we have a quite painless way of doing so, if you behave. If you do not behave, we will make you suffer incalculably, the wound you have will feel like a paper cut after we’re done working on you. So you and I are going to come to an understanding. You stay in human form, and my brothers and I won’t kill you. You make the change, and you’ll be dead so quickly that you won’t know what hit you. We are not in a mood to be trifled with, as four of your colleagues have discovered in the last few minutes. Do we have terms?” The Lycan, a man by the name of Troy Alden, answered almost immediately.

“Yes.”

“Good, now open your mouth.” Alden did, and Fred dropped the requisite amount of Veritaserum in. They waited a couple of minutes for it to take effect, during which time Harry sent Dobby up to Drew and Jonas, and then on to Claudia to tell them what’s going on. They were not to leave their Lounges though, Harry was very clear on that. Dobby came back in a couple of minutes with acknowledgements from Harry’s friends, as well as a quick sketch of the Jefferson Air Raid. The mortar fire, Harry noticed, had stopped, at least there was no noise coming from up above. He had a quick thought hoping that his plants were okay, but put it aside for now.

The Lycan Troy Alden had by now become docile enough for the questions:

“How many of you are there?”

“25 total.” Well, 20 now that the Brits had represented.

“All Lycans.”

“Yes.”

“How many were detailed to be inside?”

“14.”

“Including you?”

“Yes.” That left nine more that were somewhere in the building.

“How many of you are also magical?”

“Two.”

“Who are they, and where are they?”

“Tony Almeida inside, Michael Sheen outside.” He filed these names away for future reference.

“Where was Tony Almeida detailed to be?”

“Freelance, he was to supervise the wiring of the explosives.” Harry had felt that it was too much to hope for that Almeida be one of the dead ones on this floor.

“How many of your kind are on the fifth floor?”

“There shouldn’t be any right now.”

“They weren’t trying to invade up there?”

“No, they were just supposed to booby trap the kids’ doors and the stairwells.”

“So the two Lounge doors are wired also?”

“I don’t know what Lounge means.” Almeida and Sheen had apparently not been totally specific with terms and names.

“The two doors leading to the dorms are wired?”

“Yes.” Harry turned to Dobby.

“Get up there and tell Drew and Claudia that, tell them that under no uncertain terms are they to touch those doors.”

“Yes Harry.” He popped away, and Harry turned back to Alden, who had a Weasley wand in each ear, just waiting for him to do something rash.

“How many other targets are being attacked right now?”

“I don’t know.”

“But more than just Great Lakes, right?”

“Yes.”

“Besides the fifth floor and the stairwells, where is Almeida wiring his explosives?”

“All along the first and second floors.”

“Is it a booby trap or is there a plan to detonate by remote control or something?”

“Both.”

“When is it to be detonated?”

“I don’t know.” Harry looked at his watch, it was now 4:20, only 20 bloody minutes had elapsed from the time the first salvo of missiles had been launched.

“It’s 4:20 am right now, when is your extraction time?”

“Sometime before 5:00 am, that’s all I know. We are to get a signal between 4:45 and 5:00, that’s all I know, we’ll know it when we get it.”

Harry racked his brain for anything else he could ask him, but time was of the essence here. Dobby came back, and with a look to them conveyed that Harry's instructions had been received and understood. Harry decided that nothing further was to be gained from this, and his own wand was already pointed at Alden's chest.

“Stupefy!”

“Well Fearless Leader? That told us a lot, but what do we do about it?”

“Well we still need to help the faculty, but we also need to think about some kind of evacuation. That's for Murray to decide though, I can only imagine how pissed she's going to be at me for dragging you two over here.” They both looked indignant.

“We dragged ourselves thank you very much.” Harry rolled his eyes at them.

“I'm sure that she'll see it just like that.”

“What is it Dad always saying? A rebellion is only acceptable if it wins?”

“We can only hope she's heard of that.” Harry knew that he was full of dung, Murray wouldn't do anything to any of them after the use they'd been to her this morning.

“Enough you two, we need to think about what to do here. Harry, you know these people downstairs the best, are they really any good?”

“Well they are trapped down there, not a good sign, but Murray and the Defense guys are combat experienced.” All the while Harry was looking around, trying to figure out a way around the stairwells. He knew there were no floos available, and he just assumed that there were anti-Apparition and anti-portkey wards in place.

“The only way down there is right through the floor here. We’ll Abrumpere our way through the floor, which can’t be all that thick.....” George interrupted him.

“And be filled with bullet holes inside of two seconds?”

“Don’t be a spoilsport George. All right, that is a complication, sure. Hang on a second.....nothing says that we have to be the first ones down through the floor.” Both twins got evil grins on their faces.

“That’s right, we do have a few bodies we can use.”

“The guy the Proctor people nailed is probably out, they almost cut him in half.....the guy who drowned in the muck would work, and the guy you stalked Fred.”

“What about our live fish?” Harry looked him over, and just to be safe:

“Stupefy!” The twins looked at him curiously.

“Not in my movie.” A reference from Scream that he had been dying to appropriate for himself, having seen it during the Christmas break. Fred and George were like ‘um, okay Harry’, but they didn’t say anything.

“No, we might need him later, besides the Aurors will want to question him I’m sure.”

“Well we had better get going. How many holes? One or two?”

“Two would be best, one at each end of the hallway here.” Their corridor was right above the faculty’s office row.

“We’re going to need more than just us, probably at least two people per hole at a minimum.” Harry wanted no part of that, he was likely to get a hiding from Sophie as it was.

“No, whomever we pick, we’ll hurt the feelings and pride of everyone else, and I can’t be having that. Dobby and I will take one hole, won’t we Dobby?” Dobby was nodding vigorously as the twins were wondering at Harry putting student politics and hurt feelings above his own safety. They didn’t question him though, presumably he knew these people and what they would do.

“Of course Harry, I will dangle the body while you do the attacking.” Fred had already walked over to the swamp, and he retrieved the drowned Lycan. He cleaned him up well enough, and transfigured his clothes into Wizard’s robes. Rigor had not quite set in, so he performed Petrificus Totalus on him, and then he conjured a stick and put it in his right hand. Harry and George came over to the scene and both started applauding.

“That is first rate Fred, we’ll do the same to the other one. We should use Cutting Curses though, it should give them less of a warning. Dobby, go down and explain our plan to Murray and Ripley, tell them aim for the Lycans and try to disable them, we’ll Summon the machine guns up here.” Dobby privately thought that the plan was reaching a bit, but the three didn’t ask for his input, and he was off to Murray within a second.

Third Floor:

“All right Dobby, tell Harry and the twins that we’ll be ready. As soon as the floor collapses we’ll start our part of the attack.”

“Yes ma’am.”

“No other students are helping you?”

“No ma’am, Harry only trusts Fred and George for this, he doesn’t want to risk anyone else.” Those teachers in the room sighed in relief, while the Aurors were incredulous that three teenage Wizards had not only taken out five Lycans, but were set to butcher another four with this rather unlikely plan.

“Thank you Dobby, good luck.” Dobby was off, and Murray looked at the others, focusing on the skeptical looking Aurors.

“This is our plan, and we have no other choice but for it to work. They could set those charges off at any time and collapse the school. Harry and his Weasley twins will come through for us, and we have to do all we can to help them. Get ready, we have two minutes.”

Third Floor:

Fred and George at one end, Harry and Dobby at the other. Magical ropes had been conjured, and wrapped around the necks of the already dead Lycans, with sticks glued to their right hands. The live fish, Alden, had now been Stunned multiple times, Harry not wanting anything coming at their backs while the operation was being carried out. Once the bodies were readied up, Harry and George started lightly cutting a rough circle on the floor with their wands, though not all the way through. This done, the two sides readied their puppets. Fred had one, Dobby the other.

“You ready Harry?!”

“On three!”

“One!”

“Two!”

“Three!”

George and Harry stomped hard on their circles, punching the sections of the floor out and sending it crashing to the third floor below. Dobby and Fred released their puppets, who fell feet first to the ground below, only to be perforated by mass quantities of M-30 ammunition, the sheer mass of which kept the bodies upright long after a living being would have died. As the bodies were being drilled, Harry and George leaned through the holes and shouted:

“ACCIO GUN!” “ACCIO GUN!”

The M-30's were summoned right to the waiting hands of both young men.....who then howled in pain as the barrels of the guns were white hot from just being fired. They managed to keep them on their floor though, as the Aurors took over and fired Avada Kedavra after Avada Kedavra at the four Lycans, who had their M-16's still, but they had been caught by surprise just enough. They were all dead in seconds, as Aurors flooded the hallways. Greenleaf immediately ran to the nearest stairwell, and found that it too had been fully wired with plastic explosives and claymore mines. Auror Pod Leader Kate Atkinson went to the other side, and found it to be similarly laden. Murray and Lyman helped a still gimpy Ripley out into the hallway, as she called up:

“Harry, you guys all right up there?”

Harry and George were both verbally cursing as they held their burned hands and arms, but were in it enough to shout back.

“We're fine, more or less. Those bloody guns were hot, we should have Summoned the damn Lycans instead!” Murray had heard the howls, and figured that they weren't from cheering.

“Come down, we'll get Dr. Carter up here with some salve for the burns.” Lyman left to go floo the good doctor.

“Sure thing, but here's a present for you first. We got you a live Lycan, hopefully not for too long.” Harry gave Alden a kick, and the young Lycan fell through the hole and thudded down at Murray's feet, though not startling her. Fred and George jumped through their hole, and strode down the hall toward the only person they recognized, Murray. After sending Dobby to check on Sophie and company, Harry did likewise, landing gracefully on his feet in front of his Headmistress. He pointed at the newly created dead bodies.

“Are they dead?”

“All four, your plan worked perfectly Harry.” Fred and George joined them, and Harry pointed at them.

“Our plan, Professor Murray. Do you remember Fred and George?” Murray smiled for the first time in awhile.

“How could I forget my daughter’s employers. Thank you, both.”

“Just looking out for the young one ma’am, we knew he would do something foolhardy and brave, it’s his lot in life.” The Aurors gathered around them and were introduced to the Brits, with lots of handshaking and compliments all around. Dobby came back and reported the situation normal upstairs, all four Houses knowing that they should not leave.....not that Shawnee could leave, and Jefferson only through the roof. Harry had one more quick assignment for him.

“Is Drew’s dad outside?” Atkinson, the Auror in charge here, replied:

“He should be.”

“Dobby, go find out what happened with the guys who flew out through the roof. I noticed that there were no more explosions up top, see what’s going on.” Dobby was away, and the Brits huddled, sort of, with Murray, Atkinson, and the Defense guys.

“Our live fish told us that there are explosives on every stairwell and under the first and second floors. The only way they’re not there, is if he was misled.”

“Highly unlikely, but you never know. I think we need to marshal the house elf staff to see if the explosives are there.” Fred had a salient question:

“Why haven’t you used them before now?”

“Because we haven’t really needed to, and our house elves will not participate in any attacks on anyone, be it Kindred, Lycan, or Wizard. I’m amazed that Dobby is liberated enough to have helped you like he did.”

“Dobby will do anything the youngster here wants him to, so far anyway. What are our options if the floors are wired? Do you have enough portkeys to get everyone to safety?”

“We do, but the wards are up and are simply too complicated to bring down, especially since we are essentially confined to the upper three floors here. We dare not tunnel through the floor like you guys did, we might set them off.”

“Do you recognize those names, Sheen and Almeida.” Heyman laughed bitterly.

“Tony was my roommate here for seven years, I never knew he had been Lycan infected though. I wonder for how long?” He trailed off. Murray was next.

“Michael Sheen was another schoolmate of ours, both of them were very smart and cunning, much like your Slytherins back in Britain, and they were very close friends while they were here, probably on the level of you three. The building hasn’t changed any from when they were here, they were the right ones to lead the attack. We had long heard rumors about Michael, but he was so good at covering his tracks. Some of us even thought that he was working for the muggle CIA.”

Dobby then came back, and filled them in on the dive bomber assault, and the deaths of Ryan Chappelle and Art Hailey. Heyman, rocked by the news of more deaths, nevertheless had an idea.

“Well send everyone in Shawnee and Jefferson out on their brooms, those that don’t have one can ride pillion.” Greenleaf shook his head, he didn’t much care for Heyman anyway, but he really disliked this idea.

“And send them where? To be targeted by more of those missiles? They sound like the Stinger variety, heat seekers. God only knows where the Lycans managed to get them from, they’re incredibly expensive. When we get out of this mess, we need to start checking the muggle news wires for any stories about ordnance facilities robbed. The mortars and M-16's don't come cheap either."

"I knew I should have asked that guy about something else. I'm new at this you know." Greenleaf just patted him on the shoulder.

"You've done very well Harry, don't worry."

"What about the floo from the offices? We could cut more holes in the floor and get them out that way." Murray looked pensive.

"No Josh, the same problems apply, where do we send them? We know from Harry's fish that there are more attacks being carried out. What place is safe at this moment?" They all fell into thought about just that. Harry and the twins knew that the shop and Isla de Marauder were totally safe, but that was the last resort. All three were amazed that there were no contingency plans for this kind of thing in place, not knowing about the lack of attacks historically when it came to schools. Growing up in a land shrouded by Voldemort, they simply assumed that this kind of thing happened all the time, with each country's own version of Voldemort. The twins only kept quiet to spare Harry any repercussions, and badly wanted to question the Americans.

Carter now appeared, with some burn ointment, magically enhanced, for Fred and Harry, who gratefully slathered it on their hands and forearms. Murray called for Raffles, the major-domo of the Great Lakes house elf staff, and explained to him about the explosives. He agreed without hesitation to do the checking himself, while firmly declining Dobby's assistance, and popped away. George turned to Harry and muttered to him

"Why doesn't he like Dobby?"

"I guess he thinks Dobby's too wild or something, with the sports kits he wears, and how popular he is with the students. I'm not sure of any specific details, Dobby doesn't really like to talk about it."

Heyman and Greenleaf were still arguing about the evacuation, and Harry was waiting for an opportunity to jump in when Raffles suddenly came back.....with a bullet hole in his chest. He gasped out.

“They’re on the first floor, lots of explosives.....and a Wizard leading them.” He passed out, and Carter rushed him down to the med station, but to no avail, within a few minutes, Raffles had died. Carter came back to tell them.

Harry had rarely seen Murray angry period, but this was a new.....well, low. Just then, a Magis Sonorus voice called out to them.

“Hello Wizards and Witches. How do you like our show so far? I’m betting that some Aurors have flooded in by now, while more still are being killed outside, not that they will do much for you.” It was Tony Almeida. He had a raspy voice, but it rang clear enough throughout the building.

“See how easy it was to get at them, at your children? You really should have looked out for them better Joanne. Without your British import you would be in very bad shape right now, oh yes, I know all about Harry Potter. By now you have probably learned that the building is wired with many, many explosives. Your little kids cannot escape, and I know you will not abandon them. Perhaps you need an example of what is to come.” The ‘transmission’ stopped, and everyone on the third floor seemed to freeze. Then it happened:

“ BOOM BOOM BOOM BOOM BOOM BOOM!” As charges underneath a certain section of the hallway floor exploded, collapsing said floor and sending a few people down to the floor below, which in turn then exploded, sending down to the ground floor, and into the Dining Hall. Among them were a still injured Ripley, Lyman, and our three Brits. The delay had been for a certain Lycan/Wizard to do a quick scan. Our players were met by Almeida and friends, rifles at the ready.

At The Pathfinder School:

The Lycan attack had, by now, fizzled as the missile team expended all of its ordnance, and the attack team had not gotten close enough to do any damage. The Stingers did do quite a bit of damage to the mountain and the school foundation, but no students or faculty were hurt in the operation. The Lycan national leadership, and there was a structure there, had considered this location to be an almost pointless waste of valuable resources, but they ultimately resolved that the symmetry of attacking all four magical schools outweighed all of that. The Lycan contingent, the smallest one of the eight at only 20 men originally, retreated down the mountain after about 25 minutes, and then converged at the rendezvous point to portkey back to their home base. They lost 12 of their number, mostly due to the Incendio fire from the faculty above. All 12 of the bodies were either incinerated in the fires, or tumbled down the mountain to be collected by the Auror disposal teams later. There were no prisoners taken by either side.

At The Salem Witches Institute:

The Aurors, all of whom were doing battle with the Lycans outside the school, were getting better than they got, but this was still taking too long as they waited for more shoes to drop. The Lycans had a seemingly endless supply of portkeys as they popped around the outsides of the wards, taking a long series of shots with their automatic weapons, and waiting for the Wizards to re-deploy. Once the Wizards got into positions, the Lycans would disappear again. There was no set pattern, once the Aurors looked back on it, and clearly the Lycans had been studying past failures and learning from them. Eventually the Lycans portkeyed away one time too many for the Aurors, and they didn't come back. The Aurors had lost five troops in the fight, while dealing out 8 fatalities to the Lycans, none injured on the Lycan side either, so no prisoners.

At Tecumseh:

The conservative strategy of Burke and Hill, a longtime mentor/protégé partnership, paid off far more than they had any right to expect it to. The Burke/Hill and Aylesworth pairs split up, and spent 30 minutes taking potshots and quickly ducking behind columns and around corners. It was all to little avail though, as the Tulsa based Aurors had chosen to concentrate on wiping out the Lycans outside, so no help was coming from that quarter. The Lycans took the fire from the two teams and went about their business despite the intermittent harassment. They were not trying for any kidnappings, none of the attack groups were really, that was just a bit of license on the part of Michael Sheen during his warm-up speech.

They got their explosives work done in short order, but the two Wizard teams knew all along what was going on, and were able to communicate this, through the house elf staff, to the rest of the faculty and students. They decided on a proactive approach to evacuation, and after finding out which direction the battle outside was coming from, they blew out the side of the building on the section opposite the battle. The kids were taken out double file and led outside the limit of anti-portkey wards, where the students were evacuated, in teams of five, to the Southwest Auror Headquarters. The evacuations were half over when the school exploded behind them, showering debris and other various and sundry things all over the remaining students. The Lycan v. Auror battle raged on for another 10 minutes after that, with the enraged Aurors taking chances that they perhaps would not have otherwise.....or perhaps should have taken sooner, a distinction that would be argued about quite a bit later.

They advanced quickly with an exhausting battery of Avada Kedavra, taking more than a few bullets in the process, but advancing quickly all the same. This surprised the Lycans to the point that they did not have time to mass together for the portkeys out, so only six of the overall group managed to escape. Three had been killed inside by Burke, Hill, and the Aylesworths, and another 14 outside. That left two potential prisoners, one who got away simply by doing the change, and another who was in fact captured. That Lycan, Larry Platt, was the only Lycan captured in the battles, along with Troy Alden, captured by Harry and the twins.

First Floor Great Lakes:

The five Wizards crashed through the two floors hard, all of them landing on their backs or on their butts. Almeida and his boys, just five of them now including him, were ready and opened fire with their M-16's. Ripley was the nearest target, and took a few more bullets for the team, none of them immediately fatal. He went down though, and his legs were again riddled with bullets, and a few shrapnel fragments from the explosions. Lyman's comeback to Harry back in August:

"I have wand talents thank you very much."

Was proven out as he whipped his wand up and fired:

"AVADA KEDAVRA!" His shot nailed one of the Lycans right between the eyes, dropping him like a rock. Another Lycan took aim at Fred, who was gingerly getting up, and shot him in the back with a three round burst.

Fred was still wearing the vest though, and the bullets, even at a 15 foot distance, simply bounced off. The earlier salvo that hit Harry had not even left any marks, neither did this one. Harry and George fired on Fred's attacker, as Harry used his first killing curse, though more than likely not his last.

"AVADA KEDAVRA!" "AVADA KEDAVRA!" Both curses hit home, as another Lycan went down. Almeida saw this, and changed his mind from finishing off Ripley, and he aimed right at the George's chest from less than 10 feet away. Harry saw this and as Almeida was pulling the trigger, quick drew his Voldemort wand out:

"REPULSAR!"

Hitting George in the back, pushing him out of the way and down to the ground as the bullets passed right where he would have been. Almeida barely flinched, and before Harry could turn around, fired a three round burst that hit Harry in the left shoulder and upper chest, dropping him like the proverbial rock. Lyman responded by missing Almeida with a Killing Curse, but instead hitting another one of his troops, though not before taking a bullet in the arm for his troubles. Now the only ones unhurt were Fred and George, both of whom were now concentrating on Harry and how to protect him. They whipped up their wands at Almeida and his last remaining comrade, who had their guns up as well, having barely used up any ammunition in the relatively closed in firefight. Ripley had passed out from the totality of his injuries, and Lyman was scrambling around to get his non-wand hand around his stick.

Harry was lying on the ground, blood not quite pouring out yet, as he waited for the next bullets to come at him. He was fully conscious, and in a large amount of pain, but still very lucid. He looked up and saw the standoff, and heard Almeida clear his throat.

“Enough. You’ve proven your point Harry Potter.” He put his wand to his throat.

“All you teachers and Aurors up there, you are to stay put, or I will fire the entire building. I might die in the rubble, but so will your precious children, don’t test me!” He turned back to Harry, Fred, and George.

“Now what the hell am I to do with you three? This is not your war you know, you have that Voldemort moron back home to deal with. You really want this?” Harry croaked out.

“This is my home damn you.” Almeida, who had vaguely Latino features, though with some Polish in there too, just smiled.

“Well I guess I don’t blame you there, I do have fond memories of this place believe it or not. This would be so much easier if you Wizards would have just stayed neutral like you always have. Put your wand down Josh, you never could do anything with your left hand and you know it.”

“Screw you Tony. How long ago did they turn you? Was it Sheen who did it?”

“This is not the time for such a conversation unfortunately, but maybe someday Josh. The stories I could tell you. Now I’m going to let you guys live for now and take my exit, you don’t fire on me, and I won’t on you. I’m sure this goes against your every principle Harry, but you’re leaking blood by the pint here, no point in exerting yourself any further. It might seem as though we have each other cornered, but it only seems that way.” He put up his hand and did a twirling motion with his index finger. His remaining associate ran out the door, followed by a slowly backing away Almeida. Once he was gone, Lyman shouted up to the third floor that they were gone.

The twins immediately knelt by Harry, and Lyman by Ripley. Lyman spoke first:

“He’s hurt pretty bad, if we don’t get him to Carter pretty quick he’s in trouble. If one of you guys could levitate him back up there.” Murray and the Aurors had apparently taken Almeida’s threats seriously, and were only now looking over the edge. Fred had finally had enough.

“You people really don’t have a bloody floo on every floor? What the hell kind of hot dog stand are you folks running here!” No one loved an argument more than Lyman, but getting Ripley and Harry to the med station was his focus now. Harry, with George’s help, had now gotten to his feet, though he was very unsteady on his feet. The bullets had all passed through, two in the shoulder and one through his pectoral muscle, thankfully missing the major veins and arteries. The blood was still trickling out, and he knew that he would be sleeping tonight in a med station somewhere.

“Just get him up there, and no, there isn’t a floo on the ground floor or the second floor, only in the third floor offices.” Fred did as he was asked though, and levitated Ripley up to Murray, where she and Greenleaf quickly sent him down to Carter, who was told that Harry would be along shortly. Lyman looked over at him, all the while holding his broken forearm, which was still bleeding.

“Your turn Harry.” Harry, on the other hand, had no intention of going anywhere. He was looking around, trying to put aside the pain and figure out a way out of this mess.

“Not yet, we have to think of something to stop these explosives. Dobby!” He popped in and did not notice Harry’s condition at first.

“Yes.....no Harry, you are going to the med station right this second, I will brook no arguments.” Harry’s voice showed how tired he was.

“Fortunately for me Dobby, I’m your employer as well as your friend, so I’m going to do as I please. Go outside and see how the battle is progressing, and then check out the Quidditch Pitch, see if any of the Lycans are near it.” Dobby looked like he was about to continue the argument, job be damned, but Harry got that look on his face and pointed toward the outside. George got his good shoulder as he held him up, and Harry pocketed his wands, and Summoned a few other things from the ground.

“What are you thinking?”

“I’m thinking that Almeida is going to fire the school any second now. Are there any kinds of barriers we can put up between the second and third floors?” All three of them looked pointedly at Lyman, as Murray and Atkinson were shouting down, wondering where Harry was.

“That’s a question for Janel or Elizabeth, or even Greenleaf, it’s more in their milieu.” A rope was being lowered as they spoke, more a hint than anything else. The twins saw the writing on the wall and gave in, and before Harry could object, they levitated him up to the top, followed by Lyman, and after that they shimmied up the rope, showing heretofore physical talents not hinted at. Once they got up, they saw that Murray and Harry were arguing.

“You need medical attention Harry, you’re about to bleed to death!” Harry either couldn’t raise his voice, or chose not to, he would never tell the twins which.

“And I will as soon as we figure this out. Besides, I’m not going under the knife in a med station that could be buried in an explosion.” Murray was about to argue the point when she realized that he was correct.

“I’m not trying to be insubordinate or disrespectful, but you need every brain here until we stop this. Now what about those barriers? A: would they work? B: if so, can we get them up in time?” All eyes turned to Janel Maloney and Elizabeth Westin. Maloney spoke first.

“They can work if we place them just right, and we’re wasting time with every second we debate. I’ll be right back.” Westin seemed just as sure, and Harry wondered if they had been talking about it before he and the twins had returned upstairs.

“We can save the floors, but probably not the stairways, they’re too loaded with the bombs.” Heyman now flooded in from his office, he had been talking with Isaac Jaffee back at Midwest Auror Headquarters for the last 10 minutes.

“They Lycans have been beaten back at Pathfinder and have retreated at Salem.” Murray now turned to him.

“And Tecumseh?”

“Destroyed, but with all students and faculty evacuated. Apparently they blew holes in the side of building away from the gun battle outside, and portkeyed away when they reached the outer edge of the ward zone.”

“Where else were they attacking?”

“Corrinus, Flackter, and Chrokar, all seemed to be diversionary efforts designed to tie our Auror friends down. We’re the only school still engaged, more Auror support should be arriving outside at any minute.” Maloney came back in, walking in from the outside, not from the floo. She strode over to Murray’s desk and slammed a book down. She took a highlighter from the desk and scribbled all over the page.

“That’s what we have to use.”

Aegis Inivus Obmolior

“It can extend up to 10 square feet person, so if we use everyone, we can get it up in a couple of minutes.” Murray wasted little time:

“Everyone spread out, do your own offices and living quarters completely. Aurors, cover the hallway. Fred, George, if you will assist Dr. Carter and Nurse Burbank down in the med station please. Harry, you will help me in here, I don’t want you to leave my sight until this is all over. Go now.” Everyone dispersed, and Harry and Murray quickly took care of her office and living quarters, and with the necessary overlapping, it took about three minutes.

Outside on the Great Lakes perimeter:

The Lycans were running out of ammunition, despite a portkey gift from the home office that replenished them, and Sheen was ready to give the all clear signal. This was taking too long, he thought worriedly, Almeida was taking far longer than he should have to place the charges. Maybe he had taken some hostages, Sheen figured. Sheen too knew about Harry being in the building, he read The Chronicle as much as the next man, but he had discounted most of the stories about Harry as mere hyperbole, and did not factor him in as a problem when the planning had been worked out. As the Lycans got down to their last belts of M-30 ammunition and their last few clips for their M-16’s, Sheen saw Almeida and his last remaining henchman sprinting out of the school. Sheen quickly took a modified flashlight out of his pocket and shone it up to the sky, it flashed bright red. The extraction signal.

The remaining Lycans all went rock and roll with their ammunition as they ran toward either Sheen, who had disillusioned himself, or Almeida, who had probably set a 400 meter record for someone of his age. The Aurors managed to nail two more of them from long range, but Sheen and Almeida were not among them as they portkeyed away, but not before Almeida squeezed something.. Mitchell Baylor, slightly wounded himself from a ricochet round, ran with his team toward the school only to be stopped by a muffled explosion that seemed to destroy the bottom two levels of the school and all along the sides.....but the building did not totally collapse.

The shields had held, and floors three through five at Great Lakes, stairwells excluded, were being held up magically as they seemed to almost float down on top of the powder that was formerly the classrooms, Dining Hall and various other rooms. When the upper floors landed, they shook for what seemed like minutes, but nothing was destroyed, at least nothing that contained a living person or elf.

Meanwhile, inside the building, all 300 plus students and faculty had their hearts in their throats as the school came settling down, at some tilted angles as there were some parts of the first and second floors that were not quite turned into powder. Harry, unsteady anyway, walked out into the hallway and looked at the exploded parts from before. He could see the hole, but the explosives had not been allowed to force themselves upward. He swayed a little bit, the bleeding had been stopped by a Murray provided bandage, and finally collapsed toward the floor.

Only to be caught by the twins, who had come out from Murray's office looking for him. They kept him upright as his vision began to fog over a little bit.

"All right junior, I think you've had enough for today. You saved us both you know." Harry tried to shake his head.

"Rubbish, you bailed me out yet again."

"Not so little brother, you pushed me out of the way when the bullets came. You gave Fred that vest to wear, or he would have been shot in the back."

"We're family, family does that kind of thing.....our family more often than others I think though." Harry tried to laugh, but his injuries, with his still cracked ribs from before, had finally caught up to him. The twins dragged him back into Murray's office.

"The little bastard here needs to be taken downstairs.....if you still had some stairs. I'll go with him, George will go upstairs with you lot and reassure some panicky Cortez people." Heyman had already climbed up through one of the puppet holes and was attempting to negotiate the twin swamps in front of Cortez and Proctor. George joined him, and muttered a few words with some complicated motions of his wand. The swamp went bye bye, and Heyman looked curiously at George, of whom he had heard much about but never met until a few minutes earlier.

“Sorry sir, trade secret.” Heyman then persuaded the Proctor students into letting him through the barricade, convincing them that he wasn’t some Lycan under Polyjuice. That potion wouldn’t work on a non-magical anyway, but they didn’t know that. George had gone over to Cortez, where took care of the swamp and unsealed the door. He yelled into the hole Sophie had made, though no one was monitoring it at the moment.

“Warrick! Sophie! Reiko! It’s George, I’m coming in.” He gingerly opened the door and prayed that the kids wouldn’t be too trigger-happy. They weren’t though, and he was quickly besieged not by spells, but by questions. He finally had to raise his hands.

“QUIET, ALL OF YOU!” That got them settled down in a hurry, as they now noticed that he had more than a little of Harry’s blood on him.

“For those of you who haven’t been told, I’m George Weasley. Okay, here’s the deal: The school is no longer under attack, no kidding. The explosion you heard and felt was on the bottom two floors, but we managed to create some barriers that stopped the explosives from going up to the top three floors. Don’t ask me how, just know that it worked. As far as we know there were only three students killed, one next door at Proctor and two from Jefferson. Everyone else is okay except for a few wounded. You are to stay here until that Heyman guy or Professor Murray comes to tell you differently. I repeat though, you are in no immediate danger any longer. Questions can wait until one of your teachers gets here.” He pointed at the gang.

“You three, come with me.” They left, a bit stunned that their jokester of a friend was so hard looking. Once out the door, now closed again, he addressed them in a somewhat softer tone of voice.

“All right then, Harry is hurt and is in the Hospital Wing, or Med Station or whatever you Yanks call it. He’s going to be fine, a few bullets won’t kill Harry. I need you lot to come with me to the top floor.” The three were so stunned that they didn’t argue with him, even Sophie, as he proceeded to blast his way through the ceiling. Brooking no questions, he had them get him up, after which he levitated them up as well. He approached the Shawnee door, and called out for Dobby.

“Yes Twin George?”

“Go in there and have them all get into their rooms, I need to get this door open.” He did, and George contemplated how to do this. He had seen the Proctor blast, which should, in theory, have used the same type and quantity of explosives. Just then, a Pod of Aurors came up through George’s homemade opening, apparently with the same idea. Kate Atkinson was the leader of Pod 12.

“You going to blow the door?”

“As soon as Dobby tells me that the kids are back far enough.”

“Good idea, we’re going to need to figure out a new stairway pretty soon.”

“My Lord, are you people really thinking of staying here?”

“There are Advanced Wards we can put in place to make sure that this never happens again.” Dobby stopped George’s impolite reply as he came out to tell them that the coast was clear. George had him go to Jefferson with the same message, and then readied himself to blast the door.

“Stand back you lot.” They did, and he stepped back 10 feet and aimed at the door.

“Repulsar!”

That was just enough pressure to blow the door in and turn it into a hail of wooden shrapnel. Shawnee would need a few new computers and three new televisions, but the students were all hiding as instructed, and no one was hurt, Shawnee being the only House not to take any casualties this day. He took Reiko and Warrick aside.

“Give them the same briefing I gave you, then get back downstairs, Sophie and I will take care of Jefferson.” They nodded and went inside, along with two of Atkinson’s people. The other five of them went along to Jefferson, where George repeated the procedure. As Atkinson and her two subordinates went inside, George stopped Sophie from following.

“Look, Harry’s going to be okay, he took two bullets to the shoulder and one to the chest, but he was functioning okay after that and he helped with the barrier making. Our boy did well today Sophie.”

“As long as he’s going to be okay.”

“He will be, I don’t remember him saying anything about that Carter guy being a quack, so I’m assuming he’s in good hands. Now I want to make sure ahead of time that you aren’t going to kill Harry yourself for not letting you fight with him.....well, us.”

“I know why he wouldn’t let us, but it was still hard.”

“I’m sure it was, and you wouldn’t be loyal if you three hadn’t wanted to go with him. But it was for the best Sophie, Harry would have gone crazy with worry if you had been out there, and trust me when I tell you, we needed him totally sane out there. He saved my life, pushed me out of the way when the bullets came. Fred and I, and this school, needed our little brother out there, not your boyfriend. They’re two different people Sophie, at least in battle.” Sophie didn’t disagree, but a few tears came out anyway, as George awkwardly put his arm around her. Drew and Jonas came out now, and George was introduced to the Marauder he hadn’t yet met.

“Good to meet you, Harry says a lot of nice things about you Drew.”

“Likewise George, I’ve been hearing about you two for months. Um, if you don’t mind me asking, are you bleeding?”

“Nah, that’s Junior’s blood.....sorry, Harry’s. He’s in the med station right now getting operated on I’m betting.”

Indeed he was, Carter and Burbank were working on Ripley, while Julie Parrish and Ben Taylor, the doctor and nurse respectively for Pathfinder/Tecumseh, healed up Harry. The med station had not been impacted by the blast, other than a few things falling to the ground, though it was odd to see the faculty offices right above through the holes in the floor. Harry never lost consciousness throughout the procedure, and Taylor, a rather chatty fellow, talked him through what they were doing to him. This was the same arm/shoulder that Lockhart had ‘experimented’ with years ago, and he groggily told the story of that to an amused Parrish and Taylor.

Murray did make it upstairs, going from House to House to assure them that the danger had passed. She collected George to come back down with her after she was done, saying that Harry was just about done being worked on.

“Look, I owe you and your brother, we all do. Thank you George, the loyalty you two have to Harry is quite inspiring.”

“You’re welcome Professor Murray. It’s a good thing we were visiting Harry with your permission today wasn’t it?” Murray gave a full smile for the first time in awhile.

“Yes it was George, very fortuitous. Results govern all. When you two get here officially in April, you will be sorted directly into Cortez by my decree, chairs be damned.” George wasn’t so bashful that he wasn’t planning to ask for that very thing, but he didn’t mention this.

“That’s very nice of you, a proper reward for our efforts. Fred and Harry will be very happy.” He was not being sarcastic, and Murray was relieved that he was taking things so calmly.

“Good, now I need to go do some paperwork to account for you two being here, and do a few other things, like figure out how to rebuild the school and all. Just let me know when you two take off, stay as long as you need to.” George checked his watch, it was now 5:05 am here in America.

“Thank you ma’am.” George reached out his hand, and she took it, a sign of respect for the both of them. He walked over to the floor and went downstairs, while Murray assembled the faculty and all Aurors present, for a meeting. The featured guest was Abel Rosnovski, the great great great grandson of the architect of Great Lakes and Tecumseh, and who had kept up the family business of designing and constructing magical houses and buildings. He had been awoken almost immediately after attacks commenced, and gave a quick report to them:

“Tecumseh has been totally destroyed, Salem has suffered a modicum of damage, with Pathfinder simply needing some structural repair in its foundation. You folks here are in the middle of that spectrum.”

“How long will it take to get us up and running again?”

“Tecumseh is going to be the first to be rebuilt I would think, then you, followed by Pathfinder. Salem will probably get worked on in the summer, most of their damage can be fixed with Reparo from what I’m told, given that the damage was all from long range.”

“Even the missile damage?”

“Yes Professor Heyman, even that. The order of course is a political decision. I understand that President Chabon is working on a temporary relocation plan for the Tecumseh students as we speak.”

“And the cost?”

“Probably along the lines of $40-45 million, give or take.” All but Murray gasped, but she had been privately assured that the government’s newest cash crop, the DVD movie disc, was due for worldwide launch later in the year. The royalties from that bit of technology would keep the coffers full and pay for full reconstruction of the four schools. It was nice to have connections.

“How long will it take to rebuild Tecumseh?”

“About a week, once we get the go ahead. We can conceivably start this afternoon, I am confident that it will be given top priority. The cost of replacing what was inside is another matter, and will likely take longer to solve.”

“What damage was done to the Alley’s? What about the Congressional Building?”

“Bullet damage only, the Alley attacks were only to cause damage and tie down Aurors. The Congressional Building is so secure that they never even got close to it, though it did suffer some Stinger damage. I came here via Flackter and nothing was so badly damaged that it cannot be quickly repaired.” Rosnovski was a Chicago native, and Flackter was his Alley of choice. Murray stood up.

“Thank you Abel, I’m sure you have many other people to see today, so we won’t keep you.” The man smiled gratefully.

“No problem Joanne, my people will be in touch a few hours from now, after we get our orders from President Chabon.” He left via the floo, and Murray turned to her staff.

“Obviously there were to be no classes today anyway, being a Saturday and all, and there is a decent chance that we might be able to get them going on Monday in some fashion, both in the basement and in our offices here and in the Lounges. Now we need to contact the families of Ross Karver, Art Hailey, and Ryan Chappelle, and all the other families for that matter, but those three first. Jeannie Baum and Harry Potter are in the med station right now, and knowing Harry he won’t be there for long. Let him do as he likes though, within reason.” Toby Ziegler was fidgeting in his chair, and finally came out with what he had been wrestling with.

“Shouldn’t we be discussing the possibility of changing locations? No offense to our Auror friends here, but I see no reason why this kind of attack can’t be repeated.” She had been waiting for something like that.

“That is not up to us Toby, like Abel said, it’s a political decision.” Ziegler was undeterred.

“What will you press for?”

“We can put the entire area under Fidelius, that way no one can see us but those we want to. We can make magical modifications to the surrounding landscape and buildings, so that even from the air, Sheen and Almeida cannot harm us again.” Josh Lyman now got into it, after some hard thinking.

“Why wasn’t this done before now? That Weasley kid was right, we were not very well prepared for this kind of thing, our wards were little more than muggle Tornado Warnings. If our British imports hadn’t bailed us out, we would be planning the funerals of a lot of dead kids right now.” Murray was in full agreement with the sentiment, though not the timing of it.

“This is not the time or place for recriminations Josh and you damn well know it. We have three dead children to see to, and we need to let our students grieve for them, and adjust to what happened. We’ve all been through a serious trauma here, our lives have been threatened, and only four people in this school have experienced that before, two of whom are now in the med station.” Ripley and Harry, she was not yet counting Fred and George it seemed.

“Now I want at least five of you in every Lounge for the remainder of the day and night to take care of any counseling of the students, with particular attention to Proctor and Jefferson. Riley, I want you to work with the House Elves for the meals, which will all be in the Lounges for the time being.” Poole had sat there quietly, relieved that the school and his home were not more damaged than they were. Since the Quidditch announcing fiasco, he had said the same thing every time Murray told him to do something:

“Yes ma’am.”

“Good, all of you but David and Dick please leave now.” They did, though she was a little disquieted to see Ziegler and Lyman leaving together, talking intently to one another. Left in the room now were the Aurors and Heyman and Greenleaf.

“Mitchell, I would like to be a part of the questioning of the Lycan Harry captured.”

“That’s fine Joanne, we’re going to give him until this afternoon to wait, to let the Veritaserum from Harry get out of his system.”

“I’m sure I can find something to do until then. Dick, I want you to go downstairs to the med station, and when Harry is lucid enough, get a written transcription of everything he experienced, and then forward a copy to the President’s Office, and Jacobson’s as well. No one had more contact with the Lycan invaders than he did, his insights will be invaluable. And make sure that Tom will be okay, he took the worst of the damage among the living.”

“Right, he’s a tough old bird though, he’ll be fine.” Greenleaf was a year younger than the 44 year old Ripley, and never let him forget it.

“David, I want you to go on Radio Wizard America and assure all the parents who are listening that things are under control here. I’m sure that will give Sheen and Almeida a laugh if they’re tuning in, but we have no other choice. We have to keep up the illusion of control, even if we’re barely hanging on to it by the skin of our teeth.”

“Got it. You’ll contact the Karvers, Haileys, and Chappelles?”

“The first two, yes. Ryan Chappelle’s parents disavowed him a long time ago. The Boutons have been taking him in during the holidays.” This had pre-dated Heyman’s appointment as Deputy, so he hadn’t been aware of it.

“We’ll reconvene here no later than 8:00 am, hopefully I will have something from President Chabon by then.” The two men nodded, and took their leave. Murray made her floo calls, and promised them that their sons’ bodies would be ready for them by the afternoon. She requested that the funerals, or at least a funeral, for each of them be held at school, so that their friends could grieve, and permission was given. She did not get torn a new rear end by the families however, like she had feared. Art Hailey’s father wept with pride when she told him the story of his son’s death, a hero’s death. Likewise David Bouton felt much the same way when told about the way Ryan had died. Ross Karver was raised by his mother as a single parent, and she too felt pride that her son was in the front line to defend his House, only that way had he been in the line of fire to be killed by the explosion. There was no hate toward anyone spoken, though the Lycans had just acquired a few new strident enemies, but that would be more manifested later.

It only took 20 minutes to make the floo calls, but Joanne had rarely felt more rung out. She looked at her watch and wanted to scream, it would be a long day. She reached for the telephone on her desk, the only one in the school. She hit a pre-programmed number, and then spoke into the phone.

“Dr. Murray please, it’s his wife calling, we had a bit of an emergency here.” She waited a very long minute.

“I’m fine Neil, we had a situation here.”

Flashback a little while to the med station:

Parrish and Taylor finished up on Harry in short order. They had his chart from the September and assured him that his injuries were no worse in scope. Bullet wounds were a much studied discipline in Wizard medical circles, and most Wizard doctors and nurses had some muggle hospital experience. Fred and George watched the whole thing, trying to be as non-threatening as they could, but their serious expressions were not lost on everyone else. Soon thereafter, Josh Lyman escorted the rest of the gang down, as Harry lay there, more or less conscious. Sophie rushed over to him and hugged him.

“Are you okay?”

“Well, I’ve been shot.” As Harry has said earlier to his Lycan fish, way wrong answer.

“I am so not in the mood for your sense of humor Mister.” Harry adopted a contrite look that he didn’t really feel.

“I’m sorry.”

“For what? There had better be a long list of things.”

“Well for stating the obvious just now, and.....” He trailed off, clearly not able to think of much else.

“For going out to fight that battle, that’s what you’re supposed to say next.”

“Only I’m not sorry for that. I mean I can lie if you want me to Sophie, but it’s a slippery slope once you start lying to your loved ones.” That didn’t stop her, though at no point was she actually shouting or otherwise raising her voice. The other Americans just looked at Harry like ‘you made your bed there buddy’.

“Just tell me one good reason why you had to do it.”

“Because it was necessary.” She waited for more than that, and when it wasn’t forthcoming....

“And who decides what is necessary?”

“Well this morning, I did.”

“That’s it?”

“It worked didn’t it? I’m now the proud owner of a few Lycan scalps hanging from my belt, figuratively of course. Remus will shit in his pants when he finds out about that.” Sophie finally started smiling, to everyone’s quiet relief.

“I’m sure all of your people back there will have options when they next go to the bathroom, after they hear about all this.” Harry saw the meter swinging toward him, and he pounced.

“No doubts there. At least tell me you understand why I didn’t take you with me.”

“I do, Reiko and George have both been beating that into me with a soft stick. I know you didn’t want to have to worry about me, or any of us.”

“That, and I needed people I trusted to watch out for the other students. You needed to be there to watch their backs.” And I don’t trust you in any kind of battle yet, Harry thought but didn’t say.

“Are you in a lot of pain?”

“No, they have me potioned up. I’ll be fine by this time tomorrow. Fred, George, how’s Professor Ripley doing over there?” Fred had intermittently been checking on the Defense teacher.

“He’s still out, but they got all the bullets and he’ll be fine after some rest.”

“I’m glad, he’s a good guy.” They stuck around and chatted for awhile, plying Harry with his favorite Dr. Pepper by the glassful. Harry was about to kick the twins out of the room and back to Britain, when a group of people swept in. At the head of them, flanked by two deadly serious looking Auror bodyguards, was a tall man with long black hair, in his mid-40’s. After a brief stop at Ripley’s bed, he moved over to Harry’s. He greeted Harry with a smile, and an outstretched hand.

“Hello there Harry, my name is Michael Chabon.” That’s President Michael Chabon, he didn’t need to add.

Hogwarts Great Hall

Lunchtime GMT

Dumbledore, after furious whispering between himself, Remus, and McGonagall, rose and cleared his throat very loudly. The students quickly fell silent, as they awaited his words. Those who thought quickly enough assumed it was about Draco, but they were wrong.

“I have an announcement to make, one that I wish I did not have to. Early this morning in America, werewolves armed with muggle firearms and explosives assaulted eight targets: Flackter Alley in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Chrokar Alley in Tulsa, Oklahoma; Corrinus Alley in San Francisco, California; The Congressional Building in Boston, Massachusetts; The Pathfinder School in Mount Fremont, California; The Salem Witches Institute in Holyfield, Massachusetts; The Tecumseh Magical Academy in Alice Springs, Oklahoma.” He paused, and every student knew which school was coming next.

“And the Great Lakes Magical Institute near Seney, Michigan. Great Lakes and Tecumseh were partially destroyed by the explosives, as were many businesses in the three Alleys that were attacked. I also have word that our friend and former schoolmate Harry Potter was badly injured in the attack, but is expected to make a full and speedy recovery. By all accounts he comported himself bravely and nobly, joining the faculty and Aurors in the successful defense of his school. As the school well knows, Harry and I have had our differences in the last year, but no one, least of all me, can question his courage and honor. I salute him.”

He raised his glass of pumpkin juice, keeping one eye peeled onto Neville the entire time, hoping that his performance was being noted by the student Harry was most likely to be in close contact with. And it was, Neville and the others had gone very pale, none more so than Hermione, both with guilt over her freeze out of Harry, and being the one member of the DOM crew to have an idea of what muggle weapons could do. Ron, ironically, was the least affected by the news. He was concerned mind you, but he had long ago decided that nothing could kill Harry short of the planet exploding, and Dumbledore had not mentioned the roles of Fred and George, presuming that The Daily Prophet would tell all about that in the next issue. Ron tried to buck them up a little.

“He’s all right you guys, you heard Dumbledore, he’ll recover from whatever those werewolves did to him.” Ginny said what they were all thinking.

“What if they bit him?” That was the problem of course. Harry hadn’t been bitten, having suffered only bullet and shrapnel wounds, and Dumbledore should have been informed as such, but he still left it out there as a possibility. He was floating a trial balloon for Draco, deliberately seeing if the students would make the connection of what he didn’t say. As more and more students began speculating on Harry’s injuries, Madam Pomfrey came through the faculty door and bent toward Dumbledore, talking only so that he and Remus and McGonagall, his flankers, could hear:

“Draco Malfoy has awoken.”

Riddle Manor, Little Hangleton

Pettigrew brought the message in personally to his boss, the letter having arrived via owl post at their mail drop, a drop that was one reason the Aurors outside had not been made sure that someone was there. If Wormtail were to be candid, which he rarely was around here, he would say that he was very pleased with what it contained, but being candid in this house was not always desirable around certain people, if you take the meaning.

“Master, this message just came for you.” Voldemort took it and read it, it was very short.

Dear Tom,

Thanks for the use of your wand, I found it very handy during my confrontation with the Lycans. I think I would go so far as to say that I would not be alive without it. Take that as you will.

Harry

End Chapter

Author's Note: Some of you may have noticed that I use the terms Lycan and werewolf interchangeably, though it's not really the case. The Brits, through canon, use the term werewolf, and I've kept that here. The Americans I have using the term Lycan, and will keep doing so. The only exception is Harry, who has one werewolf friend, and a lot of Lycan enemies, and will use the words interchangeably. Also, a somewhat vague reference to a potential 9/11 scenario is discussed in the chapter, and while it does fit organically into the situation, I want to say emphatically that no disrespect is meant to the tragedy nor am I attempting to trivialize it by including it in a fictional fantasy story. In the timeline of the Harry Potter world of course, 9/11 has not happened.

Great Lakes Med Station

6:00 am

"Hello there Harry, my name is Michael Chabon." President Michael Chabon, he didn't need to add. He held out his hand, and Harry shook it, his left side being the injured part of him, wrapped in both magical and muggle bandages, with a healthy dollop of pain killing potion swimming around in Harry's system.

"Pleased to meet you sir."

"Likewise. Joanne tells me that you played quite a large role in today's events."

"I did what I could Mr. President, along with my brothers here." He introduced Fred and George, and the other gang members as well. Chabon smiled at the twins.

"Yes, the joke shop guys, I've heard of you. I was at Salem last week and saw Harry Potter's DIY Howlers all over the place, even Headmaster Shupe had one on his desk." The twins couldn't help but laugh, as Jessica Murray really loved those particular pranks, and made a point of selling as many as she could, they were well over half her overall sales at this point. Chabon turned to the one gang member he had met before.

“Drew, your father is upstairs, he asked me to have you wait for him here, he’ll be down in a second.” Chabon and Hollie Baylor were close political allies, and Drew had known him for years.

“Yes sir.” Reiko couldn’t stand it anymore, she assumed her parents had not been killed, but wanted something more definitive than an assumption.

“Mr. President, what happened at Tecumseh? My parents teach there.” Chabon had a politician’s gift for remembering names, and instantly recalled hers.

“The Charms teachers? Karl and Lisa?”

“Yes sir.”

“The school was totally destroyed, but your mother and father got out fine, they and the Defense teachers slowed down the Lycans enough so that the students and other faculty could be evacuated. You should be very proud of your parents young lady.” Reiko blushed, but looked at him with pride.

“I always am Mr. President.” She knew she would get the whole story sometime this weekend from them, and was a little surprised that Hill and Burke had been as involved as they were. There was something about those two that she had always found off-putting. Without being asked, Chabon volunteered something else she had been wondering.

“The Tecumseh students will be split between Salem and Pathfinder for the next week, as Tecumseh is rebuilt. The damage here is just too great to do anything but try to keep things as they are. I’m sorry Reiko, for the loss of any personal mementos and things like that that you may have suffered.” In truth, anything really important to Reiko was up in her room, but she appreciated the thought.

“I’m just glad everyone got out alive sir.” He smiled at her.

“So am I Reiko, so am I. Only three students were lost in the entirety of the eight engagements, and no faculty. We were very lucky.” Harry was mildly surprised that only Great Lakes had lost any students, not realizing that the Lycans had chosen not to fight the students at Salem or Tecumseh, and had not gotten within 100 meters even of the building at Pathfinder.

“How many Aurors were lost sir? How many Lycans?”

“The Lycans lost 55 that we are sure of. That is, that we have bodies as proof, they might have taken some injured back with them, we don’t know. We managed to capture two of them, one at Tecumseh and the one you three managed to get for us. We wound up losing 21 Aurors in total, plus another 10 that are injured.”

“How do 55 Lycans figure in the grand scheme of things?”

“I wish I could tell you Harry, but I don’t really know. No one, probably not even the Lycans themselves, has a true idea of their numbers. Oh I’m sure they know how many troops that they have available, but as for reserves? We estimate that they have roughly 3,000 troops available for some type of combat with The Kindred and us, so what they used was barely more than a probing exercise.” Harry, sensing that Chabon was amenable to answering a few more questions, threw another one out there:

“Were The Kindred involved this morning sir?”

“No, but that was more a function of availability than anything. It’s hard to transport them anywhere quickly, as portkeys make muggles extremely sick and disoriented afterward, not conditions conducive for fighting. Kindred are more like us than many people think, but they’re still muggles as far as portkey and floo travel goes.” Harry had, in fact, not known this, and was about to keep going, when Chabon turned to the gang, as he had more than a few things to do today and couldn't chat much longer.

"If you kids don't mind, I would like a private word with Harry and his bodyguards. I know he'll tell you the substance of everything probably anyway, but if you don't mind....." The kids took the hint and moved off to see how Ripley was doing, with most of Chabon's entourage walking away as well, leaving only his two Auror bodyguards. As they did, Mitchell Baylor came into the room, and upon spying his son, immediately walked over and enveloped him in a tight hug.

"I'm so glad you're all right Drew."

"I'm glad you are too Dad, you had me worried there." Mitchell had a few scrapes and nicks, but was otherwise fine, if a bit tired. The male Baylors grinned at each other.

Harry and company watched this scene with a smile, it was a nice moment, before turning their attention back to the President.

"I'm not going to beat around the bush here with you, today was a bad day for us. It exposed a lot of holes in our defenses, and every one of them needs to be closed, and I mean soon. I'm going to appoint a small Blue Ribbon commission to deal with that, and I would like you to be the student representative." Harry didn't know what to say here really, so Fred felt free to ask something.

"How small a commission sir?"

"Thirteen people. The Heads of all four schools, one Defense teacher from each school, Head Auror Jacobson and two of his more senior people, a member of Congress, and Harry. I will be an ad-hoc member, and only show up certain meetings. You will have a full vote at the table, and I have no doubt that your practical experience will be highly valued by everyone involved." What else could he say but yes? But he wanted to say yes as well, it would be an interesting series of meetings if nothing else.

"Well of course I'll do it sir, if you think I would be of use."

“I do, and this is no publicity stunt either. Neither the commission itself nor its composition will be made public until its measures are adopted, if even then.”

“Wow, no politics eh?” Chabon smiled ruefully.

“I’m sure you’re having Fudge flashbacks, let me know if you need a bucket to throw up in, I’ll conjure one up.” Even Chabon’s shadows cracked smiles at that one.

“You didn’t like him either?”

“Not especially, nor did he care much for me as it happens. Minister Scrimgeour is due for a conference with myself and Prime Minister Crosby a week from this coming Monday, he’s already informed my office that he wants to visit here the following day, presumably to meet with you. Have you an opinion on that?” Harry was quite interested to talk with Scrimgeour, Biller having built him up during their meeting in January.

“I’m fine with it sir, whenever he wants, as long as I don’t miss any class.”

“Good, I’m sure that you two have a lot to talk about.” Harry quickly decided to send a note to Travis, angling for a preview of what Rufus wanted from him.....and he knew that Rufus would want something.

“When is the first meeting of that commission sir?”

“Tomorrow at noon, don’t bother with a meal beforehand, food will be served. Just come over with Joanne, and Dick probably, Tom doesn’t look like he’ll be up to it quite yet.” Indeed Ripley would be kept under sedation for the rest of the day, and not leave the med station until early Monday morning. Chabon now turned to Fred and George.

“I’ve heard much about these portable swamp pranks you two developed, and how they can be deployed very usefully in urban combat. How quickly can you have 100 of them delivered to us?” Fred and George were rarely stunned into silence.

And this was not one of those rarely times, as they took him quite seriously. Fred started musing out loud.

“Well we have about 50 in stock right now, not counting what got sold today, if any. Hmmmmm.....I think we could have the balance to you in a couple of days if we hump it. George?”

“That sounds about right, we’re ahead on our other stuff, and Dean.....that’s our sister’s boyfriend.....he says he can take on some more tasks for us. Yeah, let’s say Tuesday morning your time just to be safe, since our Saturday right now is later than yours. No need to worry about delivery, we’ll have our house elf do it, he handles all that stuff for us.”

“Sounds good, we’ll have payment waiting for you when the goods arrive, no need for a bulk discount.” George had been about to suggest something along those lines, but still did.

“We were going to knock off 10 percent for the bulk order.”

“That won’t be necessary, your services today were worth it. I’m sure this will be the start of a profitable relationship between our government and your shop.” He shook both of their hands.

“Now I must be off, lots to do, but I wanted to meet you three. I’ll see you tomorrow at noon Harry.”

“Yes Mr. President, and thank you.” The President left, and the Brits stared at each other for a moment. Harry said idly.

“Well that was interesting.”

“Illuminating.”

“Financially rewarding.”

“Yes Harry, we should get ‘Thanks for going to America Harry’ tattooed somewhere where not just Angelina or Alicia can see it.”

“Oh great, I take three bullets for the business. Get me out of this damn bed will you?” They helped him out, and the rest of the gang came back over. Harry briefly explained what Chabon had wanted from him, as the Blood Restoring Potions had taken enough effect that he wasn’t too woozy on his feet.

“You’re going to do it?”

“Are you crazy Warrick? I wouldn’t miss that commission for the world. This is my chance to do something like the League, only where I’ll be more than a token.”

“Good point. So when do we get to see the battle in your pensieve?” They all, save Sophie and maybe Claudia, looked eager to see the replay, and Harry was vaguely disquieted that they seemed so intent on watching him kill Lycans and get shot in the process. This attitude, more than anything, validated his decision to keep them out of it. He sensed an argument in his near future, and for once was not going to shy away from it with them.

“Let’s make sure I can leave here, and then after I get some food, we’ll see the show. I did work up an appetite this morning.” They walked toward the floo, and none of the medical folk seemed inclined to stop him. Harry looked himself over for a moment, the blood had been cleaned off, though the bullet holes remained.

“I can’t believe this, I fought a battle in my pajamas. I would give 1,000 galleons to see the look on Dumbledore’s face when hears that bit of trivia.” All of them started giggling, and Harry mentally resolved not to let Dobby repair the clothing damage, let it be a reminder. None of them had gotten dressed until it was all over, but only Harry was still in his pj’s.

“Well we need to be going back to the shop, so we’ll walk up with you and take our leave, via portkey you know.” Fred said that in a normal tone of voice, for any possible listeners. Harry had spent a couple of minutes racking his brain, trying to think if the three of them had mentioned the trunk at all during the battle, since he knew that at least Murray would want to see the pensieve memory, and likely many more people. They hadn’t talked about the trunk though, at least not in the hallway. Harry tarried a bit, saying that he wanted to talk with Carter about his bandages, and the others waited outside for him.

“What’s up Harry?”

“Dr. Carter, I’m not sure how to put this.....but I’ve been injured quite a bit over the years, both from the muggle cousin, to Voldemort, giant snakes, cursed quills and stuff like that. What I’m asking is, at what point is all of this going to catch up with me? I mean, am I going to be a wreck by the time I’m 30?”

“If you were a muggle Harry, I would say yes, so much trauma to someone so young would have serious long-term effects. You’re not a muggle though, and we heal much better and quicker than they do. The potions I gave you last time, and that Dr. Parrish gave you this time are meant not just for your current injuries, but to make your body stronger for the future.”

“So I needn’t be worried?”

“Well try not to get shot next time if you don’t mind, but no, you need not be worried. Just don’t sleep on your left side tonight and I’ll give you another checkup tomorrow.”

“Thanks Dr. Carter, much appreciated.”

“You’re welcome Harry, take it easy this weekend.” Harry left, but didn’t share the conversation with his friends.

The nine of them flooded up to Lyman’s office, which was empty for the moment. They levitated each other up to the fourth floor one by one, and streamed into the trunk, Rick and Terry being in the Lounge eating breakfast with most of the other students. Before the twins flooded back, Harry led them aside for a brief coda.

“I need you guys to do something for me back in Diagon Alley. I want you to have a necklace made for me, with a round medallion.”

“Say what?”

“Eh?” Harry ignored their looks, and pulled three objects out of his pocket.

“I already have the material for the medallion.” He had Fred hold out his palm, and Harry dropped the objects into it.

They were the slugs from the three bullets that the Lycan had shot him with. Harry had Summoned them from the floor after Almeida and his associate had retreated.

“Tell the jeweler to try to leave the blood on there somehow. As a token.” Both twins were very moved.

“Sure thing Harry, we’ll do something about it today.”

“Thank you guys, for everything. I do not know what I would do without you two.”

“The feeling is mutual Harry, trust us on that one.” They shared a smile, almost as if telling a quiet joke. The twins said their goodbyes to the rest of the gang, and were off.

Flashback to Riddle Manor:

Voldemort appeared to be about to crumple Harry’s note into a ball, but thought better of it. He looked at his number one lackey.

“Did you read this Wormtail?”

“Yes Master.” Pettigrew cringed slightly, hoping that he wouldn’t be punished for reading it.

Voldemort leaned back in his chair and contemplated, enjoying how nervous Pettigrew looked at this affectation. He had been alerted to the news report on the WWN by one of his people, and had found it to be quite informative. He especially enjoyed the part about the muggle weapons, that would surely turn some people in America and here in Britain toward his views.

“Well Wormtail, are you pleased that our young friend is still alive?”

“ Yes Master, I am.” A bold answer, and one that required clarification.

“Why is that?”

“I want you to be the one to kill him Master. He deserves that honor, he’s a worthy enemy.” That surprised Voldemort some, and he was a man/thing who prided himself on not being surprised.

“Very good Wormtail, you mirror my views precisely. Potter is a worthy enemy, and deserving of our respect. When the time comes, I will finish him quickly, no torture.”

“So you did not find his note to be insulting?”

“Yes I did find it insulting, but I understand where it came from. He was giddy from victory, probably nursing some wounds, and he wanted to brag about it. He is still a teenager, however powerful and resourceful he may be.” Wormtail was quietly very impressed with that reasoning, and how his Lord seemed to understand Potter. Peter Pettigrew knew now more than ever that he was on the right side in all of this. It was a shame that Harry had to die, but it was necessary all the same.

“Is there any news on young Draco?”

“No Master, he is still in a coma, according to our sources.” That would be Theo Nott, who was considered by all to be a hair more observant about such things than Crabbe and Goyle, who were still currently serving detentions.

“Better that he never comes out of it, but no matter. Dismissed Wormtail.”

“Thank you Master.” There would be no reply to the note, that would let the lad think it had gotten under his skin, and Voldemort knew that he could not show weakness in front of the lad. He was going to enjoy the final battle when it came.

Hogwarts Great Hall

At roughly this same time.

“Draco Malfoy has awoken.”

“Thank you Poppy, we will be right there. Please floo The Minister and ask him to send a representative to meet us.” Dumbledore waited a couple of minutes, if only to futilely try to throw off anyone assuming what that was all about, and to give Bones or Scrimgeour time to get there. After that brief time, he motioned for Remus and Flitwick to come with him.

“Keep an eye on certain people Minerva, let me know if any of them go to the Owlery.” McGonagall dearly wanted to go with them, but did not argue the point.

“Of course Albus.”

The three men walked casually out of the room and then picked up the pace toward the Madam Pomfrey's lair. They arrived three minutes later to find a groggy, but conscious Draco Malfoy. Pomfrey also, disquietingly, had her wand in hand, though she had not raised it at the boy/ferret/werewolf. Amos Diggory was the Ministry representative, and he sat quietly, a decent ways out of Draco's reach, with two Aurors stationed in the corner. Dumbledore sat down next to Draco's bed, and Pomfrey handed the boy a glass of water, which Draco gulped down without thinking about it.

"Hello Draco, welcome back." Malfoy was so tired and out of it that he didn't even think to be rude.

"How long was I out?"

"Three weeks, give or take." That certainly woke him up.

"Three weeks!" That didn't count his captivity with Greyback and company either.

"You had quite a few problems Draco, and they needed to be sorted out."

"Like what? What kind of problems?"

"Let's see if I can recall them all: heroin withdrawal, the muggle virus Hepatitis A, and one other small issue."

"What issue?" The old man chose to wait on that tiny little point.

"How are you feeling right now?"

"I'm tired, and still thirsty." Dumbledore paused to have Pomfrey give him another glass of water, just water in this one.

"How long have you been using heroin Draco?" The tone of voice was so soothing that Draco didn't even think before answering.

"About a year almost, since Easter break last year."

"Who was your supplier?"

"Edward Grant." Dumbledore did not know the name, he only knew Greyback's identity of the werewolves.

“Is he a werewolf?” Draco’s eyes lit up, and they could tell now that he knew he was under Veritaserum, but he couldn’t fight it.

“Yes he is.” Dumbledore or the others never thought to ask if Grant was magical, very sloppy.

“You have been meeting him since Easter of last year?”

“Yes I have.”

“How often do you meet him? How often do you take heroin?”

“Once a month, and three times a week on the average.”

“How did you get started using the drug?”

“He gave it to me to try, said it was the best muggle potion out there. I liked how it made me feel.”

“Were you funneling Grant information about Hogwarts in exchange for your drugs?”

“Sort of, he said he gave me a discount when I had good information.”

“Why did you give him the information?”

“Aunt Bella wrote me and told me to, I probably wouldn’t have otherwise.”

“And that was enough for you to do it?” Draco sounded tired, but all in the room save Dumbledore thought that was a stupid question.

“Of course, she’s family.”

“Why don’t you have a Dark Mark?”

“They didn’t want you to suspect anything.”

“Who is they?”

“Mother and Aunt Bella.” Remus butted in, overriding Dumbledore for a moment. Shepherd would have loved this, though he was being specifically excluded from this talk.

“How did Grant capture you?”

“He stuck something called chloroform in my face, it knocked me out. That’s what he called it anyway.” None of them had ever heard of it, though Shepherd would explain it to them later on.

“What happened to you after you woke up?”

“I don’t know, that’s the last thing I remember.” The four adults stared at each other for a moment. They collectively all doubted that Greyback and his folk would be content to torture an unconscious kid, there wasn’t a lot of fun or sport in that. This meant either Obliviation, or that it was so traumatic that Draco had blocked the whole episode out, there was only so much Veritaserum could do. Remus continued.

“Is Professor Shepherd sympathetic to yours and your family’s views?”

“Not especially.”

“He does not care one way or the other?”

“That’s the feeling I’ve gotten, we haven’t talked specifics.” Remus had thought the same.

“Do you like him?”

“I do, he’s a nice guy.” Again, all three Hogwarts men could agree on that one, though they could never recall Draco calling someone ‘nice’.

“Did you like Snape?” His answer surprised them all.

“Not on a personal level.”

“Did you know of his service to Voldemort?”

“No, he would never talk about it with me. I assumed that he was, but that was just a feeling.”

“Are you aware that he has died?”

“What?!”

“We found his body the same day we realized you were missing, the morning after you were abducted.” Veritaserum did not prevent the person under it from asking questions.

“How did he die?”

“Cruciatu.”

“Who killed him?”

“Your Death Eater friends, and likely Voldemort himself.” Draco was stunned into silence, and Dumbledore decided that the questions should cease for the time being, and the situation explained to him.

“Draco, I am very sorry to be the one to tell you this, but while you were in captivity.....you were bitten by multiple werewolves. You are now a werewolf Draco.” Under Veritaserum, Draco said the first true thing that popped into his mind.

“No I’m not, you’re lying to me.”

“I’m afraid that we aren’t Draco, you have already been through one change.” Draco hesitated for a moment, and what followed sounded a little hollow.

“I can’t be.”

“You are Draco, and I am very sorry.” His mind spinning like crazy, Draco temporized.

“Why? Why are you sorry? You know I hate your guts and everything you stand for.” Dumbledore always had a rather curious reaction to those people who said things like that: kindness.

“Even though your supposed allies have turned on you?”

“They will pay for their crimes, I am still loyal to Lord Voldemort.”

“How loyal will he be now that you are a werewolf?” Draco did not have an immediate answer to that little query, and Dumbledore decided to give him some time to chew on it.

“I can tell that you need some time to sort all of this out in your mind Draco, so we will leave you to it. I should tell you that the student body at large does not know of your new condition, not even Messrs. Crabbe and Goyle.”

“Well don’t tell them now.”

“I won’t Draco, but I cannot allow you to have any visitors for the time being. Think on this, and what you ultimately want for your life.” He walked toward the door, motioning to Diggory, Flitwick, and Remus to follow him. They did, but the pair of Aurors remained. The four men got outside, and Dumbledore turned to Diggory.

“Why is it necessary for the Aurors to be here?” The other man looked at him like he was a simpleton.

“Because you have a Dark Wizard who is now a werewolf as well, living in there. I will not take a risk that he could choose to settle some scores with his new powers.” Remus knew he should take umbrage at that, that just because one was a werewolf, didn’t mean that he couldn't control himself.....but it was Draco Malfoy though, the most selfish teenager Remus had ever known.

"He doesn't have a wand Albus, but I agree that we can't be too careful." Dumbledore still didn't like it, but was wary of what kind of instructions Diggory may have gotten from Scrimgeour. They walked a short distance down the hallway.

"Filius, what is your take?" Flitwick jumped right in.

"Remove him from Hogwarts immediately Albus. We cannot take any chances with the students under our care. I was willing to go along with things until he admitted selling us out to Greyback, but not anymore."

"Remus?"

"I say give him some more time in isolation to think, and even if he continues to toe the Voldemort line, we can then leak his condition to the Death Eaters, and once he sees how they turn on him.....well I think we will have one more for our side, and a powerful one at that."

"Amos?"

"I agree with Professor Flitwick completely, and I can assure you that The Minister will see it that way as well." Dumbledore still didn't say anything, and Flitwick felt the need to reinforce his position.

"Albus, there's no way you can risk having him here. I know you want to believe that he can change, but even if Remus' scenario plays out, it's just too risky. What if he goes after Hermione Granger or one of the Weasleys, to settle one of a thousand old scores? Or what if he goes after someone a lot less able to defend themselves? And if he does go after Hermione and friends, at what point will Harry sneak back in here and start a killing spree? He might not stop at Draco either." Remus started scoffing, as Dumbledore and Diggory both blanched a little.

“Oh please Filius, I was with you until the Harry comments, but there is no way he would do that. He couldn’t anyway, since we have all of the secret passages sealed up.” Flitwick stared hard back at him, surprising all of them with the intensity of his argument.

“Every battle that boy is in is going to convince him more and more that violence is the best solution to his problems. He just did battle with werewolves using muggle firearms, you think that won’t harden him? And he’ll find a way in if he needs to, Neville or Ginny Weasley will help him if it comes to it.” Dumbledore, while fully in agreement with Flitwick in this narrow area of the debate, nevertheless wanted to shift it back to the problem at hand.

“Enough, both of you. Harry is a concern of course, but not the main concern here. Amos, is The Minister going to order us to remove Draco?”

“He will not issue any pre-emptive orders as of yet. This is still your school, but he will not hesitate to intervene if he feels it necessary.” Well thanks for nothing, thought the Hogwarts people, somewhat bitterly. They, like Harry at roughly the same time, were having Fudge flashbacks, as this was just the kind of thing he would have said.

Though not anymore, as Fudge was now a limited Wizard living the quiet life in Flanders Park, Australia, under the impression that he had suffered a bad case of amnesia.

“Amos, please keep at least two Aurors on guard duty at all times with Draco. Have their rules of engagement be clear: If Draco makes the change, he is to be killed immediately. Otherwise, I agree with Remus, in that we need to give the lad some time to think. No other visitors besides faculty, not even Andromeda Tonks.”

“Why not her? You don’t suspect anything from her do you?”

“We need to play this out in our own manner Remus, if Voldemort and his people find out, it needs to benefit us at the same time. Andromeda is loyal to our cause of course, but a family bond is not easily torn asunder.”

“But she already knows that Draco is a werewolf.”

“No she does not, I Obliviated her myself the night we found out, after making sure that she had not sent a letter to either of her sisters. I will not take any chances here, the stakes are too high for that.” Diggory filed this away to tell Rufus, one more mark against the old man, Obliviating without permission.

“How long are we going to give him to stew?”

“The rest of the day should be sufficient. Remus, please collect his schoolbooks and papers and have them delivered to him, if he is to remain here, he has over a month to make up.” Both Remus and Flitwick nodded, though Flitwick was unhappy with losing the argument.

“What do we tell Professor Shepherd?”

“I will speak to him and explain the situation. The burden of policing Draco, should it come to that, will fall more on him than anyone, but I needed to make sure of his loyalty.” Remus and Flitwick went back to their offices, while Dumbledore and Diggory walked slowly back to his.

“You cannot seriously be thinking of allowing him to remain Albus.”

“There is no harm in seeing if a young man can be taken off the wrong path. He cannot hurt anyone as of now, so a delay costs us nothing. Besides, do you really want him loose out there, if he is as dangerous as you say?”

“I want him in Azkaban Albus, he already admitted to selling us out to Greyback. There is no way you can have a Dark Wizard werewolf in this school.”

“You are missing the whole point here Amos, it is my belief that Draco will no longer be Dark, once he faces the facts of his situation.”

“Or he could go rogue, he has the money to do so now.”

“He is not aware of that yet, that he has inherited money and a house from Severus. That will not factor into his decision.” Diggory just shook his head, and said nothing for the rest of their walk. He flooed back to The Ministry, and Dumbledore waited for the other shoe to drop. It didn’t happen right then though, as unbeknownst to him, Rufus was busy and couldn’t do any interfering. Besides, The Minister agreed that they should at least see how Draco would react to his changed circumstances. McGonagall reported back to him that none of the DOM crew had gone to the Owlery, they had in fact gone about their regular Saturday business. The DOM’s had agreed among themselves at lunch that they should just wait for Harry to contact one of them, he would certainly write Neville, wouldn’t he?

On their own, Luna and Neville sent a quick note off to the twins, letting Harry know that they were thinking of him. Ginny and Hermione did not think to do this, and Ron wouldn’t have anyway. This widened the chasm between the DOM kids as far as Harry went, the lines being drawn ever so wider. Harry still had a lot of sisterly affection for Ginny, and respected Hermione at the very least, but they were doing themselves no favors.

The Burrow

1:00 pm

Molly had heard the report on the WWN, and had immediately screamed out for Arthur to come listen to it, he had been outside puttering around in his shed. After a considerable effort in calming her down, he agreed that he would take a trip overseas the next day to make sure that Harry was okay, it would take a long day of portkey travel, but he privately thought it was worth it, if only to keep Molly from having a heart attack. That plan did not come to pass however, as they received a visit from their twins. Fred and George tumbled through the floo:

“Hello Mum, Dad.” Molly walked up and hugged them tightly, still not knowing that they had been involved in the melee.

“Did you hear the news on the wireless? Will you have Dobby come give you a report on how Harry’s doing?”

“No need Mum, we were there.” That got Molly quiet right away, and Arthur reacted:

“You were what?”

“We were there Dad, for most of it anyway. Dobby came to get us when the explosions started in.” Molly had still lost the power of speech.

“Well you two are clearly none the worse for wear. How injured was Harry? All the wireless report will say is that he got hurt.”

“He was shot in the shoulder, but he’s already out of the Hospital Wing. That was while I was wearing the vest, earlier he was wearing it and took a burst to the chest, but the bullets just bounced off.” Molly walked unsteadily over to a chair and sat down.

“What vest?”

“Remember the piece of dragon hide that Charlie gave him for Christmas?”

“All too well, Ron had a fit later that night about it, he wanted it.”

“Don’t tempt us to fire him again Dad. Anyway, Harry had Dobby go hunting for another piece on the black market, and then he sewed a vest together from the two pieces.”

“And it stops bullets?”

“I’m alive and talking to you because of it.”

“YOU GOT SHOT TOO!” Molly’s face was a much deeper shade of red than her hair, but she clearly had recovered her voice.

“Easy Mum, clearly I’m okay. I took a burst to the back, but they just bounced off.”

“How did you even get over there in the first place?”

“I can’t say Dad, we have to keep it quiet.” Arthur wanted to be annoyed with them for that, but was just so relieved that they weren’t hurt that couldn’t bring himself to yell at them. Both he and Molly were having thoughts of Percy right about now.

“Why is it that you two clam up when it comes to Harry?” Because our beyond paranoid baby brother demands it of us, that’s why. Things that we think and do not say.

“Force of habit, but it’s going to stay that way for now. We just came by to let you know that everything is all right over there.” Molly had calmed down, having looked her sons over and not seeing so much as a scratch on either of them.

“You fought against werewolves with muggle weapons. I just don’t know what to say.” The twins’ reservoir of humor had its limits, and George was moved to reply:

“I don’t know Mum, you could say that you’re proud of us, or words to that effect.” Molly flushed, and Arthur kept his blank expression, letting his wife dig herself out. This didn’t happen often, but the twins did occasionally get their backs up about not being taken seriously.

“Of course I’m proud of you, I’m always proud of what you two have accomplished. It’s just hard to get used to the idea of my children risking their lives so much.” The twins could understand that.

“Well, Junior needed us, though it was Dobby who came and got us. We’re a good team, the three of us.” Arthur moved over and put his arms around them.

“Harry’s lucky to have you two.” Fred just waved that off.

“That’s what he says, but it goes both ways. We just met the American Wizard President, who just gave us a large order for our swamps.” The twins described how they and Harry had used them in the battle, and how Chabon had been much impressed. The Weasleys did not have a pensieve, so the twins had to verbally demonstrate how the battle had gone. Arthur just shook his head at the end and smiled.

“I know I shouldn’t laugh, but you go over there, risk your lives, kill some more werewolves, and wind up in a business deal with the American government. My goodness.”

“All part of a day’s work Dad. Anyway, we need to get back to the shop, we have 50 plus swamps to manufacture and only three days to do it in. Let Bill know that everything is all right okay? We’ll write to Charlie ourselves later on tonight when we take a break.”

“And Ron and Ginny?” George rolled his eyes.

“To hell with Ron, and Ginny will probably get a note via Dobby some time today.” Little did they know. They hugged their parents goodbye, and were off before Molly had a chance to get some food into them.

“Do I still need to go over there?”

“No, Harry’s okay, for now. That boy, everything always seems to happen to him doesn’t it?” Yes it did, thought Arthur, but he owed his life to Harry and wasn’t about to start complaining.

“Tell you what, we’ll plan a trip over there for the first Quidditch game in May. Fred, George, and Harry on the Pitch together again. That will be a sight to see.” It was a foregone conclusion among all of them that the twins would shoehorn their way on to the team, and Harry had already spoken to Geyser about it, and he was fully onboard if the twins were sorted in Cortez.....not that they had to worry about a Sorting anymore.

“Yes it will, that’s a great idea Arthur. And we’ll go over for the twins’ graduation as well, see this school we’ve been hearing so much about.” After a floo call to Bill and a long letter jointly written to Charlie, the two elder Weasleys went back about their normal routines.

Around 10:00 pm that night, Dumbledore collected his senior staff members, plus Shepherd and walked down to the Hospital Wing, whose only occupant at this time was Draco. His Auror minders were still there, though they did not say much. One of them got to his feet when Dumbledore’s group came in, and immediately went to the floo to alert The Ministry. Within a minute, Diggory and Bones both arrived. Dumbledore took a seat next to Draco again, the lad was looking a bit healthier than he was 10 hours previously, and his customary sneer was absent.

“How are you feeling Draco?”

“Better.”

“You have had some time to think about your situation, and I was wondering if you would like to talk about it now.”

“I would, but not to all of this crowd. I want you, Lupin, and one other person here, the rest can see it through a pensieve, or get one of those Weasley Ear things.”

“Who is the other person?”

“Granger.” Diggory blurted out.

“Hermione Granger?”

“Is there another Granger in this school?” There was only quiet contempt from Draco, again with no sneer. Dumbledore did not bother to conceal a small smile, but had to ask anyway:

“Why Miss Granger?”

“I want to know some things, things that only she can tell me. Look, I’m not going to try anything, you and Lupin can have your wands at my temples the whole time for all I care. I know I can’t fight my way out of this place, even if I wanted to.” Dumbledore couldn’t see the harm, and turned to McGonagall.

“Minerva, please retrieve Miss Granger, I believe she and Mr. Weasley are still in the library. He is not to come, no matter how insistent he becomes in the matter.”

“Yes Professor Dumbledore.” She quickly departed, and Draco stared tiredly at the others there.

“I heard Pomfrey talking about Potter being shot, what’s that all about?” Dumbledore, despite the baleful stares of Diggory, Bones, and even Remus, told him the short version. Draco startled them all by chuckling.

“He’s got guts Potter, I can’t take that away from him. Every time he acts as a proper Slytherin, he goes and screws it up by playing the Gryffindor hero. That guy, it’s almost like he’s at war with himself.” Remus needed all his self control to keep a look of respect from flashing across his face. There was silence for a couple of minutes, and then Remus was moved to ask a question.

“I’m curious about something Draco, at your father’s trial, Harry said that he didn’t hate you. Can you say the same?”

“Most of the time, though there are instances. It’s all about upbringing you know, if Potter had lived my life, he would have turned out much like I did. We’re not as different deep down as people think.”

“That’s what Harry always said himself about you and him.” All heads turned to the speaker of that: Hermione. Draco managed a smirk.

“Evening Granger.” Hermione looked confused at being there, but kept her tone politely neutral.

“Draco.” At Dumbledore’s nod, the others left the room, even the Auror guards, figuring that Dumbledore and Lupin could handle things well enough. The four of them looked at each for a moment, and Draco began.

“Granger, I would like you to swear a Wizard’s Oath that you will not repeat word one of anything said during this conversation, without permission from me or these two. It will be worth your while to swear it, if that helps the decision.” Hermione had rarely looked more at a loss, as she turned to Dumbledore and Remus.

“What the heck is going on here?”

“Please swear the Oath Miss Granger.”

“Draco’s right Hermione, it will be worth it.” She still looked dubious, but went along with it.

“Fine. I swear a Wizard’s Oath that the contents of this conversation will stay between the four of us until one of you says otherwise.”

“Good enough. Granger, I was kidnapped by werewolves and bitten, I am now a younger version of Lupin here.” He said it matter of factly, and without preamble, simply to see the look on her face. It worked, as she opened and closed her mouth several times before managing to blurt out a response.

“You cannot be serious.” Draco looking wistful was a new visual experience for the other three.

“I would give anything if I wasn’t Granger, but it’s the truth.”

“Why are you telling me this? Me, the Mudblood?”

“Because of all of your crowd here, you’re the one I could count on for an honest reaction, for honest opinions. The two Weasleys are an idiot and a overly hot tempered girl, respectively, Lovegood cannot be taken seriously, and Longbottom.....well I've done too much to him over the past six years. You may be a Mudblood, but you're a smart one, and that's the kind of input I need right now." Hermione had no idea how to react this, but one look at her old foe's face got a reaction out of her.

"Why on earth would I help you?"

"To get me to defect Granger, I'm worth more to you on your side than I am on the other three sides."

"Three sides? There are four sides to this?"

"The Light side: The Death Eater side: The werewolf side: and the dead side. The last option is not too enticing for me, even in my new state." Dumbledore intervened before Hermione started getting a headache.

"So you are intending to join us then Draco?"

"Probably, if you meet my terms, it would seem to be the best thing for me. But first I want to know something from Granger." Hermione's curiosity had won out here, but she still wanted to make one tiny point.

"My name is Hermione."

"Yes it is. Now what I want to know is this: What is it about Potter that makes him so special to you people? I get that he has loads of power and a mystique, but what is that something that makes you people follow him?" Hermione was quiet for a moment, and Remus mentally patted himself on the back, he had figured that Harry was the reason Hermione was here right now. Dumbledore, very wisely, kept very silent.

"You said it yourself Draco, he has a mystique about him. That's why the others follow him, because they know that something interesting is always going to happen when Harry is around, and because he is so decisive when he acts."

“And yourself?”

“Because he has always been there for me, he cared about me when no one else here would. I owe him more than I could ever repay.”

“Yet he left.”

“Because of difficulties with the Headmaster here.” Even Hermione didn’t totally believe that, and Draco was gracious enough not to call her on it.

“Don’t worry Dumbledore, finding those out are not part of the deal you and I are going to strike. So, Hermione, you would trust Potter with your life?” Extra emphasis on her first name.

“I already have, many times.”

“That’s not what I asked you, things have changed since he decamped.”

“No they haven’t Draco, you saw him fight at the trial.”

“Yes I did, very impressive. Rumor has it that he stopped Lord Voldemort from killing you.” Hermione had heard those rumors, and would have dearly loved to have killed whoever spread them.....except for the tiny, insignificant detail that she thought it was Ron who had done so.

“He did.”

“And would you have done the same for him?”

“Where is this going Draco? Why are we talking about someone who is thousands of kilometers away?”

“Humor me Hermione.” No snotty emphasis this time.

“Oh all right, yes of course I would have done the same.”

“The reason I’m asking this, is if I switch sides here, I, along with everyone else in this room, have to rely on Potter to deal with Lord Voldemort. I just want to know if the guy is up to it.”

“He is Draco, he beat him at the trial did he not?”

“Yes he did, and that’s the only reason I have not braved Auror fire and tried to escape yet.” Hermione cracked her first smile at that.

“You have clearly been doing some planning over these last 10 hours Draco.”

“Yes I have Dumbledore, sorry, Headmaster sir.” More sarcasm, as Draco was warming up to the task at hand.

“Are you afraid of Harry?”

“Yes I am Hermione, and so are you. I know that Potter and your boyfriend are on the outs, which is why your loyalty to Potter is so intriguing. You think I didn’t keep at least half an eye peeled on you people this whole time? Weasley is stupid enough to provoke Potter and we both know it. Potter dislikes me for sure, but I’ve never turned on him the way your boyfriend has, twice now.” Nobody knew this better than Hermione, who was getting rather tired of people reminding her of it.

“I don’t know what to say to that.”

“You just said a lot right there. Do you believe that Potter has what it takes to kill Lord Voldemort?”

“Yes I do Draco. I’m betting my life on it aren’t I?” Malfoy nodded at her, and turned to Dumbledore.

“Dumbledore, get Bones in here, we have a deal to strike. You can stay Hermione, but your Oath is still in play.” Bones had indeed been listening, and came over before the old man could fetch her.

“Yes Draco?”

“I have some demands, and if they are met, I will swear whatever Oaths you feel are necessary to feel comfortable. I recognize that you lot are my best option to stay alive, and am willing to deal under that reality.” Bones kept her face professional, but inside was more than a tad giddy, this was a coup beyond coups.

“And your demands are?”

“I am assuming that you have the authority to deal here, right?”

“Correct, Minister Scrimgeour has authorized me to make any reasonable agreements necessary to close this chapter.” Draco certainly hoped so, if he was mildly afraid of any adult on the Light side, it was Rufus Scrimgeour.

“Number one: Immunity from past crimes, complete immunity. I will give you a total list under Veritaserum if you want, as I’m sure you will, but know ahead of time that there are no murders or rapes or anything of that nature.”

“Accepted. Next?”

“It should go without saying that I want a full dose of Wolfsbane when the full moon comes, but I’m saying it anyway.”

“Accepted, Professor Shepherd has already been given instructions as such.”

“I want written Wizard Oaths from Hermione Granger here, Neville Longbottom, every Weasley that I’ve ever gone to school with, and Harry Potter, that they will never seek revenge on me for past crimes, as long as I hold up my end of the deal here and do not commit new crimes against them or their side.” Bones didn’t have the authority to accept that, and all eyes turned to Hermione.

“I will do so, but I don’t speak for any of the others. I will try with Ron, Ginny and Neville, but I will not guarantee success.” Dumbledore looked at Remus, he had caught the significance of “every Weasley that I’ve ever gone to school with’.

“Remus, will you speak to Fred and George? If they agree, I have no doubt that they can convince Harry.”

“I’ll give it a shot. Draco, how much can I tell them of the story?”

“As much as you need to get it done, I’ve heard of how tight those three are, the troublemakers should be able to sway Potter. If not, then get him over here and I’ll talk to him myself.” Hermione surprised them all by laughing.

“He’s not going to move one meter because you want him to Draco, and I’ve heard him say more than once that he’ll never set foot in this castle ever again.”

“He will for this. Just because Potter’s checked out for the time being, doesn’t mean that he isn’t interested in the war. All he’s doing over there is getting stronger, I’m only surprised he didn’t do it a year or two ago. That said, if all the other people swear and Potter doesn’t, I’ll still go along with the deal as long as I have your collective words that you made your best efforts to talk him into it.” Remus looked him straight in the eye.

“You have my word on that, I’ll do what I can to convince him. I don’t think it will be as hard as you might think, Harry is above all else, a pragmatist.” All of them, however, were wondering what concession or concessions that Harry would gleefully extract from them in exchange for said Oath. The pragmatist in Harry would appreciate that part of it as well.

“Fair enough.”

“Anything else?”

“One more tiny little thing, rather insignificant really.”

“Why do I sense a whopper?”

“You have wisdom beyond your meager years Madam Bones. I want the Malfoy money. All of it.”

“The money in your family vault?”

“Every last Sickle and Knut, and Malfoy Manor as well, along with everything in it. I’m the only one in my generation, and it would have gone to me anyway.....before my little problem. My parents, who have to assume that something like this might have happened, are probably going to disinherit me and find some distant cousin to give it all to, and I will not allow that to happen. I don’t care what Wizengamot strings you need to pull to seize the vault and Manor, but you do it.”

The Wizengamot had had bills like this come up before, the seizure of property and money of those convicted of being traitors to the government, which is technically what all Death Eaters had been labeled as. They had always been voted down however, a combination of closet Dark supporters, Fudge loyalists who followed his reluctance, and even some Dumbledore people who worried about a bad precedent being set, in case of a duly elected Dark government, which was not out of the realm of possibility. Bones looked at him.

“ Malfoy Manor will be relatively easy, as your mother has abandoned it. The vault however.....”

“Then no deal.” Her mind already going over plans, she temporized:

“Let’s say, for a minute, that we accomplish this. What do we get in return?”

“I will officially join The Order of the Phoenix and fight under Dumbledore’s and eventually Potter’s orders. I will NOT be a spy for you ala Snape, but I would be willing to stay undercover inside school if you wish, to manipulate Crabbe, Goyle, Nott, Parkinson, and all the others here. I know every one of their strengths, every one of their weaknesses, and it would be my pleasure to use them all to serve your cause. Our cause.”

“Interesting.”

“And I would further pledge an investment of one million galleons to help rebuild Hogsmeade once this is over. Not a loan or a gift, an investment.” That was roughly 15 percent of the Malfoy fortune, and raised some eyebrows. Remus looked at the other two adults.

“Let’s go over to the corner and speak for a moment shall we? Hermione, you and Draco can get along for a moment can’t you?”

“Oh certainly.” Some Hermione sarcasm, as Remus, Bones, and Dumbledore walked over to the other side, wands all in their hands, just in case Draco was running a drag on them. Remus looked at his companions.

“I don’t see how we don’t take this deal. He’s not asking for much in the grand scheme of things, and it will go a long way to helping us win.” Bones:

“He’s one boy, still a few weeks from his majority. Are you really saying that he has Potter worth to him?” She would have made such a deal with Harry in a heartbeat, but felt the need to play devil’s advocate in this case.

“I’m saying that of the Death Eaters, only Voldemort and Bellatrix Lestrange have his level of power, and he could outdo his aunt before too long. Is he Harry worthy? No, but a lot of that is only because of experience. Harry has more battle experience of any teenager since Alexander the Great, that’s the difference.” There are lot of muggle teenagers caught up in various civil wars around the globe that would take issue with that statement, but Remus was probably speaking metaphorically.

“And just how do we deliver that vault to him?” Remus responded by walking over to Draco.

“Draco, I want to be clear on something. Are you demanding your parents’ vault, or merely the contents of it?” Draco’s smile turned crafty.

“Why Professor Lupin, are we contemplating a criminal enterprise? How Slytherin of you, almost Potter-esque, he would have mobilized half the Gryffindors and invaded Gringotts by now. Your answer is the second one, the contents.”

“Thank you.” Remus walked back over and told them.

“All it takes is someone in Polyjuice with that key.” Bones looked at him like he was crazy.

“A heist?”

“If you have a better idea, I’m all ears.” Bones looked conflicted.

“ Sadly enough I don’t. Albus, some input here would be appropriate.”

“Remus, are you not troubled that we would be seen as bribing Draco for his support?”

“No, because the money is rightfully his, or at least it will be. If Amelia gives Draco that immunity, then technically speaking he has a clean slate. More than his mother and father can say. We can’t let this go to The Wizengamot, you and I both know that the trial traitors were not the only Dark members of it. Even if the bill passes, as I think it would, then they would have a legion of owls sent to Narcissa, warning her. A heist is our only option here, unless The Ministry wants to pay Draco now and hope to get the money from Narcissa and Lucius themselves?”

“That is an option, but not an especially viable one under the circumstances. Let’s go back over there.” They walked back to the bed, and found that the two kids had been talking about what Draco had missed in the classes they shared, the chill a bit less than their previous history would indicate.

“Draco, if you sent a letter to your mother right now asking her to meet you, how would she respond?”

“She wouldn’t be responding Madam Bones, and you well know it, Lord Voldemort would be doing the talking, she would simply be taking dictation.” Hermione covered her mouth, hiding a smile.

“You know what I’m asking Draco.”

“Would she meet with me? They have to assume that I’ve been under Veritaserum at the very least. You need the key I take it?”

“No plan will work without it, seizing it through official channels is unlikely to work.” Hermione’s jaw dropped open.

“Oh my God.”

“Sorry Hermione, but 8,000,000 galleons is 8,000,000 galleons, and I have my own future to think about. A future as a werewolf with the third largest price on my head in the Death Eater world, behind only Potter and Dumbledore. Not an ideal combination really.” It was 7.5 million after the ransom, but none of them knew that. Hermione rounded on the one person in the conversation that she assumed to be an idealist.

“You’re going to tell me then that the end justifies the means, Headmaster?”

“We are at war Miss Granger, a war that we are barely winning, if that. I will leave no straw ungrasped in order to prevail. Draco, do you have any suggestions on how to get the key?” He certainly did.

“Use Aunt Andromeda as bait. Mother will not let that key leave her person, she knows that Lord Voldemort could order her and Father killed at any moment. She would need that money in order to escape if she got half a minute’s warning.”

“A letter from your aunt to your mother, asking for a meeting?”

“Yes, to update Mother on my situation. A letter portkey is too obvious, but a meeting portkey is just the ticket.”

“How loyal is your mother to the cause?” Draco smiled at the question.

“She can spell the word ‘loyalty’ Professor Lupin, but that’s the extent of her familiarity with the term. Get her in here, and I’ll take it the rest of the way. If by some mischance I can’t, then your heist idea will carry the day.”

“You’re really warming to this, aren’t you Draco?”

“It certainly beats terrorizing first year Gryffindors as entertainment. Oh yeah, that reminds me, one more demand: If things get too hot for me in Slytherin, I want you to re-sort me into Ravenclaw. I’m not interested in going to sleep every night wondering if I’m going to wake up or not the next morning.” Everyone looked at Dumbledore.

“Agreed.”

“Excellent, now if someone will get going on Aunt Andromeda.....who does not know that I’m a werewolf, correct?”

“Correct.”

“I have no doubt that she’s terrified of Mother, but she’ll meet with her if you ask it.”

“How are you so sure of this? She says that you two had not even met recently.”

“I’m a student of human nature Headmaster, don’t let the blonde hair and the sneer fool you. A true Slytherin always watches more than he talks. If you weren’t such a Hufflepuff you would understand this. Now if you will go retrieve my aunt.” Hermione couldn’t hide the giggle this time, though she managed to stop it after half a second.

Dumbledore gave a small sigh, and walked over to the floo.

“Andromeda Tonks!”

“Yes Headmaster? Is this about Draco?”

“Draco has awoken Andromeda, we need you over here right now please.”

“Of course, just give me a moment.” She disappeared for a moment, and Dumbledore turned back to young Malfoy.

“We have your leave to tell her the entire story?”

“Do what you must Headmaster, but keep your Obliviation skills at the front of your mind.” A shot in the dark really, but the old man smiled inside.

Andromeda Tonks arrived within a couple of minutes, and the situation was explained to her. She, as Draco had forecasted, seemed scared of the prospect, but went along with the deal anyway. She wrote the letter in front of them, requesting the meeting. She told her sister that she wanted to update her in person, that there were several muggle viruses that might be a problem without the proper potions, which would cost money. At the end, she added a postscript:

Three united against all.

She explained that that was a saying that she, Bella, and Narcissa would always tell each other when one of them was in trouble. It had not applied to her marriage to Ted Tonks of course, as they had forsaken her officially, but in all the years since, neither Bellatrix Lestrange nor Narcissa Malfoy had ever once attempted to harm muggleborn Ted Tonks, and it was understood that neither of their husbands or associates would do so as well. This unspoken arrangement had held for over 20 years, and if Voldemort had ever commented on it, no one was talking. Only Nymphadora, their talented only child, had ever taken Death Eater fire, and that was solely because she was an Auror, a choice.

The postscript would prove that she was not under any undue influence, and would help persuade her sister. The letter was taken away to the Owlery, where Nicosia, the fastest owl in the place, was taken down and used to send the letter. A reply did not come until morning.

Flashback to Harry's trunk:

10:00 am

The replay of the battle had just finished in the pensieve, and all the gang were quiet and contemplative. None of them had cheered during any of it, and all had gasped both times Harry was shot, and when Fred took his burst in the back. Harry, remembering their eagerness before, couldn't resist a dig when it was all over.

"So was it all that you hoped for? Exciting enough?" Jonas and Drew looked somewhat ashamed, while Reiko and Warrick didn't say anything either. Sophie looked at him.

"Were you scared at all?" Harry really didn't want to go there, but he answered her truthfully.

"No I wasn't, and yes, I find that somewhat strange now that I think about it."

“Why didn’t you use any more of that Tergum Fundo spell? Or stuff like that? I know how hard you’ve been studying those kinds of curses.”

“The situation didn’t warrant it. Dark Magic should only be used when you have no other choice, and I didn’t need to use them until the very end.” Meaning his one time use of Avada Kedavra. Reiko blurted out.

“That’s it? Just a question of morality?” Her surprise really made him angry, but he kept it inside.

“Yes, a morals lesson from someone whose kill total is now approaching double figures overall, imagine that.” She looked embarrassed at his quiet response.

“I didn’t mean it like that Harry.” Uh huh, he thought, not liking this at all.

“Ask your parents what spells they used Reiko, and what spells they would have been willing to use to protect the students under their care.”

“I wasn’t trying to insult you.”

“Well you did.” Now Warrick got into it.

“Hey, don’t go after her dude, just because you’re in a bad mood.”

“None of you are in this trunk under coercion you know.” Warrick likely would have wanted to smack anyone but the guys in this room for saying that, but wasn’t unmindful that Harry had been through a trauma or two in the last few hours.

“Easy there dude, I know you’ve had a rough day.”

“Being shot will do that for you.”

“You didn’t go out there under coercion either.” Harry would have started laughing if it wouldn’t have hurt him so much.

“Bullshit Warrick, and you know it. If I had stayed in that Lounge I never would have heard the end of it back in Britain, and people would have been whispering here too. I would have gone out anyway, since that’s my nature.....but to say that I wasn’t coerced, I mean c’mon. You still appear to have no idea of the scrutiny I live my life under, even over here. Every breath I take, every move I make, I’m watched, just like the song says. The only place I can truly let my guard down is right here in this trunk, and in front of you six, plus the twins and Dobby and Winky.” Warrick had never thought of it like that, he knew that Harry was under some pressure because of his past and assumed power level, but Harry’s view hadn’t really registered until now.

“Point taken, and I apologize.” Harry sighed.

“Me too mate, and to you too Reiko. I can’t remember the last time I was this touchy, when Dumbledore wasn’t involved anyway. I should not have jumped on you like that, especially since your parents risked just as much as I did.” Reiko squeezed his good shoulder.

“Easy there, I can’t afford to have that one kink out on me.” A slap to the back of his head ensued.

“You’re not injured back there are you?”

“I wish you wouldn’t do that.”

“Wishing is very healthy most of the time.”

“Where’s a fountain when I need one. But I did hit my head when the first bullets hit me you know, it still hurts.” Just then, Dobby popped in, interrupting Harry’s guilt trip of Reiko.

“Reiko, your mother is upstairs in the Lounge, she is asking for you.” Reiko could move quite quickly when the spirit moved her, and she was halfway up the ladder before Dobby finished his sentence. He popped back up there to let Lisa Aylesworth know, and the rest of the gang soon followed. Harry paused to get dressed, or at least put some pants on. The others were ahead, and he wasn't sure how he was going to put a shirt on over his bandages. He somehow got up to the ladder and to the Lounge and saw that little had happened beyond Reiko trying to squeeze her mother to death. The others were crowded around as well, saying how glad they were that Lisa and Karl were all right.

"I'm fine, we both are. No one at Tecumseh was hurt, even the falling debris didn't injure anyone."

"All your stuff though, President Chabon said that nothing was saved."

"We'll be fine Reiko, we had all our valuables locked away in our bank vault. Even the pictures we had were all copies."

"You planned for this?" Lisa smiled.

"No, we just always feared some light fingered students. Not any of you of course." Sophie and Claudia hadn't thought so anyway, so it was easy for them to laugh, and Reiko was curious as to why she hadn't noticed this before. Lisa disengaged from Reiko and looked over at Harry.

"So the rumors were true, why am I not surprised?"

"It was a hell of an alarm clock."

"Are you going to be okay?"

"I'm okay now, just a little sore and inconvenienced is all, I never fully appreciated my left arm until now. Where are you and Karl set up?"

“We’re at Salem for the next week or so. Those of us there will teach a double helping of our classes to the students housed there, our colleagues and Pathfinder will do the same.”

“Dad’s okay?” Lisa had said this already, but recognized that this had been a worrisome time for her only child. She was amazed Reiko had held up as well as she had, with both parents and one of her best friends dodging bullets in the two melees.

“We’re all fine honey, everyone got out without a scratch.”

“The President told us that you and the Defense guys held them off?”

“Well we didn’t exactly hold them off, we just slowed them down a few minutes. I talked with Clary, he’s with us at Salem, and he said that five minutes less and there would have been some fatalities.”

“Did Burke and Hill really help you guys, I mean they always seem so.....so.....”

“Don’t finish that Reiko, but I know what you mean. Henry and Jimmy are not the most dedicated professionals, but they do know what they’re doing when the spirit moves them to share it.” Besides, Clary was afraid of them, something she chose not to mention. It was one of her occasional daydreams of the last couple of months to have Harry duel Burke and Hill, not to the death of course, but enough to humiliate the two of them sufficiently. Maybe when Harry was healed up from his latest injuries.....She put that thought away again as Reiko addressed her.

“Can you stay awhile?”

“Just for a bit honey, I wanted to make sure that you were okay.”

“Harry wouldn’t let me fight.” Lisa turned to Harry and gave him a sincere:

“Thank you Harry.”

“She exaggerates, the only one Winky would have stopped was Sophie.” Said girlfriend smacked Harry’s good arm.

“Oh, so Reiko and Warrick could make up their own minds, but I couldn’t?” Well yeah, but Harry hadn’t survived this morning only to be killed now.

“You three were needed in here more than out there. More people would not have helped us do what we needed to do.”

“Hindsight.”

“I’ll take whatever sight I can get thank you very much. Lisa, you want to come down to the trunk with us?”

“Sure, I’d love to get a look at it, Karl is always talking about us getting one.” She knew he would be especially insistent about it after all this mess, the day they had gone to the island they hadn’t really looked around inside the trunk too much. They walked back to the room, making sure that Lisa was holding on to someone as they passed through the doorway, no Pink was wanted now of all times. All the room doors had been Pinked, and then had it removed by Reiko and Sophie, even their own. They knew that some of the younger kids might be sloppy about it if it remained.

They repaired to the trunk, and Lisa was prevailed upon to show a pensieve memory of her experience. She walked away while it was playing, not being interested in reliving it, and she perused Harry’s library for awhile. None of Harry’s books had been lost in the explosion, but she quickly saw another half dozen that she would ask to borrow, though some of the other titles appalled her. She had done a little digging on the Blacks since gaining access to their library, and what she had found out was very troublesome, though she wasn’t worried at all about Harry being so close to her daughter. The memory ended, and Harry wandered in to see what she was doing, as the others were talking about what they’d seen.

“Looks like you had just as much fun as I did today.”

“I meant what I said earlier Harry, thank you for not taking her with you.”

“I would never let any harm come to her Lisa.”

“You made sure of that. Are your twins all right?”

“They’re fine, Fred got shot, but he was wearing my vest.”

“That dragon-hide thing Reiko wrote us about?”

“Right in one, it absorbed three bullets on Fred and seven on me without flinching. I doubt I would have gone out there alone without wearing it.” He gave a brief description to her about how Fred had come to be wearing it.

“Oh, Steve Atwood made a point of telling me that he saved all his WWW products and the money he collected. He’s with us at Salem.”

“Well I wasn’t worried about the pranks, but please tell him that I’m glad he’s okay.”

“I will, that guy’s a born salesman.”

“I know, his sales will probably eclipse mine before the school year is out.”

“Reiko says you don’t try as hard as he does though.”

“I do in my own way.” The others came in, and Lisa had to take her leave and get back to her students.

“Your father sends his love, and he’ll try to come by during the week if he can, at night after classes and such are done.”

“Great, I can’t wait to see him. Good luck over there.”

“It’ll be fine, we went to school with one of the Charms teachers, so we can catch up on old times. I love you honey, be good.” She hugged Reiko, and got a collective group hug from the others, even Drew, whom she had just met. The gang then split up for awhile, to get some nap time in for most of them, though Harry and Sophie went back down into the trunk.

“I should pound you for the chances you took today.....but I can’t.”

“Why not? Not that I’m complaining mind you.”

“Because, like you told Warrick, it’s in your nature. I’m not going to be one of those women who constantly bitches about her man going out and doing dangerous things. That’s too cliché if you ask me.”

“That’s a relief hearing that, I wasn’t sure what you were going to do once the witnesses left.”

“I know, and that would have been cliché too. I remember once that you told Hermione that she should have known what she was signing on for when she chose Ron. Well I didn’t know ahead of time.....but I’ve accepted it. I’ve accepted that you’re not going to hide from conflict anymore.” Harry’s blood pressure now went back down to normal.

“Thank goodness, and you still understand why I wouldn’t let you out there?”

“I do, but why didn’t you include Warrick and Reiko in that? Winky could have stopped us all.”

“A little psychological ploy that I came up with while I was putting my vest on. I figured that they wouldn’t leave you behind.” She chuckled a little at that.

“Good thinking, and quick thinking.”

“It seemed like a good idea at the time, and it did work.”

“You didn’t do the same for Drew, Claudia, and Jonas?”

“No I didn’t, those three are a lot more cautious.”

“Are you going to be in trouble with Murray for the twins coming over? Did the portkey story work?”

“Well technically I never said how they got here, Dobby said that she just assumed they used a portkey. She won’t complain though, and the twins get to be in Cortez, that’s going to be so great.”

“Are you going to try and kick out Rick and Terry?”

“No, there’s an extra room for the Seniors, I’m going to see if Warrick and I can move in there with them, at least for the last part of the semester. I’ll put the trunk in there at any rate, so Gred and Forge can easily get to and from the shop.” Sophie then surprised him by kissing him, and Harry discovered that he was not quite so tired, his blood pressure now going back up, in a good way. Things went quiet for awhile, talking-wise, and they got their naps in later.

At 5:00 pm, right before dinner was served in the four Lounges, Murray took a slight risk and had everyone assemble outside, on the undamaged side of the school. Not only were students and faculty present, but the house elf staff was there as well. The students were huddled in their coats and Warming Charms, as Murray put Sonorus on her throat.

“We gather here to remember three brave young men, who died in defense of our school and their friends and classmates. Ross Karver was a Junior year Proctor student from Duluth, Minnesota. He was active in the Arithmancy club, and had hopes of teaching that subject someday. His mother Janine raised him very well, and he was a talented Wizard, a model for us all. He died with his wand raised, ready to defend his Housemates from whatever was out there in that hallway, he died a hero.

“Arthur Hailey and Ryan Chappelle were Senior year Jefferson students, two of the most talented flyers and Quodpot players that our school has known its 150 years plus of existence. Arthur was raised in The Bahamas, where his muggleborn American expatriate parents ran a hotel. He picked Great Lakes precisely because he wanted to see what life was like without a constant tan. Ryan was, like far too many of you, a pariah in his family, kicked out for being a Wizard. Jim Bouton’s family took him in, and he never lacked for love. Ryan was from Owensboro, Kentucky, and like Art, was months away from becoming a wealthy professional Quodpot player. That didn’t stop them from taking the first opportunity they could to stop the muggle mortars, using tactics that will long be celebrated and honored for their ingenuity and resourcefulness. They died as heroes, and I honor them.”

“There was one other death in our family here. Raffles, the major-domo of our house elf staff, was killed by machine gun fire. He was on a mission I asked him to perform, and died because of it. Raffles had been a part of the Great Lakes family for 105 years, his parents being part of the original staff when the school was founded. Great Lakes runs as smoothly as it does because of our house elf staff, who are the most capable and talented staff of elves in the world.”

“Jeannie Baum, a Transition year student in Proctor, is in the med station right now in a coma. Dr. Carter assures me that she is going to live, that the head injuries she suffered will just take some time to heal, and she will be as good as new. Jeannie is the youngest athlete on the Proctor Quodpot team, and is the top student in her year in Muggle Studies. Jeannie is from just down the road in Marquette, and like Ross Karver, was on the front line of the Proctor defense.” Murray took on a more lighthearted tone for the next round.

“Jim Bouton and Harry Potter were the other students who blatantly defied my instructions and fought for their schoolmates. Jim was the sole survivor of the dive bombing raid against the mortars, and somehow evaded a muggle surface to air missile, choosing to sacrifice the west stands instead, though they were in need of refurbishment anyway. Jim is a Jefferson senior, mourning the loss of his two best friends. Jim, you did a very brave thing this morning, and I salute you.” The crowd of students had been silent up to this point, but a very respectful round of applause was given to the Senior, with Murray and the rest of the faculty joining in heartily. Bouton just briefly raised his hand in acknowledgement.

“Harry Potter, as is his wont apparently, wasted little time in deciding that the best defense is a good offense. He was out the Cortez door in under two minutes, wands in hand, and he took down the first Lycan he saw almost immediately, getting shot in the process. He was soon joined by his business partners and foster brothers Fred and George Weasley, visiting here from Great Britain, and the three of them cleared away the threats on the fourth floor, and then gave us some badly needed assistance on the faculty floor. Fred and George had no truck in this fight, though as some of you might know, they will be attending school here for a few months starting in April, but they did not hesitate to help their future schoolmates and current brother. The three of them showed outstanding courage and quick thinking. I thank you Harry, and I salute you.” Another round of applause from the assembled students. Harry just stood there, realizing why Murray was doing it, but not taking any pleasure in the whole thing.
